The fundamental principle underlying this entire branch of the law is that no man has the right to sell his goods as the goods of a rival trader. Mr. Browne, in his work upon Trade-Marks, declares the wrong to be, "not in imitating a symbol, device, or fancy name, for any such act may not involve the slightest turpitude; the wrong consists in unfair means to obtain from a person the fruits of his own ingenuity or industry,—an injustice that is in direct transgression of the decalogue, 'Thou shalt not covet * * * anything that is thy neighbor's.' The most detestable kind of fraud underlies the filching of another's good name, in connection with trafficking." We think the principle may be broadly stated that when one tradesman resorts to the use of any artifice or contrivance for the purpose of representing his goods or his business as the goods or business of a rival tradesman, thereby deceiving the people by causing them to trade with him when they intended to and would have otherwise traded with his rival, a fraud is committed, —a fraud which a court of equity will not allow to thrive. In Howard v. Henriques, 3 Sanf. 725, the court, in speaking of the competitor in business, said: "He must not by any deceitful or other practice impose on the public, and he must not by dressing himself in another man's garments, and by assuming another man's name, endeavor to deprive that man of his own individuality and of the gains to which by his industry and skill he is fairly entitled." It may well be said that the defendant, by duplicating plaintiff's building, with its peculiar architecture and immediately adjoining, entering into the same line of business, with no mark of identification upon his store, has dressed himself in plaintiff's garments; and, having so dressed himself with a fraudulent intent, equity will exert itself to reach the fraud in some way. In the leading case of Lee v. Haley, supra, the whole question is condensed by the final conclusion of the court into the principle of law "that it is a fraud on the part of a defendant to set up a business under such a designation as is calculated to lead and does lead other people to suppose that his business is the business of another person." If the same evil results are accomplished by the acts practiced by this defendant which would be accomplished by an adoption of plaintiff's name, why should equity smile upon the one practice and frown upon the other? Upon what principle of law can a court of equity say, "If you cheat and defraud your competitor in business by taking his name, the court will give relief against you, but, if you cheat and defraud him by assuming a disguise of a different character, your acts are beyond the law?" Equity will not concern itself about the means by which fraud is done. It is the results arising from the means—it is the fraud itself—with which it deals.

The foregoing principles of law do not apply alone to the protection of parties having trade-marks and trade-names. They reach away beyond that, and apply to all cases where fraud is practiced by one in securing the trade of a rival dealer; and these ways are as many and as various as the ingenuity of the dishonest schemer can invent. In Glenny v. Smith, reported in the Jurist of 1865 (page 965), the court held: "Where a tradesman, in addition to his own name upon his shop front, placed upon his sunblind and upon his brass plate the words 'From Thresher & Glenny' (in whose employment he had been), the court, being of opinion that this was done in such a way as to be likely to mislead, and there being evidence that persons had been actually misled, granted an injunction to restrain such a use of the name of the firm Thresher & Glenny." In Knott v. Morgan, 2 Keen, 213, the "London Conveyance Company" had its omnibuses painted green, and its servants clothed in the same colors. Another adopted the same name, and likewise its vehicles were so painted and its servants so clothed. It was conceded that plaintiff could have no exclusive property right in any of these things, but the court issued its injunction, declaring that plaintiff had "a right to call upon this court to restrain the defendant from fraudulently using precisely the same words and devices which they have taken for the purpose of distinguishing their property, and thereby depriving them of the fair profits of their business by attracting custom on the false representation that carriages really the defendant's belong to and are under the management of the plaintiffs." The author, by a note, approves the doctrine here declared, saying: "There was an obvious attempt to trade upon the plaintiff's reputation,—a constructive fraud,—coupled with pecuniary loss, which was made the ground for the issuance of a broad injunction." The same principle is reiterated by the same learned judge in Croft v. Day, 7 Beav. 84, in the following words: "It has been very correctly said that the principle of these cases is this: That no man has a right to sell his own goods as the goods of another. You may express the same principle in a different form, and say that no man has a right to dress himself in colors, or adopt and bear symbols to which he has no peculiar or exclusive right, and thereby personate another person, for the purpose of inducing the public to suppose either that he is that other person or that he is connected with and selling the manufacture of such other person while he is really selling his own. It is perfectly manifest that to do these things is to commit a fraud, and a very gross fraud." In the very recent case of Coats v. Thread Co., 149 U. S. 566, 13 Sup. Ct. 966, the court said: "There can be no question of the soundness of the plaintiff's proposition that, irrespective of the technical question of trade-mark, the defendants have no right to dress their goods up in such manner as to deceive an intending purchaser, and induce him to believe he is buying those of the plaintiffs. * * * They have no right by imitative devices to beguile the public into buying their wares under the impression they are buying those of their rivals." To the same point, see System Co. v. Le Boutillier (Super. Ct.) 24 N. Y. Supp. 890; Appolinaris Co. v. Scherer, 27 Fed. 18; Burgess v. Burgess, 3 De Gex, M. & G. 896; Von Mumm v. Frash, 56 Fed. 830.

Having decided that defendant's acts constitute a fraud upon plaintiff, and that a court of equity will administer relief, the question then presents itself, what shall be the form of the decree? How may the court reach the wrong? The defendant had the right to erect his building, and erect it in any style of architecture his fancy might dictate. He had the right to erect it in the particular locality where it was erected. He had the right there to conduct a business similar to that of plaintiff. He had a right to do all these things, for, of themselves, they did not offend against equity; but when they were done with a fraudulent intent, when they were done for the purpose of tolling away the customers of plaintiff by a deception, a fraud is practiced, and equity will do what it can to right the wrong. The decision of the trial court in effect ordered defendant to place signs both inside and outside his building, showing to the world the proprietorship thereof. We think this decree holds defendant to a rule too strict, in that it requires the proprietorship of the store to be shown. In this particular we think the decree should be modified so as to require that the defendant, in the conduct of this business, shall distinguish his place of business from that in which the plaintiff is carrying on its business, in some mode or form that shall be a sufficient indication to the public that it is a different place of business from that of the plaintiff. For the foregoing reason, the judgment in this respect only is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the trial court to modify the same, as heretofore suggested; and thereupon it is ordered that said judgment stand affirmed. Appellant is to pay the costs of this appeal.

DUNCAN v. TIMES-MIRROR CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 22, 1895.)

UNDERTAKING ON APPEAL — SUFFICIENCY — DISMISSAL OF APPEAL.

1. Where an appeal is taken from the judgment, and also from the order denying a new trial, an undertaking which fails to recite or allude to such order is ineffectual as to the appeal therefrom.

2. An undertaking which binds the sureties to pay all damages and costs which may be awarded against appellant on appeal, but fails to contain the words "or on a dismissal thereof," as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 941, is insufficient.

3. An undertaking in double the amount of the judgment appealed from, given to secure a stay of execution, will not be construed to include the $300 undertaking on appeal, required by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 940. 941.

4. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 954, providing that an appeal shall not be dismissed for insufficiency of the undertaking if a sufficient undertaking be filed "before the hearing upon motion to dismiss," an amended undertaking cannot be filed after appellant has replied to respondent's brief on motion to dismiss.

5. The certificate of the clerk of the court below that the undertaking on appeal is in due form is not conclusive in the appellate court.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by Blanton Duncan against the Times-Mirror Company and others. From a judgment for defendants, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Appeals dismissed.

Blanton Duncan, in pro. per. White & Monroe and Henry T. Gage, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. This is a motion to dismiss the appeal on the following grounds: (1) That no undertaking on appeal has been filed as required by section 940, Code Civ. Proc., nor as required by sections 941, 954, Id.; (2) the undertakings do not allude to the appeal from the order denying a new trial; and (3) the undertakings purport to be in a different action, and not in this case.

The undertaking filed is as follows: "Whereas, the plaintiff in the above-entitled action, Blanton Duncan vs. The Times-Mirror Co., appeals to the supreme court of the state of California from judgment made and entered against plaintiff in said action in the said superior court in favor of the defendant in said action on the —— day of March, 1895, for one hundred and eighty-five-100 dollars costs of suit, and one hundred dollars attorney's fee: Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises and of such appeal, we, the undersigned, Mary T. Duncan & F. N. Myers, of Los Angeles county and state of California, do hereby jointly and severally undertake and promise, on the part of appellant, that the said appellant will pay all damages and costs which may be awarded against him on the appeal, not exceeding three hundred dollars, to which amount we acknowledge ourselves jointly and severally bound. And whereas, the appellant, Blanton Duncan, is desirous of staying the execution of the defendant so appealed from, we do further, in consideration thereof and of the premises, jointly and severally undertake and promise, and do acknowledge ourselves further and jointly and severally bound, in the further sum of five hundred and ninety-one-hundredths dollars, being double the amount named in the said judgment, that if the said judgment appealed from, or any part thereof, be affirmed or the appeal be dismissed, the appellant shall pay defendant, the Times-Mirror Company, the amount directed to be paid thereby, or the part of such amount as to which the same shall be affirmed, if affirmed only in part, and all damages and costs which shall be awarded against the appellant upon the appeal; and if the appellant does not make such payment within thirty days after the filing of the remittitur from the supreme court in the court from which the appeal is taken, judgment may be entered on motion of respondent in its favor against the said sureties for such amount, together with the interest that may be due thereon, and the damages and costs that may be awarded against the appellant upon the appeal herein. Mary T. Duncan. [Seal.] F. N. Myers. [Seal.]"

The undertaking does not recite or allude to the order denying a new trial, and is plainly ineffectual as to that appeal. Berniaud v. Beecher, 74 Cal. 617, 16 Pac. 510; Schurtz v. Romer, 81 Cal. 244, 22 Pac. 657; McCormick v. Belvin, 96 Cal. 182, 31 Pac. 16; Paving Co. v. Bolton, 89 Cal. 155, 26 Pac. 650. The trouble with the undertaking on the appeal from the judgment is that it does not contain the words, "or on a dismissal thereof," as required by the statute. It does contain a stipulation that the sureties will pay all damages and costs which may be awarded against the appellant on the appeal; but, if the appeal be dismissed, costs are an incident as a matter of law, and are not awarded on the appeal. The undertaking is in two parts, which might have been contained in two undertakings. The last is to secure a stay of execution, and not in consideration of the appeal. This undertaking contains the condition which ought to have been in the undertaking given to secure the appeal. By this first undertaking the sureties became bound for $300, and by the second for $500. There can be no doubt that in case of a dismissal the sureties on the second undertaking would be liable for the costs and damages in the same manner in which they would have been liable on the first undertaking had it contained the required stipulation. It is contended that this is a substantial compliance with the statute. This is not a new question here. The point was discussed and decided adversely to appellant in Duffy v. Greenebaum, 72 Cal. 157, 12 Pac. 74, and 13 Pac. 323. In addition to the reasons there given for the ruling, it may be suggested that $300 is not always sufficient to secure to a respondent his costs and damages, and it was competent for the legislature to require further security in case a stay of execution was desired; and further, there is no effectual provision for the justification of the sureties on the undertaking for the appeal, for, although they may be required to justify under section 948, Code Civ. Proc., yet, if they fail to justify, the only consequence is that the execution is no longer stayed. Swasey v. Adair, 83 Cal. 136, 23 Pac. 284. The appeal would therefore be effectual although the sureties may be found worthless. True, if the sureties are the same on each bond, it would not help the matter unless a new undertaking were given; but to secure a stay new sureties must be provided, and this may be why the stipulation must be in each undertaking. At all events, such are the requirements of the Code, and there can be no question of the power of the legislature to prescribe any reasonable condition to the exercise of the right of appeal.

Appellant offers, if authority to file an amended undertaking exists, to give an undertaking conforming in every respect to the statute. The motion to dismiss was made upon due notice, and a brief on the part of the moving party was also submitted, to which a reply was made by appellant. In the notice and printed brief the defects in the undertaking were pointed out. Section 954, Code Civ. Proc., reads as follows: "If the appellant fails to furnish the requisite papers, the appeal may be dismissed; but no appeal can be dismissed for insufficiency of the undertaking thereon if a good and sufficient undertaking, approved by a justice of the supreme court, be filed in the supreme court before the hearing upon motion to dismiss the appeal." Had there been no statute upon the subject, we might, perhaps, where an undertaking has been filed in due time, and evidently with an honest intent to comply with the law, but which is defective, allow a new undertaking to be filed. But here an opportunity is afforded to an appellant to correct any such mistake. The Code expressly provides when the appellant must avail himself of the privilege. He must do so before the hearing of the motion to dismiss. He cannot contest the motion, and then claim the privilege, if the motion is decided against him. This express provision is a limitation upon the discretion of the court. The transcript on appeal in this case contains a certificate to the effect that "an undertaking on appeal in due form has been properly filed," as required by section 953, Code Civ Proc. It is contended that this certificate is conclusive; that, in case the certificate is untrue, the respondent has his remedy against the clerk, who is liable on his official bond. This proposition has been frequently suggested here on the consideration of similar motions, and, although it has not been discussed in any reported decision, the court has constantly and frequently permitted parties to go behind this certificate. It could not have been intended that the judgment of the clerk should be final in this matter. "For all purposes connected with the appellate jurisdiction, the appellate court has the same power over the clerk of the court below as it has over its own clerk." People v. Center, 54 Cal. 236; Winder v. Hendrick, Id. 275. We do not claim any authority over him while performing his customary duties as clerk of the lower court, but duties connected with our appellate jurisdiction we can require him to perform. That we are not bound by his certificates as to the correctness of a record has been repeatedly decided. On the contrary, when necessary, we may compel him to correct his certificate, and transmit to this court a proper record. Section 953 places the certificate of the attorneys upon the same plane as the certificate of the clerk. Such a certificate was considered in Perkins v. Cooper, 87 Cal. 241, 25 Pac. 411. In that case the court permitted the respondent to prove, against the certificate of his attorneys, that no undertaking on appeal had in fact been filed. The rationale of that decision is that, to give this court jurisdiction, there must be in fact an undertaking, or a waiver of it. A false certificate, stating that an undertaking had been filed, does not confer jurisdiction. In the above case the certificate of counsel was made after the time for filing the undertaking had expired, and therefore it could not be construed as a waiver. The case seems in point here. The appeals, both from the judgment and from the order refusing a new trial, are dismissed.

DUNCAN v. TIMES-MIRROR CO. et al.

In bank.

Action by Blanton Duncan against the Times-Mirror Company and others. From a judgment for defendants, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appealed. The appeals were dismissed, and respondents moved to strike appellant's brief from the files. Denied.

Blanton Duncan, in pro per. White & Monroe and Henry T. Gage, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Respondents have moved to strike from the files the brief of appellant filed herein. Consideration of this motion is made unnecessary by the judgment of this court, filed this day, dismissing the appeals. 42 Pac. 147. The appeals having been dismissed, the brief in question ceases to be a record or file of this court.

CITY OF LOS ANGELES v. STATE LOAN & TRUST CO. (No. 19,452.)

SAVINGS AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS—TAXATION.

1. Pol. Code, § 3617, provides that demands due on account of money deposited with savings and loan corporations shall, for taxation purposes, be treated as an interest in the property, and shall not be assessed to the owner thereof. Held, that a corporation authorized by its charter to do a general loan and trust business, but which also conducted a "savings department," and paid a stipulated rate of interest on deposits in that department, though the depositor did not otherwise participate in the corporation's earnings, was subject to taxation on the amount deposited in said department.

2. Whether or not a corporation was engaged in the transaction of a savings and loan business is not, for the purpose of taxation, conclusively determined by its articles of incorporation.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Action by the city of Los Angeles against State Loan & Trust Company to recover certain taxes levied and assessed against defendant. Defendant had judgment, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

C. McFarland, for appellant. W. P. Gardiner, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This is an agreed case submitted to the superior court under section 1138 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the controversy involves the question whether the defendant is liable for certain taxes levied and assessed against it by the city assessor for the year 1892, amounting to $900. On the first Monday in March, 1892, the total deposits held by defendant amounted to $358,847. Of this sum $249,939.01 consisted of ordinary deposits subject to check, or represented by certificates of deposit, while the remainder, amounting to $108,907.99, was composed of interest-bearing deposits, the accounts of which were kept in separate ledgers, one denominated "Savings Deposits," and the other "Term Savings Deposits"; and it was upon said sum of $108,907.99 that said tax was levied and assessed. The city assessor claimed that, as to these last-named deposits, the defendant was either de jure or de facto a savings and loan corporation, and therefore liable for said tax under subdivision 6 of section 3617, Pol. Code. Said subdivision, after defining the terms "credits and debts," provides as follows: "But credits, claims, debts and demands due, owing or accruing for or on account of money deposited with savings and loan corporations shall, for the purposes of taxation, be deemed and treated as an interest in the property of such corporation, and shall not be assessed to the creditor or owner thereof." The purposes for which the respondent was incorporated, as appears from its articles of incorporation, were in substance to accept and execute trusts of every nature; to attend to the management and settlement of estates, guardianships, assignments, receiverships, and other trusts; to act as executor and guardian of estates; to do a safe-deposit business; to receive on deposit from others trust funds or moneys belonging to states, counties, and other municipal corporations; to do a general banking business; to issue certificates of deposit or indebtedness, upon interest or otherwise, and with or without conditions as to time of payment; to invest or loan money upon commission or otherwise, and to purchase, hold, sell, mortgage, and convey such real estate as may be necessary for carrying on the business of the corporation, and such other real property as may be taken in security for or in payment of debts owing to the corporation. The agreed case further shows that, while the accounts of the alleged savings deposits are kept in separate books from the other business of the bank, there is no separation of the moneys received from the different sources, and that the interest paid on these deposits is at an absolute rate, agreed upon at the time the deposit is received. There are also in the statement two exhibits of depositors' pass books, one for "Savings Deposits" and the other for "Term Savings Deposits," and upon the covers are printed the usual rules adopted by savings banks regulating the deposit and withdrawal of money, and on the inside of the cover is stamped the following: "Savings Department. Office hours, 10 a. m. to 3 p. m. Saturdays, 10 a. m. to 12 m." Upon these facts the court below held that the defendant was not a savings and loan association, either de jure or de facto, and that the deposits in question should not be assessed or treated as the property of the bank, but should be taxed to the several depositors as ordinary commercial deposits.

Appended to respondent's brief is found the opinion of the learned judge who heard the case, and in which the ground upon which the decision is based is very clearly and forcibly stated. The logic of the opinion is faultless. If the major premise be conceded, the conclusion is inevitable. It is assumed that the distinction between commercial banks and savings and loan associations is that in the former the money deposited becomes the property of the bank, and the relation of debtor and creditor is created, while in the latter the deposit remains, in a certain sense, the money of the depositor; and the court quotes from Morse on Banks (section 617) as follows: "The depositors are the bank; the trustees and officers are their agents for receiving and loaning their money, and the profits belong to the depositors;" and counsel for respondent cites many authorities giving a like definition of a "savings bank,"—that is, that the bank is a mere agency; that whatever profits are made upon the deposits belong to the depositors, the bank deducting therefrom only its necessary expenses incurred in conducting the business for the depositors; and that hence the title to the money deposited remains in the depositor. It may be at once conceded that, if only those banks coming within the above definition are savings banks, the judgment was right, and must be affirmed; for in this case it is clear that these deposits became the property of the bank, and the bank could only be required to account for the sum deposited, with interest thereon at an agreed rate, whether such a rate was more or less than that received by the bank. But that a bank conducting its business as that portion of defendant's business was conducted which is here under consideration is also a savings bank is clear. In Huntington v. Bank, 96 U. S. 388, cited and quoted by counsel for respondent, the court, after stating the characteristics of savings banks as they existed in England, and quoting from text writers to the effect that savings banks derive no benefit whatever from any deposit, said: "Very many such exist in this country. Among the earliest are some in Massachusetts, organized under a general law passed in 1834, which contained a provision, like the one in the act of congress, that the income or profit of all deposits shall be divided among the depositors with just deduction of reasonable expenses. They also exist in New York, Pennsylvania, Maine, Connecticut and other states. Indeed, until recently, the primary idea of a savings bank has been that it is an institution in the hands of disinterested persons, the profits of which, after deducting the necessary expenses of conducting the business, inure wholly to the benefit of depositors, in dividends or in a reserved surplus for their greater security." The expression "until recently" indicates that the court was distinguishing the bank under consideration from other savings banks which did not have the features which existed in that case. The case is therefore not a conclusive authority for respondent. So, too, such corporations formerly had no stock and no capital. They were purely agencies for receiving and loaning money on account of their owners. In case of loss by the embezzlement of the funds, as in Bunnell v. Society, 38 Conn. 203, such loss is charged up to the depositors, as the officers are the agents of the depositors, and the depositors, being members, are the corporation, and must bear the loss; but with us, while our statute is broad enough to authorize savings corporations without capital stock, they are also authorized to be formed having a capital stock, and in such case the depositors are not the corporation, but the capital stock is a security to depositors as well as to stockholders, depositors having the priority.

A brief review of the provisions of the Civil Code under the title of "Savings and Loan Corporations" will show that California, at least, is not restricted to the original idea of savings banks. That such corporations may be formed with or without capital stock, see section 572 and subdivision 6 of section 574. That the directors may agree with depositors as to interest is clear under section 573. The same section also provides: "The directors must not contract any debt or liability against the corporation or its depositor for any purpose whatever, except for deposit." It is therefore apparent that a deposit in a savings bank having a capital stock may be a debt against the corporation, and, indeed, must be, since the corporation is formed by the stockholders, and the depositor deals with the corporation, not as his agent, for whose mistakes or defalcations he is responsible, but as a principal, pledging its stock and assets for the security of the depositor. Not so, however, with the savings bank of the other class, which has no capital stock, and in which the depositors are members of the corporation. Section 577 provides, among other things, as follows: "The directors of any such corporation having no capital stock must retain, on each dividend day, at least five per cent. of the net profits of the corporation, to constitute a reserve fund, which must be invested in the same manner as the other funds of the corporation and must be used toward paying any losses which the corporation may sustain in pursuing its lawful business. * * *" From this review of the provisions of the Civil Code it clearly appears that there are at least two plans or systems upon which savings banks may be organized and conducted, and that the manner in which the defendant conducted one branch of its business conforms to one of these systems. The distinction between these two classes or kinds of savings banks was clearly recognized in Trust Co. v. Hinton, 97 Cal. 214, 221, 32 Pac. 3. It is there said: "It is, however, contended that appellant does not come within the provisions of section 3617 of the Political Code, because the debts in question are not ordinary deposits in savings banks, but debts for borrowed money, repayable in the exact sum borrowed, with interest thereon, irrespective of the profits or losses that may accrue to the bank. The learned counsel distinguishes between savings and loan associations which distribute to depositors the net profits realized by the banks in proportion to their several deposits and those which pay to depositors a specified rate of interest on time deposits; that in the former class the depositors are, in effect, members of the corporation and interested in its profits, while in the latter class they are creditors, and have no interest in the profits. The language of section 3617, however, is comprehensive enough to include both classes, and we see no ground upon which we can say that the latter class was not intended to be included. All are organized under title 10 of the Civil Code."

Respondent contends, however, that the mode or manner in which the business is conducted does not determine the fact whether it is or is not a savings bank, either in toto or pro tanto, and cites People v. Binghamton Trust Co., 139 N. Y. 185, 34 N. E. 898. That action was to recover a penalty for an alleged violation of the banking act of 1882, which makes it unlawful for any bank, banking association, or individual to advertise or put forth a sign as a savings bank, or in any way to solicit or receive deposits as a savings bank. 2 Rev. St. N. Y. (8th Ed.) p. 1574, § 283. It appeared in that case that a set of pass books issued by the defendant contained a set of interest rules similar to those used by savings banks. The court, after referring to the powers of the defendant corporation, which were in many respects similar to those of the respondent here, said, in substance, that the statute had not prescribed a set of rules for one or the other class of corporations, and that it knew of no principle of law which, as to commercial transactions within their chartered powers, and involving the receipt or borrowing of moneys and its obligation to repay the same, denies the entire freedom to regulate them by such a contract as the parties are willing to enter into; but in referring to the printed matter upon the pass books the court said: "It explicitly says that it 'differs from a savings bank in that it has a large capital invested that is pledged as security to its depositors;' " and concluded that it did not hold itself out as a savings bank, and that the whole object of the provision was to prevent a deception being practiced. But here, as in the case above cited, we find that savings banks are not restricted by statute or any principle of law to a particular method of business which must be pursued as between the bank and the depositor. Section 576 of the Civil Code does not confine the mode to pass books, but provides that "savings and loan corporations may issue general certificates of deposit, which are transferable, as in other cases, by indorsement and delivery." It is not necessary to determine in this case whether this part of respondent's business was within its chartered powers, and therefore no opinion is expressed upon that question, further than to say that, in order to be a savings and loan corporation, it is not necessary that the name of the corporation should in any manner express the fact that it is such. Nor need we inquire whether the funds received as savings deposits have been loaned or invested in accordance with the requirements imposed upon savings and loan corporations specially incorporated as such. Such requirements of the statute are solely for the protection of the depositor, and, if the respondent has violated its duty in that regard, it cannot be urged as a reason why it should be relieved from taxation upon the deposits so received. Respondent saw proper to classify its business, and designated one part as the "Savings Department," and named certain hours for that business. It received a large amount of deposits in that department, in full accordance with one of the modes of conducting a savings and loan corporation as authorized by the statute. It gave to the depositor a pass book which denominated the deposits therein entered as "Savings Deposits." It assumes to be a savings bank pro tanto, at least, in obtaining the deposits, and should not be heard to say that it is not when the question of taxation arises, whether it arises between the bank and the state or between it and the depositor.

Respondent contends that the liability to taxation does not depend upon the character of the deposit, but upon the general character of the corporation receiving the deposit, and that such character must be determined from the articles of incorporation, and cites Mitchell v. Beckman, 64 Cal. 117, 122, 28 Pac. 110. That was a suit by a depositor against a stockholder in the Odd Fellows' Savings & Commercial Bank. The money sued for had been deposited by the plaintiff in the Odd Fellows' Bank of Savings in 1873. In 1875 all the assets of that bank were transferred to the Odd Fellows' Savings & Commercial Bank, and the latter assumed all the liabilities of the former. It was contended that the deposit sued for was in a savings bank which was the agent of the plaintiff to invest her money, and, inasmuch as it was lost through the instrumentality of her agent, she could not maintain this action against the stockholders. It was in reply to this contention that it was said that the new bank was a commercial, and not a savings, bank, and that "this is plainly shown by the articles of incorporation." There the question was as to the true legal relation between the depositor in the former corporation, whose deposit had passed to and been assumed by the new, and a stockholder in the new corporation, and upon such question it might well be that the articles of incorporation were conclusive; notwithstanding it was afterwards held in Green v. Bank, 65 Cal. 71, 2 Pac. 887, that upon the transfer to it from the former corporation it "commenced to carry on and until some time in September, 1878, continued to carry on the business of a savings and loan corporation." In the first of these cases the point decided was as to the true nature and powers of the corporation, and in the second the character of the business actually conducted by it.

Respondent further contends that the stipulation of the parties narrows the controversy down to a single point, viz. "whether respondent was in fact a savings and loan corporation," and quotes from the "statement of facts" a paragraph which, taken literally, gives color to his contention. But in the statement of the controversy it is said: "The question in difference and to be determined by said court under the agreed statement of facts herewith submitted is as follows, to wit: Is the defendant State Loan and Trust Company liable and indebted to the plaintiff for the sum of $900, claimed by plaintiff as an assessment for the fiscal year 1892–93 upon solvent credits alleged by plaintiff to have been owned by defendant on the first Monday in March, 1892, and described in the statement of facts hereinafter set forth?" The whole statement shows quite clearly that the con troversy related to only a part of the business of the respondent, and the question was whether as to that part it was in fact a savings and loan corporation.

Our conclusion is, without deciding whether the respondent was legally authorized to transact the business of a savings corporation, that as to the part of its business in controversy it was de facto a savings corporation, and that the taxes in question were properly levied and assessed. The said taxes having been collected by the city, the judgment appealed from should be reversed, and the agreed case dismissed.

RESULTING TRUST—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—PAYMENT OF PURCHASE PRICE.

1. To authorize the imposition of a resulting trust on land in proportion to the consideration furnished by plaintiff, the evidence must show the precise amount paid by him, as well as the total consideration.

2. There is no resulting trust in favor of the wife in land purchased by the husband, on his credit, though part of the purchase price was paid with money subsequently borrowed from her.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county; W. O. Minor, Judge.

Action by one Woodside and others against one Hewel, executor, etc., of Thomas E. Tynan, deceased. There was a judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

D. M. Delmas, L. W. Fulkerth, and W. H. Hatton, for appellant. J. H. Budd and L. J. Maddux, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. In 1862, Thomas E. Tynan married the widow of Eli E. Marvin, and they lived together as husband and wife until her death, in 1881. At the time of their marriage, Mrs. Marvin was the owner of certain real estate in Stanislaus county, and also of an hotel and ferry which were conducted by her at Empire City, in said county, and Tynan was a practicing physician in that county, and also the owner of certain real estate therein. During the marriage certain real and personal property was purchased in the name of Dr. Tynan, and, after the death of his wife, he purchased other property in the city of Modesto. The plaintiffs are the children of Mrs. Marvin by her former husband, and, at the death of their father, became the owners of one-half of his estate, which they subsequently conveyed to their mother. In 1892 they brought the present action against Dr. Tynan for a conveyance to them of the property purchased by him after his marriage with their mother, as well that purchased before her death as that subsequent thereto, alleging that it had been purchased with the proceeds of her separate estate, and was held in trust by him. Tynan answered the complaint, denying these allegations; but, before the case came on for trial, he died, and his executor was, upon his own motion, substituted as defendant. The court found "that three-fifths of the purchase price of each of [certain described parcels of land] was furnished from the rents, issues, and profits of the separate property of Mrs. Tynan, and the same were invested by her husband therein as her agent and trustee, and as the agent and trustee of the plaintiffs," and rendered judgment that the plaintiffs are the equitable owners of an undivided three-fifths of the property. From this judgment and an order denying a new trial, an appeal has been taken.

The theory upon which the plaintiffs seek to maintain this action, both in their complaint and by the evidence presented at the trial, is that, inasmuch as the consideration for the purchase of the land was moneys belonging to their mother or to her estate, a resulting trust was created in her favor, which they, as her heirs at law, are entitled to assert against Dr. Tynan, and that, at the commencement of this action, the property so purchased was held by him in trust for them to the extent that the moneys of their mother contributed to the purchase. The equitable principle that when, upon the purchase of lands, the consideration therefor is furnished by one person, and the conveyance is taken in the name of another, a resulting trust in the lands is created in favor of the one from whom the consideration came, is well recognized, as is also the rule that a resulting trust is created pro tanto where only a specific part of the consideration was so furnished. It is also a familiar rule that it is incumbent upon him who would claim that a trust exists in his favor to establish the fact by clear, convincing, and unambiguous testimony; that the presumption that the person in whose name the legal title to land is vested is the absolute owner thereof is not to be overcome by surmise or conjecture, or by any evidence that fails to afford satisfactory proof of the fact to the tribunal before which it is presented; that it is essential that one who would claim an interest in real property by reason of having paid the consideration for its purchase must show that such payment was made at or prior to the time the purchase was made, and for the purpose of making the purchase; and that, if he would claim an interest pro tanto according to the proportion of the consideration furnished by him, he must show the precise amount paid by him, as well as the amount for which the purchase was made, in order that the court may determine the respective rights of the parties in the property purchased. The presumption of ownership arising from the legal title will not be overcome unless the interest of the claimant can be determined; and the testimony presented in support of the equitable claim must clearly show, not only the existence of the trust, but also the extent to which the property is held in trust; otherwise, the legal title will prevail. "The trust must have been coeval with the deed, or it cannot exist at all. After a party has made a purchase with his own moneys or credit, a subsequent tender, or even reimbursement, may be evidence of some other contract or the ground for some other relief; but it cannot, by any retrospective effect, produce the trust of which we are speaking. There never was an instance of such a trust, so created, and there never ought to be, for it would destroy all the certainty and security of conveyances of real estate. The resulting trust, not within the statute of frauds, and which may be shown without writing, is when the purchase is made with the proper moneys of the cestui que trust, and the deed not taken in his name. The trust results from the original transaction at the time it takes place, and at no other time; and it is founded on the actual payment of money, and on no other ground." Botsford v. Burr, 2 Johns. Ch. 415. "There is no doubt that payment of part of the purchase money will create a resulting trust to the extent of that payment, but the amounts paid by the different parties must be shown with certainty; and a resulting trust will not be held to arise upon payments made in common by the one asserting his claim and the grantee in the deed, when the consideration is set forth in the deed as moving solely from the latter, unless satisfactory evidence is offered exhibiting the portion which was really the property of each, and establishing the fact that the payment was made for some specific part or distinct interest in the estate." Cutler v. Tuttle, 19 N. J. Eq. 561. "There must be no uncertainty as to the proportion of the property to which the trust extends." Olcott v. Bynum, 17 Wall. 59. See, also, White v. Carpenter, 2 Paige, 240; Baker v. Vining, 30 Me. 127; McGowan v. McGowan, 14 Gray, 119; Reynolds v. Morris, 17 Ohio St. 510; Robles v. Clarke, 25 Cal. 326. "To follow money into land, and impress the land with a trust, the money must be distinctly traced and clearly proved to have been invested in the land. The conversion of the trust money specifically, as distinct from other money of the trustee, into the property sought to be subjected to the trust, must be clearly shown. It does not suffice to show the possession of the trust funds by the trustee, and the purchase by him of property; that is, payment for property generally by the trustee does not authorize the presumption that the purchase was made with trust funds." Ferris v. Van Vechten, 73 N. Y. 119; Phillips v. Overfield, 100 Mo. 474, 13 S. W. 705.

Tested by these principles, the evidence in the present case fails to sustain the finding of the court, that three-fifths of the purchase price of the property set forth therein was furnished from the separate estate of Mrs. Tynan. This property may be divided into three classes,—that purchased by Dr. Tynan in the lifetime of his wife, that purchased by him after her death, and certain personal property in his possession at the commencement of the action. Bearing in mind that it is to be presumed that the property purchased during the existence of the marriage was community property, and that, upon the death of his wife, it vested absolutely in him, it was necessary for the plaintiffs, in order to overcome this presumption, to show that the whole or some definite portion of the consideration for the property purchased by him came from the separate estate of their mother by more clear and satisfactory evidence than would have been required had he not sustained that relation at the times of the several purchases. The property in the city of Modesto was all purchased by him after her death, and there is an entire absence of evidence tending to show that any portion of her estate was invested in these lands. The plaintiffs themselves were the chief witnesses in support of their claim, one of whom was seven years of age, and the other five, at the time of their mother's marriage to Dr. Tynan; and the testimony given by them consisted chiefly of their remembrance of conversations between him and their mother, and of acts which they had witnessed. They were unable to specify any sum of money that had been given by their mother to Dr. Tynan for the purchase of land, or to designate any parcel of land purchased by him for which a portion of the purchase money had been furnished by her. The Hardscrabble place was the only purchase which they identified as having been made by him, or for which any specific sum of money came from their mother, and in reference to this purchase Mrs. Woodside testified: "The next purchase I remember was the Hardscrabble place. He wanted to get forty dollars from mother. She objected to giving him the money, but finally she gave it. He said afterwards he paid for the land. How much besides that forty dollars he contributed I do not know." There is no evidence showing that this purchase was made on behalf of the mother, or even with her consent; and the testimony concerning her giving the money, even if it be admitted that the money so given was her separate property, is quite as consistent with considering it a loan to her husband as to consider it a part of the consideration contributed for the purchase. The amount of the purchase price is not given, and the witness said that she did not know what it was. With reference to another purchase, she testified: "He made this remark, that he borrowed some money to buy a piece of land on this side of the river, and he told me it took all he and mother could save from both places to pay for it." Whatever land was purchased upon the credit of Dr. Tynan was community property, and did not cease to be such by reason of a subsequent payment of the loan with money furnished by his wife. With reference to the purchase from Mrs. Kincaid, she testified: "I don't know how much was paid for it, nor to whom. Mrs. Kincaid was at the house. She came to sell the land. The doctor did not have sufficient to pay for it, and he asked mother for it. Mother came out of her bedroom. She handed her purse to the doctor. She contributed by handing her purse to him. I understood she gave the money to contribute towards the purchase price." It is unnecessary to recite the evidence in regard to other purchases, as it is all of similar tenor, and in no part of the record is there any evidence which will sustain the aforesaid findings of the court. In this finding the court seems to have acted upon the theory that the several purchases of land by Dr. Tynan were in furtherance of a common purpose between him and his wife, whereas there is no evidence which tends to establish such common purpose; and, in the absence of such evidence, each purchase is to be regarded as a distinct and separate transaction. The record fails to show the amount of money which was paid for any single parcel of land purchased, the only evidence in that respect being the consideration recited in the deeds; and, with reference to many of the parcels of land, there is no testimony of the circumstances under which they were purchased.

The court also found that Dr. Tynan employed the separate funds of his wife to the extent of three-fifths of the purchase price thereof, in purchasing certain farming utensils and other personal property and stock in the Grangers' Bank, and rendered judgment awarding to the plaintiffs an undivided three-fifths therein and in "all other property acquired by him after July 27, 1862, and which at the time of the commencement of this action stood in his name." This finding is challenged by the appellant as unsupported by any evidence, and counsel for respondents have not cited us to any part of the record in which the finding is sustained; nor have we been able, upon a thorough examination thereof, to find any evidence in the record of the purchase of any of this personal property, or of the circumstances under which it was made. It was not shown that Dr. Tynan did not have the means with which to make the several purchases; and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it must be assumed that they were made with his own funds, and that he intended them for himself alone. The judgment and order are reversed.

MECHANIC'S LIEN—CLAIM FOR LIEN—NONSUIT—PARTNERSHIP—ASSIGNMENT.

1. The fact that the architect, in his claim for a lien on the building, alleges the date of the contract for his services to have been two years prior to its actual date, will not defeat his lien.

2. A nonsuit should not be granted where there is a conflict in the evidence.

3. An assignment of a partnership claim by a member of the firm in the name of the firm to himself individually is sufficient to enable him to sue thereon, the other partners not objecting thereto.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Luce & McDonald, Gibson & Titus, Conklin & Hughes, and Shaw & Holland, for appellant. Fox & Kellogg and Parrish & Mossholder, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. The present action is a consolidated action, involving the respective rights of plaintiff as a mortgagee, and the rights of defendants and appellants as owners and lien claimants. This appeal is brought by J. W. Reid, a lien claimant, who was nonsuited by the trial court; the appeals of all the other appellants having been heretofore dismissed upon motion. Reid's rights are based upon a claim for services as architect in the preparation of plans and specifications to be used in the erection of the San Diego Opera House, and as the superintendent of such building during the process of construction. Respondent presents various grounds as sufficient to sustain the action of the trial court in granting the nonsuit, and we assume that the best reasons disclosed by the record have been advanced. We proceed to examine them in detail.

1. The contract upon which Reid seeks to recover is stated in his claim of lien as follows: "That on or about the 22d day of January, 1889, the said Reid Brothers entered into a contract with John C. Fisher, as agent of the said owners, under and by which said Reid Brothers agreed to furnish the said architectural drawings, plans, and specifications, and to superintend the erection and construction of said building; and the said Fisher and said San Diego Opera-House Company, a corporation, agreed to pay for the said architectural drawings, plans, and specifications * * * an amount of money equal to five per centum of the total cost of construction, erection, and completion of said building." It is now asserted that the lien claimant at the trial must stand upon the contract set out in his claim of lien, and that no such contract was proven. That contract was of the date of January 23, 1889, while the contract proven was entered into on or about April 27, 1891, being more than two years subsequent to the date set forth in the claim of lien. This is a most substantial variance as to time, but we do not think it so material as to be fatal to the claimant's case. In actions brought for the foreclosure of mechanics' liens, the day upon which contracts are entered into is a matter of little importance. It is practically immaterial, for no rights are fixed by it, and nothing is dependent upon it. For the purposes of description and identity, the date of the contract is in a sense material, for the party to be charged must have notice of the particular contract upon which the lien claimant intends to rely at the trial. But here the terms and conditions of the contract are stated, and they are the essential elements contemplated by the statute to be stated in the claim of lien. We think them amply sufficient to identify this contract, and put the defendant upon his proof, notwithstanding the plaintiff's evidence at the trial as to the time when the contract was entered into varies materially from the date set out in his claim of lien. Indeed, it may be said to be doubtful if the statute requires a statement in the claim of lien. There was evidence that Fisher entered into the contract individually with the architect; there was evidence that he entered into the contract with the architect as the agent of the opera-house company; and there was evidence that the opera-house company directly entered into the contract independently of Fisher. Under such conditions, a nonsuit should not have been granted for lack of evidence in this regard. Again, there was evidence that the architect agreed to take one-half or one-third of the contract price in stock of the opera-house company, and there was also evidence that the full amount was to be paid in money. This evidence also furnished no ground for a nonsuit, and, in the face of such a conflict, respondent has no right to assume that part of the contract price was to be paid in stock, and has no right to argue therefrom that, consequently, the contract was void and the nonsuit justified. Where there is a conflict in the evidence, a motion for a nonsuit should never be granted.

2. The evidence discloses that neither Fisher nor the opera-house company was the owner of the real estate upon which the building was subsequently constructed, in January, 1889, when the contract is alleged to have been made; but we do not think this fact is material. We know of no reason why parties desirous of erecting buildings have not the right to contract for their erection, even though at the time they do not own the realty upon which the buildings are to be erected; and we do not see how the question is at all material or pertinent to any litigation which might subsequently arise from the claims of lienholders; but, beyond this, we have shown that the date of the contract was a false date, and the evidence fully indicates that when the contract was actually entered into, in April, 1891, Fisher, or the opera-house company, or both, were the owners of the property, and were the owners at all times when work was being performed in the construction thereof.

3. The claim of lien was filed by Reid Bros., a partnership consisting of three brothers, of whom this appellant was one. Plaintiff brought this action, relying upon an assignment from the partnership. This assignment was in writing, and was made by plaintiff in the name of the partnership to himself, individually. Respondent attacks this assignment as invalid. In Caulfield v. Sanders, 17 Cal. 570, it was held that one partner might transfer a partnership account to a third party, and we see no reason why the same rule does not apply in the present case; but we think it sufficient to say that the other members of the firm are not here objecting to the assignment; and as against all parties standing in the position of these respondents, we think it sufficient. We find nothing further disclosed by the record demanding our consideration.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment in favor of the plaintiff and defendant Fisher and the San Diego Opera-House Company, as against the appellant Reid, is reversed.

WRIT OF REVIEW—WHEN LIES—REMEDY BY APPEAL—ORDER IN INSOLVENCY PROCEEDING.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1068, providing that a writ of review may be granted when an inferior tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction, "and there is no appeal," the writ does not lie when there is a remedy by appeal.

2. By express provision of Insolvent Act 1880, § 67, subd. 5, an appeal lies to the supreme court from an order in insolvency proceedings setting aside to the insolvent a homestead, or other property, as exempt from execution.

3. Under Insolvent Act 1880, § 67, subd. 5, allowing an appeal from an order setting aside to an insolvent a homestead, or other property, as exempt from execution, the supreme court, on appeal, may consider all errors affecting the rights of appellant; and the fact that the order, in excess of the power of the court below, included a stay of execution then pending, and commanded a release of the property by the sheriff, is not ground for the issuance of a writ of review.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

In insolvency proceedings in the superior court of Fresno county, James E. Hughes was adjudged insolvent, and applied for a setting apart of certain land as a homestead, and certain chattels as exempt from execution. The application was granted, over the objection of A. Noble and A. Otto, execution creditors, who petition for a writ of review. Denied.

Gale & Peery and W. P. Thompson, for petitioners. L. L. Cory, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. One James E. Hughes filed his petition in insolvency in the superior court of the county of Fresno, state of California, in due form; and an order was thereupon made by the said superior court adjudging the said James E. Hughes an insolvent debtor, and directing notice to be given as provided by law to the creditors of said insolvent to meet for the purpose of electing an assignee, and did then and there order that all the proceedings against said insolvent be stayed. Thereafter the said insolvent presented a petition to the superior court, asking that certain real property be set apart to him as a homestead, and that certain personal property by him owned be set apart as exempt from execution. Notice was given of the time and place of hearing said application, and at the hearing thereof the petitioners herein (who were judgment creditors of said insolvent, and who had caused an execution to issue and be levied upon a portion of the personal property claimed as being exempt from execution) appeared, and presented written objections to setting apart said personal property as exempt, and protested against the making of any order staying the execution which had been levied upon the exempt property by the sheriff of Fresno county prior to the proceedings in insolvency. Upon the hearing of the matter the court made and entered an order or decree exempting and setting apart the homestead of the insolvent, and the personal property in said order described, as exempt from execution, and providing that the same shall not be in any way subject to execution, and forever staying execution against the same, and ordering the sheriff of Fresno county to release and discharge any and all of said property from the operation and effect of said execution. Thereupon the plaintiffs presented their petition to this court, setting forth substantially the proceedings in the superior court, and praying a writ of review to issue out of this court, directed to the superior court, citing it to show cause why the order complained of should not be vacated and set aside. The writ issued. Defendant answered, and demurred to the petition upon various grounds, among which are that the petitioners had a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law, in this: that an appeal from the order in the petition set forth, and sought to be reviewed herein, is given said petitioners by reason of subdivision 5 of section 67 of the insolvent act of 1880.

Our writ of review, which answers to the common-law writ of certiorari, "may be granted by any court, except a police or justice's court, when an inferior tribunal, board, or officer, exercising judicial functions, has exceeded the jurisdiction of such tribunal, board, or officer, and there is no appeal nor in the judgment of the court any plain, speedy and adequate remedy." Code Civ. Proc. § 1068. From this provision, it is made manifest that three concurring requisites are essential to the issuance of the writ of review, viz.: (1) An excess of jurisdiction by the inferior tribunal, etc., exercising judicial functions; (2) that there is no appeal; (3) that there is no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy. Section 67 of the same act is as follows: "An appeal may be taken to the supreme court in the following cases: (1) * * * (2) * * * (3) * * * (4) * * * (5) Against or in favor of setting apart a homestead or other property claimed as exempt from execution." Turning to the insolvent act of 1880, and we find that, by the terms of section 60, "it shall be the duty of the court having jurisdiction of the proceedings to exempt and set apart for the use and benefit of said insolvent such real and personal property as is by law exempt from execution; and also a homestead in the manner as provided in section one thousand four hundred and sixty-five of the Code of Civil Procedure." From these provisions of the insolvent law it appears (1) that it is made the duty of the superior court, in insolvency proceedings, to exempt and set aside for the use of the insolvent such personal property as is exempt from execution, and also a homestead; and (2) that the order so doing, or refusing so to do, is appealable.

That the writ will not lie, under our statutes, where there is a remedy by appeal, is equally settled by the Code of Civil Procedure and by the adjudications of this court. Faut v. Mason, 47 Cal. 7; Newman v. Superior Court, 62 Cal. 545; McCue v. Superior Court, 71 Cal. 545, 12 Pac. 615; Weill v. Light, 98 Cal. 193, 32 Pac. 943; Estate of McConnell, 74 Cal. 217, 15 Pac. 746. Proceedings in insolvent cases must be brought before the supreme court by appeal, and not by certiorari. People v. Shepard, 28 Cal. 115; Tomasini v. Superior Court, 75 Cal. 225, 17 Pac. 1.

The contention of petitioners is that they are not here objecting to the order of the court setting apart the homestead, or to so much of the order as set apart the personal property exempt from execution, but only to that portion of the order which stayed the proceedings of the sheriff under execution, and required him to release and discharge such property from the operation and effect of said execution. The answer is that there is but one decree or order in the case, which decree sets apart the property, and orders the sheriff to release and discharge the personal property from the operation and effect of the execution; and from this decree or order, as we have shown, an appeal lies. Where an appeal is given from a judgment, the appellate court may correct all the errors therein detrimental to the appellant; and the fact that some portion of the judgment is without, and in excess of, the powers of the court, is but a reason for a reversal of the judgment on such appeal. If the theory of petitioners is correct, then it must follow that an appeal will lie to so much of the judgment as set apart the homestead and the exempt property, and a writ of review as to the residue. Our law is not guilty of any such inconsistency. When an appeal is given from a judgment or order, it is that all the errors therein affecting the rights of the appellant may be corrected. In Estate of Burton, 63 Cal. 36; Estate of Groome, 94 Cal. 69, 29 Pac. 487; and Estate of Kimberly, 97 Cal. 281, 32 Pac. 234,—cited by petitioners in support of their contention, it appears that the court below, upon applications for homesteads, proceeded to try and determine the question of title to the land sought to be set aside. Upon appeal to this court, it was held in each case that the question of adverse ownership could not be considered in such a proceeding, but must be tried and determined in another form. The question there was, in principle, like that presented by the case at bar. The court below, having jurisdiction to set apart a homestead, had, in excess of its power, attempted to determine the question of adverse claims to the land sought to be homesteaded. We find no suggestion in those cases indicating a doubt as to the right to have the question heard and determined on an appeal from the orders as made. Had the petitioners here taken an appeal from the order of the court below, the very question they are seeking to raise here could have been determined on such appeal. This being so, it follows that, under our law, the writ of review cannot be maintained and the writ should be discharged.

We concur: BRITT, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the writ is discharged.

MERZBACH v. HADLEY (PACIFIC MUT. INS. CO., Intervener. L. A. 81).

POSTPONEMENT OF MORTGAGE SALE.

The refusal to postpone a sale under foreclosure will not be reversed where it did not appear that notice of motion had been served upon any of the parties interested, and the evidence was conflicting as to the propriety of the postponement, though it was alleged that the commissioner appointed to sell left the court room during the argument, and proceeded with the sale, and, though respondent's attorneys sent a telegram to the judge objecting to a postponement except upon legal grounds, it was not shown that they had notice of said motion, nor of the reasons upon which it was based.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; Geo. Puterbaugh, Judge.

Action by F. H. Merzbach, assignee of the State Investment & Insurance Company, insolvent, against W. E. Hadley, to foreclose a mortgage. The Pacific Mutual Insurance Company intervened. From an order denying his motion to postpone the sale under decree of foreclosure, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. F. Riley (Crittenden Thornton, of counsel), for appellant. Fox, Kellogg & Gray, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from an order refusing to postpone a sale under a decree of foreclosure. Appellant's assignor held a mortgage upon property in San Diego executed by defendant to secure $60,000 and interest. This mortgage was assigned to the intervener to secure a loan made by it to plaintiff's assignor, amounting to $45,000, with interest. A decree of foreclosure was entered December 15, 1894, for $71,097.20 and costs. Of this sum, $50,119.39 was found to be due the intervener in payment of the debt due it, and secured by the assignment of the mortgage. A commissioner was appointed to sell the mortgaged premises in satisfaction of the decree, and the sale was noticed to take place on the 16th day of January, 1895. January 15, 1895 (the day before the proposed sale), Judge Puterbaugh made an order requiring the commissioner to show cause at 9 o'clock January 16, 1895, why the sale should not be postponed for 30 days. It does not appear that the order to show cause was served upon any one, or that either the intervener or commissioner was represented at the hearing, which was on the 16th. It does appear that F. H. Merzbach informed the court that the commissioner, despite the fact that the motion to postpone the sale was being argued, had left the court room, and was proceeding with the sale. This is only a statement of what Merzbach said, but not that the commissioner was at any time present at the hearing. The bill of exceptions also shows that the judge received a telegram from Fox, Kellogg & Gray, attorneys for the intervener, that they objected to a postponement of the sale unless legal grounds were shown. This does not show that they were informed that a motion of that character had been made, nor the reason why a postponement was asked; much less did it afford them any opportunity of being heard. The defendant did appear and filed an affidavit stating facts which tended to show that it would be better for all concerned that no postponement should be had. In their arguments, counsel for appellant assert that the sale was actually made while the motion was being made. No injunction was issued and no stay order argued.

The order cannot be reversed. No notice of the motion having been given, other parties interested were not heard. The evidence as to the propriety of a postponement was conflicting, and we are not convinced that the judge, in refusing to postpone, abused his discretion. A reversal of this order would serve no useful purpose. A sale having been made, if appellant was aggrieved, his remedy was to have the sale set aside. The sale was not a proceeding in the court depending upon the order appealed from, and which would fall by a mere reversal of the order. The order is affirmed.

JUDGMENT IN JUSTICE'S COURT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 872, providing that if a demurrer to the complaint is overruled, and defendant fails to answer at once, the justice may render judgment against him, it is proper, on the overruling of a demurrer and a failure to answer forthwith, to immediately enter judgment against defendant, who had notice of the time of hearing, but did not appear; and section 850, requiring the justice to fix a day for the trial of the cause after an appearance, is thus complied with, as the issue presented was one of law, for which a hearing was fixed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Application by Stewart and others for a writ of review directed to the justice's court of Los Angeles township. From the judgment therein entered, an appeal was taken. Reversed.

Will D. Gould and Groff & Lefroy, for appellant. McKeeby & Appel, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. An action against the respondents was commenced in the justice's court of Los Angeles township by certain parties, and the summons issued therein was served upon the defendants (respondents herein). The defendants filed a demurrer to the complaint, and the justice fixed the following day for the hearing upon the demurrer. Notice of this fact was served upon the defendants, but they failed to appear at the time set for the hearing; and the justice, after waiting one hour, overruled the demurrer, and made an order that the defendants answer "at once," and, upon their failure to answer, entered their default, and rendered judgment against them for the amount claimed, with costs. The defendants thereupon applied to the superior court for a writ of review, directed to the justice's court; and, upon a return thereto showing the above facts, the superior court annulled the judgment of the justice's court. From the judgment thus entered, an appeal has been taken to this court.

Section 858, Code Civ. Proc., prescribes the proceedings to be had in the justice's court upon a demurrer, and declares: "(2) If the demurrer to a complaint is overruled, the defendant may answer forthwith." And section 872 authorizes the justice to render judgment in favor of the plaintiff "(2) if the demurrer to the complaint is overruled, and the defendant fails to answer at once." The provisions of section 850 requiring the justice to fix a day "for the trial of said cause" after an appearance by the defendant, and to notify the defendant thereof, have reference only to such "trial" as is authorized by the nature of the appearance. If by such appearance only an issue of law is presented, there can be a trial of only such issue of law, and a trial of fact cannot he had unless an issue of fact is presented after the trial and disposition of the issue of law. In the present case the only issue that was presented by the defendants for trial was an issue of law, and the defendants received due notice of the day upon which the trial of this issue would be had by the justice. Upon the overruling of the demurrer, the action of the justice was in strict accordance with the provisions of the statute. By section 858, the defendants could have answered forthwith upon the overruling of their demurrer, but they failed to do so; and by section 872, upon their failure to answer "at once," the justice was authorized to render judgment "in like manner as if the defendant had failed to appear and answer or demur." As there was no issue of fact to be tried, there was no occasion for the justice to fix any day for the trial other than that which he had already fixed. In Jones v. Justice's Court, 97 Cal. 523, 32 Pac. 575, the defendant was not notified that the case had been set for trial; and we held that the notice required by the provisions of section 850 to be given to the parties of the time fixed for trial is jurisdictional, and that, in the absence of such notice, the justice has no jurisdiction to proceed in the cause. In the present case, however, the notice required by this section was given to the defendants, and the justice thereby acquired jurisdiction to try the issue before him, and to render judgment accordingly. There is no provision of the Code which requires the justice to allow the defendant any time within which to answer the complaint in case his demurrer shall be overruled, or to give to him any notice that his demurrer has been overruled; but, by the terms of the sections above referred to, the justice is authorized to proceed forthwith with the cause, and, if no issue of fact has been presented for trial, to render judgment in favor of the plaintiff. As the justice's court had jurisdiction to render the judgment, any error that may have been committed by it in its action cannot be reviewed upon certiorari. The judgment appealed from is reversed.

SEDUCTION — PROMISE OF MARRIAGE — CONSENT—PREVIOUS CHASTE CHARACTER—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. The promise of marriage, in a prosecution for seduction, need only be shown by circumstances sufficient to warrant the inference that sexual intercourse would not have been accomplished in the absence of such promise.

2. Where it was apparent from the testimony of prosecutrix in a prosecution for seduction that she yielded to defendant's solicitations, but she testified that she did not expressly consent to the act, the jury properly subordinated the literal terms to the substance of the evidence.

3. The state must affirmatively show the previous chaste character of the prosecutrix, in a prosecution for seduction.

4. An instruction which was sufficiently explicit when read in connection with other instructions in the case is not ground for reversal.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; B. N. Smith, Judge.

C. R. Wallace was convicted of seduction, and appeals. Affirmed.

McKeeby & Appel, for appellant. W. F. Fitzgerald, Atty. Gen., for the People.

VAN FLEET, J. Appeal from a judgment convicting defendant of seduction, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

1. It is contended that the evidence does not sustain the verdict, but the claim is untenable. There is not only evidence tending to support each issue involved in the charge, but, if true,—and the jury have found that it was,—it established very clearly the guilt of the defendant. The charge was seduction under promise of marriage, and, of course, the gist of the offense is the accomplishment of the act by means of such promise, as the inducing cause of the consent of the one seduced. It is not essential, however, in such case, in order to convict, that the evidence shall disclose any express or direct reference by the seducer to such promise as a means to accomplish his purpose; nor, on the other hand, that the consent of the female shall be expressly rested by her upon such consideration. It is sufficient if the circumstances be such as to warrant the jury in the deduction that the act of sexual intercourse would not have been accomplished without, or in the absence of, such promise. The record discloses a state of facts fully justifying such inference in this case. In fact, as to all the essential elements involved, we cannot readily conceive of a case of this character being more satisfactorily established than was done in this instance. The claim that a case of seduction was not shown, because the prosecutrix did not consent to the act, and that it was therefore rape, if anything, is without weight. It is true, the prosecutrix states, in terms, that she did not consent to the act; but her testimony, taken as a whole, shows that she did, and the jury were justified in so finding. Obviously, what the prosecutrix meant to convey by her testimony was that she did not give her consent in express terms, because she did not think it was right, but that her objections were so far overcome by defendant's solicitations that she yielded a reluctant acquiescence in his act. The jury very properly subordinated the literal terms used by the witness to the substance and effect of her evidence.

2. The court properly admitted the evidence of the prosecution as to the previous chaste character of the prosecutrix. That was one of the elements of the offense which the people were called upon to establish affirmatively, and as a part of their case in chief, and the evidence offered was competent for the purpose.

3. It is claimed that the court erred in not charging the jury as to the meaning of the term "seduced," used in one of its instructions. We think the instruction complained of was sufficiently explicit when read with the other instructions in the case; but if the defendant desired, or thought necessary more full and specific instruction on the point, he should have requested it. The record is without error, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

ACTION ON NOTE — RELEASE OF SURETY — NOVATION—INSTRUCTIONS—HARMLESS ERROR.

1. In an action on a note the exclusion of evidence to show that defendant is liable only as surety is harmless error where an instruction stated that the evidence shows that such defendant was a surety.

2. In an action on a note it cannot be urged that the erroneous exclusion of evidence to show suretyship compelled a trial on the theory of novation instead of release, where it appears that such ruling did not prevent a disclosure of all the facts.

3. In an action on a note with surety it appeared that the maker before its maturity transferred his property to a stranger to sell, and out of the proceeds pay the note; that after maturity all the parties agreed to a sale of the property on 15 days' notice of sale; that, a sale on the date fixed being impracticable, plaintiff consented to a postponement, and there was no evidence that the surety did not consent thereto. There was no evidence that the payee agreed to look wholly to the sale for payment of the debt or to release the surety. Held, that the surety was not released.

4. Where the maker, payee, and surety on a note agree to a transfer of the maker's property to a stranger to sell on a certain date to raise funds to pay the note, and such agreement is not a novation, an instruction placing the burden on the surety to show plaintiff's consent to a postponement of the sale in order to establish a release is proper.

5. Where the maker, payee, and surety on a note agree to a transfer of the maker's property to a stranger to sell on a certain date to raise funds to pay the note, an instruction requiring the surety to show consent of the payee to a postponement of the sale in order to show a release is not inconsistent with one that the failure of the stranger to sell and pay the debt could not affect the rights of the surety to plead the agreement as a novation.

6. A transfer of property by the maker of a note to a third person to sell and pay the note out of the proceeds, made with the payee's consent, will not constitute a novation unless the payee accepted the stranger as his debtor in place of the maker, and released the maker from any obligation on the note.

7. Where, in a suit on a note, a surety relies on novation as a defense, and it appears that plaintiff had possession of the note, an instruction that the "surrender or extinguishment of a note" are essential to a novation will not be held erroneous as requiring a verdict for plaintiff where it also appears that the jury understood that such expression meant that the obligation of the note must be extinguished.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Kings county; Justin Jacobs, Judge.

Action by Antonio Y. Pimental against Alberto S. Marques and M. P. Rose on a note. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Rose appeals. Affirmed.

The fifth instruction given for defendant was to the effect that Biddle's failure to sell the sheep and pay the note could not affect the rights of defendant Rose to claim a novation as a defense to the action.

Horace L. Smith, for appellant. Rowen Irwin and Newman Jones, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This appeal is from the judgment, upon the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions. The action was upon a promissory note made by the defendants to the plaintiff on September 1, 1892, payable one year after date, for the sum of $1,872, with interest at 10 per cent. It was stipulated in the note that in case any suit should be instituted thereon the makers should pay such additional sum as the court might adjudge to be reasonable as attorney's fees therein. Marques made default. Rose answered, alleging that he executed the note as surety for the defendant, and that the consideration of the note was an antecedent debt, which, at the date of the note. Marques owed to the plaintiff. He further alleged that on or about September 10, 1893, Marques was the owner of about 1,900 sheep and other property, and that on said date he placed them in the hands of one Biddle for sale, and that plaintiff and said Marques agreed between themselves that Biddle should hold said sheep, and sell the same, and out of the proceeds of said sale pay the plaintiff the principal and interest of said note; and that in pursuance of said agreement Biddle advertised said sheep for sale, and with the consent of plaintiff postponed the sale; and that he had not yet sold said sheep, or any part of them. It was also alleged that Biddle would have sold said sheep at the time advertised for the sale if plaintiff had not consented that the sale should not take place until the price of sheep should increase; and that, if sold at the time advertised for the sale, sufficient would have been realized to pay and discharge said note; that said sheep were then, and are now, of the reasonable value of $2,900; and that Biddle still held them under said agreement between the plaintiff and defendant Marques. The action was tried by a jury, and resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount claimed, and judgment was entered thereon. Upon the trial appellant was sworn on his own behalf, and was asked the following questions: "Did Marques owe this same debt before? Was Marques indebted to Pimental at the time you signed the note?" The plaintiffs objected to the questions that they were immaterial, and that the allegation in the answer that it was given for an antecedent debt was surplusage. The court sustained the objection, and defendant excepted. The witness was also asked: "You signed it simply as surety?" and a similar objection was made thereto, and sustained, and the defendant excepted, and these rulings are assigned for error. These rulings were clearly erroneous (Civ. Code, § 2832); but the question, however, remains, was defendant injured by these rulings? The court instructed the jury that "the evidence in this case shows that Rose was a surety on the note." So far as the fact of suretyship, therefore, was concerned, the instruction was as beneficial to the defendant as any testimony upon that point could have been. Appellant contends, however, that the ruling compelled him to try the case upon the view taken by the court of the facts set up in the answer, which was that the answer set up a novation of contract, rather than a release of the defendant as surety. If appellant was in fact released from his liability as surety, such release must have been based upon some act of plaintiff, or some agreement between the parties in relation to the sheep; and upon that point there was no restriction in the examination of the witnesses, and the bill of exceptions discloses no objection or ruling which could possibly have prevented a full disclosure of all the facts; and therefore appellant was not injured by the ruling of the court above noted.

The ground upon which Rose claims that he was released as surety is that his principal, the defendant Marques, placed his property out of his control, and conveyed it to Biddle, as pledgee, for the security of plaintiff; and that this operated to discharge him from liability as surety, though it might not establish a novation. A brief statement of the evidence in relation to the contract alleged in the answer is necessary for the consideration of all the questions in the case. The agreement between the defendant Marques and Biddle was made March 13, 1893, before the note here in suit matured. Under this agreement Marques transferred to Biddle sheep to the number of about 1,987 ewes, and about 1,500 young lambs, and certain horses and a wagon. At the time of this contract there was a prior lien upon the property in favor of Shubert, Beal & Co., which Biddle agreed to pay off and discharge. That the property so transferred was to be sold by Biddle "to the best advantage, either at private sale or public auction, and out of the proceeds pay the amount you have advanced to Messrs. Shubert, Beal & Co.; pay to the party holding the note that M. P. Rose indorsed for me, of $1,800 and interest, also note of $467.15 owing Manuel V. Maydne, dated October 13th, 1892, due November 1st, 1892; also any other notes or accounts due. Then, when sale is made, if any money is left, the said J. D. Biddle is to pay the balance to the said Alberto Marques, or his order, or assigns. Sheep to be sold as soon as circumstances will permit, or as soon as J. D. Biddle deems advisable." Under this agreement Biddle discharged the lien of Shubert, Beal & Co., and took possession of the sheep, but at what precise date does not appear. It does appear, however, that a few days after Marques' note to plaintiff became due, Marques, Rose, Pimental, and Biddle met at Biddle's office. Biddle testified that the agreement between Marques and himself, above referred to, was read to the plaintiff. This the plaintiff denies, but the agreement, or at least that the fact that the property above mentioned was left in the hands of Biddle to be sold for the purpose of paying the note in question was communicated to him, is not disputed. Taking the evidence, however, most strongly in favor of appellant, it may be said that plaintiff agreed to the arrangement with Biddle to sell the sheep, and that Marques and Rose relied upon the sale of the sheep to meet their obligation to the plaintiff. At the first interview between these parties defendant Rose wanted 20 days' time for Biddle to sell the sheep, claiming that it was necessary to properly advertise the sale. The plaintiff thought 15 days long enough, and it was agreed that 15 days' notice should be given. That at that time, owing to the financial crisis which affected the whole country, and the suspension of banks and refusal of other banks to loan money, it was found to be impracticable to sell the sheep without a great sacrifice; and it is claimed that plaintiff consented that Biddle should exercise his discretion in regard to selling, and that he did not want to see the property sacrificed. However this may be, there is no testimony in the case tending to show that appellant did not consent to the delay in selling the property. Nor do I find any evidence tending to show that the plaintiff regarded the arrangement between Marques and Biddle otherwise than as a means of raising money for the payment of his claim, or, at the most, as additional security for its payment. Nor do I find any evidence that the plaintiff consented to "the substitution of a new debtor in place of the old one, with intent to release the latter"; that is, that the plaintiff did not consent or agree to look wholly to the sale of the sheep, or to release the defendant Rose from his liability as surety upon the promissory note. Upon these questions, therefore, I conclude that appellant, having consented to the delay in selling the sheep, was not released as surety, and that there was no novation of the obligation.

Appellant also contends that the court erred in its third instruction given at request of the plaintiff. This instruction is as follows: "In order to establish a defense set up by defendant in his answer herein, defendant Rose must prove by a preponderance of evidence that the plaintiff, Pimental, consented to the postponement of the sale of sheep advertised by Biddle." The exception to this instruction seems to be based upon the theory that the agreement between Marques and Biddle, and the assent of plaintiff to it, operated of itself to discharge appellant as surety. We have already seen, however, that there was no novation, and therefore the instruction is not obnoxious to the criticism of appellant. It is said, however, upon this point, that, "if Rose had consented to the postponement of the sale, a different question would be presented, which the instruction does not deal with." I find nothing in the bill of exceptions which indicates that Rose did not consent to the postponement of the sale, nor do I see any conflict between the instruction above quoted and instruction No. 5 given at request of defendant, as it is certainly very clear that, if there were in fact a novation, Rose could not be affected by any delay in disposing of the sheep, whether with or without the consent of the plaintiff. Nor did the court err in refusing to give the fourth instruction asked for by the defendant, inasmuch as said instruction omitted one material fact necessary to satisfy the legal definition of novation, namely, that the agreement between Marques and Biddle should not only be assented to by the plaintiff, but that the plaintiff consented to the substitution of this obligation for the obligation evidenced by the promissory note, or that he consented to take Biddle as a new debtor in place of the appellant, whose obligation was fixed by the terms of the promissory note; and that with the intent to release him. The court further instructed the jury, of its own motion, as follows: "Bear in mind, gentlemen of the jury, that the consent of the plaintiff to the substitution of one contract for another is an essential thing in the action, and the surrender or extinguishment of the note is another essential thing." This instruction, it is contended, is erroneous, and that, inasmuch as the evidence discloses the possession of the original note by plaintiff, the jury must have known there had been no surrender of the note, and that, therefore, under this instruction, they were bound to find for the plaintiff. We agree with counsel for appellant that the "surrender" of the note was not essential to the novation, though by novation the obligation of the note as such would be "extinguished." The note would only remain to mark the extent of the new obligation, and would have no legal existence beyond that. The court having used the words "surrender or extinguishment" in this connection, the jury could not have been misled by the use of the word "surrender." The judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

MARKET ST. RY. CO. v. HELLMAN et al.

STREET RAILROADS—CONSOLIDATION—VALIDITY OF PROCEEDINGS—NOTICE—VOTING STOCK—PROXIES—CREATING BONDED DEBT—LIABILITY FOR DEBTS OF CONSTITUENT COMPANIES.

1. Civ. Code, § 288, which went into effect January 1, 1873, provides that no corporation in existence before such date is affected by Id. div. 1, pt. 4, relating to corporations and authorizing the consolidation of railroad companies (section 473), unless such existing corporations elect to continue their existence, as allowed by section 287. The second clause of section 288 provides that the "laws under which such corporations exist are applicable to such corporations, and are repealed, subject to the provisions of this section." Sections 401, 403, show an intent to limit the effect of the first clause of section 288 by providing that corporations existing before the Code took effect could extend the term of their existence to 50 years, and by declaring that that part of the Code relating to corporations generally should be applicable to every corporation, "unless such corporation is excepted from its operation, or unless a special provision is made," in which case "the special provision prevails." Held, that all prior laws regulating corporations were repealed, except the laws governing their "formation" and "existence," and that, with the exception of provisions relating to such matters, the provisions of Civ. Code, div. 1, pt. 4, relating to corporations, and including section 473, relating to consolidation of railroad companies, apply equally to corporations formed before and after the Code took effect.

2. Civ. Code, § 288, provides that no corporation formed before the Code took effect "is affected by the provisions of part 4 of division 1 of this Code, unless such corporation elects to continue its existence under it as provided in section 287; but the laws under which such corporations were formed and exist are applicable to all such corporations, and are repealed, subject to the provisions of this section." Division 1, pt. 4, tit. 3, § 473, authorizes the consolidation of railroad corporations, and title 4, § 510, which was adopted after the adoption of the main body of the Code, provides that street railroads are governed by title 3, so far as applicable. Held, that all prior laws relating to street railroads, except laws regulating their formation and existence, were repealed by section 288, and that, therefore, section 473, authorizing consolidation of railroad corporations, applies to street railroads.

3. Under Const. 1879, art. 12, § 1, providing that all laws in force concerning corporations "may be altered from time to time or repealed," power was conferred to enact Civ. Code, § 473, authorizing the consolidation of railroad corporations without the consent of all stockholders, if the consent of holders of three-fourths in value of the stock of each corporation is obtained.

4. A street-railway company, by consenting to consolidation proceedings taken under Civ. Code, § 473, authorizing consolidation of railroad companies on consent of the holders of three-fourths in value of all of the stock of each company, and by transferring all its property to the new company so created, cannot assert that the legislature could not authorize consolidation without the consent of all the stockholders.

5. Where corporations are consolidated under Civ. Code, § 473, the resulting corporation is a new and distinct body, and the objection that the consolidation would extend the existence of the constituent corporations beyond the statutory limit is without merit.

6. The word "stock," as used in Civ. Code, § 473, authorizing the consolidation of railroad companies when the consent of the holders of "three-fourths in value of all the stock of each corporation" is obtained, means stock actually subscribed and outstanding.

7. A trustee of corporate stock has the legal title, and may vote the stock at corporate meetings without accountability to any but the cestui que trust.

8. Under Civ. Code, § 286, providing that private corporations may be formed for any purpose for which individuals may lawfully associate themselves, a corporation may be formed for the purpose of "buying, selling, and dealing in all kinds of public and private stocks," and a purchase by a corporation so formed of stock in another corporation is not ultra vires.

9. Where a corporation is legally organized for the specific purpose of dealing in land, its power to hold land is not limited.

10. Under Civ. Code, § 313, providing that shares of stock of a deceased person may be represented by his executor, the executor may vote the stock without a formal transfer thereof to him.

11. Where the consent of a stockholder to consolidation of the corporation with others is given through an agent acting under a defective power of attorney, the principal, by surrendering his old stock, and accepting corresponding stock in the consolidated corporation with full knowledge of the facts, ratifies the act of the agent.

12. Civ. Code, § 473, requires notice of consolidation of railroad companies to be published for "one month" in a newspaper in each county through which the road runs, and for the same length of time in one published in Sacramento and in two published in San Francisco. Held, that a notice of the consolidation of street railroads published five consecutive times in a weekly paper published in the county where the roads were situated, and in a Sacramento daily, except Sundays, from October 18th to November 17th, inclusive, and in two San Francisco papers daily for more than a month, is sufficient.

13. Where street-railroad companies are consolidated under Civ. Code, § 473, the outstanding liabilities of the constituent companies cannot be transferred to the new corporation without the consent of the creditors of such companies.

14. Under Civ. Code, § 473, providing that the consolidation of railroad companies thereby authorized shall not relieve such companies from their joint liabilities, the obligations of the constituent companies, though not primary liabilities of the consolidated company, are charges on its property, which such company may properly consider as debts, within section 309, forbidding a corporation to create debts in excess of its subscribed capital stock.

15. Civ. Code, § 303, provides that a corporation may provide in its by-laws a "mode of voting by proxy," and section 312 provides that, at all elections had "for any purpose," the participants, "in person or by proxy," must be members or bona fide stockholders. Held, that proxy votes cast at an election to create a bonded debt, in compliance with a by-law allowing votes by proxy, if the same, in writing, signed by the stockholder, are filed with the secretary, were valid.

16. In a proceeding by a street-railway company consolidated under Civ. Code, § 473, to enforce a contract for the purchase of its bonds, the validity of the consolidation cannot be attacked, section 358 providing that the incorporation of any company claiming in good faith to be a corporation, and doing business as such, or its right to exercise corporate powers, "shall not be inquired into collaterally." Per Harrison, J., dissenting.

In bank. Commissioners' decision. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; William T. Wallace, Judge.

Proceedings on an agreed case, submitted without action, to determine the liability of I. W. Hellman and others on a contract for the purchase of bonds of the Market Street Railway Company. From a judgment for the company, I. W. Hellman and others appeal. Affirmed.

Robert Y. Hayne and J. Howard Smith, for appellants. J. P. Langhorne, amicus curiæ. J. E. Foulds, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff upon an agreed case, submitted in accordance with the provisions of section 1138, Code Civ. Proc. The plaintiff, the Market Street Railway Company, claimed to be a consolidated corporation; the result of proceedings taken by 11 constituent corporations under sections 473 and 510 of the Civil Code of the state of California. After consummating its consolidation and obtaining its final certificates, it took proceedings for the issuance of bonds secured by a mortgage or deed of trust upon all its property, which mortgage or deed of trust was made to the Union Trust Company of San Francisco. It then made and entered into a contract with the defendants herein for the sale to them of $1,000,000 worth of said bonds, for which defendants were to pay the sum of $1,000,000, subject, however, to the conditions expressed in the contract in the following terms: "* * * on the express condition that the amalgamation and consolidation of all of said constituent corporations into the Market Street Railway Company, above mentioned, was properly and legally effected, and the said Market Street Railway Company is a duly amalgamated, consolidated, and incorporated corporation, and the legitimate successor of all of said constituent corporations, and the owner of all the property formerly owned by said constituent corporations, respectively, and entitled to dispose of and incumber the same as against every one, including all and every of the stockholders of said constituent corporations, and of each of them, and that all the proceedings authorizing the issuance of said bonds were properly and legally taken, and that the said bonds are valid bonds of said Market Street Railway Company, and are properly secured by said mortgage or deed of trust upon all the property mentioned and described therein, and that said mortgage or deed of trust is a valid security upon all the property mentioned and described therein for the payment of said bonds, according to the tenor thereof." The plaintiff tendered the bonds to the defendants, who refused to accept and pay for them upon the ground of their supposed invalidity, and thereupon, and for the purpose of avoiding the expense and delay of an ordinary action at law to determine the liability of the defendants to purchase said bonds, the agreed statement herein was prepared, and the controversy submitted to the superior court without action. The cause comes up on the judgment roll, supported by a bill of exceptions, the appeal having been brought within 60 days next after the entry of judgment.

The first point made by appellant in favor of reversal is that the consolidation was not legally effected for the reasons:

1. Some of the constituent corporations were organized under the statutes in force prior to the adoption of the Civil Code, and did not continue their existence under such Code, and hence that, under section 288 of such Civil Code, these corporations were independent of and not subject to its provisions, and could not consolidate with other corporations by virtue of the authority therein given so to do. The Potrero & Bay View Railroad Company was organized in 1866, under an act entitled "An act to provide for the incorporation of railroad companies and the management thereof," etc., approved May 20, 1861, and of the several acts supplementary to and amending the same. The City Railroad Company was incorporated in 1863. The Central Railroad Company was incorporated as a street railroad company in 1862. The three corporations above mentioned were all incorporated prior to the adoption of the Civil Code, and were constituent corporations, with eight others organized under said Civil Code, in the amalgamated and consolidated corporation, plaintiff herein. If we read the record correctly, the City Railroad Company and the Central Railroad Company elected to continue their existence under section 287 of the Civil Code, while the Potrero & Bay View Railroad Company has not done so. Section 288 of the Civil Code, which took effect at 12 o'clock noon, on January 1, 1873, provides as follows: "No corporation formed or existing before twelve o'clock noon of the day upon which this Code takes effect is affected by the provisions of part 4 of division first of this Code, unless such corporation elects to continue its existence under it as provided in section 287; but the laws under which such corporations were formed and exist are applicable to all such corporations, and are repealed, subject to the provisions of this section." The first clause in the foregoing section is certainly broad enough to apply to all then existing corporations which should not elect under the previous section to continue their existence under the Code. When, however, we consider the probable object of the legislature in its passage, in connection with the latter clause of the same section, and with other sections in the same title, we are led to doubt the legislative intent as broadly expressed in the first clause of section 288. We must bear in mind that, under the constitution of 1849, corporations could be formed under general laws, but could not be created under special acts, and that all laws pursuant to the section (section 31, art. 4) were subject to amendment or repeal. Under that provision of the constitution, general laws had been enacted for the formation of corporations, specifying their powers, the mode of their exercise, etc. These laws constituted the charters under which corporations, when organized pursuant to them, acted. The laws conferred and measured their powers, and prescribed the mode of their exercise. The Codes, when adopted, constituted a comprehensive system of laws, and repealed all existing statutes not specially saved from their operation. To save existing corporations from annihilation, we may fairly presume, was the paramount object of the legislature. Hence this section. But the latter clause of the same section throws light upon the more general declaration of the first clause. It is as follows: "But the laws under which such corporations were formed and exist are applicable to all such corporations, and are repealed, subject to the provisions of this section." Now, the laws under which corporations were formed and existed constituted but a small portion of the whole body of laws which related to and controlled corporate action. As only those laws under which corporations were formed and existed were saved, it must follow that the residue of such laws were repealed, whether consistent with the Code or not. Section 20, Civ. Code, is as follows: "No statute, law, or rule is continued in force because it is consistent with the provisions of this Code on the same subject; but in all cases provided for by this Code, all statutes, laws, and rules heretofore in force in this state, whether consistent or not with the provisions of this Code, unless expressly continued in force by it, are repealed or abrogated." To enumerate all, or any considerable part of, the provisions of law applying to and regulating the conduct of corporations, some of which were penal in character, and which in no wise related to their formation or existence, would be a work of supererogation. It is sufficient to say that they were not saved by the Code, and hence, having ceased to exist, there are no regulations binding upon corporations, unless the provisions of the Civil Code and the several amendments thereto are applicable. We are of opinion the clause in section 288, that "No corporation formed," etc., is affected by the provisions of part 4, when read in the light of the later clause in the same section, and in the light of other provisions of the same title and part, and must be construed as relieving existing corporations only from such provisions as were saved to them from existing laws, viz. those relating to their formation and existence. In the interpretation of statutes, force and effect should be given to every part thereof, where it can be done, and the natural import of words is their literal sense; but where it is apparent, from the language used or from the context, that words are used in a restricted sense, and such sense is essential in order to give force and effect to other provisions of the same statute, then the literal sense is not controlling. "The mere literal construction of a section in a statute ought not to prevail, if it is opposed to the intention of the legislature apparent by the statute. * * * General words or clauses may be restricted, to effectuate the intention, or to harmonize them with other express provisions." Suth. St. Const. § 246, and cases there cited. The necessity of a restricted construction to the first clause of section 288 is made apparent by the subsequent sections in the same title. Section 401 of the Code, which is a part of the same subject, title, and part as section 288, as adopted at the same time, reads as follows: "Every corporation heretofore formed for any purpose enumerated in this title for which corporations may be formed for a period of time less than fifty years may at any time" extend the term of its existence to 50 years, etc. That this section was intended to apply to existing corporations goes without saying.

Again, section 403, the last section in title 1, which relates to corporations generally, is as follows: "The provisions of this title are applicable to every corporation, unless such corporation is excepted from its operation, or unless a special provision is made in relation thereto inconsistent with some provision in this title, in which case the special provision prevails." These are samples, selected from others which might be cited, tending to illustrate the legislative intent to apply the provisions of this part of the Code to existing as well as to future corporations, except as to the law of their formation and existence. Part 4 of division 1 of the Civil Code contains a comprehensive system for the organization, existence, and duration of corporations, divides them into classes, defines their powers and duties, regulates the mode in which those powers are to be exercised, and in which their duties are to be discharged. In all these matters, relating to future conduct, no reason is observed why existing corporations should not be governed by the same laws as those formed subsequently to the adoption of the Code, and for like purposes. To say that they shall not be is to select from the mass of entities known as corporations a class to which legislative action does not apply, thus constituting partial and special legislation, applying only to certain units in the class, to the exclusion of others of the same class. This would amount to an arbitrary discrimination between persons standing in the same relation to the subjects of legislation, which is not permissible. As was said in City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 27 Pac. 604: "A law is constitutional and general when it applies equally to all persons embraced in a class founded upon some natural, or intrinsic, or constitutional distinction. It is not general or constitutional if it confers particular privileges, or imposes peculiar disabilities or burdensome conditions, in the exercise of a common right upon a class of persons arbitrarily selected from the general body of those who stand precisely in the same relation to the subject of the law."

Again, waiving all question as to the application of the Civil Code as originally passed, or any part of it, to existing corporations, section 510, as adopted in 1874, applied the provisions of title 3 to all street railroads not especially excepted therefrom. The section reads as follows: "Street railroads are governed by the provisions of title 3 of this part, so far as they are applicable, unless such railroads are therein specially excepted." "Particular expressions qualify those which are general." Civ. Code, § 3534. According to this rule of construction, the particular expressions of section 510 must be held to qualify and limit the meaning of section 288 to "the laws under which such corporations were formed and exist," and not to the whole body of laws enacted for the government and control of the future acts and conduct of corporations.

Yet again, if it be admitted that the Code does not apply to any corporations organized before its adoption, what follows? Simply this: All of the corporations involved in the present case, except one, have been organized since the adoption of the Code, or have elected to continue their existence under it, and under section 473 of the Civil Code are authorized to "consolidate their capital stock, debts, property, assets, and franchises in such manner as may be agreed upon by their respective boards of directors." As to the one company organized before the adoption of the Civil Code, the statute of 1861 in relation to the formation of railroad companies provides for their consolidation in precisely the same manner as that specified in the Civil Code. Hitt. Gen. Laws, par. 865. Indeed, the Code provision was but a re-enactment of the existing law, with a few slight changes of verbiage, none of which go to any essential requisite in a consolidation. We are of opinion the provisions of the Civil Code in relation to the consolidation of railroad corporations (section 473) apply equally to corporations formed and existing before and after the adoption of the Civil Code, and that section 510 applies the same rule to the consolidation of all street-railroad corporations.

The objection that the proceedings under which the consolidation was had were violative of the constitutional rights of nonconsenting stockholders, does not call for extended comment. Section 1 of article 12 of the constitution of 1879 provides that: "Corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special act. All laws now in force in this state concerning corporations, and all laws that may be hereafter passed pursuant to this section, may be altered from time to time or repealed." The constitution of 1849 contained a similar provision. Under them, the legislature may, by general laws, provide for the organization of corporations, may repeal or amend and change such general laws at will. When an individual becomes a stockholder in a corporation, it is with the implied assent, on his part, to the right of the legislature to alter and amend the law within the scope of the constitutional provision, and is as binding upon him as a contract to like effect of his own making would be. Authorities drawn from states in which no such legislative power over corporations is reserved are without application to cases in this state. The power to amend comes from the constitution, and whether the act of 1861, under which some of the corporations were formed, provided for such amendments or not is of no moment, as the power of the legislature to change the laws of corporate existence and powers is not dependent on statutory reservation. Corporations cannot, without the consent of all their stockholders, consolidate with others, except where the power so to do is given by their charters, or by a general statute, existing at the date of incorporation, or in those cases where the right is reserved by constitutional or statutory provision to the legislature to alter or amend the charter. There is some conflict of authority as to the power of the legislature to so amend the statute as to authorize corporations, without the consent of all the stockholders, to consolidate, but the weight of authority is, as we think, clearly in favor of the position that it may do so, and that the legislature, corporation, and majority are not subject to the will of dissenting stockholders. Cook, Stock, Stockh. & Corp. Law, § 896; Durfee v. Railroad Co., 5 Allen, 230; Bishop v. Brainerd, 28 Conn. 289; Railroad Co. v. Dudley, 14 N. Y. 336; Mowrey v. Railroad Co., 4 Biss. 79, Fed. Cas. No. 9,891. In England there is no restriction on the power of parliament to amend a charter. Heathcote v. Railway Co., 2 Macn. & G. 100; McDonnell v. Canal Co., 3 Ir. Ch. 578. In this state, where the power is expressly reserved to the legislature by our constitution, the right should equally exist. The contract of the stockholders was made in view of the existence of our constitutional provision, which entered into and formed a part of the charter as effectually as did the statutes under which the corporations were organized.

Again, so far as the Potrero & Bay View Railroad Company is concerned, no rational objection can be urged for two additional reasons: (1) Its stockholders, by action taken subsequent to the consolidation, ratified and adopted all the proceedings relating thereto. (2) It conveyed all its property to the new corporation.

The other two corporations formed before the adoption of the Code, viz. the City Railroad Company and the Central Railroad Company, having elected to continue their existence under the Civil Code, as provided in section 287, are not in a position to object.

2. It is further contended that the consolidation of the several corporations "was illegal and void, because no plan or manner of consolidation was agreed to in writing by three-fourths in value of the capital stock of each constituent corporation as required by section 473 of the Civil Code." The material portion of section 473, which confers power upon corporations of this character to consolidate, is as follows: "Two or more railroad corporations may consolidate their capital stock, debts, property, assets and franchises in such manner as may be agreed upon by their respective boards of directors. No such amalgamation or consolidation must take place without the written consent of the holders of three-fourths in value of all the stock of each corporation." The section further provides that notice of the consolidation must be given in the manner provided, and that a copy of the new articles of incorporation must be filed in the office of the secretary of state, but no question is made as to a compliance with these provisions. It will be observed that the consolidation may be made "in such manner as may be agreed upon by their respective boards of directors." The terms of the consolidation are left to the several boards of directors, with no limitations upon their power in that respect, except that the written consent of the holders of three fourths of all the stock of each constituent corporation is essential to the validity of the consolidation. Some objection is made to the sufficiency of the consent by stockholders, which will be considered hereafter. For the purposes of the present contention it may be said that what the stockholders did was this: The holders of over three-fourths in value of all the stock in each corporation, at dates varying from September 5, 1893, to October 13, 1893, consented in writing to the consolidation of the several companies (naming them), "in such manner as may be agreed upon by the respective boards of directors of said companies." Thereafter, and on the 13th day of October, 1893, the boards of directors of the several companies executed the "articles of consolidation, amalgamation, and incorporation," in which the manner, terms, etc., of the consolidation were, among other things, fully set out. In the absence of more specific directions in the statute, the consent of the stockholders is deemed sufficient. It was in the nature of an authorization or power to the directors to act, and might as well be executed before action was taken by the latter, as assented to at the time or subsequently. The authority given was broad enough to cover any action that might be agreed upon by the directors, and was binding upon the stockholders. The consolidated corporation became a distinct entity,—a new corporation,—and as such might be organized for a term of 50 years, irrespective of the term of existence of the constituent corporations. California S. R. Co. v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 67 Cal. 59, 7 Pac. 123; Railway Co. v. Hooper, 76 Cal. 404, 18 Pac. 599. In Maine Cent. R. Co. v. Maine, 96 U. S. 499, it was said: "A new corporation may be as readily created by the union of two or more corporations, as by the union of individuals." The authorities upholding the position that, upon a consolidation of corporations, the resulting association is a new corporation, are to be found in large numbers emanating from the courts of many states. It follows that the objection that the action here taken had the effect of extending the existence of the constituent corporations beyond the period of 50 years fixed by our statute cannot be maintained.

As before stated, it is objected by appellant that the requisite number of stockholders of many of the constituents did not consent to the consolidation, and the objections under this head are:

(a) In some of the corporations a portion only of the stock was issued, and in estimating the three-fourths of the stockholders whose consent was necessary only the "outstanding stock" was taken into the account. The case of the Market Street & Fairmount Railway Company will serve to illustrate the facts applicable to all. The capital stock of this company consisted of 10,000 shares, of the par value of $100 per share, of which number of shares only 2,050 were ever at any time issued or outstanding. The holders of all of said 2,050 shares so issued consented in writing to the consolidation. This is deemed sufficient. When shares of a corporation, or a majority of shares, are spoken of in statutes, it usually refers to the subscribed or issued or outstanding shares. Section 312 of the Civil Code provides that "at all elections or votes had for any purpose there must be a majority of the subscribed capital stock * * * represented, either in person or by proxy." In adopting by-laws, the assent of stockholders representing a majority of all the subscribed capital stock is necessary. Section 301. The liability of a stockholder for the debts of the corporation is for such portion as his share bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock or shares. Section 322. Whenever any portion of the capital stock is held by the corporation by purchase, a majority of the remaining shares is a majority of the stock for all purposes of election or voting. Section 344. Stockholders are the owners of shares in a corporation having a capital stock. Section 298. Assessments are levied and collected upon the subscribed capital stock. Section 331. As stock or shares which have never passed to the ownership of stockholders, or, having so passed, have again been purchased by the corporation, cannot be voted or represented by either the corporation or by stockholders, they are not taken into consideration in determining majorities, where action in corporate meetings or assent of stockholders is involved; but when a given proportion of the stock is spoken of it must be construed to mean of the shares which have passed from the corporation and which may be voted.

(b) Some of the stock was held and voted by trustees, who not only appeared upon the books of the corporation as such, but were really and in fact trustees for other persons. The contention of appellant is that a trustee of stock has no authority to destroy the corporation by merging it in another corporation. The answer to the proposition must be that the trustee is the legal owner of the stock, and, as against the corporation, and all the world, except his cestui que trust, no inquiry may be had touching his actions in the premises. Civ. Code, §§ 307, 312.

(c) In many cases the stock of the constituent companies was held by other corporations, and it is contended that one corporation cannot hold stock in another corporation. As to this objection, the record shows that stock in several of the constituent corporations was held by the Pacific Improvement Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of California in 1878, and, as specified in its articles of incorporation, among other purposes, for the purpose "of buying, selling, and dealing in all kinds of public and private stocks, bonds, and securities." Whether the purchase by a corporation of shares in another corporation is ultra vires or not is said to depend upon the purpose for which it is made, and whether, under the circumstances, it is a reasonable or necessary means of carrying out corporate objects. Hill v. Nisbet, 100 Ind. 341. We need not, however, for the purposes of the present case, enter upon a discussion or analysis of the adjudicated cases on this subject. It is sufficient to say of them that they, in the main, turn upon the point as to whether or not the purchases ultra vires vested in the corporation. Our Civil Code (section 286) provides that: "Private corporations may be formed for any purpose for which individuals may lawfully associate themselves." It is beyond controversy that individuals may lawfully associate themselves for the purpose of purchasing, selling, and dealing in all kinds of public and private stocks, bonds, and securities. The Pacific Improvement Company having been organized for exactly that purpose, it is infra vires to purchase, hold, and sell stock in other corporations. Ordinarily, a corporation may only purchase and hold so much real estate as may be necessary to the transaction of its business; but, if organized, as in this state it may be, for the specific purpose of purchasing, holding, and selling land, its power in that direction is not limited.

(d) In the case of the Omnibus Cable Company, 1,470 of its shares were owned by and stood in the name of Daniel Stein, who died, say, six months before the consent was signed by his executors; and as the stock was never transferred on the books to the names of such executors, it is contended they were not authorized to censent. "The shares of stock of an estate of a minor or insane person may be represented by his guardian, and of a deceased person by his executor or administrator." Civ. Code, § 313. No transfer of the stock to the executors was necessary to entitle them to vote it. Spell. Priv. Corp., at section 380, says: "In case of the death of a stockholder, his administrator becomes, by operation of law, vested with the legal title to the stock, and is entitled to vote it at all elections without a transfer upon the stock book; * * * and the fact that the decedent held the stock subject to a trust would not alter it. Upon the death of a trustee of personal property, the trust would devolve upon his representative, and he becomes legal owner as to all persons except the cestui que trust, and the corporation has nothing to do with the equities between the immediate parties to the trust, or between the legal owner and third parties, as regards the rights of voting." See cases cited by same author in footnote to section 380. In further evidence of the authority of Michael D. Stein, one of the executors, to execute the agreement, the record contains a power of attorney from all the heirs of Daniel Stein, executed July 31, 1893, authorizing him to transact any business which they might or could do under or pursuant to any rights which they had or might thereafter acquire as legatees or heirs at law of Daniel Stein, deceased. And, under such power, the said attorney in fact executed a ratification and confirmation of the agreement for consolidation for and in the names of his principals.

(e) George Leroy was the owner of 900 shares of the stock of the Omnibus Cable Company, and his consent was executed in writing under a power of attorney from said George Leroy, which, it is claimed, was insufficient to authorize such consent. George Leroy subsequently, and with full knowledge of all the facts, surrendered his certificate of stock in the Omnibus Company, and received in exchange therefor the corresponding certificate in the consolidated company, and still holds the same. It is not clear but that the power of attorney from George Leroy was sufficient, but, waiving that question, the acts of said George Leroy, in surrendering his stock and receiving the corresponding stock in the new company with full knowledge of all the facts, amounted to a ratification of the acts of the agent. In arriving at this conclusion, we need not state the proposition as broadly as is warranted by the authorities. Wherever an agent, acting under a specific authorization, has exceeded his authority in the performance of a lawful act, which the principal could have authorized, the principal may thereafter ratify such unauthorized act, and, when so ratified, it acts retrospectively, and the principal is equally bound as he would have been had the original authority been ample, or had he originally performed the act in person. Whart. Ag. tit. "Ratification," § 61 et seq. The case of Kate Johnson, who held 200 shares in the same company, need not be noticed, for the reason that more than three-fourths of the stock issued was represented by the other consenting holders.

(f) A portion of the stock of the North Beach & Mission Railway Company stood in the names of certain persons who consented in writing to the consolidation, but such persons held it in trust for the Omnibus Cable Company, which, it is claimed, invalidates it. What has been said hereinbefore, as to the right of persons in whose name stock stands on the books of the company to vote and control it, applies here. It further appears that, on the 13th day of October, 1893, this stock, so held in trust, was canceled, but the certificates were not canceled until January, 1894. It does not appear that the cancellation took place before the consent to consolidation was executed; but, on the contrary, the resolutions and articles of association recite that the consent in writing of the stockholders had been executed prior to the acts of incorporation. In this and several other cases the consent was executed on the same day with the resolutions of the several companies in favor of consolidation and execution of the articles of the new company, the plaintiff herein. Under these circumstances, the plain inference is that the consent was executed prior to the cancellation.

(g) Objection is also made to the notice of consolidation, and to the manner of its publication. The substance of the notice was that, pursuant to the statute, the several constituent corporations, naming them, upon the written consent of the stockholders holding more than three-fourths in value of all the stock of each of said corporations, respectively, and by the agreement of the respective boards of directors of said corporations, made and entered in accordance with such consent, and pursuant to the statute, etc., have consolidated and amalgamated their capital stock, debts, properties, assets, and franchises under the corporate name and style of the Market Street Railway Company. The notice is dated October 14, 1893, and was published daily in the Sacramento Daily Record-Union, Sundays excepted, and in every issue thereof, from October 18th to November 17th, both days inclusive. The said Record-Union is published at Sacramento, and is not published on Sundays. This was a publication of one month, as provided for in section 473 of the Civil Code. The publication in two newspapers in San Francisco, viz. the Chronicle and Evening Post, was daily, and for more than one month. The notice was also published five consecutive times in as many consecutive weeks in the Times-Gazette, a weekly newspaper, published weekly, in the county of San Mateo, from and after October 21, 1893. This was in full compliance with the requirements of the statute.

We have thus noticed, consecutively, the several objections made by appellant to the several steps taken by the several corporations in the process of consolidating and amalgamating their properties, and if, in so doing, the reasoning has not been full, and the conclusions seem curt, it should be attributed to a growing consciousness, as the work progressed, that an opinion should have an ending as well as a beginning. The conclusion reached is: The several constituent corporations were duly and legally consolidated into and formed the existing corporation known and designated as the "Market Street Railway Company," which is and has been a valid and existing corporation, de jure, since such consolidation, with a capital stock of $18,750,000, divided into 187,500 shares, of the par value of $100 each.

Upon what may be termed the second branch of the case,—that is to say, matters relating to the regularity of the proceedings for the issue of the bonds,—we note but two objections calling for special comment: (1) As to the sufficiency of the notice to stockholders, and of the resolution passed at the meeting in pursuance of the notice. (2) As to the right of the stockholders to be represented and have their votes cast by proxies.

Upon the first proposition, it is objected that the notice and resolution were indefinite and uncertain, in that the notice specified, in substance, that the purpose of the meeting was to consider and act upon the proposition to create a bonded indebtedness of the corporation to the amount, in the aggregate, of $17,500,000, a portion thereof to be used in retiring the existing bonded indebtedness, and to increase the bonded indebtedness, in the aggregate, to $17,500,000, and to mortgage the property, etc. The resolution adopted at the stockholders' meeting provided, in substance, that a bonded indebtedness to the amount of $17,500,000 be created, and that the bonded indebtedness be increased to the amount, in the aggregate, of $17,500,000, etc. The capital stock of the company, as before stated, is $18,750,000, and there was an outstanding indebtedness of the several constituent corporations amounting, in the aggregate, to $7,035,000. Section 359 of the Civil Code, as amended in 1893, provides that "the bonded indebtedness of a corporation may be created or increased by a vote of the stockholders representing at least two-thirds of the subscribed capital stock, at a meeting called by the board of directors, and after notice of the time and place of the meeting, * * * which notice shall state the amount of the bonded indebtedness which it is proposed to create, or the amount to which it is proposed to increase such indebtedness," etc. The foregoing section, it will be perceived, provides the method by which the bonded indebtedness of all corporations is to be created or increased. The power to create such bonded indebtedness by railroad corporations is given by section 456 of the Civil Code, which, in part, is as follows: "Railroad corporations may borrow on the credit of the corporation, and under such regulations and restrictions as the directors thereof by unanimous concurrence may impose, such sums of money as may be necessary for constructing and completing their railroad, and may issue and dispose of bonds or promissory notes therefor * * * in payment of any debts or contracts for constructing and completing their road, with its equipments and all else relative thereto, and for the purchase of railroads and other property within the purposes of the corporation. The amount of bonds or promissory notes issued for such purposes must not exceed, in all, the amount of their capital stock." The residue of the section authorizes them to secure the payment of such bonds or promissory notes by mortgage or deed of trust upon their property and franchises. The power, then, is given to create a bonded indebtedness, under the circumstances indicated in the statute, to the amount of the capital stock. As the proposed issue of $17,500,000 was within this limit, the corporation was authorized to issue its bonds therefor, unless there was an existing issue precluding it from so doing.

Were there any outstanding bonds of the plaintiff corporation? Strictly speaking, it cannot be said there were any outstanding bonds of the corporation. The constituent corporations which had united in its organization had outstanding bonds, and "no such amalgamation or consolidation must in any way relieve such corporation or the stockholders thereof from any and all just liabilities." But duties which a corporation owes to parties who have dealt with it previous to a consolidation, and obligations it has incurred to such parties under contracts, cannot be transferred to the new corporation without their consent. The effect of the exercise of such a power would be to impair the obligation of contracts, and therefore it cannot be conferred by the legislature. Spell. Priv. Corp. § 107; Bruffett v. Railroad Co., 25 Ill. 310; In re Manchester & L. Loan Ass'n, L. R. 9 Eq. 643; Railroad Co. v. Strait, 35 N. J. Law, 322. A creditor may not prevent a consolidation of corporations, but he may insist that the property of the debtor corporation remain subject to his demands, and that its stockholders shall be answerable to him to the extent of their statutory liability. "Novation is made by contract, and is subject to all the rules concerning contracts in general." Civ. Code, § 1532. In some of the states there are statutes broad enough to create a primary liability upon consolidated corporations for the liabilities of the several constituent companies. Where this is the case, no doubt but that, while creditors are not compelled to have recourse to the new company, they may elect to do so, and recover. There is no evidence of such an election on the part of creditors here. The property of the several corporations, however, is still liable for the debts contracted by them, and, as a corporation may not create debts in excess of its subscribed capital stock (Id. § 309), these several demands, while not primary liabilities of the corporation plaintiff, are yet charges upon its property which will reduce it by so much, and hence come within the spirit of the rule limiting the indebtedness, under section 309, supra. It was in this view, no doubt, that the plaintiff framed its notice, the action of its stockholders, and of its officers in reference to the issue of bonds. It had, so far as it was able in the articles of consolidation, made itself liable for all the liabilities of the several constituent corporations, and the agreement only needed the consent of creditors to constitute a novation of debtors. Between itself and the constituent corporations it was absolutely bound to make such payment. Hence, its right to treat the outstanding bonded indebtedness as its own obligation, and to provide in its action for the payment thereof, or, if the creditors refused to receive payment upon their bonds, to treat them as a part of its own bonded indebtedness, and to issue bonds for such less amount as, with those outstanding, would aggregate a given amount or sum. In this view of the object, there is nothing indefinite in the notice and resolution to create a bonded indebtedness of $17,500,000 (a portion of which is to be used in retiring existing bonded indebtedness), and thereby to increase its bonded indebtedness up to the amount in the aggregate of $17,500,000.

3. As to the right of stockholders to be represented by proxies in the stockholders' meeting by which the bonded indebtedness was authorized. The language of Civ. Code, § 359, is: "The increase shall be made by a vote of the stockholders representing at least two-thirds of the subscribed capital stock." It is conceded that the requisite two-thirds of the capital stock was attempted to be voted; but as many of the shares were voted by proxies, which, if eliminated, would not leave a two-thirds majority in favor of the proposition, it is contended that the whole proceeding was void. The theory of the appellant is that, while the constitution of this state (section 12, art. 12) provides that: "In all elections for directors or managers of corporations, every stockholder shall have the right to vote in person or by proxy," etc., and while section 307 of the Civil Code in effect enunciates the same thing, still all this has no application to a vote, under section 359, for the creation of a bonded indebtedness; that, as to the latter, the authority is given to a vote of the stockholders, and not to the proxies of the stockholders; that express provision is made for voting by proxy where the legislature thus intended, etc. This theory would have been deemed eminently sound a century since, but within that period the law in regard to corporations has undergone important changes. The modern law writers upon corporations, without exception, so far as we have observed, recognize the right of a private corporation, in the absence of any statute on the subject, to provide by by-law for stockholders to vote by proxy. Taylor, at section 579 of his work on Corporations, says: "It is held that stockholders have no implied right to vote by proxy, but it is competent for a corporation by a by-law to authorize votes to be cast in that manner,"—citing People v. Crossley, 69 Ill. 195; State v. Tudor, 5 Day, 329. Cook on Stock, Stockholders, and Corporation Law, says, at section 610: "At common law a stockholder has no right to cast his vote by proxy. This rule was evolved from the analogous rule governing municipal corporations, which requires all votes to be given in person. The right to vote by proxy is often given by the charter itself. Even if not so given, the right may be created by by-law." Morawetz on Private Corporations, at section 486, says: "The members of a corporation must vote personally, and cannot vote by proxy, unless the right to vote by proxy is expressly conferred by the company's charter or by-laws." That the right of voting by proxy may be conferred through a by-law adopted by the majority appears to be reasonably settled. Beach on Corporations, at section 303, holds the same doctrine. See 2 Kent, Comm. 294, and Philips v. Wickham, 1 Paige, 598. Spelling on Private Corporations, at section 387, says: "Proxy voting was not recognized by the English common law, but has become so universal a custom in this country that the right would, at the present day, probably be held to exist, even in the absence of statutory provisions, where so provided in the by-laws." And in a footnote it is said: "The California statute recognizes the right and empowers all corporations to regulate the manner by by-laws, only requiring that proxies shall be in writing. Civ. Code, § 312." Section 312, Civ. Code, is, in part, as follows: "At all elections or votes had for any purpose, there must be a majority of the subscribed capital stock or of the members represented, either in person or by proxy in writing. Every person acting therein, in person or by proxy or representative, must be a member thereof or a bona fide stockholder," etc. This section clearly recognizes the right of a stockholder to appear and act, not only at all elections, but also at all votes had for any purpose, either in person or by proxy. It is true, the section just quoted contains a recognition, rather than a grant, of the right of a stockholder to appoint a proxy to represent him. Turning to section 303 of the Civil Code, we find it provides that: "A corporation may, by its by-laws, where no other provision is specially made, provide for: * * * (3) The mode of voting by proxy." It only remains to be said that section 7 of the by-laws of the plaintiff contained the following provision: "At all meetings of stockholders absent members may vote by proxy, duly authorized in writing, signed by the stockholders granting them, and such proxies shall be filed with the secretary." The record further shows that all proxies were in writing, and were filed with the secretary, and that the stockholders granting them were absent from the meeting. The Pacific Improvement Company authorized Douty, its secretary, by resolution duly passed, to vote its stock, and subsequently ratified and confirmed the acts of the proxies appointed by the pledgees of some of its stock, which stood on the books of the company in the names of such pledgees. What has been said heretofore upon the subject of ratification will suffice.

As to the 2,813 shares standing upon the books of the plaintiff in the name of J. D. Grant and T. L. Barker, executors of estate of Ed Hull, deceased, and voted by proxy from them to J. L. Willcutt, and as to 554 shares standing upon the books of the company in the name of the Crocker Estate Company, a corporation, no notice need be taken, for the reason that, if it be conceded these votes were irregular, there was still more than two-thirds of all the capital stock voted in favor of the resolutions without these shares. The whole number of shares, as before stated, in the corporation plaintiff was 187,500, two-thirds of which is 125,000. The total number of shares represented and voted in favor of the resolution was 137,240, being an excess over the required number of shares of 12,240. From this vote deduct 2,813+574+150 shares of Hendry's Son & Co., to which objection is also made, and we still have an excess of 8,727 shares in favor of the resolutions over and above the necessary two-thirds prescribed by section 359 of the Civil Code, as amended in 1893.

The other objections raised by appellants will not be mentioned in detail. They have been examined, and in them no cause for reversal is discovered. Upon the whole record, we are of opinion the judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

I concur in the judgment. BEATTY, C. J.

HARRISON, J. I am unable to agree with the opinion of the majority of the court upon the first proposition discussed therein, for the reason that, in my opinion, it is in disregard of the following provision of section 358 of the Civil Code, viz.: "The due incorporation of any company claiming in good faith to be a corporation under this part, and doing business as such, or its right to exercise corporate powers, shall not be inquired into collaterally in any private suit in which such de facto corporation may be a party; but such inquiry may be had at the suit of the state on information of the attorney general;" and that the court is thereby precluded from determining the question in this action. That the effect of proceedings for a consolidation of two or more railroad corporations, taken by virtue of section 473, Civ. Code, is to create a new corporation, and that the constating articles by which the consolidation is effected constitute the articles of incorporation of such new corporation, is well established by authority, and is recognized by the section itself, which declares: "When the consolidation and amalgamation is completed a copy of the new articles of incorporation must be filed in the office of the secretary of state." To determine whether the proceedings therefor have been regularly taken in accordance with the provisions of the section, and are sufficient in form to create a de jure corporation, would be to inquire into its "due incorporation," which, as above seen, "shall not be inquired into collaterally in any private suit to which such de facto corporation may be a party." As it is only at the suit of the state, upon the information of the attorney general, that such inquiry may be had, any conclusion thereon in the present case, however persuasive it may be, is merely obiter, and can have no authoritative force in any subsequent action at the instance of the state; and, consequently, the views of the court upon the subject ought not to be given, except in a case in which it shall be properly presented, and after the state, through its attorney general, has had an opportunity to be heard thereon. The want of authority or jurisdiction in the court to make any inquiry of this nature has been fully argued by counsel for the respondent in its brief, and the sufficiency of this argument has not been contradicted by the appellants; and, independent of the express declaration of the statute, I have not been able to find any adjudicated case in which it has been decided that the legality or regularity of its incorporation can be inquired into for the purpose of determining the rights of the corporation under a contract entered into between it and an individual after it had received its charter of incorporation. I concur in that portion of the opinion which holds that the proceedings for the issue of the bonds were in accordance with the requirements of the statute.

CENTRAL PAC. R. CO. v. DEETZ (MARTIN et al., Interveners. No. 18,398).

SALE OF LAND — ASSIGNMENT OF CONTRACT TO MORTGAGEE—RIGHT TO DEED.

Where a contract for the purchase of land provides that, on performance of the contract by the vendee, the vendor will, on request and "surrender of the contract," execute a deed, an assignee of a mortgage given on the land by the vendee allowing the mortgagee at maturity to pay all liens on the land is entitled to a deed from the vendor on tender of any balance due on the price, without offering to surrender the contract.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Siskiyou county; J. S. Beard, Judge.

Action by the Central Pacific Railroad Company against Mary E. Deetz for cancellation of a contract for the sale of land. H. P. Martin and another intervened as assignees of the contract, and asked for the specific performance thereof. From a judgment for plaintiff, interveners appeal. Reversed.

T. M. Osmont, for appellants. J. F. Farraher, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This action was brought to bar and cut off the right of the defendant to certain land which she had contracted to purchase from plaintiff. Appellants filed a complaint of intervention, to which the plaintiff demurred. The demurrer was sustained, and, judgment having been rendered for plaintiff, the interveners appeal.

It is averred in the complaint that, after defendant had entered into the contract for the purchase of the land, said defendant and several other persons named in the complaint made, executed, and delivered to one M. A. Harding their promissory note for $22,000, payable with interest two years from its date, which was April 15, 1891; and at the same time, to secure the payment of said sum with interest, said makers, including the defendant, executed and delivered to Harding a mortgage upon the premises described in the complaint and upon other lands, which was duly recorded; also, that the interveners have become the owners of the said note and mortgage. The note is now due and wholly unpaid. It is provided in the mortgage that the mortgagee or his assigns may pay and discharge at maturity all liens or incumbrances upon the mortgaged premises. It was also averred that it was necessary for the protection of the interveners, as mortgagors, that the amount due the plaintiff be paid; and, in connection with this allegation, it was averred that the remaining property covered by their mortgage was insufficient to pay the amount due and owing on said mortgage. It was also charged in said complaint that "prior to the 15th day of October, 1892, these interveners offered to plaintiff to pay the said railroad company the balance of its said demand, to wit, the said sum of $1,500, but plaintiff refused to accept payment thereof from these interveners without the production by them of said written contract (Exhibit A); that these interveners were not then in possession of said contract, and were not able to produce the same, which facts were by them communicated to the plaintiff, and at the same time the plaintiff was further informed that the interveners held a mortgage upon said premises executed by the said Mary A. Deetz and others, and that they were therefore interested in making final payment upon said land so as to save the security, and ultimately secure out of the same the full payment and satisfaction of the note and mortgage executed to said Harding by said Mary A. Deetz and others; and the interveners ever since have been and now are ready and willing to pay the balance due to plaintiff under its said contract with Mary A. Deetz, together with the interest due thereon; and they do hereby offer and tender to plaintiff full payment and satisfaction thereof; and they hereby offer to keep and perform all the stipulations and undertakings by the defendant required to be kept and performed by the terms of said contract (Exhibit A)." The prayer was that interveners be allowed to pay the plaintiff all sums due on the contract, and that thereupon plaintiff be required to convey the land to Mary A. Deetz, to be held subject to the lien of their mortgage. The contract between plaintiff and Mary A. Deetz, which was Exhibit A, referred to, provided that upon performance by Mary A. Deetz, her heirs or assigns, plaintiff, party of the first part, "will cause to be made and executed to the said party of the second part, upon request and surrender of this contract, a deed," etc.

The main contention on the part of plaintiff is that inasmuch as the interveners do not offer to surrender the contract, and are not able to do so, they cannot perform the contract, and are not entitled to pay the amount due plaintiff, and compel plaintiff to convey the land; in other words, plaintiff could only be compelled to convey upon full performance of the contract on the part of Mary A. Deetz, and, by the terms of the contract, the surrender of the contract was a condition precedent to the obligation on the part of plaintiff to execute the deed. To this proposition I cannot agree. Had Mary A. Deetz paid the full amount of the purchase money, she could have compelled plaintiff to convey, although she had lost the paper contract, and her assignee could also do so. The vendee under the contract was in equity the owner of the land, subject to the conditions of the contract. She could convey or mortgage her estate in it, and the grantee or purchaser under the mortgage will succeed to the estate of the vendee. It does not appear that the contract of sale had been assigned by the vendee prior to the mortgage. If, however, there is any claim of that kind, the claims of such supposed assignees can be litigated in this suit, or the plaintiff secured against it. Whether the tender was properly made or not is of no consequence on this demurrer. The contract does not make time of the essence of the contract. The decree does not allow interveners to perform the contract. It is claimed by plaintiff that interveners cannot do so unless they are able to surrender the written contract. The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, and the court directed to overrule the demurrer to the complaint of intervention.

PEOPLE v. BELLAMY. (Cr. No. 27.)

CRIMINAL LAW — CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE — PROBATIVE FORCE.

A charge that, "to justify the inference of legal guilt from circumstantial evidence, the existence of inculpatory facts must be established absolutely and to a demonstration incompatible with the innocence of the accused," demanded a greater degree of certainty than the law required.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; John L. Campbell, Judge.

Louis Bellamy was convicted of burglary, and appeals. Affirmed.

Byron Waters and Henry W. Nisbet, for appellant. Wm. F. Fitzgerald, Atty. Gen., for the State.

PER CURIAM. The defendant appeals from a conviction of the crime of burglary, and, as grounds for a reversal of the judgment, insists that the court committed error in refusing to give to the jury the following instruction as to the law of the case: "In order to justify the inference of legal guilt from circumstantial evidence, the existence of inculpatory facts must be absolutely and to a demonstration incompatible with the innocence of the accused, and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt." The law does not require the evidence to be of such a character as to establish in the minds of the jurors that degree of certainty demanded by the foregoing instruction. A conviction in the minds of the jurors to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt, arising from the evidence of the defendant's guilt, is sufficient, and an absolute or mathematical demonstration of guilt is not required. We find no error in the record, and the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

CRIMINAL LAW — NEW TRIAL — CUMULATIVE EVIDENCE — RES GESTÆ.

1. The refusal to grant a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence was proper where such evidence would have been cumulative, and was not such as to render a different verdict reasonably probable upon a retrial.

2. On a trial for mayhem, it was proper to permit the prosecution to show a threat or attempt by defendant to assault the prosecuting witness a few minutes before the final assault, it appearing that it was all a part of the same transaction.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; W. A. Gray, Judge.

W. F. Demasters was convicted of mayhem, and appeals. Affirmed.

Roth & Fadzean, for appellant. W. F. Fitzgerald, Atty. Gen., for the State.

VAN FLEET, J. Defendant was convicted of an assault with intent to commit mayhem, and appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial.

1. We can see no abuse of discretion on the part of the court below in denying defendant's motion for a new trial, made upon the ground of newly-discovered evidence. As has been repeatedly held by this court, a motion for a new trial is addressed to the sound legal discretion of the trial court, and the action of the latter will not be disturbed, except in an instance manifesting a clear and unmistakable abuse of such discretion. This rule is peculiarly applicable to an application based upon the ground of newly-discovered evidence, which not only involves an enlarged discretion in the trial court, but has never been looked upon with favor, but rather with distrust. Hobler v. Cole, 49 Cal. 250; Arnold v. Skaggs, 35 Cal. 684. To entitle the plaintiff to a new trial on this ground, it must appear, among other things, that the new evidence be not cumulative merely; that it be such as to render a different verdict reasonably probable upon a retrial; and that the evidence could not with reasonable diligence have been discovered and produced at the trial. 1 Haynes, New Trials & App. § 88. Assuming that defendant's affidavits, which are very general in their terms in that regard, satisfy the last of these requirements, we are very clear that they fall short of complying with the first two. In the first place, we regard the evidence as purely cumulative. Its only tendency would be to establish a state of ill will on the part of Crawford, the prosecuting witness, against the defendant, and an indefinite threat by Crawford to use violence upon defendant, if the latter should again come upon Crawford's place. The record discloses that evidence of exactly the same general character was introduced in behalf of defendant at the trial through the witness M. F. Demasters, who testified to threats and expressions of ill will, made by Crawford, of quite as specific and violent a character as those proposed to be established by the evidence newly discovered. But, in the next place, while the mere fact that the new evidence be cumulative is not conclusive against defendant's right to a new trial on that ground, we are satisfied that the evidence is not such as to make a different result on a new trial obviously probable. To the contrary, the impression made by a consideration of the proposed evidence, in the light of that taken at the trial, is rather unfavorable than otherwise as to the probability of its producing any different result. Under such circumstances, we are not at liberty to disturb the order.

2. The court was clearly right in its ruling in allowing the prosecution to show a threat or attempt by defendant to assault the prosecuting witness with a gun a few minutes before the final assault was committed. The evidence on the part of the people tended to show that it was all a part of one and the same transaction. In fact, if the evidence of the people be true, there was one continuous and aggravated assault committed by defendant upon the witness Crawford, from the time defendant threatened him with the gun until the biting and wounding were accomplished. The evidence was therefore admissible as part of the res gestæ.

3. The objection arising upon the cross-examination of the witness Ward Demasters, and the further one as to the admissibility of evidence of his general bad character for truth, etc., a few years prior to the fact, are trivial, and involve no error. The first was proper as tending to exhibit the feeling of the witness, and the objection to the latter went to its weight, and not its admissibility.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment and order denying a new trial should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; HARRISON, J.

CHANGE OF VENUE—SUFFICIENCY OF APPLICATION.

A recital, in an affidavit by a mutual benefit association to change the place of trial of an action against it from L. to S. county, "that all payments of benefits that have become due and payable to the nominees of any deceased member are made and always have been made by a warrant payable in the city of P.," in S. county, does not controvert an allegation in the complaint that defendant promised to pay at A. in L. county, and justifies the refusal of the motion.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Action by Haas and another against the Mutual Relief Association of Petaluma on a benefit certificate. From an order denying its motion to change the place of trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Lippitt & Lippitt, for appellant. J. F. Conroy, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Appeal from an order denying a motion to change the place of trial. The action was commenced in the county of Los Angeles, and a motion was made by the defendant to transfer the cause for trial to the county of Sonoma. Upon the hearing of the motion there was read to the court an affidavit in behalf of the defendant showing that by its articles of incorporation the county of Sonoma is its principal place of business, and also the complaint in the action, which contains the allegation that the defendant promised to pay the money sued for herein at Los Angeles. The defendant did not controvert the truth of this allegation, but in the affidavit filed on its behalf merely stated "that all payments of benefits that have become due and payable to the nominees of any deceased member of said corporation are made, and always have been made, by a warrant drawn in favor of the nominees upon the treasurer, and payable in the city of Petaluma." This statement, however, instead of traversing the averment in the complaint, is entirely consistent with the fact that the defendant promised to pay the sum sued for herein at Los Angeles, and justified the court in denying the motion upon the ground that the contract was to be performed in that county. Trezevant v. W. R. Strong Co., 102 Cal. 47, 36 Pac. 395; Lake Shore Cattle Co. v. Modoc Land & Livestock Co. (Cal.) 41 Pac. 472. The order is affirmed.

ACCOUNTING BY ADMINISTRATOR—WHO MAY QUESTION ALLOWANCES.

An administrator, in settling his accounts, presented a voucher signed by deceased's widow for payments alleged to have been made her in pursuance of an order granting her a certain amount as a family allowance. Held, that a creditor of the estate could not object to the allowance of the voucher as a credit on the ground that the amount covered by it had not been actually paid the widow.

In the matter of the estate of Hiram Fisher, deceased. Appeal by S. C. Fisher, administrator, from an order settling his account. Modified.

[1] Rehearing denied.

Elliott & Elliott, for appellant. Louttit, Woods & Levinsky, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. A creditor of the estate, whose claim had been allowed and approved by the court, filed several exceptions to the first annual account of the administrator. Several of these exceptions were confessed by the administrator, and after a hearing the court made the following record (omitting formal preliminary matter): "Now, after having considered said account and report, the objections to the same, and the evidence, the court finds that the amount of money received by said administrator during the time covered by said account and report to be the sum of $2,623.50, and the amount properly paid out and expended by him as such administrator, and for which he should receive credit against said estate, to be $2,207.59, leaving a balance in his hands in favor of said estate of $415.91, and with all property of said estate that has come into his hands and remaining undisposed of. It is therefore ordered that said account, after making the corrections and reductions proper to be made, shows a balance in his hands, of cash, $415.91, and the same is hereby settled, allowed, and approved." From this order the administrator appeals.

The amount received by the administrator, as shown by his account, was not changed by the order. Items excepted to, amounting to $75.75, were admitted by the administrator upon the hearing to be erroneous or unauthorized. His account as filed showed a balance due him from the estate of $148.10. Adding to this the amount found by the court to be in his hands, namely $415.91, showed a total reduction of credits amounting to $564.01. Deducting from this sum the items admitted by the appellant to be erroneous or unauthorized, namely $75.75, leaves the sum of $488.26 taken from his credits by the court. The order made by the court does not show what items amounting to this sum were disallowed, but the bill of exceptions and the briefs of counsel make it reasonably clear that that sum was deducted from the item of $950 claimed by the administrator as a payment on account of "family allowances."

On June 16, 1893, the court made an order that the administrator pay the widow of decedent the sum of $50 per month as a family allowance, "commencing on the 24th day of November, 1891." The voucher for said item of $950, signed by the widow, was for nineteen months, commencing November 24, 1891, and ending June 24, 1893. The administrator was sworn and examined touching this item, and admitted that it had not all been paid to the widow; that some moneys had been advanced by him to her prior to the allowance; that other sums were paid to her after the allowance was made; and that at her request the remainder was retained by him to be paid out to or for her as the same should be required. His examination was contradictory and uncertain as to payments made, both as to time and amount, and nothing like a definite and accurate statement of the facts as to the amount paid or remaining unpaid can be arrived at from his examination. The question, however, is presented (and it is the only one noticed by counsel or which appears to be involved in the case), whether a creditor, or any one save the widow, can attack or question the voucher signed by her. That the order for the payment of an allowance of $50 per month was made was not disputed. That this order has not been modified or vacated is not claimed; and the amount claimed to have been paid thereunder and represented by the voucher of the widow does not exceed the amount so allowed. As between the widow and the creditors of the estate, she is undoubtedly bound by her voucher, and could not be heard afterwards to say that she had not received the amount therein admitted to have been paid. She must have had legal notice of the settlement of the amount; and, not having objected, she is bound by the adjudication upon that account so far as affects the estate. Whether she would be bound by her receipt, as between her and her son, who is the administrator, need not be considered. This allowance is a preferred claim against the estate, though where the estate is insolvent it cannot be allowed for a longer period than one year after granting letters testamentary or of administration; but where the estate is solvent, it may be allowed during the progress of the settlement of the estate. Code Civ. Proc. § 1466. The creditor excepting to said account as to this item alleged that it was "claimed by said account" that the estate was insolvent, and, if insolvent, that the allowance should not be paid for a greater period than one year; so that the question as to whether the estate was insolvent or not appears to have been brought to the attention of the court, and, as no order was made upon that point, we cannot assume that the estate was in fact insolvent. However, the account filed by the administrator does not show that the estate is insolvent, but merely shows that the amount paid out exceeded the amount received by the administrator. The examination of the administrator touching this item was had over his objection, and the ruling of the court thereon was duly excepted to; so that the question made by appellant is made upon the admission of evidence as well as upon the final order of the court.

I think the full amount of said voucher, viz. $950, should have been allowed the administrator as a credit upon his account, and that the order appealed from should be modified accordingly, but without costs to either party.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is reversed, with directions to modify the same in accordance with the foregoing opinion, and as so modified that it be affirmed.

SANTA PAULA WATER WORKS v. PERALTA. (L. A. 18.)

APPEAL—FILING BRIEF—EXCUSE FOR FAILURE.

Where appellant's failure to file a brief was due to a misunderstanding between two attorneys as to which was to act for her in the supreme court, and appellant, through her ignorance of English, was excusable for that misunderstanding, the appeal not being in the opinion of counsel without merit, respondent's motion to dismiss will be denied.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Ventura county; B. T. Williams, Judge.

Action by the Santa Paula Water Works against Julia Peralta, in which judgment was rendered for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. For the failure of appellant to file a brief, respondent entered a motion to dismiss the appeal. Denied.

Daly & Toland, R. F. Del Valle, and Shepherd & Eastin, for appellant. W. H. Wilde and Orestes Orr, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Motion by respondent to dismiss the appeal for failure of appellant to file a brief. We think it sufficiently appears from the affidavits filed by appellant in resistance of the motion that the failure to file the brief arose from a misunderstanding between appellant and his counsel as to whom appellant desired to represent him in this court. Daly & Toland were the attorneys for appellant in the lower court. After the appeal was perfected, appellant, who is a Spaniard, and speaks and understands English very imperfectly, informed Mr. Toland, as the latter understood him, that he intended to get Mr. J. L. Murphy, of Los Angeles, to attend to the case in the supreme court. Subsequently appellant called on Mr. Murphy and told him that he wished to secure his assistance in the case on the appeal. He was informed by Mr. Murphy that he would assist in the case if agreeable to Daly & Toland, and suggested that appellant see the latter on the subject. Appellant, it seems, did not understand the suggestion as to the necessity of his seeing Daly & Toland, and went away in the belief that he had done all that was required and necessary in the premises to secure the services of Mr. Murphy. The latter did not understand appellant that he was expected to take control of the case to the exclusion of Daly & Toland, but simply to assist them in the preparation of the brief and the presentation of the case in this court. Some correspondence subsequently occurred between Murphy and Toland upon the subject, which does not appear to have assisted to the better understanding of the appellant's desires in the premises, and, as a result, each attorney waited for the other to act, and no brief was filed. The affidavits make it clear that the appellant at all times and in good faith intended to prosecute his appeal, and supposed that everything necessary thereto was being done by his attorneys; and it also appears that, in the judgment of counsel, there is merit in the appeal. The whole misapprehension and misunderstanding of the attorneys would seem to have arisen from the imperfect ability of the appellant to make himself understood by reason of his lack of familiarity with the English language. Under the circumstances, we think a case of excusable neglect is disclosed which should entitle appellant to present his cause on the merits; and in this view the motion to dismiss should be denied. It is so ordered.

REMY v. OLDS et al. (No. 18,316.)[1]

CHANGE OF VENUE—DISQUALIFICATION OF JUDGE—CALLING ANOTHER JUDGE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 398, requiring a judge who is disqualified from acting in a cause to transfer it, if pending before him, to some other court, is not satisfied by calling to the court of the disqualified judge a judge who is not disqualified.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Merced county; Joseph H. Budd, Judge.

Action by Theophile Remy against E. J. Olds and others. From an order denying change of venue, defendants appeal. Reversed.

J. W. Knox, for appellants. James F. Peck and T. C. Law, for respondent.

BRITT, C. Messrs. J. K. & T. C. Law, brothers, were attorneys for plaintiff in this action. The former was elected judge of the superior court of Merced county, where the action was and is yet pending, and entered upon the discharge of the duties of that office; his brother remained an attorney of record for the plaintiff. This being the situation of the case, defendants notified plaintiff that they would on December 7, 1893, move said court to change the place of trial of said action to another superior court on the double ground of the relationship of Hon. J. K. Law, judge of the Merced court, to one of the plaintiff's attorneys, and that he had himself been an attorney for the plaintiff in the action. The fact of such notice being brought to the attention of Judge Law on December 4th, he announced to the parties in open court that he would not hear the motion, but would have another judge to hear it. Defendants objecting to such course, he stated that the objection should be presented to such other judge. On said December 7th, Hon. Joseph H. Budd, judge of the superior court of San Joaquin county, at the request of Judge Law, held a session of the said Merced superior court for the dispatch of various matters, and called for hearing the said motion for change of venue. Defendants objected, for the reasons, among others, that it was the duty of said judge of the Merced court to hear the motion; that he was then present in the courthouse; and that Judge Budd had been selected and requested by him to be present for the purpose of hearing such motion. The matters of fact stated in the objections made were shown by evidence admitted in support thereof. The objections were overruled, Judge Budd stating that he would then, or as soon as counsel were ready, preside as judge on the trial of the case. An order was then entered reciting that the motion was heard at a session of the court held by Judge Budd, at the request of Judge Law; that the former was not disqualified to act as judge at the trial of the action,—and denying the motion.

[1] Rehearing granted.

The statutes pertaining to the matter may be thus abstracted: No judge shall act as such in any action when he is related to an attorney or counsel of either party by consanguinity or affinity within the third degree, or when he has been attorney or counsel for either party in the action; but his disqualification does not extend to the power of transferring the action to another court. Code Civ. Proc. § 170, as amended in 1893. The court may, on motion, change the place of trial when from any cause the judge is disqualified from acting. Id. § 397. If an action is pending in a court, and the judge is disqualified from acting as such, it must be transferred for trial to a court the parties may agree upon; or, if they do not agree, then to the nearest court where the like objection does not exist. Id. § 398.

The case differs in no material particular from Upton v. Upton, 94 Cal. 26, 29 Pac. 411, where similar proceedings by the same judges, resulting in a denial of an application for change of venue, were sustained by this court; and the order appealed from here should be affirmed if that case is to be followed. But the court subsequently said of Upton v. Upton: "We felt constrained to follow the decision in Paige v. Carroll, 61 Cal. 216. We did so, however, because the point of practice had been so settled, and not without serious doubts as to the correctness of the decision, which ignores what seems to be a substantial provision of the statute, designed to prevent the selection by either party to the controversy of the court and judge before whom the trial is to be had. It is not necessary here to determine whether the practice tolerated in Upton v. Upton and Paige v. Carroll can be longer recognized." Krumdick v. Crump, 98 Cal. 119, 32 Pac. 800. In the present instance that necessity arises; and it seems to us that the sooner cases which ignore such a provision of the statute are overruled, the better for the courts, at least, in which any ground for suspicion even of indelicacy in matters of this sort would be lamentable. For the purposes under view, the law treats counsel as identified with his client. It has made axiomatic the principle that no man ought to be a judge in his own cause. Mining Co. v. Keyser, 58 Cal. 322. High authorities seem to consider such a power not conferrable by act of parliament or the constitutions of our states. Co. Litt. § 212; Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 207, 506-509. But the difference between judging one's own cause and the right to select another to judge therein is more of shadow than substance. To men of turn for intrigue probably the latter privilege would appear more valuable than the former. We consider that the statute which requires a judge who is disqualified from acting in a cause by reason of interest, or by having been of counsel, or otherwise, to transfer the same if pending before him to some other court (Code Civ. Proc. § 398), is not satisfied by his calling a judge who is not disqualified, and who must perforce deny the transfer, and so become the appointee of the first for the trial of the cause; and, without meaning to intimate by anything here said—as we do not at all suspect—that either of the learned judges named was actuated by other than the sincerest desire to keep within the law and serve the substantial convenience of the litigants, we are of the opinion that the order appealed from should be reversed. It will, of course, be understood that the ruling here does not forbid the parties to agree upon another judge who, pursuant to such agreement, might be requested to try the action in the court where the same is pending, as provided by the constitution (article 6, § 8); and, in those courts having several judges, the necessity for transfer of a cause on this ground cannot exist, unless all the judges are disqualified.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is reversed.

TYLER v. TEHAMA COUNTY. (No. 18,338.)

COUNTIES—LIABILITY FOR TORTS—DEFECTIVE CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGE—PLEADING.

1. Const. 1879, art. 1, § 14, which provides that "private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation," renders a county liable for damages to plaintiff's property consequent on the construction of a bridge in such a manner that its abutments turn the current of the stream in such a way as to cut into his land.

2. A county cannot avoid its liability for damages from the defective construction of a bridge by its supervisors on the ground that, instead of being erected on the line of the road, it was erected on property belonging to plaintiff, abutting the road, as long as it maintains the bridge, and fails to repudiate the action of its supervisors in so constructing it.

3. A complaint which alleges that the entire work of constructing a county bridge was done under the direction of, and according to the plans and specifications furnished by, the board of supervisors, and that it was accepted by them when completed, sufficiently states a cause of action, when objected to by general demurrer; it being immaterial that the work done in placing the abutments so that the current of the stream was turned, and made to cut into plaintiff's land, causing the injury complained of, was performed by a bridge company.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tehama county; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Action by J. C. Tyler against Tehama county to recover damages consequent upon the construction of, and to enjoin defendant from maintaining, a certain bridge. There was judgment for defendant, from which plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

J. C. Ball, J. T. Matlock, and Armstrong & Bruner, for appellant. L. V. Hitchcock, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This appeal is by the plaintiff from a judgment rendered on demurrer to his amended complaint. The action was brought to recover damages, and to enjoin the defendant from maintaining a certain bridge, with its buttresses, piers, and walls, and that the same be declared a nuisance, and abated as such. The bridge in question was erected by the board of supervisors, in 1892, over Elder creek, on the Tehama and Red Bluff road, to replace a bridge erected many years before, and which had become unsafe. It is alleged that the new bridge was built below and alongside of the old one, but outside of the highway, on the property of plaintiff; that plaintiff's residence is on the southerly side of said creek, a short distance below the bridge, and near said creek; that it was built before said new bridge was erected; that the abutments or walls supporting the new bridge confined the waters during freshets, and turned the current against the south bank of the stream, near his house, and caused it to cut away the bank; and that, if continued, it will destroy his house and much valuable land. The demurrer was general and special; but the ground upon which the demurrer was sustained, as appears from the written opinion of the learned judge of the court below, as well as from the briefs of counsel, was that the complaint does not state a cause of action.

The ground upon which the court based its decision, briefly stated, is that, as the bridge was built, not upon the highway, but upon private property, the acts of the board of supervisors in causing its construction were unauthorized and unlawful; that for such acts the county is not responsible; and that, if any one is responsible, it is the supervisors personally (citing Crowell v. Sonoma Co., 25 Cal. 313); while counsel for respondent adds to the above that the construction of bridges is not one of the powers of counties, but is one of the enumerated powers of the board of supervisors; that counties are not liable for the acts or negligence of their officers, unless such liability is imposed by express statutory provisions; that the complaint does not allege that said bridge was erected either wrongfully, unlawfully, or against the will or consent of the plaintiff; and that, even if the complaint had alleged the erection of the bridge, piers, etc., upon the public highway, it would not have stated a cause of action, as it fails to allege a lack of ordinary care and skill in its erection.

Assuming for the present that the acts of the board of supervisors were authorized and lawful, the first question to be determined, then, is whether the county is liable for the consequential injuries caused by the construction of the bridge in such manner as to change the direction of the current so as to cut away the southerly bank of the stream, causing injury to plaintiff's land, and threatening the destruction of his residence. It is undoubtedly true that at common law an action does not lie against a county, and that, in the absence of some constitutional or statutory provision, counties are to be treated as political divisions of the state, created for convenience, and not liable for damages caused by the neglect of their officers or agents. Crowell v. Sonoma Co., 25 Cal. 313, cited in the opinion of the learned judge in the court below, and by counsel for respondent in his brief, was an action against the county for injuries to the land of plaintiff, caused by the construction of the abutment of a bridge, by which the water was turned towards the plaintiff's land, cutting away portions thereof, and destroying improvements thereon. That case, however, arose under the constitution of 1849, which provided, "Nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation" (Const. 1849, art. 1, § 8); while the new constitution provides that "private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having been first made or paid into court for the owner" (Const. 1879, art. 1, § 14). These constitutional provisions, as well as the common-law liability of counties, were very fully considered in Reardon v. City and County of San Francisco, 66 Cal. 492, 6 Pac. 317. In that case the defendant was engaged in improving Army street, and, in making the improvements, placed thereon a large amount of rock, the weight of which caused the soil to sink and spread out at the side; thus raising and moving the ground upon plaintiff's lot, and injuring the foundation of the building thereon. The court, speaking of the change in the constitutional provision above noticed, said: "To what kind of damage does this word 'damaged' refer? We think it refers to something more than the direct and immediate damage to private property, such as its invasion or spoliation. There is no reason why this word should be construed in any other than its ordinary and proper sense. It embraces more than the direct taking. If it did not refer to more than the damage above mentioned, the word 'damaged,' in the clause relied upon, would be superfluous. It seems to us that the direct invasion spoken of would come within the clause as it stood in the constitution of 1849. If the word 'damaged' only embraced physical invasions of property, the rights secured by this word would add nothing to the guaranty as it formerly stood." The court there quoted extensively from City of Atlanta v. Green, 67 Ga. 386, in which state the corresponding provision of its constitution is the same as the provision in our constitution of 1879. The court said: "The article does not define whether the damage shall be immediate and direct or consequential. Any damage to property for public use must receive its compensation. It may be, and will no doubt often occur, that the consequential damage may impose a more serious loss upon the owner than the temporary spoliation or invasion of the property." This court followed and adopted the views expressed by the supreme court of Georgia, and cited a large number of cases from other states expressing a like view, as will be seen at page 504 of the opinion in 66 Cal. (page 317, 6 Pac.); and it was there said by the court, in further commenting upon those cases, that: "It was held to be within the constitutional provision, as to property damaged, whether the work was done with care and skill, or not. We are of the opinion that the right assured to the owner by this provision of the constitution is not restricted to the case where he is entitled to recover as for a tort at common law. If he is consequentially damaged by the work done, whether it is done carefully and with skill, or not, he is entitled to compensation for such damage, under this provision. This provision was intended to assure compensation to the owner as well where the damage is directly inflicted, or inflicted by want of care and skill, as where the damages are consequential, and for which damages he had no right of recovery at common law." In that case a judgment for the plaintiff was affirmed. In Conniff v. San Francisco, 67 Cal. 45, 7 Pac. 41, the action was brought to recover damages for injuries to plaintiff's lot caused by grading Montgomery avenue in the mode provided for grading streets in the general statute in regard thereto. There, in grading the street, an embankment was formed 15 feet above plaintiff's property and contiguous lots, by which the water that ran in a water course across the street was permanently stopped in its flow, and backed upon plaintiff's lot, causing damage to it and the building thereon. This court cited Pumpelly v. Canal Co., 13 Wall. 166, and said: "The action in that case was against a private corporation; here, against one that is public and municipal. But we are not aware that there is anything in the nature or essence of the corporation known as the 'City and County of San Francisco,' though public and municipal in its character, or in the statutes relating to it, which justifies it, even in the prosecution of a public work authorized by statute, and for the public benefit, in taking the property of another. The former constitution of California, under which the work was done, as well as the constitution now in force, renders null all legislation to authorize such a proceeding." In Bigelow v. City of Los Angeles, 85 Cal. 614, 24 Pac. 778, the court cited Reardon v. City and County of San Francisco, supra, to the point that, if compensation had not been obtained under the provisions of the Code with respect to eminent domain, it can be recovered in an action.

I think the injuries here complained of are clearly within the constitutional provision above cited, as construed in the cases above noticed; and, if so, I see no reason why the plaintiff's damages may not be recovered from the county, since the statute expressly authorizes counties to sue and be sued. All the California cases cited by counsel for respondent, except Crowell v. Sonoma Co., were for personal injuries; and counsel contends that the same principle applies in cases of injury to property, and that therefore, upon the authority of the cases cited, the county is not liable. It was so said in Crowell v. Sonoma Co., and under the old constitution that was doubtless true; but the change in the constitution, in the respect we have discussed, creates a clear distinction between damages to property and damages for personal injuries. Cases cited by counsel for respondent from other states need not be considered, the question as to the liability of the county being settled by our own decisions. I think the allegations of the complaint as to the injuries resulting from the change in the current of the stream state a cause of action, unless, as held by the court below, the fact, alleged in the complaint, that the bridge was constructed upon private property, and outside of the dedicated highway, exempts the county from liability. By erecting the bridge outside of the right of way, and upon private property, the supervisors did not acquire title to the bridge in themselves, as individuals, or as a board, nor did it become the private property of the plaintiff. The bridge was erected and paid for by the county, for the use of the public, and is used by the public. It would hardly be contended that, because the bridge was built upon the plaintiff's land, he is at liberty to destroy it, or to prevent the public from using it. Nor, upon the other hand, will it be contended that the county may continue perpetually to maintain it for the use of the public without liability for damages to private property resulting from its maintenance. The board of supervisors had ample authority, under the statute, to construct a bridge across Elder creek; but in doing so they inflicted an injury upon the plaintiff, which may or may not have been unavoidable. If the property of the plaintiff was in fact taken for public use without having been condemned and paid for under the provisions of the Code relating to eminent domain, he may recover compensation therefor in an appropriate action, notwithstanding the mode of its taking was unauthorized. Reardon v. City and County of San Francisco, supra; Bigelow v. City of Los Angeles, supra. And if, by such taking or use, other property of the plaintiff is "damaged," it follows that a recovery for such injury may also be had. If the board of supervisors had no authority under any circumstances to erect a bridge, respondent's contention would have a very different basis; but the board is authorized to erect bridges, and necessarily to determine the place of such erection, and if, from necessity, or by mistake, they erect a bridge outside of the limits of the highway, the county cannot, while maintaining the bridge for public use, repudiate the action of the board, and refuse to compensate a person whose property has been taken or damaged. It is said in Lewis, Em. Dom. § 623, that "it has been held in a number of cases that, where land is appropriated to a public use, either with the consent of the owner or otherwise, a common-law action will lie to recover the just compensation to which the owner is entitled." See cases cited in note 1. But the injury caused by the change in the direction of the current is not attributed to the fact that the bridge was erected upon plaintiff's land, but to the walls or abutments confining the water in times of freshets, whereby the direction of the current is changed; and that for injuries thus caused a recovery may be had, see Lewis, Em. Dom. § 66, and cases there cited. The plaintiff does not allege the value of the land taken by the change in the location of the bridge and of the road leading to it, nor seek to recover compensation for the land so taken.

Counsel for respondent calls attention to two specifications of alleged uncertainties (marked "G" and "H"), namely: "It is uncertain as to whether the obstructions alleged to have been built in said Elder creek were built by the defendant, or by the Pacific Bridge Company;" and "it is uncertain as to who built the said buttresses, piers, and walls of stone and other material, in said Elder creek." It is immaterial whether the work of building said obstructions was done by the bridge company, or by some one else. It is alleged, as to the entire work, that it was done under the direction of, and according to plans and specifications furnished by, the board of supervisors, and that the work, when completed, was accepted by them; and this is sufficient. The complaint, in some respects, may be subject to criticism, though it is not obnoxious to a general demurrer; but, as the case is an important one, the plaintiff should be permitted to amend his complaint, if he so desires. The judgment appealed from should be reversed, with leave to the plaintiff to amend his complaint as he may be advised.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is reversed, with leave to the plaintiff to amend his complaint as he may be advised.

BUCK v. CITY OF EUREKA. (No. 15,733.)

OFFICE AND OFFICER—ESTOPPEL TO QUESTION CREATION—INCREASE OF COMPENSATION—CONTRACTS AGAINST PUBLIC POLICY.

1. One who has accepted an appointment by a city council to an office which the council had power to create, is estopped from showing that the council did not follow the prescribed mode of creating the office.

2. As it is the duty of a city attorney under Pol. Code, § 4391, to "attend to all suits, matters and things in which the city may be legally interested," a contract between a city attorney and the city to defend a certain action against the city is void, as being an attempt to increase an officer's compensation during his term of office. Const. art. 11, § 9.

3. A city attorney who declares on a contract with defendant city for extra services, void as being an attempt to increase his compensation during his term of office, cannot recover under such declaration for that part of his services which were rendered after his term of office expired.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; G. W. Hunter, Judge.

Action by S. M. Buck against the city of Eureka for professional services. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. N. Gillett and E. W. Wilson, for appellant. Buck & Cutler, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Appeals from the judgment entered upon verdict of jury, and from the order denying a new trial. Plaintiff sued the city of Eureka, and charged in his complaint upon three counts. In the first, he pleaded that one Wing Hing, upon January 21, 1886, brought action against the defendant, city of Eureka, in the circuit court of the Ninth judicial circuit, to recover damages in the sum of $432,800. The city of Eureka, on the 8th day of February, 1886, employed and retained plaintiff to act for it as its attorney in the matter of said action, and agreed to pay him a reasonable compensation for his services, under resolution ordering: "That S. M. Buck, Esq., be, and he is hereby, retained and authorized to act for the city of Eureka as its attorney in defense of said action; and he is also authorized to retain and associate with himself in the defense of said action some able attorney and counselor residing in San Francisco, California, if in his judgment it becomes necessary. And said S. M. Buck, Esq., is instructed to conduct said defense as economically as it can be done consistent with a vigorous and successful defense thereof." Plaintiff performed all duties imposed upon him by his contract. The case in the circuit court was finally dismissed for lack of prosecution. The value of plaintiff's services is alleged to be $13,000, of which the city paid $1,000, and refused to pay more. The second count charges in like manner and for like services as the first, asking compensation, however, for so much of the services as was rendered after August 1, 1886. The value of this is alleged to be $10,000. The second count is apparently framed in anticipation of the defense presented by the city: namely, that at the time of the making of the contract plaintiff was, and continued to be until August 1, 1886, the city attorney of the city of Eureka. The third count charges for services in a different employment, and does not call for consideration or review. Judgment was asked for $7,000, with interest. A verdict in the sum of $4,250, with interest, was rendered; and this verdict, so far as the value of the services is concerned, is supported by the evidence. In defense of the action, the city of Eureka pleaded and sought to prove that, at the time of his employment, plaintiff was its city attorney, and that the contract was therefore void, as increasing his compensation during his term of office. Const. art. 11, § 9. By respondent it is contended (1) that the office of city attorney of the city of Eureka was never created; (2) that he was never the incumbent of such office; and (3) that if the office existed, and he was its incumbent, still he is entitled to compensation under the contract, since it was no part of his duty as such officer to defend the suit in question.

Certain provisions of part 4, tit. 3, of the Political Code were and are a part of the charter of the city of Eureka (St. 1873-74, p. 91). Those pertinent to this consideration are as follows:

"Sec. 4408. The common council has power: (1) To create the office of city clerk, city attorney, assessor, tax collector and such other offices as may be necessary, and prescribe their duties and fix their compensation. * * *"

"Sec. 4369. The common council must during the first year by ordinance fix the term of office of all elective officers and the time when they must be elected, and provide for the appointment of other necessary officers, including city clerk and treasurer, and fix their terms and amount of their bonds."

"Sec. 4386. The mayor has power: (1) To nominate and with the consent of the common council to appoint all nonelective officers of the city provided for by the common council, including city attorney, secretary of the council and city treasurer. * * *"

"Sec. 4374. All city officers, before entering upon their duties, must take the oath of office. The marshal, attorney, clerk, assessor, collector and treasurer must also give a bond with sureties to be approved by the mayor payable to the corporation by its corporate name in such penalty as may be prescribed by ordinance conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties of their office, and a like bond may be required of any officer whose office is created by an ordinance."

"Sec. 4391. The city attorney must attend to all suits, matters and things in which the city may be legally interested; to give his advice or opinion in writing whenever required by the mayor or common council, and do and perform all such things touching his office as by the common council may be required of him."

The defendant produced its records for the purpose of showing that plaintiff was nominated and confirmed as city attorney for the term of two years from July 12, 1884, to July 12, 1886, and that after such nomination he qualified and acted as such city attorney. The court refused to admit the proofs, and defendant then offered in evidence its records to show the existence of the office of the city attorney of the city of Eureka, and the plaintiff's incumbency therein during the time mentioned, which record evidence was stricken out upon motion of plaintiff. The evidence so offered and rejected consisted of various ordinances "fixing official fees and salaries in the city of Eureka," and dating from the year 1876. In each of these the council fixed the salary of the "city attorney." Finally, in 1882, by ordinance, the council declared that the city attorney shall receive a "salary of $25.00 a month." This ordinance was in force during all the time in question. In 1877 the council passed its ordinance "fixing the bonds of city officers," which provided that "the city officers hereinafter named, before entering upon the duties of their respective offices, shall give a bond," etc. "The penalty of such bonds shall be as follows: * * * The city attorney's bond, $1,000.00." This ordinance remained in full force and effect. The minutes of the meeting of the common council for July, 1884, show: "The mayor placed before the council the name of S. M. Buck for the position of city attorney for the ensuing term; whereupon, on motion, the nomination was confirmed." The bonds of the city officers for the terms commencing in 1884 could not be found, but the minutes of the council for August of that year show that "the mayor verbally announced to the council his approval of the bonds of * * * S. M. Buck as city attorney." There was likewise offered in evidence a document from the mayor's office, under the seal of the city, reciting the especial confidence reposed in the integrity and qualifications of S. M. Buck for the office of city attorney, and appointing him with consent of the council as city attorney for the term as established by law, etc., to which was appended the oath of S. M. Buck to support the constitution of the United States and of this state, and faithfully discharge "the duties of the office of city attorney of the city of Eureka." It was likewise shown that plaintiff drew and received from the city the "salary" fixed by ordinance, of $25 per month, during all of this time, up to July 12, 1886.

There can be no question upon this evidence, assuming for the moment the existence of the office, but that plaintiff was not only de facto city attorney, but that he was the regularly appointed, qualified, and acting city attorney,—a de jure officer,—charged with all the duties and entitled to all the emoluments of the office. There can be no better proof of the acceptance and holding of an office than the qualification of the officer, and his drawing of the salary. Here, the plaintiff was appointed as city attorney, filed his bond as city attorney, took the oath of office as city attorney, and drew the fixed salary of city attorney, all duly and regularly, as required by law and the ordinance of the city.

Nor can plaintiff be heard to say (still assuming the existence of the office) that his contract with the city, or his understanding with the council, imposed upon him other or different or lesser duties than those which by law he was obliged to perform. He cannot, for example, be heard to say, as here he undertakes to do, in the face of the ordinance fixing his compensation, that his understanding with the council was that they were to give him $25 a month as a "retainer,"—a "stipend,"—and were to pay him "extra for all important duties, particularly business in the superior court or business in the higher courts." It was not within the power of the plaintiff or of the council to modify, by convention, the duties which by law were made to pertain to the office of city attorney. Pol. Code, § 4391. And the plaintiff, after having qualified, filed his bond, and taken his oath to perform the duties of the office, and drawn the salary pertaining thereto, will not be permitted to assert that the duties he swore to perform were not those the performance of which the law made obligatory upon him.

The contention that he was not city attorney cannot, then, be based upon any defect in the machinery of appointment, nor upon plaintiff's refusal, with proper formalities, to accept the appointment. It is claimed to rest upon the fact that the council, notwithstanding its repeated recognition of the existence of the office, never in fact created it, and that, therefore, it never existed. And the argument is that the council had power to create the office (Pol. Code, § 4408); that they were required, if they created it, to do so by ordinance (Id. § 4369); that the mode is the measure of their power; and that no ordinance was produced wherein and whereby the common council of the city of Eureka did ordain that the office of city attorney of the city of Eureka is hereby created.

It is a general rule, founded upon the dictates of public policy, that the acts of a de facto officer are valid, and that those who deal with such an officer are protected. The public is not required to know the terms and tenure upon which one openly holding and claiming the right to hold a public office maintains his position; nor is any person who has dealt with such an officer to suffer loss if the tenure should prove illegal. So, likewise, it is the general rule, upon grounds of plain justice and public policy, that a de facto officer is forever estopped in civil or criminal actions from denying that he holds the office, and from escaping any of the responsibilities which attach to his incumbency. But the further rule is that the law as to de facto officers applies only where there is a de jure office, the idea of a de facto officer being necessarily founded upon the conception of a de jure office. A de jure office is one having a legal existence, or, rather, one having an existence recognized by law. We are not here further concerned with the law concerning de facto offices, since, as has been said, this office, if it existed, was filled by a de jure incumbent. While it is certainly impossible to conceive of an officer either de facto or de jure filling or attempting to fill a nonexisting office, there is a marked and well-recognized distinction between such nonexisting offices and those which, while having an irregular or merely potential, or in some instances even an illegal, existence, yet do exist, and are recognized by the law. Of offices having an illegal existence which are, nevertheless, recognized, the government of a state in rebellion and of a municipality acting as such without legal authority are conspicuous examples. The government of a state in rebellion and all offices thereunder are absolutely illegal; yet, upon strong and plain grounds of public policy, the government and offices are recognized by law, and the incumbents are treated as de facto officers. "In such a case the acts of a de facto executive, a de facto judiciary, and of a de facto legislature, must be recognized as valid. But this is required by political necessity." Hildreth v. McIntyre, 1 J. J. Marsh. 207. So a municipal corporation acting under color of the law may have no legal existence, and consequently no legal municipal offices; yet such a corporation has still an existence recognized by law, and, upon plain grounds of public policy, the question of its legal existence should be raised only by the state itself upon quo warranto. Cooley, Const. Lim. 254; Town of Geneva v. Cole, 61 Ill. 397; St. Louis v. Shields, 62 Mo. 247; State v. Carr, 5 N. H. 367.

In some states, indeed, it is the established rule that officers filling offices created by unconstitutional laws are, nevertheless, de facto officers, until, under direct proceedings, the act has been declared unconstitutional. Thus, in Burt v. Railroad Co., 31 Minn. 472, 18 N. W. 285, 289, it was held that the municipal court of Mankato was a de facto court, and that there can be a de facto office under an unconstitutional act creating it until the act is declared void. In the case of Trumbo v. People, 75 Ill. 561, a school district had been illegally established. The supreme court of Illinois, reviewing the case in a later opinion (Leach v. People, 122 Ill. 420, 12 N. E. 726), say: "So far as that alleged district was concerned, there was no such legal district, and there was no de jure office of school director of that alleged district." Yet, upon a proceeding to collect a tax, the tax was sustained, it being held that the school directors were officers de facto, and that in collateral proceedings the legality of the formation of the district could not be inquired into. And in Com. v. McCombs, 56 Pa. St. 436, it is said: "An act of the assembly, even if it be unconstitutional, is sufficient to give color of authority to the person acting under it." These decisions are in obvious conflict with the authority of the great leading cases of State v. Carroll, 38 Conn. 449, and Norton v. Shelby Co., 118 U. S. 425, 6 Sup. Ct. 1121, in the latter of which Field, J., explains that, while there are many cases deciding that a person holding an office under an unconstitutional law is a de facto officer, in every one it will be found that there was a legal office, and that the unconstitutional law went only to the mode or manner of filling it. And they are likewise in conflict with the rule in this state, declared in People v. Toal, 85 Cal. 333, 24 Pac. 603. They are not here cited in commendation or approval, but as instructive examples of the lengths to which those courts have felt compelled to go in carrying out what they conceived to be the plain mandate of public policy. When, however, we come to consider the doctrine as applied to offices having an irregular or potential existence (as distinguished from a nonexisting office, or one void in its creation), the cases are numerous and uniform in treating the incumbents of such offices as de facto officers.

In Gibb v. Washington, 1 McAll. 430, Fed. Cas. No. 5,380, dealing with the question of the creation of the office of appraiser, the court say: "If such an office has been even colorably created, then any irregularity which does not render the creation of the office void cannot be availed of." In Re Ah Lee, 6 Sawy. 410, 5 Fed. 899, the constitution of Oregon provided that, when the population of the state reached 200,000, the legislature should district the state into designated circuits, and provided for the election of judges to the circuit courts therein. The legislature passed the act before the state attained the requisite population, and before election the governor, without authority, appointed the judge whose act was under review. The court held that, admitting the act to be unconstitutional and the appointment of the governor to be invalid, still the judge was a judge de facto, since the office in effect was created by the constitution. In Carleton v. People, 10 Mich. 250, the county officers were elected before the law creating the offices went into effect. They were held to be de facto officers. Though there were no legal offices in existence at the time, still the offices were created and had a potential existence. And the court, in distinguishing between such offices and nonexistent offices, aptly says: "Where the law negatives the idea that there can be a legal incumbent, any one assuming to act assumes what any one is bound to know is not a legal office." In Yorty v. Paine, 62 Wis. 154, 22 N. W. 137, the legislative act creating the town of Pine River provided that the electors should meet upon the first Tuesday of the following April (April 4th), and elect town officers, but the act itself did not become a law until four days afterwards,—April 8th. The potential existence of the town was recognized as sufficient for holding the election, and the officers were declared to be de facto, though elected without authority of law to offices then having no more than a potential existence. In Fowler v. Bebee, 9 Mass. 231, the legislature had created a new county and the offices thereof. The governor appointed officers before the law went into effect. It was held that their acts were binding as de facto officers, though the appointments themselves were afterwards declared void by the same court when the question was presented upon direct attack. Com. v. Fowler, 10 Mass. 291. Here, too, therefore, the potential existence of the office was recognized. In Leach v. People, 122 Ill. 420, 12 N. E. 726, an unconstitutional law regulating township organizations provided for the number of members, mode of election, etc., of the board of supervisors, and under this law a board was selected whose acts were under consideration. It was held that, notwithstanding the invalidity of the law, there was still "such a legal official body known to the law as the 'Board of Supervisors of Wayne County'"; and the acting board, though in number and in mode of selection illegal, was upheld as a de facto body. The case of Smith v. Lynch, 29 Ohio St. 261, is nearly a parallel case with the one at bar. The legislature of Ohio authorized villages and towns to establish boards of health and appoint members. The village of West Cleveland, by a void ordinance, attempted to do this. The members appointed qualified and entered upon the discharge of their duties, and were accepted and regarded by the public as such members. The opinion of the court, delivered by Welch, C. J., is as follows: "The questions argued by counsel are: (1) Had the superior court jurisdiction? (2) Are the requirements of the statute as to the manner of passing the ordinance mandatory, or are they merely directory? (3) If these requirements are mandatory, are the persons so acting to be regarded as a board of health de facto? We are satisfied that the last named of these questions must be answered in the affirmative. It is unnecessary, therefore, to consider the first and second questions. In other words, we think that, under the circumstances, the board is to be regarded as a board de facto. Whether it was a board de jure, and whether the superior court had jurisdiction of the case, became, therefore, immaterial questions. It is claimed by counsel for the plaintiff that this is not a case where an office has been filled, and its duties performed, by parties not legally appointed or qualified, but a case where there was no office to be filled. We do not so understand the law. The statute (66 Ohio Laws, p. 200) creates the office. It authorizes the council to 'establish' the board, and to fill it by appointment. True, until the council act in the premises, it is a mere potentiality in their hands; yet it is none the less an office, known to the law. Where the council assumes to establish the board under the law, and to appoint its members, there is no good reason why an irregularity or illegality in the act of establishing the office, any more than an irregularity or illegality in the appointment of the officers, should be held as rendering the acts of the officers void, and themselves mere trespassers. The reasons —the considerations of public policy—which exist in one case exist equally in the other. It is enough that the office is one provided for by law, and that the parties have the color of appointment, assumed to be and act as such officers, and that they are accepted and acknowledged by the public as such, to the exclusion of all others. Such was the case here. There was both the color and the fact of office."

The office under consideration was given a potential existence by the acts of the legislature in the sections of the Code above quoted. The plaintiff, having accepted the appointment to it, and received the emoluments of it, is estopped from endeavoring to show to his own advantage that the council did not follow a prescribed mode in perfecting that potential existence. It was therefore error for the trial court to strike out the admitted evidence. It does not seem to be disputed that, if plaintiff's services in the case of Wing Hing v. City of Eureka were such as under his office he was in duty bound to perform, his contract with the council would be void as an attempt to increase his compensation; and, indeed, no question can arise upon this point. It is definitively settled by the language of the constitution, in the first place (Const. art. 11, § 9); and in the second place, even in the absence of such a provision, such a contract would be declared void upon grounds of public policy. "It is a well-settled rule that a person accepting a public office with a fixed salary is bound to perform the duties of the office for the salary. He cannot legally claim additional compensation for the discharge of these duties, even though the salary be a very inadequate remuneration for the services. * * * Whenever he considers the compensation inadequate, he is at liberty to resign. The rule is of importance to the public. To allow changes and additions in the duties properly belonging or which may be attached to an office to lay the foundation for extra compensation would introduce intolerable mischief. The rule, too, should be strictly enforced." Dill. Mun. Corp. (4th Ed.) § 233; Mechem, Pub. Off. §§ 324-376.

The contention here is, however, that these services were not among those whose performance is enjoined on the city attorney, and herein plaintiff relies upon the case of Herrington v. Santa Clara Co., 44 Cal. 496. As the law then stood, the district attorney was entitled to receive as compensation 10 per cent. of all money recovered by him for the county in any action. The county supervisors, ignoring the district attorney, authorized other attorneys to bring suit without the county for the recovery of a large sum of money. Recovery was had in the action, and the district attorney sued to recover his percentage. The law made it the duty of the district attorney to prosecute all actions for the recovery of debts, etc., and to defend all suits brought against his county. Pol. Code, § 4256. The district attorney was not denying that it was his duty to prosecute this suit, but, to the contrary, insisted that it was his duty. The defendant county never claimed that it was not the district attorney's duty to prosecute the suit, but insisted that the duty was not exclusively imposed upon and the right not exclusively vested in him, but that the supervisors could, if they saw fit, engage other counsel to perform the service, as in many cases special counsel are employed. The language of the court in its opinion, therefore, while not obiter, was not addressed to any contention raised by the parties. The decision of the court was by a bare majority; Chief Justice Wallace being disqualified, and Justice Rhodes expressing no opinion. It was based upon two grounds; the second, which is argued at length, holding that, as the district attorney had not collected the money, he was not entitled to his commission; and the first, which is not argued, being a declaration to the effect that it was "not a duty enjoined upon the district attorney by law to prosecute or defend civil actions in which the county is interested which are pending in any other county than his own." This declaration is, however, supported by no reasoning, by no analysis of the statute, and by no citation of authority; and it would be difficult so to support it. Says Dillon: "The statutes of the legislature and the ordinances of our municipal corporations seldom prescribe with much detail and particularity the duties annexed to public offices; and it requires but little ingenuity to run nice distinctions between what duties may and what may not be considered strictly official; and, if these distinctions are much favored by courts of justice, it may lead to great abuse." Dill. Mun. Corp. (4th Ed.) § 233.

When the law of the state says that the district attorney shall prosecute and defend all suits, and the city attorney shall attend to "all suits, matters and things in which the city may be legally interested" it is a most forced and unwarranted construction to hold that in the one case it means only such suits as are commenced and finally determined in the county courts, and in the other only such as are in like manner commenced and determined in the municipal courts. If the legislature meant that, it could and would have said so. But when it says "all suits, matters and things," the language will bear no other construction than that which is patent on its face. No rules of interpretation are necessary to be considered, for no need or room for interpretation exists. Thus, the court, in Ryce v. City of Osage (Iowa) 55 N. W. 532, said the law made it the duty of the city attorney "to act as attorney for the city in any suit or action brought by or against the city, and generally to attend to the interests of the city as its attorney." There, as here, plaintiff claimed extra compensation for services rendered under contract with the council for defending an action against the city in the district and supreme court, and there, as here, urged that it was no part of his official duty to defend the suit. Says the court: "It seems to us that a mere reading of that section of the ordinance prescribing the duties of the city attorney is sufficient to show that under it he was required to act for the city in any case brought by or against it. * * * That the services rendered by plaintiff, and for which he seeks now to recover, were included within his duties as city attorney, is too plain to admit of argument." In Lancaster Co. v. Fulton, 128 Pa. St. 48, 18 Atl. 384, construing a similar statute, say the court: "The services for which the contract in question undertakes to provide are clearly within the sphere of the duties of the solicitor of Lancaster county." Russell v. Hallett, 23 Kan. 276, is not in conflict with the authorities upon this question. In that case the county attorney sued his county for compensation for services demanded of him without the duties of his office, as the court decided. He had been compelled to assist in a trial in a county other than his own. The law expressly limited his duty to attending before magistrates and judges in his county. Gen. St. Kan. 1868, p. 284, § 137.

But it is unnecessary to multiply quotations upon this plain proposition. We think it must be apparent that the construction given to the statute in Herrington v. Santa Clara Co., supra, cannot be supported, and should no longer be maintained; and we believe that the evil results to the public service which must arise under that construction justify and demand a declaration from this court that it be no longer considered as authority. It is of the last importance that any and every public officer entering upon the discharge of his duties should know once and for all that, be the duties onerous or be they easy, the compensation for them must be that fixed by law, and that only. If they become too burdensome, the law does not forbid the officer's resignation; but it does emphatically say that he shall not under any circumstances, by use of the power of his office, by contract, express or implied, fair or unfair, or by aid even of legislative enactment, obtain increased compensation for their performance. "The successful effort to obtain office is not unfrequently followed by efforts to increase its emoluments; while the incessant changes which the progressive spirit of the times is introducing effects, almost every year, changes in the character and addition to the amount of duty in almost every official station; and to allow the changes and additions to lay the foundation of claims for extra services would soon introduce intolerable mischief." Evans v. City of Trenton, 24 N. J. Law, 764.

The services here performed by the plaintiff being such as it was his duty to perform as the city attorney of the city of Eureka, the contract was an attempt to increase his compensation, and is in violation of the constitution, against public policy, and therefore void. "A promise to pay them [officers] extra compensation is absolutely void, under the statute of Ohio. Such promise could not be enforced at common law, being against sound policy and quasi extortion. English judges have declared that such are novel in courts of justice, and that actions founded on such promises are scandalous and shameful (2 Burrows, 934); and in the court of errors of New York they meet with no more favor (Hatch v. Mann, 15 Wend. 46)." Gillmore v. Lewis, 12 Ohio St. 281; Vandercook v. Williams, 106 Ind. 345, 1 N. E. 619, and 8 N. E. 113; City of Decatur v. Vermillion, 77 Ill. 315; Hunter v. Nolf, 71 Pa. St. 282.

Nor can plaintiff recover under the contract, as by his second count he seeks to do, for such part of the services as was rendered after his term of office had expired. This is not the case of a city attorney carrying on litigation, after his term of office had expired, with the knowledge and consent of the authorities, in which case an implied contract and promise to pay might arise after his tenure had terminated. Here plaintiff declares on and seeks to recover under a contract against public policy and wholly void. Such a contract will not support any action for recovery. As is said by the court in Lancaster Co. v. Fulton, 128 Pa. St. 48, 18 Atl. 384: "There is no pretense that any new agreement was entered into, or the terms of the original in any manner changed, after the expiration of the term of office. Neither the subject of a new contract nor the modification of the original ever appears to have been considered by the parties. The services of plaintiff below were, no doubt, efficient and valuable; but, as far as they were rendered during his term of office, his salary is all the compensation he can claim. As to services rendered after the expiration of his term of office, under and in pursuance of the original illegal and void contract, he cannot, under the pleadings and evidence in this case, recover." A void contract cannot form the basis of a judicial proceeding. Lumber Co. v. Hayes, 76 Cal. 387, 18 Pac. 391.

There are considerations in plaintiff's case which appeal with force to a court. In the first place, the services rendered, as found by judge and jury, were of great value to defendant. In the second place, they were rendered under an early interpretation given to the statute, which justified plaintiff in suing upon his contract. In now declaring what we believe to be the only tenable construction of the law relative to the duties of the office, it has followed as a necessary consequence that the contract, void as against public policy, will not support a cause of action. Plaintiff, however, if the facts will warrant it, should recover, not upon the original or void contract, but upon an implied one for services rendered after the expiration of his term of office. The judgment and order are reversed, with directions to the trial court to permit plaintiff, if he shall be so advised, to amend his complaint, or file an amended complaint, seeking compensation upon quantum meruit for services rendered after the expiration of his term of office.

JOHNSON et al. v. CITY OF SAN DIEGO.
(No. 19,483.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—SEGREGATED TERRITORY—LIABILITY ON CITY BONDS.

1. Under St. 1889, p. 356, authorizing the segregation of territory from cities, but providing that such territory should not be relieved in any manner whatsoever from any liability contracted by the city prior to such exclusion, the territory segregated from the city of San Diego was liable for the payment of its proportionate part of the bonds of said city after separation as well as before, though no part of the money realized from said bonds was expended on said territory.

2. But, said city having acquired no contract rights under said act, the legislature had power to subsequently enact (Laws 1893, p. 536) that such segregated territory should be relieved from further payment of any part of said bonds.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Action by P. L. Johnson and others against the city of San Diego to determine what proportion, if any, of the bonded indebtedness of San Diego was properly chargeable on certain territory excluded from that city. From the judgment rendered, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

William H. Fuller and Clarence L. Barber, for appellant. S. M. Shortridge and Gibson & Titus, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Appeals from the judgment and from the order denying a new trial. Under an act of the legislature approved March 19, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 356), a portion of the territory formerly embraced within the corporate limits of the city of San Diego was excluded therefrom. The act referred to was in its nature permissive. It provided for the calling of an election upon petition, at which election the qualified electors within the territory proposed to be segregated should vote separately from the other voters of the municipal corporation, and the votes cast in such territory should be canvassed separately from the votes cast by the other electors of the municipality. If a majority of the votes cast in the territory proposed to be excluded and a majority of the votes cast in the municipality proper should both be for the segregation, then, after certain formalities had been complied with, the territory should cease to be a part of the municipal corporation, "provided [so runs the law] that nothing contained in this act shall be held to relieve in any manner whatsoever any part of such territory from any liability for any debt contracted by such municipal corporation prior to such exclusion: and provided further that such municipal corporation is hereby authorized to levy and collect from any territory so excluded from time to time, such sums of money as shall be found due from it on account of its just proportion of liability for any payment on the principal or interest of such debts; such assessment and collection shall be made in the same manner and at the same time that such assessment and collection is levied and made upon the property of such municipal corporation for any payment on account of such debts: and provided further that any such territory so excluded from any municipal corporation may at any time tender to the legislative body of such municipal corporation the amount for which such teritory is liable on account of such debts, and after such tender is made such authority as is herein given municipal corporations to levy and assess taxes on such excluded territory shall cease." Under this law, the territory known as the "Coronado Beach," which contains the land of these plaintiffs, was excluded from the corporate control of the city of San Diego. At the time of this exclusion, the city of San Diego had a bonded indebtedness of $484,000; and, after this exclusion, the city continued to assess and levy taxes upon the detached territory to meet the requirements of this bonded indebtedness, which taxes these plaintiffs duly paid. In 1893 the legislature passed an act entitled "An act providing for the adjustment, settlement and payment of any indebtedness existing against any city or municipal corporation at the time of exclusion of territory therefrom and the division of property thereof" (St. 1893, p. 536). Plaintiffs availed themselves of the provision of this act to have the court determine what proportion, if any, of the bonded indebtedness of San Diego, was properly chargeable against the excluded territory. The demurrer of the defendant city to their petition was overruled; and the court, after hearing evidence, found the existence of the bonded indebtedness; that all of the moneys received by the city and evidenced by this indebtedness had been expended for a sewer system, for the purchase of school sites and the erection of schoolhouses, for refunding a pre-existing debt of the city, and for clearing its titles to certain real estate, and for buying certain rights of way; and that no portion of the money had been expended upon or within the excluded territory. The value of the property belonging to the city at the time of the segregation was found to be $600,000, all of which remained within its boundaries and under its control after the segregation. It was further found that the city of San Diego had never made any improvements in the excluded territory, and had never owned any property in it. The ratio of the value of the excluded territory to that of the city immediately preceding the exclusion was as 1 to 14. Under these findings, and in strict accord with the dictates of the statute, the court adjudged that there was nothing due or to become due from the excluded territory to the city.

The chief contention of the defendant, raised upon demurrer, pressed in its motion for a nonsuit, and urged against the judgment, may be thus stated: The property owners of the city and the property owners of the excluded territory, when, in accordance with the permissive act of the legislature (St. 1889, p. 356), they elected to segregate Coronado Beach, did so under a contract expressed in the act itself, by which the property owners of the excluded territory were allowed to remove their land from the jurisdiction of the city, with the understanding that they should continue to pay their pro rata share of the municipal debts existing at the time of the exclusion; that the rights of the city vested under this contract cannot be destroyed or impaired by subsequent legislation; and that, therefore, to the parties to this controversy the statute of 1893 has no applicability.

This contention is first met by the respondents with the declaration that the act of 1889 did not impose or mean to impose a pro rata liability upon the excluded territory, but only a liability for a just proportion of the debt, which proportion was a subject of future ascertainment or determination; and much nice argument is advanced in its support. But the language of the proviso, that "nothing contained in the act shall be held to relieve in any manner whatsoever any part of such territory from any liability for any debt contracted by such municipal corporation prior to such exclusion," would seem to be a comprehensive pronunciation that the segregated territory should, after exclusion, be held by the same liabilities as bound it before; and, as before its exclusion it was liable for its pro rata share of these debts, it must be that after exclusion it remained subject to the same liabilities. We think, therefore, that, by the only just and reasonable interpretation of which the act in question is susceptible, the legislature, in permitting the division, exercised its undoubted power to adjust the burden of the existing corporate debt, and decreed that the excluded territory should continue to bear its former proportion of that burden.

The question that is left for consideration is that of the power of the legislature to change and readjust the burden of such an indebtedness after having, in the act of separation, declared in what manner it should be borne. Municipal corporations, in their public and political aspect, are not only creatures of the state, but are parts of the machinery by which the state conducts its governmental affairs. Except, therefore, as restrained by the constitution, the legislature may increase or diminish the powers of such a corporation,—may enlarge or restrict its territorial jurisdiction, or may destroy its corporate existence entirely. Says Cooley: "Restraints on the legislative power of control must be found in the constitution of the state, or they must rest alone in the legislative discretion. If the legislative action in these cases operates injuriously to the municipalities or to individuals, the remedy is not with the courts. The courts have no power to interfere, and the people must be looked to, to right, through the ballot box, all these wrongs." Cooley, Const. Lim. (6th Ed.) p. 229. "A city," says Mr. Justice Field, in New Orleans v. Clark, 95 U. S. 644, "is only a political subdivision of the state, made for the convenient administration of the government. It is an instrumentality, with powers more or less enlarged, according to the requirements of the public, and which may be increased or repealed at the will of the legislature." This right of legislative control, arising from the very nature of the creation of such corporations, is established under the well-settled doctrine that such corporations have no vested rights in powers conferred upon them for civil, political, or administrative purposes; or, as Dillon states it: "Legislative acts respecting the political and governmental powers of municipal corporations not being in the nature of contracts, the provisions thereof may be changed at pleasure where the constitutional rights of creditors and others are not invaded." Dill. Mun. Corp. (4th Ed.) § 63.

The act of the legislature in relieving Coronado Beach from the corporate control of San Diego and in adjusting the burden of the city's debt, was undoubtedly the exercise of a proper power directed to the political and governmental affairs of the municipality. That the legislature, by the terms of the act segregating the territory, had the right to dispose of the common property, and provide the mode and manner of the payment of the common debt, imposing its burden in such proportions as it saw fit, is a proposition undisputed and indisputable. It is equally well-settled law that, when the act of segregation is silent as to the common property, and common debts, the old corporation retains all the property within its new boundaries, and is charged with the payment of all of the debts. Upon these two propositions the cases are both numerous and harmonious. People v. Alameda Co., 26 Cal. 641; Hughes v. Ewing, 93 Cal. 414, 28 Pac. 1067; Los Angeles Co. v. Orange Co., 97 Cal. 329, 32 Pac. 316; Town of Depere v. Town of Bellevue, 31 Wis. 120; Laramie Co. v. Albany Co., 92 U. S. 307; Lycoming v. Union, 15 Pa. St. 166; Mount Pleasant v. Beckwith, 100 U. S. 514; Layton v. City of New Orleans, 12 La. Ann. 515; Beloit v. Morgan, 7 Wall. 619. There is authority, however, holding that, when the legislature has spoken in the original act, rights vest under it which may not be impaired; and it is upon these cases that appellants rely. Thus, in Bowdoinham v. Richmond, 6 Greenl. 93, the supreme court of Maine decided in 1829 that as the act of the legislature dividing the town of Bowdoinham, and incorporating a part of it into a new town, by the name of Richmond, enacted that the latter should be held to pay its proportion towards the support of all paupers then on expense in Bowdoinham, a later act exonerating the new town from this liability was void. The court held that by the former act a vested right of action arose in favor of the old town against the new, and that the later act, in destroying this right, impaired the obligation of the contract on the part of Richmond created by the first act. Just how the court reached the conclusion that a contract was created by the first act is not plain, but it seems to have been based somewhat upon the conviction that the assent of the old town was necessary to the segregation. The opinion, however, looks for authority to the case of Hampshire Co. v. Franklin Co. (decided in 1819) 16 Mass. 75. In that case the legislature had created the county of Franklin out of territory formerly a part of the county of Hampshire. The act was silent as to the disposition of the public property and the public debt. By an act passed two years later, the legislature provided in effect that if, at the time of the segregation, there were funds belonging to the county of Hampshire in excess of its debts, the new county should be entitled to such proportion of those funds as the assessed value of the property of the new county bore to the assessed value of the property of the old. The supreme court decided, in accordance with the undoubted rule, that as the first act was silent upon the subject, all of the common property within its limits belonged to the old county, which was likewise charged with all existing debts. It further held that rights vested under this act, and that the later act providing for an apportionment violated these rights in attempting to give the property of Hampshire to Franklin county; in other words, that the later act created a debt from Hampshire to Franklin county which before had not existed. It is to be noticed that in this case the original act was silent as to common property and debts, but as, in such case, the law steps in and makes disposition of them, the silence was deemed equivalent to an affirmative declaration of the legislature making dispositions which could not afterwards be modified.

But, distinguished as are the courts which have announced this doctrine, their views have not been followed, and the decisions themselves have been elsewhere criticised and rejected, until it may be safely said that it is the general rule that, where the original act does not make disposition of the common property and debts, the legislature may at any subsequent time, by later act, apportion them in such manner as seems to be just and equitable. Under the decisions adopting this rule, the theory of vested rights and contractual relations is rejected as being a false quantity in the dealings of the sovereign state with its governmental agents and mandatories; and while it is not denied that the state may make a contract with a municipal corporation, or may permit municipal corporations to enter into binding contracts with each other, which contracts it cannot impair, these contracts must be in their nature private, although the public may derive a common benefit from them, and the contracting cities are as to them measured by the same rules and entitled to the same protection as would a private corporation. The subject of such a contract, however, can never be a matter of municipal polity or of civil or political power, for the legislature itself cannot surrender its supremacy as to these things, and thus abandon its prerogatives, and strip itself of its inherent and inalienable right of control.

Of the cases so holding, either directly or impliedly, a few may profitably be mentioned: In County of Richland v. County of Lawrence, 12 Ill. 1, the facts were that the former county had been carved out of the territory of the latter by an act making no disposition of the county property. The state had given to the county of Lawrence a large sum of money, which it held at the time of segregation. By a later act the legislature declared that the new county should be entitled to receive from the old a certain proportion of this fund, which sum the old county refused to pay under the claim of vested right and ownership. The supreme court upheld the act, declaring that there was no contract between the state and the old county, which was merely the state's agent. The case of Hampshire Co. v. Franklin Co., supra, is unfavorably reviewed. In Perry Co. v. Conway Co., 52 Ark. 430, 12 S.W. 877, the original act, detaching territory, made no apportionment of the debt. A later act, which did so, was attacked as unconstitutional. The supreme court there said: "The earlier doctrine (still followed by some courts) was that the act detaching the territory must apportion the debt, and that it could not be subsequently taken from the old and imposed upon the new county. Hampshire Co. v. Franklin Co., 16 Mass. 75; Bowdoinham v. Richmond, 6 Greenl. 93. The better doctrine is that, the power of the legislature to impose the debt of the one county upon another depending upon the existence of a moral obligation from the new county, or the county receiving new territory, to pay part of the old debt, the legislature may so ordain whenever it finds the moral obligation to exist." In Dunmore's Appeal, 52 Pa. St. 374, four boroughs were erected in a township which was heavily in debt. By act afterwards passed, the burden of the debt was to be apportioned by commissioner between the boroughs and the township. The supreme court of Pennsylvania upheld the act. In Layton v. City of New Orleans, 12 La. Ann. 515, the act of the legislature consolidating several municipalities into one government, known as the "City of New Orleans," provided that the debts of each should be liquidated by taxation upon its own inhabitants. Afterwards, by another act, it was provided that the debts should be paid by taxation uniformly upon all the property of the new city. The court held that the earlier act was not a contract, and no rights vested under it; and that, as in these matters the legislature is supreme, it could change its policy and readjust these debts. In Mayor, etc., of Baltimore v. State, 15 Md. 376, the court say: "The doctrine that there is a fundamental principle of right and justice inherent in the nature and spirit of the social compact that rises above and restrains the power of legislation cannot be applied to the legislature when exercising its sovereignty over public charters granted for the purpose of government." Says Dill. Mun. Corp. (4th Ed.) § 189: "But upon the division of the old corporation, and the creation of a new corporation out of a part of its inhabitants and territory, or upon the annexation of part of another corporation, the legislature may provide for an equitable apportionment or division of the property, and impose upon the new corporation, or upon the people and territory thus disannexed, the obligation to pay an equitable proportion of the corporate debts. The charters and constituent acts of public and municipal corporations are not, as we have before seen, contracts; and they may be changed at the pleasure of the legislature, subject only to the restraints of special constitutional provisions, if any there be. And it is an ordinary exercise of the legislative dominion over such corporations to provide for their enlargement or division, and, incidental to this, to apportion their property, and direct the manner in which their debts or liabilities shall be met, and by whom. The opinion has been expressed that the partition of the property must be made at the time of the division of or change in the corporation, since, otherwise, the old corporation becomes, under the rule just above stated, the sole owner of the property, and hence cannot be deprived of it by a subsequent act of the legislature. But, in the absence of special constitutional limitations upon the legislature, this view cannot, perhaps be maintained, as it is inconsistent with the necessary supremacy of the legislature over all its corporate and unincorporate bodies, divisions and parts, and with several well-considered adjudications." To the same general effect are the cases of Laramie Co. v. Albany Co., 92 U. S. 307; Mount Pleasant v. Beckwith, 100 U. S. 514; Scituate v. Weymouth, 108 Mass. 128; Willimantic School Soc. v. School Soc. in Windham, 14 Conn. 457; Town of Guilford v. Supervisors of Chenango Co., 13 N. Y. 143.

In this state the power of the legislature to make such subsequent adjustments was early declared in People v. Alameda Co., 26 Cal. 641. Alameda county was created out of the territory of Contra Costa county in 1853. At the time of the separation, Contra Costa county owed for a bridge which had been constructed upon the territory set apart for Alameda county. The original act made no provision for the payment of this indebtedness, which thus remained a charge against the old county. By two separate later acts, the legislature provided for the apportionment of the debt, putting a part of the burden upon Alameda county. These acts were upheld as a proper exercise of legislative power. And, indeed, it is not easy to see how the opposite view can be maintained. Since the legislative power, within constitutional limitations, is supreme in the matter, since, in the first apportionment, the people affected are entitled to no voice (except through their representatives), and since the act of the legislature is not in the nature of a contract, it cannot logically be held that the power has been exhausted by its first exercise. The right still remains to make such future adjustments as the equities may suggest. Nor, in the operation of the act in question upon the city of San Diego, can we perceive any hardship. It had at the time of the segregation $600,000, acquired while Coronado Beach was a part of its territory, and partially acquired, doubtless, by taxation upon this land. All of this property it retains. All of the moneys evidenced by the bonded indebtedness were expended within its present territorial limits, and no dollar of it went to improve the excluded territory. Having all of the common property and all of the fruits of the common debt, it is certainly not onerous or oppressive that it should be asked to pay for what has been expended for its exclusive benefit. In a certain sense, it is true that Coronado Beach was also benefited by these expenditures. In the same sense, San Mateo county is benefited by the public improvements of the city and county of San Francisco; but it has never been asserted that for such benefits a sister county should be called upon to pay. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

PIONEER LAND CO. v. MADDUX et ux.

(No. 18,361.)[1]

SERVICE OF PROCESS—SUFFICIENCY—LAND CERTIFICATES—PAYMENT OF PURCHASE PRICE—JUDGMENT—VALIDITY—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

1. Act April 9, 1861 (St. 1861, p. 140), authorizing the forfeiture of certificates of purchase of lands sold by the state for nonpayment of the price, provides (in section 2) that, if the name of the holder of the certificate is unknown, service of summons may be "made by posting one copy for three weeks at the courthouse door, * * * and two copies in public places in the township." Held, that a return that the summons was served on a person unknown by posting one "copy on the courthouse," and a copy in two public places in the township, not reciting the length of time they were so posted, was insufficient.

2. Where the sum due on the certificate of purchase of land from the state was paid before entry of judgment, under Act April 9, 1861, forfeiting such certificate for nonpayment of the price, the state holds the land in trust for the vendee, and it cannot convey to another.

3. The affirmance on appeal of an order denying a motion to set aside a judgment, on the ground that the judgment could not be reviewed by motion after a long lapse of time, does not give any validity to said judgment, where it appears on its face to be void for want of jurisdiction over the person of defendant, and the invalidity of said judgment may be shown collaterally.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; Wheaton A. Gray, Judge.

Action to quiet title by the Pioneer Land Company against R. A. Maddux and wife. Defendants had judgment, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Daggett & Adams, for appellant. Lamberson & Middlecoff, for respondents.

VANCLIEF, C. Action to quiet plaintiff's alleged title to 40 acres of swamp land situate in the county of Tulare. In 1856, Peter Goodhue applied to purchase the land in question from the state on a credit of five years, pursuant to section 5 of "An act to provide for the sale of swamp and overflowed lands belonging to this state," approved April 28, 1855 (St. 1855, p. 189); and thereupon such proceedings were regularly taken as entitled him to a certificate of purchase under section 8 of said act, and such certificate was issued to him on May 30, 1856. Goodhue inclosed the land, and resided thereon until October 28, 1861, when he conveyed the same by deed, and delivered possession thereof to Marshall D. Young, who thence resided thereon, and maintained the inclosure until February 1, 1864, when he conveyed the same by deed, and delivered possession thereof to Samuel C. Young, who thence resided thereon, and maintained the inclosure until May 10, 1870, when he by deed conveyed the same to Daniel Murphy, who then entered into possession of the land, kept it inclosed, and used it for grazing purposes until October, 1882, when he died testate. Thereafter such proceedings were regularly taken in the matter of the estate of Daniel Murphy that the land in question was distributed by the superior court, according to the will, to Daniel M. Murphy and Diana Murphy Hill. On February 9, 1885, Daniel M. Murphy conveyed by deed all his interest in the land to Diana Murphy Hill, who on June 2, 1887, conveyed the whole thereof to William Thomas, who on June 3, 1887, conveyed the same to plaintiff. Daniel Murphy during his lifetime, and his executors and devisees thereafter, until March 30, 1888, held possession of the land by a sufficient inclosure, and used it for pasturing live stock, and paid the taxes thereon for every year during all that time. The land was assessed to plaintiff in the spring of 1888, and plaintiff paid the taxes for that year. All the deeds above mentioned were duly recorded. The defendants entered upon the land in June, 1888, claiming it to be unsold swamp land, and made application to purchase the same from the state, and procured from the state a certificate of purchase on February 1, 1892. On October 28, 1892, this action was commenced, and defendants filed their answer, claiming title by virtue of the last-mentioned certificate of purchase. On March 10, 1893, and before the trial of this action, the state issued and delivered to defendant R. A. Maddux a patent for the land, as alleged in a supplemental answer of the defendants, filed May 9, 1893. A book in the office of the county treasurer introduced as evidence by the defendants, an extract from which is contained in the record, shows that the principal and interest of the purchase price (one dollar per acre, with interest at 10 per cent. per annum) was fully paid by Peter Goodhue and his successors in interest, as follows: "Visalia, Tulare County, California, No. 33. Peter Goodhue's survey of swamp land in town 21 south, range 27 east, section 25, Mount Diablo, containing forty acres. Surveyed March 25, 1856, S. W. ¼ of S. E. ¼, section 23. Filed May 30, 1856. 1857, In. $4. July 18th received on the above $4. 1859, May 31st, by one year's interest, $4. 1862, September 15th, by two years' interest $8. 1864, October 24th, by principal and two years' interest in full, $48." Respondents contend, however, that the last item of this account ($48) was not paid until October 24, 1865; but in view of the ground, wholly independent of this, upon which I think the judgment should be reversed, it is immaterial whether the last payment was made on October 24, 1864, or on October 24, 1865, since it is admitted that the treasurer's account is correct, except as to the date of the last item, and that the last item of $48 was paid as early as October 24, 1865.

On the 18th day of May, 1865, the people of the state, by the district attorney of the county of Tulare, commenced an action against Peter Goodhue and John Doe to annul the certificate of purchase issued to Goodhue in 1856, pursuant to an act of the legislature approved April 9, 1861 (St. 1861, p. 140), authorizing the forfeiture and annulling of such certificates of purchase for nonpayment of interest or principal of the purchase price of lands sold by the state on a credit. It was averred in the complaint that "said defendant John Doe, whose true name is unknown to plaintiff, claims to be the holder of said certificate of purchase, and to have an interest in said land adverse to plaintiff; * * * that on the 16th day of November, 1864, there was remaining due plaintiff from defendant, and which had been due for more than thirty days, two years' interest on said lands, to wit, the sum of eight dollars, * * * and said sum of interest still remains due and unpaid; * * * that defendant is delinquent as aforesaid, and has thereby forfeited all his right, title, claim, and interest in said lands." At the time this action to annul the certificate was commenced, and during the whole period of its pendency, Samuel C. Young was in possession of the land, claiming to own the same by virtue of his recorded deed from M. D. Young. The only evidence of service of summons on the defendants is the return of the sheriff indorsed thereon, as follows: "Sheriff's Office, Tulare County. I hereby certify that I received the within summons on the 29th day of May, A. D. 1865, and personally served the same on Peter Goodhue, defendant therein named, by delivering to him a copy of said summons, attached to a certified copy of the complaint in said action, and also served the within summons on unknown owners sued under the fictitious name of John Doe, by posting a copy of the within summons in two public places in the township in which the real estate described in the complaint is situated, and one copy on the courthouse in Visalia, Tulare county. Dated July 29, 1865."

Section 2 of said act of April 9, 1861 (St. 1861, p. 140), provides: "If the name of the holder of the certificate of purchase be not known he may be sued under a fictitious name, and service of summons may be had by posting one copy of the summons, containing a description of the land, for three weeks, at the courthouse door of the county, and two copies in public places in the township where the land is situate." The judgment annulling the certificate, and declaring all rights of the defendant to the land forfeited, was taken by default, on October 30, 1865. It recites that the default of the defendants "for not appearing or answering has been duly entered," but does not recite that summons had been served in any manner on either of the defendants. The court below found that the plaintiff was not the owner of any estate in the land described in his complaint, but that defendants were the owners thereof, and thereupon adjudged that plaintiff take nothing by this action. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Counsel for appellant contends that the judgment purporting to annul the certificate is void, and that it so appears upon the face of the judgment roll; and so it appears to me. There was no service of summons on Samuel C. Young, who was the holder of the certificate and in possession of the land at the time the sheriff posted the copies of the summons, and who was sued by the fictitious name of John Doe. The deed of the land to Samuel C. Young, which incidentally gave him a right to the certificate of purchase as a muniment or evidence of title (Jackson v. Hyde, 91 Cal. 463, 27 Pac. 759; Henderson v. Grammar, 66 Cal. 332, 5 Pac. 488) was duly recorded on June 18, 1864, and there is no suggestion or pretense that he was not personally known to the attorney for the state at the time he commenced the action, it being alleged only that his "true name" was unknown to plaintiff. Yet it is true that the statute (section 2 of said act of April 9, 1861) provides: "If the name of the holder of the certificate of purchase be not known, he may be sued under a fictitious name and service of summons may be had by posting," etc. Assuming that, under the circumstances above stated, service of summons by merely posting copies thereof, as directed by the statute, was due process of law, surely a substantial compliance with that statute was necessary to effect such service. But, while the judgment roll shows what was done to effect service of summons, it fails to show a substantial compliance with the statute. The statute requires one copy of the summons to be posted "for three weeks at the courthouse door of the county, and two copies in public places in the township where the land is situate"; but the return of the sheriff, indorsed on the summons, fails to show that any copy of the summons was posted "at the door" of the courthouse, or even on the courthouse, "for three weeks" or for a single day, and also fails to show that two copies were posted in the township "for three weeks," or for any specific period of time. A posting of a copy "on the courthouse" elsewhere than "at the door," even for the period of three weeks, would have been a substantial and material departure from the requirement of the statute. The obvious reason for requiring it to be posted "at the door" was that it would more probably be seen and read at that point than at the rear, or on any other part of the courthouse. These defects in the return of the sheriff cannot be supplied or cured by presumption, although they might have been supplied by a recital of due service in the judgment. "Where the record is silent as to what was done, it will be presumed that what ought to have been done was not only done, but rightly done; but, when the record states what was done, it will not be presumed that something different was done. If the record merely shows that the summons was served on the son of the defendant, it will not be presumed that it was served on the defendant. If the affidavit of the printer shows that the summons was published one month, it will not be presumed that it was published three." Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391; Quivey v. Porter, 37 Cal. 462; Hastings v. Cunningham, 39 Cal. 143. These cases have not been overruled in respect to the above quotation from Hahn v. Kelly. Estate of Newman, 75 Cal. 213, 16 Pac. 887; Belcher v. Chambers, 53 Cal. 635. The following cases are also specifically in point: People v. Greene, 74 Cal. 400, 16 Pac. 197; Hyde v. Redding, 74 Cal. 493, 16 Pac. 380; People v. Mullan, 65 Cal. 396, 4 Pac. 348. The judgment purporting to annul the certificate of purchase to Goodhue being void, and the assignees of Goodhue having fully paid both principal and interest of the purchase price as early as October 24, 1865, if not a year earlier, it follows that the state had no beneficial interest in the land in 1888 when it issued a certificate of purchase to the defendant Maddux, nor in 1893, when it issued to him a patent; and consequently such patent to Maddux conveyed no title to him.

After the purchase price was fully paid by Goodhue and his assignees, the holder of the certificate of purchase issued to him in 1856 was the owner of the land, the state being merely a naked trustee of the legal title, which it was and still is bound to convey to the equitable owner on demand, and therefore had no power to sell the land to another. A vested right to a patent from the state for public land is equivalent to a patent so far as the state is concerned. Stark v. Starr, 6 Wall. 402; Wirth v. Branson, 98 U. S. 118; Benson Mining & Smelting Co. v. Alta Mining & Smelting Co., 145 U. S. 432, 12 Sup. Ct. 877; Huff v. Doyle, 93 U. S. 558; Pratt v. Crane, 58 Cal. 533; McCabe v. Goodwin, 106 Cal. 486, 39 Pac. 941. That plaintiff's title was sufficient to support this action against the defendants, to quiet it, is clear. Pennie v. Hildreth, 81 Cal. 130, 22 Pac. 398; Orr v. Stewart, 67 Cal. 275, 7 Pac. 693.

The only other matter to be considered arises from the following additional facts: In December, 1888, the plaintiff, as the successor in interest to Peter Goodhue and John Doe, who were the defendants in the action to annul the certificate of purchase, moved the court to set aside judgment in that case purporting to annul the certificate, on the grounds: (1) That the court never obtained jurisdiction of the person of the defendant John Doe; and (2) that the purchase price of the land had been fully paid before the commencement of that action. The superior court denied the motion. The plaintiff herein appealed from the order denying it, and this court affirmed the order, on the ground of the great lapse of time between the date of the judgment and the making of the motion to set it aside, viz. 23 years. This court, by Mr. Justice Works, said: "We know of no provision of law which can be held to authorize the vacation of a judgment on a mere motion after so long a time." People v. Goodhue, 80 Cal. 199, 22 Pac. 66.

The respondents contend that this order denying plaintiff's motion to set the judgment aside, and the affirmance of it by this court, are conclusive of the validity of the judgment against the merely collateral attack made upon it in this case. But no question as to the validity or regularity of the judgment was decided by this court. It was only decided that the judgment could not be reviewed on a mere motion after so long a time. If the judgment was void before the motion, neither the order denying the motion nor the affirmance of that order by this court imparted to the judgment any force or validity. It has been held that the affirmance by an appellate court of a void judgment imparts to it no validity, and especially if such affirmance is put upon grounds not touching its validity. I think Mr. Van Fleet, in his book "Collateral Attack" (section 16), correctly states the law applicable to this case, as follows: "In order to make a judgment void collaterally, either (1) a legal organization of the tribunal, or (2) jurisdiction over the subject-matter, or (3) jurisdiction over the person, must be wanting; or (4) one or more of these matters must have been lost after it once existed. When either of these defects can be shown, the judgment and all rights and titles founded thereon are void, even in the hands of a bona fide purchaser. In such cases the dignity of the court is of no concern. Thus, where a void judgment had been affirmed on appeal by the supreme court of Texas, the court said: 'The judgment of affirmance rendered by this court could not impart to it validity, but would itself be void by reason of the nullity of the judgment appealed from.' Chambers v. Hodges, 23 Tex. 105, 110. The supreme court of Mississippi said that the affirmance of a void judgment on appeal, upon grounds not touching but overlooking its invalidity, did not make it valid. Wilson v. Montgomery, 14 Smedes & M. 205, 207. When a judgment is lacking in any of the foregoing particulars, it matters not whether it was rendered by the highest or the lowest court in the land; it is equally worthless. No one is bound to obey it. The oath of all officers, executive, legislative, or judicial, compels them to disregard it. A few cases hold that want of jurisdiction over the person does not make the judgment of a superior court void (Gay v. Smith, 38 N. H. 171, 174; dictum in Kimball v. Fisk, 39 N. H. 110, 116); but they are out of line, and wrong on principle."

I think the finding of the court that defendants owned the land in question is not justified by the evidence, and that the order and judgment appealed from should be reversed, and the cause remanded, for a new trial.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order and judgment appealed from are reversed, and a new trial granted.

NICHOLLS v. REID et al. (No. 18,450.)

CERTIFICATE OF STOCK—TRANSFER OF TITLE.

Where a firm contracted to sell and deliver at a future day certain bank stock standing in the name of the individual members, but before tender both members of the firm died, a person who subsequently became successor of the firm, and had the certificates, unindorsed, in his possession, could not make a valid tender of the same without deraigning title from the original holders thereof.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Action by William Nicholls, Jr., against Robert K. Reid and others, to recover the price of certain shares of stock. Defendants had judgment, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

BRITT, C. Action to recover the contract price of certain shares of stock in the Bank of Stockton, a corporation, which defendants agreed to purchase of W. & P. Nicholls, a copartnership. The contract was in writing, and bore date December 15, 1885. It stated that W. & P. Nicholls had that day sold to Reid, Tully, and Trahern, the defendants, "certificates Nos. 63 and 64, for fifty shares each," of said stock, for the sum of $3,300, to be paid October 1, 1886, with interest; that the vendors were to retain possession and control of the stock until payment of the agreed price, and then deliver the same to the purchasers, who on their part agreed to buy it on the terms stated. Plaintiff sues as assignee of the rights of W. & P. Nicholls under said contract, alleging tender of the certificates by him to defendants in May, 1890, their refusal to accept the same or to pay the purchase price, his continued readiness to deliver, etc. The court found, among other matters, that plaintiff and his alleged assignors were never ready or able to perform the conditions on their part of the said contract; that no tender was made to defendants; and rendered judgment in defendants' favor. It is claimed that the evidence does not justify the findings.

The record shows that the two certificates of stock were issued June 1, 1871. They were in the same form, one of them setting forth "that William Nicholls, of Placer county, is the proprietor of fifty shares of the capital stock of the Bank of Stockton, which is transferable only on the books of the bank personally, or by attorney, upon the surrender of this certificate"; and the other showing that Philip Nicholls is the proprietor of 50 shares, transferable in like manner. Both said certificates were in possession of the firm of W. & P. Nicholls on December 15, 1885, and were in plaintiff's possession at the time of the alleged tender to defendants. William Nicholls, named in one of said certificates, died in the year 1877. At that time he and the said Philip composed the firm of W. & P. Nicholls. At the date of the contract of sale the firm consisted of said Philip Nicholls and John and William Nicholls, the last two being sons of William who died in 1877. The plaintiff, who is the son of said Philip, succeeded his father in the firm in the year 1886. The firm name has never been changed.

Except the mere fact of possession of said certificates, there is no evidence that the title of the deceased William Nicholls in the stock standing in his name ever passed to any of the said successive firms, or to the plaintiff. The certificate was produced at the trial, but bore no indorsement whatever, and was unaccompanied by other evidence of transfer. Possession only of the certificate was insufficient to establish transmission of title therein from William Nicholls, deceased, his representatives or heirs. See Borland v. Bank, 99 Cal. 94, 33 Pac. 737. On the facts appearing, had the certificate been presented by plaintiff or by W. & P. Nicholls for transfer on the books of the bank, it would have been the duty of the latter to refuse to make such transfer. Tafft v. Railroad Co., 84 Cal. 131, 24 Pac. 436; Quay v. Railroad Co., 82 Cal. 1, 22 Pac. 925. Regarding a contract not essentially different from that exhibited here, and under a statute quite similar, as concerns its influence on the question in hand, to section 324, Civ. Code, the court of exchequer held that "the true meaning of the contract is that the party is to convey and deliver certificates showing, either on the face of them, or from the indorsements, that the title is in the person conveying," and that possession of the certificate was not of itself evidence of the right of the party producing it to convey the shares. Hare v. Waring, 3 Mees. & W. 362. While we may concede that the title could have been deraigned otherwise than by indorsement of the certificate, we fail to find evidence of its deraignment to plaintiff or his firm in any manner. The tender made by plaintiff was therefore ineffectual (Civ. Code, § 1495), and the findings of the court were right. It is, of course, immaterial to investigate the title to the other certificate,—issued to Philip Nicholls,—though it also is in doubt, for defendants could not be required to accept one without the other. Polhemus v. Heiman, 45 Cal. 573. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; SEARLS, C.

In re FIFE. (Cr. 99.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 7, 1895.)

HABEAS CORPUS—JURY TRIAL—REVIEW.

1. The refusal of the court to grant a jury trial on a prosecution for a misdemeanor cannot be reviewed on habeas corpus.

2. The legislature not having provided for summary proceedings without a jury in prosecutions for vagrancy, a jury trial, when demanded, cannot be refused.

In bank.

Jeanne Fife was convicted of vagrancy, and sues out a writ of habeas corpus. Dismissed.

McFARLAND, J. This is a petition for a writ of habeas corpus. The petitioner shows that she was convicted in the police court of the city of Los Angeles of the offense of vagrancy; that she appealed to the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, where the judgment of the police court was affirmed; and that she did not waive a jury in the said police court, and expressly made a demand in the superior court for a jury, and said demand was refused. Her contention is that, having been tried and convicted under these circumstances, without the intervention of a jury, her imprisonment is illegal, and that she should be restored to her liberty upon habeas corpus. In the recent case of Ex parte Wong You Ting, 106 Cal. 296, 39 Pac. 627, we took occasion to inquire somewhat fully into the right of a jury trial in criminal cases; and our conclusion there was that the legislature might provide for summary proceedings without a jury in cases of such petty offenses as were thus provided for in certain early English statutes and in cases which are intrinsically of a similar nature and degree as those mentioned in said statutes. Vagrancy is, we think, one of those offenses, and the legislature might provide by a general law for the summary trial without a jury of persons charged with said offense; but we agree with the superior court of Los Angeles county sitting in bank, whose learned opinion on the subject was presented to us at the argument here, that there is no valid statutory provision for such a trial without a jury. Conceding, however, that the denial of a jury in such a case would be error, for which the judgment should, on appeal, be reversed by the superior court, still the point is urged here that such denial does not raise a question of jurisdiction which can be considered on habeas corpus. The learned judges of the superior court, in their opinion above noticed, seemed to assume, and perhaps quite naturally, that this court, in Taylor v. Reynolds, 92 Cal. 573, 28 Pac. 688, and Ex parte Wong You Ting, 106 Cal. 296, 39 Pac. 627, had decided that the question here involved could be determined on habeas corpus. But in those cases the question was not raised, and was not in any manner considered. In Taylor v. Reynolds the court, in its opinion, says: "The answer admits all the facts alleged, and waives all objections that might be made to the writ, to the end that the questions sought to be raised may be decided upon their merits;" and in the Wong You Ting Case we said: "The only question before us necessary to be decided is whether or not appellant was entitled to a jury trial. * * * The point that the refusal of a jury can be reviewed only on appeal is not made." In the case at bar, however, the point is expressly made and insisted on, and cannot be evaded. Upon a thorough examination of the question, we are forced to the conclusion that either in civil or criminal cases the denial of a trial by jury is merely error to be corrected on appeal, and does not go to the jurisdiction of the court, so that it may be inquired into on habeas corpus, except in those cases where a jury cannot be waived and therefore is a necessary constituent part of the court. A jury may be waived in any civil case, and it is not contended by any one that the refusal of a demand for a jury in a civil case affects the jurisdiction, or is anything more than error; and as a jury may, under the constitution, be waived "in all criminal cases not amounting to a felony," a jury is not a necessary constituent part of a court for the trial of a misdemeanor, and the refusal of the court to allow a jury on such a trial is mere error. This principle will be found to be established by the general authorities, but as it has been definitely declared by decisions of this court we need look no further. Ex parte Miller, 82 Cal. 454, 22 Pac. 1113, is determinative of the point. That was habeas corpus, and the petitioner demanded his discharge upon the ground that he had been denied a jury trial in the justice's court in which he was convicted; but this court sitting in bank remanded the petitioner, and said: "The offense charged was not a felony, and a jury might have been waived. The return of the officer to the alternative writ shows a valid commitment by a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the party. If a jury trial was denied, it was mere error which could not be reached by a writ of habeas corpus,"—citing authorities. In Powelson v. Lockwood, 82 Cal. 613, 23 Pac. 143, there was an application for a writ of prohibition to restrain a justice of the peace from trying the petitioner on a charge of vagrancy without a jury, which raised the precise point decided in Ex parte Miller. The court said: "I think the court properly sustained the opposition to the writ on the first ground above stated, and for the reasons that the justice's court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter—the misdemeanor charged—and of the parties; that in denying a jury trial, even if appellant was entitled to it, and in trying or in proposing to try the case without a jury, the justice's court did not exceed or propose to exceed its jurisdiction; and that, even if this action or proposed action of the justice's court was erroneous, it was so only as to the mode of procedure in an action of which that court had jurisdiction." Upon the foregoing authorities we hold that the denial by the lower court of petitioner's demand for a jury was only error, and does not go to the question of jurisdiction, and therefore cannot be reviewed in the proceeding of habeas corpus. The petitioner is remanded, and the writ dismissed.

WITTENBROCK v. CASS et al. (ALEXANDER et al., Interveners. No. 18,331).

TRUSTS IN REALTY—PAROL EVIDENCE—ESCROW—VALIDITY.

1. An agreement whereby defendant's mother was to convey certain land, purchased with her money, to defendant, said conveyance to take effect on her death, in consideration that he would pay taxes thereon, and support her during her life, is within Civ. Code, § 852, requiring trusts in realty to be in writing.

2. It may be shown by parol that plaintiff, at the time he advanced money on land to defendant's mother, knew that a deed thereof had been executed to defendant, and delivered in escrow to take effect on the grantor's death, and that the consideration therefor was the payment by defendant of taxes on said property and the support of the grantor during her life.

3. A deed to a child of the grantor, delivered in escrow, with instructions to hold the same without recording it until the death of the grantor, who thereby parted with all control over it, is valid, and operates to immediately vest title in the grantee subject to the grantor's life tenancy. Bury v. Young, 33 Pac. 338, 98 Cal. 446, followed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; Matt. F. Johnson, Judge.

Action by George F. Wittenbrock against William H. Cass, administrator, and others, to foreclose a mortgage. D. E. Alexander and others intervened. From a judgment of foreclosure and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Johnson, Johnson & Johnson, for appellants. Holl & Dunn, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. On March 7, 1892, Maria Louisa Cass borrowed of the plaintiff $2,000 for which she executed to him her promissory note, and a mortgage to secure payment of the same on certain real property in the city of Sacramento. Mrs. Cass died in May, 1892, and thereafter the defendant William H. Cass was duly appointed administrator of her estate. In March, 1893, plaintiff commenced this action to foreclose his said mortgage, making William H. Cass, as administrator and individually, a party defendant. The case was tried, and judgment of foreclosure rendered as prayed for, from which, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, the defendant appeals.

The defendant answered the complaint, and then, by way of cross complaint, set up, in substance, the following facts: That Maria Louisa Cass was the mother of defendant, and in October, 1882, was 72 years of age, infirm in body, without a home, and greatly in need of care and attention. That she had about $3,700 in money, and no other property. That then and there it was agreed between her and defendant that she should purchase in her own name, and with her own means, a certain lot in the city of Sacramento, and erect a dwelling house thereon sufficient to accommodate her and defendant and his family, and that, after the house should be constructed, she and he, with his family, should move into the same, and thenceforth live together. That he should pay the taxes and insurance upon the property, and keep the house in good repair, and should furnish her with all necessary care and with board and lodging, and attend her in sickness and in health during her natural life; and that in return therefor she should execute to him a deed of the premises, which should be held in escrow until her death, and should also make a will devising to him all her property and estate, and that she would not in any manner sell, transfer, mortgage, or incumber the said property. That in pursuance of the aforesaid agreement Mrs. Cass purchased the said lot, and erected a dwelling house thereon at an expense to her of between $1,900 and $2,000, and she and defendant, with his family, moved into the said house and took up their residence there about February 1, 1883, and defendant and his family have ever since resided in said house. That defendant has in all respects fulfilled said agreement on his part, and has expended in the payment of taxes, insurance, and repairs upon said premises the sum of $750 and upwards. That Mrs. Cass, in pursuance of the said agreement, made her will, devising and bequeathing to defendant all of her property and estate, and also executed to defendant a deed of the said real property, which deed, together with said will, was left in escrow with one Richmond Davis of Sacramento. That in 1885 Mrs. Cass represented to defendant that she had expended all her money remaining after the purchase of the said lot and the construction of the said house, and that she needed more money for present use. She requested him to advance her money from time to time, and he, on her representation that she had executed a deed of the property to him, and placed the same with said Richmond Davis, advanced to her about $275. That in March, 1892, Mrs. Cass, being then feeble in mind and body, executed to the plaintiff the mortgage set out in the complaint, in violation of her agreement with defendant, and without his knowledge or consent; and prior to the execution thereof the plaintiff had full and complete notice of the facts set forth in this cross complaint. At the trial, defendant offered to prove all the facts set up in his cross complaint, and, it appearing that the alleged agreement between defendant and his mother was not in writing, all of the offered evidence was objected to as irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, and excluded by the court, the plaintiff reserving exceptions.

1. Appellant contends that the court erred in excluding his offered evidence as to the verbal agreement, etc., between himself and his mother, because, if the facts alleged were true, a constructive trust was created in his favor, which was superior to any rights in the property acquired by respondent; citing Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 17 Pac. 689, and other cases. We do not think this contention can be sustained. It is true that a constructive trust arises by operation of law, and is expressly excepted from the rule that a trust in realty can only be created by an instrument in writing (Civ. Code, § 852); and whenever one person acquires from another the title to real property by fraud, actual or constructive, practiced upon that other, a constructive trust is created, which a court of equity will fasten upon the title in his hands. Hayne v. Hermann, 97 Cal. 259, 32 Pac. 171. This, however, is not such a case as that supposed. Mrs. Cass did not acquire the title to the property in question from her son, nor with his money. She bought the property and paid for it with her own money, and simply agreed with him that he and his family should live with her on the premises, and should have the title thereto after her death, provided he would pay the taxes and insurance on the property, and keep the house in good repair, and would furnish her with all necessary care and with board and lodging during her life. All of these conditions were performed, but that fact does not, in our opinion, bring the case within the rule declared in any of the cases cited.

2. Appellant further contends that the court erred in excluding the evidence offered to show that Mrs. Cass executed to him a deed of the said property, and placed it in the hands of one Davis as a depositary, to be delivered after her death, and also to show that respondent had notice of the execution and deposit of the deed at the time he received his mortgage. This contention must be sustained. If the deed was executed and left with Davis, and respondent had notice thereof, as claimed, then it was immaterial whether the prior agreement between the parties was verbal or written, and parol evidence to prove all the facts was admissible. The case of Bury v. Young, 98 Cal. 446, 33 Pac. 338, is in many respects very similar to this. In that case the authorities were quite fully reviewed, and it was held that the delivery of a deed by the grantor to a third party for the children of the grantor, with instruction to such third party to hold the deed for them, without recording it, until after the grantor's death, and thereupon to deliver it to them, the grantor parting with all dominion over the deed, and reserving no right to recall it or to alter its provisions, or to have or enjoy any other or further interest in the premises than to hold the use thereof until his death, constitutes a valid delivery of the deed, which vests the title immediately in the grantee, qualified only by a life tenancy in the grantor, and the depositary becomes the trustee of the grantee. It was further held that the essential requisite to the validity of a deed transferred under such circumstances is that, when placed in the hands of a third party, it has passed beyond the control of the grantor for all time, and that that question is determined by the grantor's intention in the matter, and is a question of fact to be solved by the light of all the circumstances surrounding the transaction. It is not necessary to notice the claims of the interveners. Upon the authority of Bury v. Young, supra, the judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BRITT, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

McFARLAND, J. I concur, on the authority of Bury v. Young, which must now be taken as final on the subject.

admissible to show the addressee's fraud in transferring property on the day after the date of said message, in the absence of proof that the message was ever received, or at least delivered to a telegraph company for transmission.

2. A declaration by the vendor, after an alleged fraudulent sale, that the goods were being removed because he feared that some one would stop the removal, is not admissible to impeach the sale, as against the vendee, the latter having no knowledge thereof.

3. The admission of testimony not bearing on the issue, and not otherwise prejudicial, is harmless error.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harr, Judge.

Action by J. Eppinger and others against Jay Scott to recover possession of certain personal property. Defendant had judgment, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Terry & Williams and H. G. W. Dinkelspiel, for appellants. George E. Church, for respondent.

BRITT, C. Plaintiffs brought this action against defendant, who is the sheriff of Fresno county, to recover possession of a quantity of trays and sweat boxes used in the curing of raisins. It is alleged in the complaint that plaintiffs own the property, and that defendant took the same from their possession. Defendant by his answer denied plaintiffs' ownership and possession; alleged that he seized the goods under a writ of execution upon a judgment recovered by one Fon Kee against one Vieu, that Vieu was the owner and in possession thereof at the time of such seizure, that plaintiffs took the goods from him (defendant) at the commencement of this action; and prayed a return of the same. The plaintiffs claim under a bill of sale made to them of the property by said Vieu on April 6, 1893. The levy by defendant was in November, 1893. The defense is that the sale was void because of constructive fraud, in that it was not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by actual and continued change of possession, of the chattels, and also because of actual fraud, in that the sale was designed to hinder and delay the creditors of said Vieu,—especially said Fon Kee. A jury trial was had, resulting in a verdict and judgment for defendant.

Assuming that evidence to show the sale to be fraudulent in fact was admissible under the issues, then it was relevant to prove that Vieu, the vendor, entertained the fraudulent intent to hinder and delay his creditors. Landecker v. Houghtaling, 7 Cal. 391. Accordingly, Mr. Spencer, a bank teller, testified that he prepared and sent for Fon Kee a telegram as follows: "April 5, 1893. N. Vieu, Dixon, Cal.: Your note is past due. You no pay immediately, I commence suit. Fon Kee." On this statement the paper purporting to contain the written message was read in evidence over plaintiffs' objection, defendant undertaking to prove that Vieu received it; but no such proof was made. We think the testimony did not show the paper to be competent. Its object no doubt was to show that Vieu was impelled by this threat when he transferred the goods to plaintiffs. It was therefore necessary to raise a presumption that the message reached him, and the testimony did not proceed that far. Where the message was sent, or by what means, does not appear. It should have been shown at least that it was delivered to some telegraph company or agency for transmission. 1 Greenl. Ev. (15th Ed.) § 40, note; Steamship Co. v. Otis, 100 N. Y. 446, 3 N. E. 485.

Immediately after the execution of the bill of sale the plaintiffs began the removal of the trays and boxes from Vieu's ranch, where they then were, to a neighboring ranch. Vieu did not participate in this work. As between him and the plaintiffs,—his vendees,—it appears that the sale was complete upon the delivery of the instrument evidencing the transfer. One Ah Loo testified in effect that Vieu told him the goods were removed because he (Vieu) was afraid somebody would stop the removal,—prevent any transfer. This declaration, so far as can be gathered from the statements of the witness, occurred after the removal of the trays, etc., had been completed, and was certainly subsequent to the delivery of the bill of sale. It is not claimed that plaintiffs heard or had knowledge of it. Its admission in evidence was therefore erroneous. Jones v. Morse, 36 Cal. 205; Walden v. Purvis, 73 Cal. 518, 15 Pac. 91.

As to the testimony of the witness Marie Schleyer that she, at Vieu's request, made out a statement for Fon Kee "to show how much money had been taken in," we fail to see how plaintiffs could have been injured by its admission, though we also fail to perceive its pertinency. When or where, or by or for whom, the money was taken, or how the statement bore on the issues, is not disclosed.

The errors noted may have been of not much consequence; but the evidence, as presented in the record, tending to show fraud, whether actual or constructive, was at best inconclusive, and the jury may have accorded controlling weight to the evidence erroneously admitted. The judgment and order should be reversed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; VAN CLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed.

FRENCH v. McCARTHY. (No. 15,551.)

APPEAL—SERVICE OF NOTICE.

Where it does not appear from the judgment roll that respondent's codefendant answered the complaint below, and the judgment appealed from contains no reference to such codefendant, respondent's motion to dismiss the appeal for failure of the appellant to serve his codefendant with notice thereof will be denied.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. Murphy, Judge.

Action by one McCarthy against one French and one Joost. There was judgment for defendants, from which plaintiff appeals. The case appears on a motion by defendant French to dismiss the appeal. Denied.

O'Byrne & Peixotto, for appellant. Chickering, Thomas & Gregory, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The respondent has moved to dismiss the appeal for failure of the appellant to serve his codefendant, Joost, with the notice of appeal. The action was brought against the appellant and Joost upon a contract of guaranty, executed by them to the plaintiff, and was tried solely upon the issues presented by the answer of the appellant. It does not appear from the judgment roll that Joost has answered the complaint, and the judgment appealed from is against the appellant alone, and contains no reference to Joost. A reversal of this judgment would therefore have no effect upon the rights of Joost, as there has been no trial or determination of the plaintiff's claim against him, or of his defense thereto. The motion is denied.

EMMONS v. BARTON. (No. 18,384.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 7, 1895.)

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE—ACTION TO SET ASIDE—AFTER DEATH OF GRANTOR—PARTY PLAINTIFF—PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS—DECLARATIONS.

1. Where an assignor of a claim might have sued to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance by the debtor, the assignee may do so.

2. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1589, 1590, providing that where decedent made a fraudulent conveyance, and there is a deficiency of assets, the executors must commence action to recover it for the benefit of the creditors, do not exclude a creditor from bringing such action where the executor is the grantee.

3. Where a fraudulent conveyance by a decedent is set aside, any surplus therefrom after satisfying the claims of decedent's creditors goes to the grantee.

4. In an action against a wife to set aside a fraudulent conveyance from her deceased husband she cannot be compelled to testify as to what decedent told her at the time of the conveyance as to his purpose in making it; Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, providing that a husband cannot be examined against his wife without her consent, and that neither husband nor wife, during marriage or afterwards, can be, without the consent of the other, examined as to any communication made by one to the other during marriage.

5. Declarations of a grantor of land, being admissible against the grantee only when made "while holding the title" (Code Civ. Proc. § 1849), are not admissible when made after the grant, though the grantor be still in possession of the property.

Department 2.

Action by Collis H. Emmons against Ella G. Barton. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Reversed.

McFARLAND, J. The plaintiff is the assignee of several money demands against the estate of Robert Barton, deceased, which had been presented to the executrix of said estate and allowed as valid claims. The defendant, Ella G. Barton, is the surviving widow of said Barton, deceased, and also executrix of his will. During the lifetime of said deceased, on July 1, 1890, he by deed conveyed to defendant, then his wife, certain real property, being certain lots in the city of Fresno. It is averred in the complaint that said conveyance was without consideration, and for the purpose of hindering and defrauding the creditors of said Robert Barton; and that the assets of said estate, other than the real property described in said deed, are insufficient to pay the said claims assigned to plaintiff as aforesaid. The prayer of the complaint is that said deed be declared fraudulent and void as against plaintiff, and that the property therein described be added to the assets of the estate, to be applied in due course to the discharge of plaintiff's said claims. The court found for plaintiff on nearly all issues, and entered judgment in accordance with his prayer. Defendant appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying her motion for a new trial.

A demurrer to the complaint was overruled, and appellant attacks the complaint upon two grounds which present debatable questions. It is contended that respondent cannot maintain this action, because he has only an assignment of a bare right to sue in equity for a fraud committed on his assignors, and that such assignment is void as against public policy. There is no doubt of the general rule that a mere right to complain of fraud is not assignable; fraud not being a vendible commodity. 1 Pars. Cont. 226; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1040g; Cross v. Bank, 66 Cal. 462, 6 Pac. 94; Whitney v. Kelley, 94 Cal. 146, 29 Pac. 624. In Whitney v. Kelley, Mr. Justice Garoutte reviews a great many authorities upon the subject, and other cases to the point are to be found in Crocker v. Bellangee, 70 Am. Dec. 489. But the rule in question, as established by the authorities, applies only to a case where the assignment does not carry anything which has, itself, a legal existence and value, independent of the right to sue for a fraud. It does not apply to a case where the right to sue for a fraud is merely incidental to a subsisting substantial property which has been assigned, and which is, itself, intrinsically susceptible of legal enforcement. An examination of the authorities—many of which are quoted and referred to in Whitney v. Kelley, supra—discloses that the rule in question does not govern in cases where the assignors "have some substantial possession, and some capability of personal judgment, and not a mere naked right to overset a legal instrument or to maintain a suit." In Whitney v. Kelley all that the assignee got was the mere right to maintain a suit to set aside a judgment against his assignor on the ground of fraud. In Sanborn v. Doe, 92 Cal. 152, 28 Pac. 105, cited by appellant, the case was really decided upon the particular language of the insolvent law; but, in addition, the attempted assignment there was of debts which had been fully discharged by a decree in insolvency, and had no legal value whatever, unless the decree could be set aside for fraud. In the case at bar the things assigned were money claims against an estate which had been allowed by the executrix, and were really, in effect, judgments. They had legal existence and value in themselves, were capable of enforcement by ordinary methods, and were proper objects of sale and assignment. What their financial value may be without resort to an action to set aside the alleged fraudulent conveyance is a question which does not affect the validity of the assignment; although it does appear that there are other assets of the estate, out of which the assigned claims could be partly satisfied. We think, therefore, that the right to maintain this action is merely incidental to the claims assigned, and that the appellant is entitled to maintain it if his assignors would have been so entitled.

It is also contended by appellant that this action, if maintainable at all, could have been properly brought only by the executrix under sections 1589 and 1590 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provide that when the decedent did, in his lifetime, convey property with intent to defraud his creditors, and there is a deficiency of assets, the executor or administrator must commence an action for the recovery of such property for the benefit of the creditors, and is bound to do so upon the application of creditors, who must provide for certain costs and expenses of the action. This contention is well worthy of consideration, but we do not think that it can be successfully maintained. In Hills v. Sherwood, 48 Cal. 393, it was expressly held that similar provisions of the old probate act merely gave to executors and administrators the power (formerly doubted) to bring such an action, but do not "purport to exclude the creditors from bringing it if they are authorized so to do by the general law"; and that "the creditors have their remedies independently of the administrator." That case, however, was decided under the law as it stood before the codes went into operation, and it probably goes further than would be warranted under our Code of Civil Procedure, which is usually understood as presenting remedies which, "when applicable to the relief sought, exclude or supplant all other modes of relief." Freem. Ex'ns, § 394; Herrlich v. Kaufmann, 99 Cal. 271, 33 Pac. 857. Ordinarily, an action to recover property fraudulently conveyed by a decedent in his lifetime should be brought by his executor or administrator, and such an action by a creditor would not lie, at least unless he shows an exhaustion of all means to procure such an action to be brought by the proper person. But in the case at bar the alleged fraudulent grantee is the executrix. She could not sue herself. This condition of things does not seem to be a statutory cause for her removal, and we see no remedy other than a suit in equity by the creditors themselves. It is a case where the Code provision is not "applicable to the relief sought." The circumstances here are analogous to those under which a creditors' bill will lie under our Code. In general, proceedings supplementary to execution are regarded as a substitute for a creditors' bill in chancery, and the former must be followed, instead of the latter. But there may be cases in which the statutory proceedings would not afford adequate remedy; "exceptional cases in which it appears that equity must be invoked because legal remedies are unavailing." Herrlich v. Kaufmann, supra. In such cases the Code provisions may be departed from, for it is the province of equity to relieve where legal remedies fail. The case at bar comes within this rule, and a creditor, under the circumstances here disclosed, was entitled to bring this action, for the benefit of all the creditors. A demand upon the appellant to bring the suit would have been fruitless. (It is to be observed, however, that in a case like this the judgment should be that property fraudulently conveyed, or so much thereof as is necessary, be applied to the satisfaction of the debts, and that the residue, if any, go to the grantee. It is not to go into the assets of the estate for any purpose other than the payments of the debts. The residue does not go to the heir, for he stands in the shoes of the fraudulent grantor.)

There are some other objections to the complaint and to the sufficiency of the findings, which are not tenable, and which, in our opinion, need no special notice. The judgment and order appealed from must, however, be reversed for erroneous rulings touching the admissibility of evidence, and for want of evidence to support the material finding. The conveyance in question was made by the decedent to his wife, the appellant, on July 1, 1890, in consideration of love and affection, "and for her better maintenance and support"; and it was recorded the same day. At that time the decedent had commenced the erection on the lots conveyed of a large building called the "Barton Opera House," upon which a small amount of work had been done. The claims of respondent and his assignors are for materials furnished for and work done upon that building, and they mostly accrued after the execution of said conveyance. We do not see that any money remains unpaid which was due before July 1st. The respondent and his assignors had not only constructive but actual notice of the execution of this conveyance at or about the time of its execution. After this, and having this knowledge, they went on furnishing materials, etc., for the building without filing any liens, and relying entirely upon the statements and promises and personal responsibility of the decedent. It appears that the building cost about $105,000, and that decedent did pay all of that large sum except the amounts due respondent, which are, exclusive of interest, about $12,000. The respondent called the appellant as a witness and asked her what the decedent told her at the time of the conveyance as to his purpose in making it. To this appellant objected upon the ground, among others, that it was a privileged communication. The objection was overruled, and appellant excepted. This ruling was erroneous. Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, provides as follows: "A husband cannot be examined for or against his wife without her consent; nor a wife for or against her husband without his consent; nor can either, during the marriage or afterwards, be, without the consent of the other, examined as to any communication made by one to the other during the marriage." Respondent has cited no authority and has made no suggestion that would tend to take the ruling here in question out of this apparently plain provision of the Code. On the other hand, the point was substantially decided in favor of appellant's contention in Re Flint's Estate, 100 Cal. 391, 34 Pac. 863. In that case the attempt was to prove by a physician communications made to him by a patient who had afterwards died; and the court held that it could not be done, and that the heir could not waive the privilege. Certainly the creditors are in no position to waive such a privilege. That case construed a clause of this same section 1881, and the principle there decided seems directly applicable to the case at bar.

Statements of the deceased husband concerning the title to the property conveyed, made after the execution of the conveyance, were also erroneously admitted, over the objections of appellant. This occurred particularly in the testimony of the respondent and the witness Kirby. The declarations of a grantor made after the grant are not admissible in evidence against the grantee. Under section 1849, Code Civ. Proc., the declarations, etc., of a grantor of real property are evidence against the grantee only "while holding the title." Tompkins v. Crane, 50 Cal. 478; Ord v. Ord, 99 Cal. 523, 34 Pac. 83; Bury v. Young, 98 Cal. 446, 33 Pac. 338. And the fact that the grantor was in possession of the real property conveyed at the time of the alleged subsequent declarations does not change the rule. Bigelow, Fraud, p. 171. There are cases which hold that, where personal property has been left after sale in the possession of the vendor, the declarations of the latter while in possession are evidence against the vendee.

For the reasons above stated the judgment must be reversed. We may say, however, that we do not see how it can be successfully maintained that the evidence justifies the finding that said conveyance was made "for the purpose of delaying, hindering, and defrauding the said several creditors and other creditors of said Robert Barton." It is clear that a conveyance made by a husband or father to his wife or child is valid as against creditors although the consideration was love and affection alone, unless it was made with intent to defraud his creditors. Peck v. Brummagim, 31 Cal. 441; Barker v. Koneman, 13 Cal. 9; Wells v. Stout, 9 Cal. 480; In re McEachran, 82 Cal. 219, 23 Pac. 46; Cohen v. Knox, 90 Cal. 266, 27 Pac. 215; Knox v. Moses, 104 Cal. 502, 38 Pac. 318. If such a conveyance be made with intent to defraud creditors, it is void as against the creditors; but the intent is a question of fact, and must be averred and proved. A voluntary conveyance is not prima facie fraudulent, and a fraudulent intent is not to be arrived at as a presumption of law. Civ. Code, § 3442; Threlkel v. Scott, 89 Cal. 351, 26 Pac. 879; Windhaus v. Bootz, 92 Cal. 617, 28 Pac. 557; Bull v. Bray, 89 Cal. 286, 26 Pac. 873. Therefore, in a case like the one at bar, there must be evidence upon which the jury or court can base a finding of the fact that the intent of the grantor, at the time of the grant, was to defraud his creditors. And in the case at bar we see no evidence sufficient to support such a finding. Pronounced insolvency at the time of the grant would, no doubt, be a strong circumstance tending to show fraudulent intent, and, in the absence of other controlling facts, it would be sufficient to justify a finding of such intent. But in the case at bar we see no evidence of such insolvency. The decedent died about a year after the execution of the deed to his wife, and afterwards it was found that there would be a few debts of the estate which its assets would not satisfy; the aggregate being exceedingly small when compared with the volume of his business. As stated above, the building cost about $105,000, which seems to have been all paid by the decedent except the amounts alleged to be still due respondent, aggregating about $12,000 and interest, while the appraisement shows assets of the value of over $9,000. Nearly all of the $105,000 was paid after the date of the deed, and was for debts accruing after that date. So far as the evidence which bears directly upon his financial condition at the time of the deed is concerned, there is nothing in it tending to show insolvency at that time. On the other hand, it affirmatively appears that at that time his financial standing was exceedingly good, and that he had property, apart from the land conveyed to his wife, which was amply sufficient to pay all debts which he then owed. Indeed, it is quite apparent that his financial condition at the time of his death was caused, as suggested by his banker, the witness Ernstein, by his unwise investment after the deed of too much money in an unprofitable enterprise. It is true that the deed to his wife was of the greater part of his property, but that which he retained was more than was necessary to meet all demands of creditors at that date. Respondent asked appellant, when a witness, this question: "It was not intended that this deed should operate to take away the property from the creditors?" and she answered, "No, sir"; and some importance is attached by respondent to this answer. We do not, however, consider it of any more significance than the following question and answer: "Was this deed made with any intent to hinder, delay, or defraud any creditor of Mr. Barton?" to which she answered, "Positively, no." These questions and answers merely meant that the deed was not made with any intent to defraud creditors.

Respondent's assignors will no doubt feel aggrieved if they shall fail to get all the money owing them from the estate, but knowing that the conveyance had been made, they chose to rely upon the statements of the deceased, and neglected to protect themselves by filing liens for their materials and work. And they should not be surprised because a widow, whose deceased husband had been in affluent circumstances, takes all legal means to save what she can of his wrecked fortune. The judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

VENDOR'S LIEN—WAIVER—SUBROGATION.

1. A finding that, after plaintiff sold her land she signed and delivered to a certain person "two unacknowledged deeds to said premises," should not be held to constitute an abandonment of a lien for the purchase price where it was also found that plaintiff did not waive her lien, and that said person, "being a mortgagee, must account to plaintiff for the profits." Beatty, C. J., and Temple and Henshaw, JJ., dissenting.

2. Where plaintiff, in possession of land, which she held under a recorded contract of sale, and upon which there was a lien for the purchase price, agreed to sell the same in consideration that the vendee discharge said lien, and give his notes to her for the payment of a further sum, and that she retain possession until they were paid, and the vendee borrowed money from another, giving him a mortgage on the land therefor, and the sum borrowed was paid to the holder of the first lien, who conveyed directly to the vendee, the mortgage must be postponed to plaintiff's lien, the mortgagee not being entitled to be subrogated to the original lien. Beatty, C. J., and Temple and Henshaw, JJ., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; John Reynolds, Judge.

Action by Mary A. Austin against Gustav Pulschen, R. H. McDonald, and others, to enforce a vendor's lien. A judgment refusing her a preference of lien was reversed in department (39 Pac. 799), and R. H. McDonald appeals to the court in bank. Commissioners' decision affirmed.

J. R. Welch, for appellant. Sawyer & Burnett, Dorn & Dorn, and Morehouse & Tuttle, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. After full consideration of this cause in bank we are satisfied with the opinion delivered and the conclusion reached in department. 39 Pac. 799. The petition for a rehearing in bank is mainly concerned with the proposition that Mrs. Austin, after her sale to Pulschen, conveyed the land to Rosencrantz, and thereby destroyed her vendor's lien. But there is no finding that she conveyed to Rosencrantz. The court finds that at a certain time Pulschen made a deed of the premises to Rosencrantz, which was intended and understood to be a mortgage to secure $600. It is also found that shortly afterwards plaintiff sold some personal property to Rosencrantz, and also "signed and delivered to said Rosencrantz two unacknowledged deeds to said premises"; but it is also found that she did not by said deeds "waive any lien which she had or claimed to have upon said premises." What kind of "deeds" those were does not appear. A deed is simply a sealed instrument, and may be a grant, a mortgage, a bond, or any kind of contract. In some connections a "deed to said premises" might, no doubt, be construed to mean an absolute conveyance of the fee; but here the court evidently did not use the phrase in that sense. It is immediately added that by said deeds plaintiff did not waive her lien; and, moreover, it is found that Rosencrantz, by said deeds or otherwise, became the owner of the premises; but it is adjudged "that said Rosencrantz, being a mortgagee only of said premises, must account to said plaintiff for all the profits," etc. Whatever those deeds were,—whether mortgages or otherwise,—they disappear from the case; and there is no appeal by plaintiff from the judgment in favor of Rosencrantz as a mortgagee.

There is nothing in the point that the money borrowed by Pulschen from McDonald—$2,500—was paid to the original owners, Bruce and Kent. That payment was in accordance with the contract between plaintiff and Pulschen. When that payment had been made to avoid a circuity of conveyance, Bruce and Kent, at plaintiff's request, conveyed directly to Pulschen, and plaintiff and others, supposed to have some shadow of title, joined in the conveyance. But her vendor's lien for the balance of the purchase money coming to her was as perfect as if Bruce and Kent had conveyed to her before she made her contract with Pulschen. That part of the judgment appealed from is reversed, and the lower court is instructed to modify the judgment in accordance with the opinion of Mr. Commissioner VANCLIEF delivered in department.

TEMPLE, J. (dissenting). I cannot concur in the judgment in this case. The finding that for a valuable consideration plaintiff signed and delivered to Rosencrantz two deeds to said premises is not ambiguous. It can only mean that she conveyed the premises to Rosencrantz. It is idle to claim that the meaning is rendered uncertain because at common law a deed was simply a sealed instrument. The word is never so used here. On the contrary, it always means a conveyance of land. But this is not important. McDonald was certainly entitled to be subrogated to the position of Bruce and Kent, as security for the $2,700 paid to them. It is said in the opinion that he cannot be subrogated, because he paid the money under contract with Pulschen. That is why he is entitled to be subrogated. Had he paid it as a mere volunteer, he would not have been so entitled. Had plaintiff foreclosed her lien against Pulschen, she would have taken the land subject to the charge. As McDonald paid it for her, why should he not retain a lien for it? It was a claim against her estate. How has she become discharged from it? The debt was a charge against the land, which plaintiff was bound to pay. When one—not as a volunteer, but to protect his own interests—pays such a debt, he is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditors whose debt he has paid, so far as necessary to secure repayment from the estate which was subject to the charge. PEOPLE v. HECKER. (Cr. 24.)

HOMICIDE—SELF-DEFENSE—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Deceased, whose two strayed horses had been found by defendant, had some altercation with the latter as to whether he was entitled to a reward which had been offered, and in defendant's endeavor to regain possession of the animals, in order to secure his lien, deceased, upon interfering, was killed. Held, that there was no error in admitting evidence with regard to a similar interference by deceased in a previous attempt of defendant to regain possession of the animals.

2. Though defendant was in the act of committing a forcible trespass, deceased was not justified in trying to kill him in attempting to prevent it.

3. Defendant would be justified in killing deceased if the circumstances of a felonious assault by the latter upon him were sufficient to excite defendant's fears as a reasonable man that he was in danger of death or great bodily injury.

4. Where, at the time of the affray, defendant was a trespasser in endeavoring to secure possession of an animal belonging to deceased upon which he claimed a lien, and deceased resisted his attempt by a deadly assault upon him with a pistol, it was defendant's first duty to decline to strike; but, if the suddenness of the assault precluded this, he was justified, so long as the imminence of his danger was apparently continued, in meeting it by a deadly return.

5. If defendant was not a wrongdoer in seeking to obtain possession of an animal belonging to deceased upon which he claimed a lien, and deceased met his attempt by a felonious assault with a pistol, defendant, if the assault was sudden and the danger great or apparently great, would have been justified in pursuing and killing his adversary to win his safety.

6. Where, in an attempt to obtain possession of an animal belonging to deceased, upon which defendant claimed a lien, defendant made the first deadly assault, his right to kill deceased in self-defense did not exist, even though willing thereafter to decline further combat, until he had in good faith declined, and had clearly made known to deceased his willingness to do so.

7. Though one may have been guilty of a felonious assault upon another, as a result of which the latter, in self-defense, assaulted and even pursued defendant, yet if defendant in good faith withdrew, and declined further combat, and made this fairly known to deceased, his killing of deceased in the combat immediately forced upon him was justifiable.

8. One in the exercise of the right of self-defense not only has the right to stand his ground and defend himself when attacked, but he may pursue his adversary until he has secured himself from danger.

9. There was no error in refusing an instruction that the jury must return a verdict of not guilty unless convinced to an "absolute moral certainty" of defendant's guilt.

10. It is the better practice with reference to instructions requested by defendant to give them as requested where they submit the law, but the exclusion from one of the many requests of the closing formula, "And if, under the circumstances, he killed deceased, you must find as your verdict, not guilty," is not reversible error.

11. In order to justify the taking of life upon the ground of self-defense, it must not only appear that defendant had reason to believe, and did believe, that he was in danger of his life or of receiving great bodily harm, but it must also appear to defendant's comprehension as a reasonable man that, to avoid such danger, it was absolutely necessary for him to take the life of the deceased.

12. The right to stand one's ground should form an element of the instructions upon the necessity of killing and the law of self-defense.

13. Where deceased, whose two strayed horses had been found by defendant, was killed in attempting to take them from defendant, who claimed a lien thereon, defendant was entitled to instructions defining the rights of a finder of lost property to compensation for its care and preservation and to any promised reward, and the nature of his lien upon it, and how such lien could be lost or extinguished.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; G. W. Hunter, Judge.

Charles Hecker was convicted of murder, and, from a verdict of guilty and judgment of conviction, he appeals. Reversed.

The following instructions, referred to in the opinion as requested by defendant, were not given:

"(7) I instruct you as law that the finder of a thing lost, upon taking charge of it, stands in the same legal position as though the owner of the lost property had deposited it with him for hire; and, furthermore, that the finder of lost property is entitled to compensation for all expenses necessarily incurred by him in its preservation, and is also entitled to a reasonable reward for keeping it; and the finder of lost property has a lien upon it for the expenses incurred in its preservation, and for the reasonable reward to which he is entitled; and, in the event of the owner refusing or neglecting upon demand to pay the lawful charges and reward of the finder, the finder may refuse to surrender the property found to the owner, and may retain possession of it until his lien for charges and reward is satisfied.

"(8) If you find from the evidence in the present case that Riley, the deceased, lost his horses, and that Hecker, the defendant, found them, and took charge of them, then I instruct you as law that Hecker had a lien on the horses for his compensation for all expenses necessarily incurred by him in their preservation, and for any services necessarily performed by him for the horses, and for a reasonable reward for keeping them; and, until these charges were paid, Hecker had the legal right to retain possession of the horses, and Riley, the deceased, had no right to take the horses away from Hecker, or to in any manner interfere with him, until he first paid or satisfied Hecker's lien.

"(9) I charge you that where a person has a lien on property found for the charges and reward, that such lien depends upon possession. A voluntary surrender by the finder to the owner extinguishes the lien, but an involuntary surrender or loss does not. If, therefore, you find from the evidence in the present case that defendant found the horses of deceased, and brought them to the town of Briceland, and placed them in the barn of one John Briceland, and that, at the time of bringing said horses to Briceland, deceased was absent; and if you further find that defendant did not voluntarily surrender said horses to deceased, but held them for the payment of his charges against them,—then I instruct you that he had not parted with his lien on them, and that if any one took one of said horses from said barn without defendant's consent, that said horse would still be subject to defendant's lien, and he would have the right to take possession of it wherever he might find it."

"(13) I further charge you as law that a person, in the exercise of the right of self-defense, as I have stated it to you in the foregoing instructions, not only has the right to stand his ground and defend himself when attacked, but he may pursue his adversary until he has secured himself from danger; and if, in so doing, it be necessary, or upon reasonable grounds it appear necessary, to kill his antagonist, the killing is excusable on the ground of self-defense."

"(19) Gentlemen of the jury, I charge you that in this case you are the sole and exclusive judges of the truth of the facts that have been adduced in evidence, and of the credibility of the witnesses who have testified in your hearing; and, in this connection, I further charge you that you are not bound to decide in conformity with the declarations of any number of witnesses which do not produce conviction in your minds, as against a less number or against a presumption or other evidence satisfying your minds. In other words, notwithstanding the number of witnesses that may testify, or the amount of evidence that may be introduced upon the part of the prosecution in a criminal case, unless the jury are thereby convinced to an absolute moral certainty of the guilt of the defendant, they must not return a verdict in accordance with such testimony. Upon the other hand, notwithstanding the small number of witnesses that may testify, or the small amount of material evidence that may be introduced upon the part of the defense, if the jury are thereby led to believe the defendant is innocent of the crime charged, it is their solemn duty so to find, and their verdict must be, not guilty."

"E. The law of self-defense is founded upon necessity; and, in order to justify the taking of life upon this ground, it must not only appear that the defendant had reason to believe, and did believe, that he was in danger of his life or of receiving great bodily harm, but it must also appear to the defendant's comprehension as a reasonable man that, to avoid such danger, it was absolutely necessary for him to take the life of the deceased."

"O. A homicide is justifiable when committed in the lawful defense of such person, but such person, if he was the assailant, must really and in good faith have endeavored to decline any further struggle before the homicide was committed. If the defendant himself brought on the fight, and went into it armed, and assaulted Riley in the first instance with a deadly weapon, he cannot justify killing him, unless he had really and in good faith endeavored to decline any further struggle before the killing occurred. If, however, the defendant was the assailant, if he had really and in good faith endeavored to decline any further struggle, and thereafter Riley assaulted him with a deadly weapon, the killing then might be justified by the defendant in self-defense.

"P. In other words, gentlemen of the jury, if you believe from the evidence that the defendant was the aggressor, and made an assault upon Riley with a deadly weapon, he cannot justify killing him, unless he had really and in good faith sought to avoid further conflict before the fatal shot was fired. In case, however, that the defendant was the assailant, if he had really and in good faith endeavored to decline any further struggle before the mortal wound was given, and thereafter Riley renewed the conflict and made an unlawful assault upon Hecker, then Hecker could justify the killing if it was done in necessary defense of his own life, or to prevent his receiving great bodily injury. In order to determine whether there was any such attempted withdrawal, and whether the defendant really and in good faith endeavored to decline any further struggle, the jury are to take into consideration all the surrounding circumstances, the situation and conduct and relation of the parties at the time of the shooting, and all the other evidence in the case.

"Q. If you believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was the assailant, and fired the first shot that was fired, and did not thereafter really and in good faith endeavor to decline any further struggle, and that the shots fired by Riley were shot by him in necessary self-defense, as I have defined it to you, and that thereafter Riley ceased to fire, and then ran away to avoid the defendant; and if you further believe from the evidence that the defendant, Charles Hecker, with intent to willfully and deliberately kill and murder the deceased, pursued the deceased towards the granary, with his pistol in his hand, for the purpose of overtaking the deceased and killing him; and you further believe from the evidence that the defendant, Charles Hecker, did pursue and overtake the deceased while he was thus fleeing and showing no disposition to kill and murder the defendant, Hecker, and that the defendant then and there, without believing himself in danger of losing his own life or receiving great bodily injury at the hands of the deceased or having reasonable ground to believe himself in such danger, fired the fatal shot, and killed deceased,—then I instruct you that in such case the defendant would not be justified under the law of self-defense."

Chamberlain & Wheeler, for appellant. L. M. Burnell and Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the State.

HENSHAW, J. The appellant, Hecker, was tried for the murder of one Patrick Riley, and by the jury found guilty of murder in the second degree. The killing was admitted, but it was claimed to have been done in self-defense.

It appeared by the evidence that Riley peddled wares through the country, using for the purpose a two-horse team and wagon. He had camped near the farm house of one Briceland, and turned his horses into Briceland's inclosure. From this they strayed, and were lost in the hills. They had been gone for several days when Riley, who had been in vain pursuit of them, met Hecker, and offered to give him $10 if he would find and return them. Hecker was an old resident of the vicinity, and owned a sheep range, which was contiguous to the land of Briceland. He searched for the horses that day, and found them, put them in his corral over night, and the next morning proceeded with them to Briceland's. Riley was away at the time of his arrival, and Hecker either made a voluntary surrender of the horses to Mrs. Riley, who put them in Briceland's barn, as was claimed by the people, or, as was contended by the defense, they were put there by Mrs. Riley for Hecker, who thus still retained constructive possession of and a lien upon them for the promised reward of $10. The point is one in dispute. Hecker rode on to the little town of Briceland, and passed the day in waiting for Riley. He did not see him, and went home. The next day he returned to town, and met Riley about 11 o'clock in the morning. Riley called him to one side, and the finding of the horses was discussed. There having been no one else present at that interview, the only account of it is Hecker's. But it appears from other evidence that Riley suspected that his horses had been taken and secreted in the hills in expectation of a reward, and the promptness with which Hecker found and returned them seems to have confirmed him in his suspicion, and created the conviction that Hecker had purloined them. There was no question but that Riley's suspicions were unfounded and unjust. It was in evidence that Riley said he would kill the man who stole his horses. Hecker testified that Riley accused him of stealing the horses, and refused to pay him any money for their recovery. The men parted. Hecker returned to the store and saloon, and, after thinking and talking the matter over, as he says, concluded he would take the horses from Briceland's barn, and put them elsewhere until he was paid. Hecker was a cripple; Riley, a powerful man. Hecker armed himself, thinking that Riley would be at Briceland's, and knowing that "he would be trying to get a row." Arriving at Briceland's a little after noon, Hecker found but one horse, the other having been ridden off by Sam Pollock, who had gone to find Riley, and tell him the search was at an end. Hecker took possession of the animal, and led it from the stable. Riley saw him, and came forward, calling to him, and forbidding the act. Hecker half drew his pistol from the bosom of his shirt, and, in turn, told Riley to advance no further. Riley answered that he was unarmed, and turned out his pockets in proof; and a second time the two men parted, Hecker leading away the horse. He returned with it to the town, where he spent the afternoon discussing his grievance. As was shown, he used some loose talk and indulged in some threats: He would not let Riley beat him out of his money; he would have the money, or would have Riley's blood; while, to add to the bitterness of the matter, he was informed that Riley had gone off to procure his arrest for stealing the horses. This information was brought to him by men whom he had sent to see Riley to fix up the matter, telling them that he wanted no fuss, and to take what they could get and settle it for him. So the time passed until about half past 6 of this July afternoon, when Hecker espied Pollock riding by on the other horse. Hecker, who was himself then mounted, hailed him, and demanded the horse, believing, as he testified, that he "had to have both horses in order to make the lien good." Pollock declined to surrender the animal, saying he would put it where he got it; and so Hecker rode on once more to Briceland's, and to the fatal meeting with Riley. As the two men rode up to the stable, Riley came forward to take his horse. Pollock dismounted. Riley started to remove the saddle. Hecker leaned forward to seize the bridle. There was a struggle for possession, and then, by the evidence for the people, Hecker drew his pistol, and with it struck Riley over the head, and, as he staggered back, fired at him. Hecker's account is that he spurred his horse that he might seize the other's bridle; that, as his horse sprang forward, her fore shoulder struck Riley, and staggered him. "When I broke his hold, he ran right back, and had his hand twisted to pull his pistol, and at last he pulled his pistol out, and pointed at me, and I saw him shut his eye to pull the trigger; and, just as he was about to pull the trigger, I threw myself out of the saddle like that [shows] over the side of my horse, and grabbed my pistol at the same time; and, as I raised mine up, he had his pistol up, and we both shot about the same time. If anything, he shot a little before I did." The defendant was riding a nervous two year old colt, using a "hackamore" in lieu of bridle, and at the shooting she either bolted, or, as Hecker says, he started her to go around Briceland's house, and get out of the way. Riley fired again at him as he went. At some beehives, Hecker reined up, and the two men exchanged shots. Hecker then rode on in another direction, to a place in the yard where there were four stumps, having abandoned, as he says, his first intention to pass around Briceland's house, and endeavoring to get away by another route, or, as the people claim, coming back to engage Riley at closer quarters. Riley ran towards a granary, calling upon one of the bystanders, of whom there were several, to lend him his pistol, and to his wife and daughter to go to the wagon and bring him more cartridges. Whether Riley ran to the granary to escape further combat, or whether he designed to use it as a shield that he might fire with more security upon Hecker, is disputed. Near the granary, and, as Riley was about to pass a corner of it, there was shooting, and Riley, struck through the heart, ran a few yards, and fell dead.

Nothing of the foregoing narrative is to be taken as expressing the views of this court upon the weight of the evidence. That consideration is not before us. The account is designed to throw into prominence the claims made by prosecution and defense for the better understanding of the propositions of law which we are called upon to consider.

The first complaint of defendant is that the court erred in admitting testimony as to the occurrences at the meeting between himself and Riley at noon of the day of the affray. But this complaint is not well founded. Hecker's plea was self-defense. Whether Hecker was within or without his legal rights in seeking to gain possession of the horses, whether he or the deceased first committed a felonious assault, were disputed questions for the jury's determination. The attempt to retake the first horse, though separated in time from the taking of the second, was a part of the same occurrence and transaction which led up to and culminated in the fatal affray. The recovery of the first horse, and the manner of it, the conduct of the two men upon that occasion, their previous difficulty, their threats against each other, whether communicated or not, all tended to enlighten the jury as to the mental attitudes of the men towards each other at the time of the affray, and thus to assist in determining the disputed question as to which in fact first put himself in the wrong, and which first made a felonious assault upon the other; for only by so determining could the jury justly decide upon the defendant's plea. People v. Lyons, 110 N. Y. 618, 17 N. E. 391; State v. Perigo, 70 Iowa, 657, 28 N. W. 452; Monroe v. State, 5 Ga. 85; Williams v. State, 3 Heisk. 376; State v. Zellers, 7 N. J. Law, 220; Keener v. State, 18 Ga. 194; State v. Tarter, 26 Or. 38, 37 Pac. 53.

But having admitted, and properly admitted, this evidence, the court erred in refusing to give the instructions asked by defendant (defendant's proposed instructions Nos. 7, 8, and 9) defining the rights of a finder of lost property to compensation for its care and preservation and to any promised reward, the nature of his lien upon it, and how such lien could be lost or extinguished. It is conceded by the prosecution that these instructions correctly embody the law, but it is contended that they were properly refused as irrelevant. This contention cannot be upheld. One of the questions of primary consideration for the jury was which of the two men was the aggressor at the time of the fatal affray, which of the two first overstepped the boundaries of the law, which of the two first trespassed upon the legal rights of the other,—in short, which of the two, by his acts and conduct, first put himself in the wrong; for it is obvious that the determination of this must throw a flood of light upon the other question, second in consideration but first in importance, namely, whether, at the time the defendant first fired, he was acting in self-defense.

The opposing claims of counsel upon this evidence have been suggested. Upon the one hand it was argued that defendant, after voluntarily surrendering his possession of the horses, and so extinguishing his lien, came with a lawless hand to retake them from their owner, prepared for this end to do murder if resisted; and that this motive dominated his conduct in the meeting at noon and the fatal later one. Upon the other hand, it was argued that the surrender of possession had been involuntary, and that, consequently, defendant's right to possession still existed even against the owner; that his intent was therefore proper, and his purpose lawful. The absence of instructions upon these questions of law left the jury without rudder or compass. The true rule for measuring the acts of the parties not having been given them, each was at liberty to set up his own independent standard, and approve or condemn in accordance with it. The refusal to give these instructions thus constituted reversible error. People v. Taylor, 36 Cal. 255; People v. Keefer, 65 Cal. 232, 3 Pac. 818; People v. Fice, 97 Cal. 457, 32 Pac. 531.

The court gave an instruction prepared by defendant after modification. That instruction is as follows, the modification complained of being the italicized phrase, inclosed in brackets: "I charge you that the law does not permit the taking of human life or the infliction of great bodily harm in the resisting of a mere trespass against personal property. Therefore, in the present case, should you find from the evidence that defendant attempted to regain possession of the horse returned by Pollock [in a peaceable manner] for the declared purpose of holding him for a reward, and that the deceased, Riley, resisted such attempt on the part of defendant by resorting to the use of a deadly weapon, or by attempting to kill Hecker or inflict upon him great bodily harm,—and there was imminent danger of his doing so,—then I charge that Riley was acting unlawfully and without right; and if, under these circumstances, you find that Hecker, in order to protect himself from death or great bodily harm at the hands of Riley, shot and killed Riley, then I instruct you that he was justified in so doing, and you must acquit him. And, in this connection, I further instruct you that, if you so find, it makes no difference whether Hecker had a right to take the horse or not; Riley had no legal right to attempt to kill Hecker in resisting a mere trespass." The instruction was offered under defendant's claim of self-defense. As given, it was unobjectionable as a statement of the law excepting for the italicized insertion. One is not justified in taking human life to prevent the commission of a mere trespass, though any person in defense of property has the legal right to prevent the commission of a felony attempted by violence or surprise, and in so doing may use all necessary force, even to the taking of life. Pen. Code, § 197, subd. 2; People v. Payne, 8 Cal. 341; People v. Flannagan, 60 Cal. 2; People v. Dunn, 80 Cal. 34, 21 Pac. 1130. The amendment left the instruction confused and erroneous. The defendant was entitled to have the jury instructed that even if he was in the act of committing a forcible trespass in endeavoring to take the horse, if his act amounted to no more than a trespass, Riley was not justified in trying to kill him, if he did try, in attempting to prevent it. And if, under these circumstances, Riley did make the first felonious assault upon defendant, defendant, in turn, would be justified in killing Riley, if the circumstances of Riley's felonious assault were sufficient to excite defendant's fears as a reasonable man that he was in danger of death or great bodily injury, and he acted under these fears alone, and had in good faith, declined further struggle before firing the fatal shot, or was put in such sudden jeopardy by the acts of deceased that he could not withdraw, and if it was thus that Riley met his death. But, as given, the court in effect told the jury that the defendant's rights were to be governed by their determination whether or not he was endeavoring to take possession of the horse in a peaceable manner. Even if a peaceable trespass be conceded, the jury was substantially told that Hecker's plea of self-defense under the hypothesis could not be upheld unless his act was a peaceable trespass. But such is not law. "Where the trespass is forcible against personal property, an owner may resist it, but he is not justified in killing the trespasser unless it is necessary, to prevent a felonious destruction of the property, or to defend himself against loss of life or great bodily harm." Carroll v. State, 58 Am. Dec. 282, 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 572; State v. Tarter (Or.) 37 Pac. 53; State v. Perigo, 70 Iowa, 657, 28 N. W. 452.

The acts which a defendant may do and justify under the plea of self-defense depend primarily upon his own conduct, and secondarily upon the conduct of the deceased. There is no fixed rule applicable to every case, though certain general principles, well established, stand forth as guides for the action of men and measures for the jury's determination of their deportment:

First. Self-defense is not available as a plea to a defendant who has sought a quarrel with the design to force a deadly issue, and thus, through his fraud, contrivance, or fault, to create a real or apparent necessity for killing. People v. Robertson, 67 Cal. 646, 8 Pac. 600; Stewart v. State, 1 Ohio St. 66.

Second. It is not available as a plea to one who, by prearranged duel or by consent, has entered into a deadly mutual combat, in which he slays his adversary. In both of these cases the same rule applies. A man may not wickedly or willfully invite or create the appearances of necessity or the actual necessity which, if present to one without blame, would justify the homicide. State v. Partlow, 90 Mo. 608, 4 S. W. 14; State v. Underwood, 37 Mo. 225; Lambert's Case, 9 Leigh, 605; 1 Bish. Cr. Law, § 870; Gilleland v. State, 44 Tex. 356; Clifford v. State, 58 Wis. 478, 17 N. W. 304; Tate v. State, 46 Ga. 151.

Third. Where one, without fault, is placed under circumstances sufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable person that another designs to commit a felony or some great bodily injury upon him, and to afford grounds for reasonable belief that there is imminent danger of the accomplishment of this design, he may, acting under these fears alone, slay his assailant, and be justified by the appearances; and as, where the attack is sudden and the danger imminent, he may increase his peril by retreat, so situated he may stand his ground, that becoming his "wall," and slay his aggressor, even if it be proved that he might more easily have gained his safety by flight. People v. Herbert, 61 Cal. 544; People v. Gonzales, 71 Cal. 569, 12 Pac. 783; People v. Ye Park, 62 Cal. 204; People v. Robertson, 67 Cal. 650, 8 Pac. 600; Runyan v. State, 57 Ind. 84; Erwin v. State, 29 Ohio St. 186. So, too, under such circumstances, he may pursue and slay his adversary. But the pursuit must not be in revenge, not after the necessity for defense has ceased, but must be prosecuted in good faith, to the sole end of winning his safety and securing his life. Carroll v. State, 23 Ala. 28; Young v. Com., 6 Bush, 312; Collins v. State, 32 Iowa, 36; Horr. & T. Cas. p. 230.

Fourth. Where one is making a felonious assault upon another, or has created appearances justifying that other in making a deadly counter attack in self-defense, the original assailant cannot slay his adversary and avail himself of the plea, unless he has first and in good faith declined further combat, and has fairly notified him that he has abandoned the contest. And if the circumstances are such. arising either from the condition of his adversary, caused by the aggressor's acts during the affray or from the suddenness of the counter attack, that he cannot so notify him, it is the first assailant's fault, and he must take the consequences (People v. Button, 106 Cal. 628, 39 Pac. 1073; State v. Smith, 10 Nev. 106; Stoffer v. State, 15 Ohio St. 47); for, as the deceased, acting upon the appearances created by the wrongful acts of the aggressor, would have been justified in killing him, he whose fault created these appearances cannot make the natural and legal acts of the deceased looking to his own defense a justification for the homicide. Before doing so, he must have destroyed these appearances, and removed, to the other's knowledge, his necessity, actual or apparent, for self-preservation.

Fifth. Where one is the first wrongdoer, but his unlawful act is not felonious, as a simple assault upon the person of another, or a mere trespass upon his property, even though forcible, and this unlawful act is met by a counter assault of a deadly character, the right of self-defense to the first wrongdoer is not lost; for, as his acts did not justify upon the part of the other the use of deadly means for their prevention, his killing by the other would be criminal, and one may always defend himself against the criminal taking of his life. But in contemplation of the weakness and passions of men, and of the provocation, which, though inadequate, was wrongfully put upon the other, it is the duty of the first wrongdoer, before he can avail himself of the plea, to have retreated to the wall, to have declined the strife, and withdrawn from the difficulty, and to have killed his adversary, under necessity, actual or apparent, only after so doing. If, however, the counter assault be so sudden and perilous that no opportunity be given to decline or to make known to his adversary his willingness to decline the strife, if he cannot retreat with safety, then, as the greater wrong of the deadly assault is upon his opponent, he would be justified in slaying forthwith in self-defense. People v. Robertson, 67 Cal. 646, 8 Pac. 600; People v. Westlake, 62 Cal. 303; State v. Perigo, 70 Iowa, 657, 28 N. W. 452. The distinction between this principle and the one preceding it consists in this: In the former case the provocation for making a deadly counter attack in self-defense is adequate, and therefore the first aggressor must remove the necessity for it, and make that fact known before his own right of self-defense can exist; in the latter case the provocation is inadequate, and if the other, by his own unlawful act, deprives the first wrongdoer of the opportunity to decline a deadly strife, that fault lies not at the door of the slayer, but of the slain.

So much it has seemed necessary to say in view of the varying theories upon the facts attending this homicide, and in contemplation of a new trial.

If, at the time of the affray, Hecker was a trespasser, and no more, in his endeavor to take the horse, and Riley met his endeavor by a deadly assault upon him with a pistol, it was Hecker's first duty to decline the strife; and, if the suddenness of the assault precluded this, he was justified, so long as the imminence of his danger continued, or apparently continued, in meeting it by a deadly return. If, however, Hecker was not a wrongdoer in seeking to take the horse, and Riley met his attempt by a felonious assault with a pistol, Hecker, if the assault was sudden, and the danger great, or apparently great, would have been justified in standing his ground, or even, as above set forth, in pursuing and slaying his adversary, to win his safety. If, on the other hand, Hecker made the first deadly assault, his right to slay Riley in self-defense did not exist, even though willing thereafter to decline further combat until he had in good faith declined and fairly made known to Riley his willingness to do so. And, if he did not do this, even though he failed because of his own imminent danger, and under these circumstances killed Riley, his act was criminal. And, lastly, if, upon the other hand, he made the first felonious assault, and thereafter, and before firing the fatal shot, did in good faith withdraw and decline further combat, and this was fairly made known to Riley by his conduct, and thereafter Riley pursued him, and forced a new combat upon him, and under these circumstances Riley was killed, the killing was justifiable.

Defendant's proposed instruction No. 13, as to the right to pursue and slay to secure safety, is, in itself, a correct, if not a full, exposition of the law, and it cannot be said that it does not address itself to a theory permissible under the evidence. It, or an equivalent instruction, should therefore have been given.

It was not error to refuse defendant's proposed instruction 19. The jury was advised as to the weight of evidence, number, and credibility of witnesses. The vice of the rejected instruction was that it declared that the jury must be convinced to an "absolute moral certainty." The refusal to give such an instruction has more than once been upheld. People v. Davis, 64 Cal. 440, 1 Pac. 889; People v. Nelson, 85 Cal. 430, 24 Pac. 1006; People v. Ferry, 84 Cal. 31, 24 Pac. 33; People v. Smith, 105 Cal. 676, 39 Pac. 38.

The instruction lettered O is not erroneous. Standing by itself, it would be of little value to the jury, since it merely declares that the killing after withdrawal from a struggle might be justified. However, it is obviously but a preliminary declaration, as, in the instructions immediately succeeding (P. and Q.), there are set forth in detail the circumstances under the assumed state of facts which would and would not justify. These instructions will be construed together. People v. Turcot., 65 Cal. 126, 3 Pac. 461.

The court gave an instruction substantially as asked by defendant, but struck therefrom the closing sentence, as follows: "And if, under these circumstances, he killed deceased, you must find as your verdict, not guilty." The complaint is founded upon this excision. It is the natural tendency of advocates to bear with emphasis upon the favorable points both in argument and in instructions, and all the cases are replete, as is this case, with instructions asked by attorneys for the prosecution and defense, and closing with this or an equivalent formula. It cannot be said that to eliminate it from one instruction is error. Yet the practice is not wise. If the instruction offered is not the law, the court may reject it; if it be law, it is better to give it as presented, for not only has either party the right to emphasize by instructions a true principle, but the danger of modifying an instruction which is correct in itself is that it may occasion some just ground for complaint that the modification devitalizes and emasculates the proposition of law whose exposition was sought. We are far from implying that such was the effect in this case, still further from implying that such was the intent, but it certainly is not amiss to suggest the wiser and better practice.

Instruction E, which is complained of, has often been given and as often approved by this court. The cases, in which it is discussed, are reviewed in People v. Bruggy, 93 Cal. 476, 29 Pac. 26. As was said by this court in People v. Herbert, 61 Cal. 544: "To justify a homicide, there must be a necessity, actual or apparent; and this we understand to be true under our statute as well as at common law." Those cases where the assailed is not required to look to escape as an avenue of safety arise, as has been before discussed, where the peril is swift and imminent, and the necessity of action immediate. Therein the law does not weigh in too nice scales the conduct of the assailed, and say he shall not be justified because he might have resorted to other means to secure his safety. The suddenness of the attack puts him to the wall. Upon the duty of retreat there was a contrariety of opinion by the writers of common law, and this difference has found its way into the decisions of our states,—some, as Alabama and Iowa, holding to the rule that retreat is necessary; others, as Indiana, Michigan, and our own state, declaring for the contrary doctrine. But it is not stating it too strongly to say that the trend of later judicial decisions is in favor of the latter rule. So that while the killing must still be under an absolute necessity, actual or apparent, as a matter of law, that absolute necessity is deemed to exist when an innocent person is placed in such sudden jeopardy. The right to stand one's ground should form an element of the instructions upon the necessity of killing and the law of self-defense.

PAULY v. MURRAY. (L. A. No. 14.)[1]

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS—ACCOMMODATION PAPER—CONSIDERATION.

It matters not that an accommodation maker affixed his signature to the note in question after the bank discounting it as payee had paid the money thereon to his comaker, for whose benefit the note was executed, if, before such comaker received the money, he promised the bank that he would cause the accommodation maker to sign the note, and the bank advanced the money relying in good faith upon that promise, not entering the note as discounted until after the other signature was obtained.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; James A. Gibson, Judge.

Action by Fred. N. Pauly, as receiver of the California National Bank, against Eli H. Murray, on a promissory note. There was judgment for plaintiff, from which defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Cassius Carter and Withington & Carter, for appellant. Allen & Flint, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. Action on a promissory note made by defendant to said bank July 20, 1891, for the sum of $578.80, payable 90 days after date, with interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per month from date. It is alleged in the answer of the defendant that this note was made by him as a renewal of a former note for the sum of $500 and interest, jointly made by him and one Hugh Burns to said bank, on which joint note he was a mere surety, of which the bank had notice at the time it was signed by him; that said joint note was given to secure a loan of $500, made and advanced to Burns by the bank on a note signed by Burns alone, several hours before defendant signed the same as a joint maker with Burns; that at the time defendant signed the last-mentioned note he was ignorant of the alleged facts that the bank had, some hours before, on the same day, actually advanced to Burns the $500 loaned, and had accepted as security therefor the note signed by Burns alone; that he was induced thus to sign said joint note by a collusive and fraudulent suppression by Burns and the bank of the facts that the loan had been made, and that Burns' individual note had been accepted therefor, before he was induced to sign said note as a joint maker; that he remained ignorant of said suppressed facts until long after he individually made the note in suit as a renewal of said joint note; and for these reasons he alleges that there was no consideration for his signature to said joint note, and consequently no consideration for the renewal thereof by the note in suit. The court below found as facts that the loan to Burns by the bank was solicited by Burns on January 21, 1890, he having been introduced to Collins, the president of the bank, by defendant; that at the time he solicited the loan Burns represented to the bank that defendant would sign a note for the money, if loaned, jointly with him, though defendant was not then present, and had not then promised the bank to sign the note; that thereupon the bank agreed to make the loan on the condition that Burns would procure the signature of defendant to the note as a joint maker; that Burns then signed the note, and passed it to the note clerk of the bank, promising that he would cause defendant to sign it, but the president of the bank then directed the clerk not to enter the note as discounted by the bank until it should be signed by the defendant, but at the same time advanced and delivered the $500 loaned to Burns; that thereafter, during banking hours on the same day, the defendant called at the bank, and signed the note, and after it was signed it was, in the regular course of business on the same day, entered as a discounted note; that in advancing said money to Burns the bank relied upon the promise of Burns that he would cause defendant to sign the note; that defendant signed the note merely as an accommodation to Burns, and received no other consideration therefor, and did not know, at the time he signed, that Burns had before that time received the money loaned; that, after the maturity of the note, the defendant, at the request of the bank, renewed it by making the note in suit, without any consideration additional to that for the joint note; and "that no fraud or misrepresentation of any kind or character was used, practiced, or made by said bank, or by any one in its behalf, in or about the procurement of the signature of defendant, Murray, either to said original note or to the note sued on in this action." Upon these findings of fact judgment passed in favor of plaintiff for the amount sued for. The defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant contends (1) that the findings of fact are not justified by the evidence, and (2) that the facts found do not warrant the judgment. The only material controversy about the facts relates to the consideration for the first note. If there was a sufficient consideration for the joint note, the surrender thereof to defendant was undoubtedly a sufficient consideration for the individual note of the defendant upon which this action is founded. In order to establish a sufficient consideration for the first note, it was only necessary, in addition to the admitted facts, to find, as the court did find, an affirmative answer to the following questions: Did Burns, before he received the money, promise the bank that he would cause defendant to sign the note? Did the bank advance the money relying in good faith upon that promise, so that the agreement for the loan and the security therefor was not completely executed until after defendant signed the joint note? I think the evidence, direct and circumstantial, sensibly tended to prove, and therefore justified, these findings. As to the fraud and collusion charged, there is no evidence tending to prove it. The facts of this case plainly and materially distinguish it from that of Leverone v. Hildreth, 80 Cal. 139, 22 Pac. 72. In that case the note signed by the defendant had been completely executed by his father, and was two months overdue when defendant signed it; and there was no plausible pretense of any consideration moving to the defendant. By implication that case justifies the judgment in this. Speaking of the authorities cited by the respondent in that case, the court, by the chief justice, said: "They are to the effect that if the payee parts with his money on the faith of a promise by the borrower that he will procure the signature of a surety to his note, the surety is bound if he sign the note after the money is advanced; but such is not the case here." Such, however, is the case at bar. The authorities referred to by the chief justice, so far as reported, are McNaught v. McClaughry, 42 N. Y. 22, and Harrington v. Brown, 77 N. Y. 72. In the first of these cases the court said: "The authorities are clear upon the two propositions involved in the question: First. If Abram had given his note to the plaintiff, and the same had been accepted in performance of the contract without further condition, and the note was yet unmatured, the obtaining an additional indorser would have been a gratuitous act on the part of Abram, and the indorser would not be bound. * * * On the other hand, if Abram had originally agreed with the lender that he would obtain the new indorser, and had obtained the money upon the faith of that promise, then his finding the additional indorser was based upon a valid consideration, and the indorser was held by his signature. To this precise point is the case of Moies v. Bird, 11 Mass. 436, recognized and affirmed in Hawkes v. Phillips, 7 Gray, 284; Lovering v. Fogg, 18 Pick. 540; Leonard v. Wildes, 36 Me. 265. See, also, Parks v. Brinkerhoff, 2 Hill, 663; Clark v. Rawson, 2 Denio, 135." I think the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; BELCHER, C.

PEOPLE v. SHATTUCK. (Cr. 30.)

HOMICIDE — EVIDENCE — DECLARATIONS — EXCEPTION—DEFENSE—INSANITY—WITNESS —CREDIBILITY.

1. On trial of a mother for the murder of her daughter's seducer, declarations of the deceased to his mother, several days before the murder, on his return from a visit to the defendant and her daughter, made in answer to a letter from the daughter, as to what occurred at the meeting, are purely hearsay.

2. An objection by the defense to the admission of what the deceased did on a certain visit to the defendant will be held to include what he said on that occasion, when it appears that the parties to the prosecution and the court so understood it.

3. Where, on a trial for murder, insanity is relied on as a defense, an expert may testify to statements made to him by the defendant of previous sufferings, which formed the basis of, and are declared by him to be necessary to, his diagnosis of the case.

4. Where, on trial of a mother for the murder of her daughter's seducer, the defense is insanity, caused by discovery of the fact of the seduction, and the prosecution claim that defendant knew from the beginning that the relation was immoral, correspondence between deceased and the daughter, of which defendant had no knowledge, is inadmissible.

5. An instruction in a criminal prosecution, requiring the jury to consider the relationship and interest of witnesses to the defendant, as affecting their credibility, is erroneous.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Edward A. Belchers, Judge.

Jane Shattuck was convicted of murder, and from the judgment, and an order denying a new trial, appeals. Reversed.

Burnett G. Haskell, J. J. Guylfoyle, and T. J. Lannon, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the State.

TEMPLE, J. The defendant was tried upon the charge of murder, and convicted of murder in the first degree, and appeals from the judgment and from an order refusing a new trial. Her defense was insanity. The prosecution and defense each made an opening statement at the beginning of the trial. Among other things the district attorney stated that he would prove that the deceased, Harry G. Poole, was a young man who had expectations, and that defendant desired to induce him to marry her daughter. There had been some love passages between them, but deceased never expected to marry Miss Shattuck. On the 4th of January defendant sent Poole a note, demanding that he declare his intentions. Miss Shattuck was a chorus girl in an opera troupe, and was expecting to go East on Monday, January 8th. On the Sunday preceding, defendant caused her daughter to write deceased a letter, couched in endearing and yet alarming terms, requesting his immediate presence. Deceased received this letter, and in response went to the house, when defendant shot him through the head, and he immediately died. He claimed that the killing was deliberate and malicious, and out of revenge, because Poole would not marry her daughter. Defendant's counsel announced that they would rely to a great extent on the same facts. He claimed that deceased pretended an honest attachment for Miss Shattuck, and pretended that he desired to marry her, and so won her affections and the confidence of her mother. His visits to the residence of the Shattucks were frequent, and his engagement understood, and he addressed the defendant as "ma" and her mother as "grandma." He claimed that the pretended affection was put on to enable him to seduce the daughter, which he finally succeeded in doing. He claimed that his client was suffering from a brain disease, and was already in the border lands of insanity. Insanity was already present in a latent form, and only required a sufficient exciting cause to render it active. This cause was furnished by the sudden discovery on that fatal Sunday that her daughter had been ruined, and she deceived, by the arts of the seducer. His defense was, therefore, insanity, pure and simple. It will be noticed that, while proof of the charge was not waived, the defense assumes that, the corpus delicti being made out, defendant was guilty as charged, unless she was insane. The killing was shown, and in the proof on the part of the prosecution there were no circumstances in mitigation.

1. The first objection which it is necessary to notice relates to the objections of defendant to the evidence of a conversation between

Mrs. Newlands, mother of the deceased, and the deceased, January 4th, three days and more before the homicide. The witness testified that at half past 6 o'clock on that evening her son received a letter from Mrs. Shattuck,—the letter alluded to in the opening statement,—and immediately went out. He returned about 8 o'clock. The district attorney asked: "What did he do then?" Here counsel for the defense objected, when the following occurred. "Mr. Peixotto: It is part of the res gestæ. Mr. Lennon: I object to it as irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent. The Court: The objection is overruled. Mr. Lennon: We take an exception. Mr. Peixotto: We introduce, may it please the court, what was done upon the evening of January 4th, as being part of the res gestæ, as the first matter which led to the unfortunate matter on the Sunday. The Court: I suppose, for the purpose of leading up to the motive or intent? Mr. Peixotto (interrupting): Also showing motive, deliberation, and malice. Mr. Peixotto: You said he came home about eight o'clock? Answer. Yes, sir. Question. What did he do then? A. I was sitting in the kitchen, reading, and he came in, and his eyes looked as though he had been crying. I did not say very much. I watched him, and he took his things off, and he said he never was going into that house again. He spoke of the woman. I said, 'What woman?' He said, 'That girl's mother.' I asked him, 'Why?' 'Well,' he said, 'she was no good.'" As this was 3½ days prior to the homicide, we need not discuss the question as to whether this conversation was res gestæ. It is suggested that the conversation was res gestæ as to the receipt of the letter, and, if such proof of the fact was proper, this must be so. But proof characterizing his receipt of the letter was not material, and the conversation did not occur at the time he received the letter, and had no reference to it. It was only to show something which had transpired during his absence, between himself and defendant, and was purely hearsay. It is not disputed that it was proper for the prosecution to show malice, deliberation, and motive, but this must be done by competent evidence, and the declarations of the deceased are not competent. It is said that the defense did not make a proper objection, because the question was what did he do then, not what did he say, and there was no motion to strike the testimony out. What he did was to have the conversation with his mother, and the record shows that all parties, including the court, understood that the evidence came in under the exception. What he did then would have been no more relevant than what he said. When it is plain that the defense intended to take the exception, and his intention could not be misunderstood, we are not disposed to criticise, in order to find a reason for not considering it, especially in a criminal case. See People v. Yee Fook Din, 106 Cal. 163, 39 Pac. 530. A great deal was made of this evidence by the prosecution. It was contended that there had been an estrangement; that in fact the deceased had answered the letter by refusing to marry the daughter; and hence arose a desire for revenge. It was error which would of itself necessitate a reversal.

2. A medical witness was called by the defense to show the mental condition of the defendant, and establish the defense of insanity. It was contended that defendant was suffering from a tumor upon the brain, which caused pressure there, and a mental condition which made her liable to become insane upon any great excitement. The witness proceeded to tell of what pains the patient complained, and said that it was necessary to give a clinical history of the case to understand the significance of her symptoms. He was asked if he got the history of her past sufferings from the defendant herself, and he said he did. Thereupon the district attorney objected to her statements as to past suffering and condition. The objection was sustained. The witness then said: "It is necessary to refer to previous condition in order to explain why I treated her, and why I came to the conclusion. The Court: The previous condition of the defendant, as she may have told him, is hearsay testimony, and cannot be permitted." Due exception was taken. Such declarations and statements, when they constitute in part the basis upon which the opinion of an expert is based, and are by him declared to be necessary to enable him to form an opinion as to the nature of the disease, are admissible. Rogers, Exp. Test. § 74; Railroad Co. v. Newlands, 104 Ind. 264, 3 N. E. 836; Yeatman v. Hart, 6 Humph. 375. The party is entitled to have the reasons for the opinion, so that the jury can estimate its value. If the evidence justifies it, they may conclude that the sufferings were feigned, or may themselves form an independent judgment upon the facts. It is contended that injury did not result from this error. But that we cannot tell. His opinion might have carried much more weight had he been permitted to state all the facts upon which he based it. He himself said, in effect, that his opinion and treatment could not be explained without it.

3. The next exception was to the introduction by the prosecution of certain letters written by Miss Truly Shattuck to Harry G. Poole. As stated, both the prosecution and the defense had claimed in their opening statements that the relation of lovers had existed between the deceased and Miss Shattuck, and that Harry G. Poole had not intended marriage. The prosecution really claimed that the relation was immoral, and that defendant knew it, and yet insisted that deceased should marry her daughter, and, when he refused, killed him out of revenge. The theory of the defense has already been stated. That was that deceased was engaged to Miss Truly, and that the relation was, on their side, honest and honorable, and that defendant did not suspect that there was anything wrong, or that her daughter had been seduced, until the morning of the homicide. The letters were introduced as a part of the cross-examination of Miss Truly Shattuck. At the very commencement of her testimony she said: "He [Poole] was keeping company with me. I was in love with him, and engaged to marry him." The defense had never denied the relation, or that both defendant and her daughter encouraged and favored the attentions paid by Poole to Miss Shattuck. It was part of their defense that they did so under the belief that his intentions were honorable. During the testimony of Miss Shattuck counsel for the defense read three letters from deceased to Miss Truly, which had no apparent significance, except as showing that he sought Miss Shattuck's society. The letters introduced by the prosecution had no other relation to the letters read by the defense than that they were a part of the same amatory correspondence. There was nothing in them tending to disprove anything contained in the letters read in defense, nor did they explain anything contained therein, or testified to by the witness. The real purpose of the letters was to argue, from some dubious expressions contained in them that Miss Shattuck was not then a chaste woman; in other words, that she had been seduced. I do not say that I think they tended to prove that; but, if they did, they would not disprove the charge that Poole was the seducer. Furthermore, upon that subject the witness had given no testimony. It was not shown, nor was it claimed, that the defendant knew of these letters. Evidence that her daughter was unchaste had no bearing upon any question in the case except to show malice, and to rebut the claim that the defendant discovered the fact for the first time on the morning of the homicide. Without proof that the defendant knew of the correspondence, I am at a loss to discover upon what principle they were admissible. If the fact of the seduction or want of chastity—admitting that it was shown by the letters—was material, it does not matter when the daughter was seduced or became unchaste, but when did the defendant discover it. But it is said, if this was error, it was invited error. But, as we have seen, the evidence did not tend to disprove or explain anything which the letters put in by the defense tended to prove. Had the character of the relation between the deceased and Miss Shattuck been, of itself, independently of the knowledge of the defendant, a matter in controversy, I think the letters would have been relevant; but the character of that relation was immaterial, except as it affected the defendant's state of mind. This could not have been affected by such facts if she were ignorant of them. There was nothing in these letters which tended to show that the young people were not engaged to be married, or that deceased had not won the confidence of the defendant by pretending an honorable affection for her daughter.

4. It is next objected that the court erred in giving an instruction as follows: "Certain relatives of the defendant, to wit, the husband, mother, and daughter, have been examined as witnesses in behalf of the defense. This is their right. It is proper, however, for the jury to bear in mind the relationship between them and the defendant, and the manner in which they may be interested by your verdict, and the very grave interest they must feel in it. And it is proper for the jury to consider whether their position and interest may not affect their credibility, or color of their testimony." A charge of this character was held to be error in People v. Hertz, 105 Cal. 660, 39 Pac. 32. The court has frequently hinted that a similar instruction in regard to the defendant is erroneous, because it violates the constitutional provision that judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact. The court has heretofore declined to reverse for such instruction, as it had been approved in some former cases. The reason for this was that cases might have been already tried where such instruction had been given in reliance upon the former decisions, and in regard to the defendant the instruction would not be likely to be so harmful, as the situation was obvious without being specially pointed out. This case was tried before the profession had become aware of the rule laid down in People v. Hertz. We do not care to modify that rule.

There are other alleged errors which I do not deem it necessary to discuss. In view of the fact of a new trial, however, I suggest that the hypothetical question put to the medical expert be revised. Judgment and order reversed, and new trial ordered.

LEVERONE v. HILDRETH. (No. 18,382.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 13, 1895.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—EVIDENCE.

Where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, the findings of the trial court will not be disturbed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by William M. Leverone against George W. Hildreth. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Tupper & Tupper, for appellant. Craig & Meredith, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff brought this action on a promissory note, dated August 1, 1885, and payable one day after date, and the defendant pleaded as a defense thereto that there was no consideration for the execution of the note by him. The note was originally made by Thomas Hildreth, the father of defendant, and some months later was signed by defendant. The case was tried and the findings and judgment were in favor of the plaintiff. From that judgment, and an order denying a new trial, the defendant appealed. After a hearing by this court in bank, the judgment and order were reversed, and the cause remanded, upon the ground that the findings as to the consideration for the execution of the note by defendant were against all the evidence. The court said: "There is no material conflict of testimony as to the circumstances under which he added his signature to the note. Respondent was pressing his father for payment, and, at the father's request, the son signed. There was no extension of credit, no promise of forbearance, written or oral." 80 Cal. 139, 22 Pac. 72. The case was again tried, and the court found that "there was no consideration for the execution by the defendant of the promissory note set forth in the complaint of the plaintiff," and gave judgment accordingly for defendant. From that judgment, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, the plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

In support of the appeal it is earnestly contended that the finding that there was no consideration for the execution of the note by defendant was not justified by the evidence, because "it appears from the evidence, without any conflict, that defendant, George W. Hildreth, at the request of plaintiff, signed the note upon plaintiff's agreeing not to sue or attach defendant's father, Thomas Hildreth, at once, but to wait, and to give him a few months within which to pay the note," and that "plaintiff waited from November, 1885, the time of the agreement, until February 9, 1887, before bringing suit." It is true that the evidence introduced by the plaintiff tended strongly to support his theory, but it was not without conflict. On the contrary, the evidence introduced by defendant was, in our opinion, quite sufficient to raise a substantial conflict upon the question in controversy. It would subserve no useful purpose to state the evidence in detail. The case falls within the well-settled rule that, when there is a substantial conflict of evidence, the findings of the trial court will not be disturbed on appeal.

The judgment and order must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

MARSHALL et al. v. FARMERS' BANK OF FRESNO. (No. 18,448.)[1]

PURCHASE OF LANDS—NOTICE OF TRUST.

Under Pol. Code, § 3519, requiring the register to prepare a patent on surrender of the certificate of purchase by the person entitled to it, and to certify to the governor that the party named in the prepared patent is entitled to it, a purchaser from one to whom a patent is issued absolutely on such a certificate of the register is not chargeable with notice that the certificate of purchase had been transferred to the patentee merely as an attorney.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; J. R. Webb, Judge.

Action by Rebekah Marshall and others against the Farmers' Bank of Fresno. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant appeals. Reversed.

W. D. Tupper, for appellant. James H. Budd, Nutter & De Vries, and F. H. Short, for respondents.

BRITT, C. Plaintiffs seek in this action to have the defendant declared the trustee for them of the title to certain land situate in the county of Fresno, and to compel conveyance thereof. Plaintiffs are the heirs at law of one Thomas Marshall, who died October 25, 1882. On June 13, 1868, said Thomas Marshall made application in the state land office to purchase the land in question, the same being the east half of a certain sixteenth section. His application was approved May 10, 1869, and a certificate of purchase was issued to him on July 6, 1869. These proceedings were under the act then in force (St. 1867–68, p. 507), providing for the sale of lands belonging to the state. Marshall made a quitclaim deed of the land, bearing date January 8, 1868, to one B. F. Langford, which the court finds was delivered February 5, 1869. This deed purported to authorize Langford to receive a certificate of purchase or patent for the land in his own name. April 29, 1886, Langford executed a deed of the land to David S. Terry. On July 10, 1886, the state commenced an action in the superior court of Fresno county to annul said certificate, as provided in section 3548, Pol. Code, for nonpayment of interest on the deferred installment of purchase money. Thomas Marshall was the sole defendant named in that action. Publication was made of the summons, and on December 28, 1886, judgment was entered declaring said certificate of purchase null and void, and that all persons claiming under Marshall were barred of all right in the certificate and in the land after the filing of a certified copy of the judgment with the register of the state land office, and a like notice with the recorder of Fresno county. Such copies were filed accordingly within 20 days after the entry of the judgment. Pol. Code, § 3550. Before the expiration of a year from the entry of the judgment, said Terry made to the county treasurer the payments necessary for redemption therefrom, as permitted by the act of March 7, 1881 (St. 1881, p. 65), and also paid the balance of principal and interest then due the state for the land. He then had possession of the certificate of purchase, and in January, 1888, he surrendered the same to the register, and thereupon received a patent for the land, dated January 24, 1888, signed by the governor, and otherwise attested as required by law. The patent recited a certificate of the register, to be presently noticed, and by its terms the land was granted to Terry and his heirs and assigns forever. In March, 1888, Terry exhibited the patent to the defendant bank, and, upon his title so evidenced, obtained a loan of $10,000, he executing a mortgage on the land and some other parcels to secure payment of the loan. Terry died, and the money was not repaid to the bank. It brought its action to foreclose said mortgage, and obtained judgment for that purpose, and caused the land to be sold by the sheriff pursuant to such judgment. It became the purchaser at the sale, and on January 16, 1891, it received the sheriff's deed of the land.

[1] Rehearing granted.

There was testimony at the trial—uncontradicted, so far as we discover—that Langford had possession of the land from the time of the approval of the location until the death of Terry, leasing it to "sheep men." The court held, however, that the deed to Langford, being executed before Marshall's application was approved, was ineffectual to pass any interest to the former; that the register mistook the law in subsequently holding that it did; and further found that Marshall delivered the certificate of purchase to Terry, but never made any assignment thereof; that Terry held the same as attorney and agent for Marshall and as trustee for his heirs; that he fraudulently induced the register to believe him to be the owner of the certificate, and so obtained the patent in his own name, and held the title in trust for plaintiffs; and that defendant had knowledge of the relation of trust occupied by Terry at the time of its loan to him. The judgment required defendant to convey the land to plaintiffs.

The sufficiency of the evidence to justify the conclusion of Terry's trusteeship seems doubtful, but we need not examine that question. There is neither finding, allegation, nor proof of the time, circumstances, or purpose of the delivery of the certificate by Marshall to Terry, and it is obvious that, if Terry held the title in trust at all, it was so by implication of law only; and no trust so arising can prejudice the rights of an incumbrancer or purchaser of real property for value, and without notice of the trust. Civ. Code, § 856. We are unable to find in the record any evidence to support the finding that defendant had such notice. It is not claimed, indeed, that the defendant had actual knowledge of any interest of plaintiffs in the land, but it is said that such knowledge is imputed to it because of the existence of circumstances which it was bound to know. The patent ran to Terry absolutely. It was the highest evidence of transfer from the state of its title, and was also evidence that all the steps prescribed for its issuance had been properly taken. Heinlen v. Heilbron, 97 Cal. 101, 31 Pac. 838; Minter v. Crommelin, 18 How. 87. The certificate of purchase was assignable. Pol. Code, § 3515; St. 1867–68, p. 508. The law made it the duty of the register to prepare the patent "upon the surrender of the certificate of purchase by the person entitled to the same," and to certify to the government that the party named in the prepared patent is entitled to it. Pol. Code, § 3519. The patent recited a certificate conforming to said section 3519, stating that the land had been located in accordance with law, and that Terry was entitled to receive the patent for the same. There is no claim that the patent misrecited such certificate. Certainly on its face there appeared no ground to suspect that the register had mistakenly determined that Terry was the legal holder of the certificate of purchase, and of right entitled to the patent. The defendant was not required, as regards the alleged interest of plaintiffs, to peer behind the patent to see whether the register had not erred or been duped when he made that determination. Schnee v. Schnee, 23 Wis. 377, is a case much resembling the present in several important features. The record of the judgment annulling the certificate of purchase gave no notice of the rights of plaintiffs. If, as is contended by respondents in their argument, it was void for want of jurisdiction in the court, owing to the fact of Marshall's death long prior to the commencement of the state's suit, then, since a void judgment is in legal effect no judgment (1 Freem. Judgm. 117), it could impart no constructive notice; but, if it was valid, it operated to extinguish the rights of all persons claiming under Marshall, including plaintiffs. And, if defendant was bound to know further that Terry redeemed from the judgment, here again the patent was presumptive evidence that he had done so in his own right. As to the further matters suggested, that defendant had notice that the land was school land, and that patents for such land could only be issued upon certificates of purchase, from which respondents seem to draw the inference that defendant should have known who was owner of the certificate, it may be observed that these mean no more than that the land was public, and salable in the manner provided by law,—facts which cannot charge defendant with notice that the patent issued fraudulently. People v. Swift, 96 Cal. 170, 31 Pac. 16. The judgment and order denying defendant's motion for new trial should be reversed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order denying defendant's motion for new trial are reversed.

PEOPLE v. WONG CHONG SUEY. (Cr. 32.)[1]

LARCENY — CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY.

In a prosecution for larceny, evidence that defendant was in a situation where he could have taken the money stolen; that, shortly after the robbery, he claimed that he had been robbed of all his money, and also some clothing which he claimed he had just purchased; that he had not purchased the clothing; and that the exact amount stolen was found on his person,—is sufficient to sustain a conviction.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; George H. Bahrs, Judge.

Wong Chong Suey was convicted of larceny, and appeals. Affirmed.

Lyman I. Mowry, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

VAN FLEET, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment convicting him of grand larceny, and an order denying him a new trial, and makes the single point that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict. We were strongly of the impression at the oral argument that the contention of appellant could not be sustained, but the point was urged with so much earnestness and evident sincerity on the part of counsel in the correctness of his position as to induce at our hands a further careful examination and consideration of the evidence in the light of the criticisms passed upon it. The result is only to confirm our impressions into conviction, and to satisfy us that we would not be warranted in disturbing the verdict.

The specific charge was the taking of $60 in money belonging to one Hervey, on October 26, 1894, and the evidence of the prosecution tended to show these facts in substance: Defendant was a domestic in the family of Hervey, having been recently employed therein as cook. His sleeping room was in the basement. In another room in the basement his employer had a safe, in which he kept valuable papers, and at times a limited sum of money, for current household expenses. On this occasion it contained $60 in gold, in $20 pieces. The defendant had opportunity to know the general purposes for which the safe was kept, and had access to the room wherein it stood. On the date in question, between 7 and 8 o'clock in the evening, just after finishing his work for the day, the defendant came upstairs, and announced in an apparently excited manner that he had lost all his money, every cent he had, and some clothing; that his room had been entered, and $34 in money, a pair of new trousers, that he had just got the day before, and an overcoat, taken. Upon immediate investigation by Mr. Hervey, it was discovered that the safe door stood open, and that the $60 had been abstracted from the money drawer, but that nothing else in the safe had been in any way disturbed, nor was any further evidence discovered in the basement of the presence of an intruder. The defendant's room was in order and undisturbed, except that defendant claimed that his clothing had been taken from the wall, with the money, which he claimed had been left in the pocket of one of the garments. A small window stood open near the safe, but the blinds were closed, and a heavy layer of dust on the sill was wholly undisturbed, and there was nothing to indicate that any one had passed in or out by that means. The door leading out of the basement was locked, and defendant had the key. The police were at once called, and on their arrival they accused defendant of the theft, and searched his person. In one of his pockets was found his purse, containing a small sum of money, but in a small fob pocket of his trousers were discovered three $20 gold pieces. It appeared that Mr. Hervey had had occasion to go to the safe for some money that afternoon about 2 o'clock, and was of the impression that he had neglected to turn on the combination when leaving it. The defendant was at the time in the basement, and saw his employer go to the safe. It was also shown that, when Mr. Hervey went to call the police, he told the defendant to wait until they came, but that he started down town, and reluctantly came back on being requested. At this time he had on an overcoat, but whether the one he claimed to have lost does not appear. It was further shown that the statement of defendant about buying a new pair of trousers the day before was untrue.

The theory of the prosecution was that defendant found the door of the safe unlocked, took the money, and then, to divert suspicion from himself, made up the story of having been himself robbed; and it is perfectly obvious that, if the jury believed the evidence of the prosecution, it was sufficient to sustain this theory. It is true the evidence is wholly circumstantial, and that the evidence on behalf of defendant tended to account for the money, and rebut the suspicious circumstances; but the only effect of this was to raise a conflict, which it was the province of the jury to determine. It was not required that the prosecution should definitely identify the money found on the person of the defendant as that taken from the safe. It was shown to be the same in amount, and in the same coin and denomination, and that defendant was in a situation where he could have taken it, and in connection with the statements of defendant that he had just been robbed of all his money, and the other circumstances of a more or less suspicious nature appearing, was sufficient evidence to go to the jury upon the point. Its sufficiency to establish the fact was for the jury. When there is any evidence legally tending to sustain a fact, the question whether it amounts to proof of that fact is to be left to the jury, and their finding will not be disturbed by this court, unless the evidence preponderates so greatly against the verdict as to make it manifest that the verdict is the result of passion or prejudice. People v. Freeman, 92 Cal. 359, 28 Pac. 261; People v. Ah Jake, 91 Cal. 98, 27 Pac. 595; People v. Estrada, 53 Cal. 601. This case does not disclose such a state of facts; and, however much merit there may be in fact in appellant's claim of innocence, the verdict of the jury is, under the circumstances, conclusive upon us. The judgment and order are affirmed.

TRUMAN et al. v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF CITY & COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (S. F. 272.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 19, 1895.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—POWER OF MAYOR TO VETO RESOLUTIONS OF THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

The mayor has no power to veto the action of the board of supervisors of the city of San Francisco in fixing the rate of taxation.

In bank.

Petition by J. J. Truman and others against the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco for a writ of mandamus. Denied, and proceedings dismissed.

Charles Wesley Reed and McKinstry & McKinstry, for petitioners. H. T. Creswell, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Petition for writ of mandate. Assuming, but not deciding, that this court could control legislative action of the board of supervisors, as prayed for in this proceeding, the writ must be denied, because under present statutory law the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco have the power to fix the rate of taxation, and the mayor has no veto of their action in that matter. If other duties of the court permit, reasons for this conclusion will be more fully given in an opinion to be hereafter prepared. The writ is denied, and the proceeding dismissed.

THRESHER v. GREGORY et al. (No. 18,421.)

SALE—ACTION FOR PRICE—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT—PAROL EVIDENCE—EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES.

1. In an action for the price of peaches sold on a contract fixing the price per pound for each of several sizes of fruit "per box packed," where no method of measurement is provided, evidence of prior negotiations between the parties, out of which the contract grew, is admissible.

2. In such action, where defendant contended that the size and weight of the boxes determined the size and weight of the fruit, an experienced fruit raiser and packer, who saw plaintiff's fruit packed, could testify that peaches could not be graded in that way, as they were packed in "break joints," by placing the upper layer in the space between the fruit in the lower layer; and he could also testify as to the average size of plaintiff's fruit, and the average weight of the several sizes as packed.

3. In an action for the price of fruit sold on a contract which merely fixed the price per pound for each of several sizes of fruit packed, correspondence subsequent to the contract, showing that the method of measuring the fruit had not been agreed on, is admissible on the issue as to measurement.

4. Where, in such a case, defendant testifies that the contract with plaintiff is his usual form of contract, he may be asked on cross-examination to write out a contract in his usual form, and such contract may be put in evidence.

5. Where, in an action for the price of peaches under a contract fixing the price according to the size and weight of the fruit, there is a disagreement as to the method of measurement, and defendant testifies that measuring boards like those used by plaintiff injured the fruit, and rendered it unfit for shipping, plaintiff may, in rebuttal, testify that he had seen defendant and others use such boards, and then use the fruit.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; Matt F. Johnson, Judge.

Action by C. W. Thresher against Gregory Bros. & Co. for the purchase price of peaches. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Johnson & Johnson, for appellants. Holl & Dunn, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. The plaintiff brought this action to recover the sum of $376.65, balance alleged to be due for peaches sold and delivered by him to defendants in 1892, and also to recover the further sum of $332.95, balance alleged to be due for peaches sold and delivered by George and P. B. Thresher to defendants in 1892, and by the sellers assigned to plaintiff. The defendants, by their answer, admit the purchase of the peaches, but aver that the balance remaining due and unpaid to plaintiff for his peaches is only $22.40, and that the balance remaining due and unpaid to plaintiff's assignors for their peaches is only $77.90, and they offer to allow judgment to be taken against them for the aggregate of these amounts. The case was tried by the court without a jury, and the findings were that for the peaches purchased of plaintiff there was still due and unpaid the sum of $174.86, and for the peaches purchased of plaintiff's assignors there was still due and unpaid the sum of $172.20, and that plaintiff was entitled to judgment for the aggregate of these sums, $347.06, with legal interest thereon from September 30, 1892, until the rendition of the judgment. Judgment was accordingly so entered, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal.

The contracts between the parties were in writing. Defendants agreed with plaintiff to pay him for his fruit the following prices: "One and one-half cents per pound for two and one-quarter to two and one-half inch fruit, and one and three-quarters cents per pound for two and one-half to three inch fruit, and two cents per pound for all above three inches, per box, packed." A similar contract was made with plaintiff's assignors. The fruit was packed by experienced packers, and in boxes furnished by defendants. There was no dispute as to the number of boxes delivered, but the controversy between the parties was as to the method of determining the sizes of the fruit. The defendants claimed that a four-inch box should be deemed to contain two-inch peaches, and a five-inch box two and one-half inch peaches, and so on; and the plaintiff claimed that such boxes would contain peaches of larger sizes than those named. The court found: "That the contracts do not provide by what method the size of the fruit shall be determined, or how the fruit shall be measured to ascertain the quantity of each size specified in the contract. That there was no agreement at any time between the parties as to how the fruit should be measured, or as to how the size of fruit should be determined, or as to how the fruit should be graded, so as to ascertain the quantity of fruit of each size stated in the contract delivered to the defendants. That the size of the boxes used in packing the fruit will not determine and fix the size of the fruit packed in the boxes as fruit of the size of one-half the depth of the boxes in which it is packed. That all of this fruit was packed by what is known as 'broken joints'; that is, so that each peach in the upper layer would rest between peaches in the lower layer, and so as to touch on two or three, and sometimes four, peaches in the lower layer. That all the fruit was packed with two layers to the box, and that two layers of peaches two and one-half inches in size could be, and often were, packed in the four and one-half inch boxes. That all the fruit in the four and one-half-inch boxes was fruit from two and one-quarter of two and one-half, and including fruit two and one-half, inches in size. That all of this fruit was packed by experienced packers in the employ of the defendants. That a large number of the five-inch boxes, by reason of the size of the fruit packed in them, were what is known as 'cleated,'—that is, a strip of wood varying from three-eighths to one-fourth inches in thickness was placed under the ends of the covers to the boxes so as to raise the covers the thickness of such cleats, and thereby increase the space inside the boxes, from the bottom to the cover, from five inches to five and three-eighths or five and one-quarter inches,—and that in such boxes two layers of peaches over three inches in size could be and were packed, and that a number of five-inch boxes, after being packed, were double cleated—that is, two cleats were placed under each end of the cover so as to increase the depth of the boxes between the cover and the bottom; but I cannot tell from the evidence how many of the five-inch boxes were single cleated and how many were double cleated, and I cannot, therefore, fix the amount of fruit delivered to and received by the defendants that was over three inches in size. But I find that all the fruit in the five-inch boxes, whether cleated or not, was over two and one-half inches in size." Counsel for appellants make no point as to the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings, but insist that numerous errors in law were committed by the court during the trial which call for a reversal.

The first point made is that the court erred in overruling objections to questions propounded to the witness E. J. Gregory on cross-examination. The witness, on his direct examination, had testified very fully as to the negotiations between the parties prior to the making of the written contracts, and had said: "In these contracts the size of the boxes was to determine the size of the fruit"; that "it was then determined between us that a four and one-half inch box would represent two and one-fourth inch fruit; a five-inch box would determine the size of the peaches to be two and one-half inches, and a six-inch box would determine the size to be three inches"; and that was what "per box packed" meant in the contract. And again: "We agreed with the Threshers that the size of the boxes would grade the fruit, because it is the custom and the experience, and because we have never done anything different before." The questions objected to were as to the prior negotiations, and the objections were that they were irrelevant, immaterial, incompetent, and not cross-examination, and that the matters sought to be elicited were merged in the written contract. There was no controversy as to the prices to be paid for the fruit when its sizes were ascertained, but the question was as to how its sizes were to be determined. Upon this question the written contract was silent, and evidence to overcome the theory of appellants that the size of the boxes would determine the size of the fruit was admissible. The rule invoked by appellants that, when the terms of an agreement have been reduced to writing, "no evidence of the terms of the agreement other than the contents of the writing" can be given (section 1856, Code Civ. Proc.), is not in point. We conclude, therefore, that the court did not commit any prejudicial error in allowing the cross-examination complained of.

The next point made is that the court erred in overruling objections to certain questions put to T. B. Hutchinson, a witness called for plaintiff. The witness had a fruit ranch which was separated from the plaintiff's ranch only by the Feather river, and had a similar contract with defendants for the sale of his fruit. He testified that he had been in the business 12 years, and had had experience in packing fruit for shipping and other purposes, and that he did not think one could grade fruit by the size of the box, and be able to tell the size of the fruit in the box. He was asked to explain why, and said: "Well, in packing peaches they pack what we call 'break joints'; that is, they put peaches of the upper layer in the spaces between peaches in the lower layer. So you can put larger than two layers of two-inch peaches in a four-inch box, and you can put larger than two layers of two and one-half inch peaches in a five-inch box. That is the usual way of packing peaches." He also said that he was present at plaintiff's place, and saw the packing, and that it was done that way right along. He further said that he was at plaintiff's orchard during the packing season, and saw his peaches, and that he measured his own peaches frequently during the season, for the purpose of ascertaining what size they were running, and what he should receive for them. He was then asked if, from the grading of his own orchard, he could tell in reference to the size of plaintiff's peaches, and again, as to what would be the average weight of 4½-inch boxes of freestones, and if he knew the average weight in that neighborhood of clingstones that season. These questions were objected to as irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, and the objections were overruled. It is admitted that his was expert testimony, but it is claimed that it was incompetent, because the weight of the peaches in controversy was capable of actual demonstration. It was evidently offered to overcome the defendants' theory that the size and weight of the boxes conclusively determined the size and weight of the fruit, and for this purpose we think it admissible. The witness also, in answer to a question put to him, said: "E. J. Gregory said to me he made the contract, and said he never saw such a fool contract." Counsel for defendants moved to strike out the answer, and the motion was denied. When E. J. Gregory was on the stand as a witness for defendants, he admitted that he "said something about the contract being a 'fool' contract." Conceding, then, that the objections to the answer were well taken, still we fail to see that defendants could have been prejudiced in any way by the ruling.

The plaintiff offered in evidence two letters, and they were admitted over the objections of defendants. The first was from defendants to plaintiff, dated August 10th, and stating that they were paying others in his section 35 cents per box for peaches, and asking if that price would be satisfactory to him. The second was a reply by plaintiff, stating that the price named was not satisfactory, and that nothing less than 30 cents for a 4-inch box, 35 cents for a 4½-inch box and 40 cents for a 5-inch box would satisfy him. It is evident from these letters that the written contract was not regarded by the parties as fixing the method by which the grade and weight of the fruit were to be determined, and that that was left an open question for subsequent settlement. It was proper, therefore, to admit the letters in evidence to show the understanding of the parties, and the necessity for some agreement upon the question in controversy.

Complaint is made that the court refused to permit the defendants to show the size of the fruit in neighboring orchards, as plaintiff had been permitted to do. But the question objected to was not as to the size of the fruit in neighboring orchards, but "What was the average size of boxes used at all these points?" The points referred to were Chico and other places many miles away. Obviously the answer to the question would in no way have helped to solve the question in hand, and it was therefore properly excluded.

On his direct examination the witness E. J. Gregory testified that the contract with plaintiff was exactly the same form of contract that had been used by defendants for 20 years; that there was no other method of grading the fruit agreed upon; and that the method claimed by him was what the words "per box packed" in the contract meant. On his cross-examination the witness was asked about the usual contracts made by defendants, and to then and there write out a specimen of them. He then wrote out a contract and the plaintiff offered it in evidence. It stated that the seller sold to Gregory Bros. Co., and that Gregory Bros. Co. bought of the seller, "all his present crop of sound, merchantable, shipping peaches now in bearing in his orchard, at the agreed price of thirty cents per box packed." All this evidence was admitted over the objections of defendants that it was irrelevant, and not proper cross-examination; but, in our opinion, the rulings were obviously correct. Several other questions put to the witness Gregory on cross-examination were objected to, and the objections overruled. These rulings are assigned as errors, but they, too, were, in our opinion, so clearly correct that no special notice of them is required.

E. A. Light was called as a witness for plaintiff in rebuttal, and testified that he worked for Hutchinson between July and October, 1892, and was his foreman; that he knew about the packing on Hutchinson's place, and that 2¾-inch fruit was put in 4½-inch boxes, but that he did not know how they packed at Thresher's. He was asked if he weighed any fruit from Hutchinson's place, and, over the objection of defendants, was permitted to answer that he weighed most of it, and then to state what the average weight was. It is claimed that this testimony was incompetent, and was prejudicial to defendants. But it had already been proved that the ranches were separated only by a river; that the fruit on the Hutchinson ranch was sold to defendants under a similar contract, was packed by the same packers, in the same-sized boxes, and was the same variety of fruit. Under these circumstances the testimony objected to would seem to have been clearly admissible to show what was the probable weight of the boxes packed on plaintiff's ranch. The defendant E. J. Gregory and other witnesses for defendants had given evidence tending to show that measuring boards, like those used by the Threshers, were never used to measure fruit to ascertain its size, and that to use such boards would bruise and injure the fruit, and make it unfit for shipping purposes. In rebuttal George Thresher was allowed, over the objection of defendants, to testify that he had seen defendants' own packers use such boards to measure some of the fruit, and then use the fruit; and also had seen such boards used in other orchards and in canneries. The testimony was competent and admissible for the purposes for which it was offered, and we see no error in the action of the court admitting it.

The above are all the points which require special notice. We conclude that the evidence was sufficient to justify the findings of the court, and that no prejudicial error was committed in any of its rulings. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

CHISHOLM v. KEYFAUVER. (No. 18,347.)

TRIAL — INSTRUCTION NOT APPLICABLE TO EVIDENCE.

In an action of slander, in accusing plaintiff of theft, defendant pleaded that plaintiff confessed to him, and the court charged that, if plaintiff stated to defendant that he, plaintiff, had stolen the hog and the halter strap mentioned in plaintiff's complaint, and defendant, without malice, made the statements charged in pursuance of such belief, if he did make it, plaintiff cannot in such case be heard to complain, for it is a well-settled rule that no man has a right to take advantage of his own wrong. Held, that the instruction was erroneous, in the absence of any evidence that plaintiff so confessed to defendant.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sutter county; E. A. Davis, Judge.

Action by James Chisholm against Washington Keyfauver, in which there was a verdict for defendant. From an order sustaining a motion by plaintiff for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Reece Clark and K. S. Mahon, for appellant. W. H. Carlin and M. E. Sanborn, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Action for slander. The complaint is composed of three counts. The first charges, in substance, that the defendant maliciously and falsely spoke and published of and concerning the plaintiff, in the presence and hearing of one R. M. Rockholt, at a specified time and place, that he (defendant) believed that plaintiff stole a certain hog then in plaintiff's possession, thereby meaning and intending to accuse the plaintiff of being guilty of grand larceny, and that said Rockholt so understood the words spoken. The second count is in substance the same as the first, except that the speaking and publication were at a different time and place, and in the presence and hearing of a different person, viz. one J. R. Young. The third count charges that defendant, in the presence and hearing of said J. R. Young, accused plaintiff of having stolen a certain halter strap, intending thereby to charge plaintiff with being guilty of petit larceny, and being so understood by Young, etc. The answer of the defendant is, perhaps, justly criticised, on the ground that it does not specifically nor unqualifiedly deny the speaking or publication of the words alleged to have been spoken; but, as there was no demurrer to the answer, and as the cause appears to have been tried as if the denials were sufficient, it is unnecessary to consider this point. In addition to denials, the defendant alleged in his answer the following: "For a further and separate defense, defendant alleges that the plaintiff in said action did, in the month of February, 1893, at Sutter county, admit and state to defendant that he, the plaintiff, had been guilty of stealing hogs; that plaintiff stated to defendant that he, plaintiff, had stolen a pig or young hog, of a fine breed of hogs, from one Mumaw, and that plaintiff pointed out said pig or hog to defendant, and insinuated that he had stolen the same. That, at about the time and place last aforesaid, plaintiff stated to the defendant that he, plaintiff, had lain hidden in the brush near the barn of one Frazier nearly a whole day, for the purpose of stealing pigs belonging to said Frazier, and did at said time succeed in stealing about five of said pigs, and did carry said pigs away from said Frazier's in a sack, and bring them to the premises of this defendant, where plaintiff resided, and turn them out, where they now remain. That, as to the said hog, which plaintiff charges the defendant with having stated that plaintiff did steal said hog, defendant alleges that plaintiff told him conflicting stories as to the manner in which plaintiff had acquired said hog, and did, in the opinion of defendant, act suspiciously when questioned as to how he, plaintiff, had become possessed of said hog, and if defendant ever made any statement in regard to plaintiff, and the manner of his acquisition of said hog, that was in any way derogatory to the good name of plaintiff, such statement was brought about by the admission aforesaid in regard to the stealing of the hogs of Mumaw and of Frazier, and the suspicious actions and contradictory statements of plaintiff when questioned about the hog that defendant is charged by plaintiff with having stated that plaintiff had stolen. That in relation to said halter strap, defendant alleges that plaintiff made many contradictory statements about how he became possessed of the same, and that such contradictory statements, coupled with the admissions to defendant that plaintiff did steal hogs, caused defendant to believe that plaintiff might have been guilty of stealing said halter strap; and, if defendant ever made any statement touching the manner in which plaintiff had acquired said strap, such statement was made in a general way, that the plaintiff was dishonest, and was based upon the admissions of plaintiff that he had stolen hogs, and had 'swiped' the halter strap; 'swiped' being a word which plaintiff used when questioned by defendant as to his manner of acquiring said strap. That at divers times within the year last past plaintiff has taken wood from the premises of others, without their knowledge or consent, and without right, and surreptitiously and clandestinely; that is to say, plaintiff has admitted to the defendant that he has done so. That the Young mentioned in plaintiff's complaint, in 1892 or 1893, stated to defendant that plaintiff had solicited said Young to engage with him, plaintiff, in 'trapping' hogs in Colusa county, meaning thereby that plaintiff and Young should steal hogs in said county. That if defendant ever used any language towards plaintiff that could be construed into the meaning that plaintiff stole hogs or halter straps, defendant made such statement fully and honestly believing that the same was true, and that he made the same without malice, and for justifiable ends, and without intending to injure or damage plaintiff; and that such statements were caused by the admissions of plaintiff to the defendant aforesaid, and by the suspicious conduct and equivocal actions of plaintiff when questioned as to his manner of the acquisition of said hogs and halter strap. That if defendant ever made the statement imputed to him about plaintiff, or anything that could be construed to imply that plaintiff did steal said strap and hog, that defendant verily believes that such statement was true, as the plaintiff had, as hereinbefore alleged, stated that he, plaintiff, had been guilty of both grand and petit larceny in stealing pigs and in 'swiping' [stealing] the halter strap. Wherefore, defendant demands judgment against plaintiff for his costs."

The verdict of the jury and the judgment of the court were in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff moved for a new trial on the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence, that the verdict is against law, and errors in law. The court granted a new trial, but upon what ground the record does not show. The appeal is from the order granting a new trial.

Counsel for appellant says in his brief that the new trial was granted solely on the ground that the court erred in giving the following instruction at request of defendant: "Subdivision 3 of section 1962, Code Civ. Proc., of this state, which declares the law, reads: 'Whenever a party has by his own declarations, act or omission, intentionally and deliberately led another to believe a particular thing true, and to act upon such belief, he cannot in any litigation arising out of such declaration, act or omission be permitted to falsify it.' I therefore instruct you that if you believe from the evidence that Chisholm stated to defendant that he, Chisholm, had stolen the hog and halter strap mentioned in plaintiff's complaint, and that Keyfauver, without malice, made the statements charged in pursuance of such belief, if he did make them, Chisholm cannot in such case be heard to complain; for it is a well-settled rule of law that no man has a right to take advantage of his own willful and deliberate wrongs."

Counsel for appellant further says in his brief that in granting the motion for a new trial the court said: "That if said instruction is correct law, it provides a new mode of justification, and that a defendant may justify a slanderous charge without proving its truth. * * * Besides, I find no evidence in the statement showing that plaintiff confessed to the defendant that he stole either the hog or the strap. This instruction, therefore, constitutes an error which must be deemed prejudicial to plaintiff, and it is by reason of this error alone that I shall grant a new trial."

Counsel for respondent does not deny that the court used this language, but contends, not only that the giving of this instruction was error, and also contends that the order granting a new trial is justifiable on other grounds, and especially on the grounds that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict of the jury, and that the court erred in striking out plaintiff's evidence of his good character.

Without deciding as to the merits of the instruction in question as an abstract proposition of law, I think the court was right in saying it was not applicable to the evidence, and yet might have been prejudicial to plaintiff. The order appealed from is affirmed, with leave to the defendant to amend his answer, if so advised.

HIBERNIA SAVINGS & LOAN SOC. v. CLARKE et al. (S. F. 27.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 13, 1895.)

STATUTES — CONSTRUCTION — JUDGMENT AGAINST HUSBAND AND WIFE ON HUSBAND'S OBLIGATION — VACATION — REVERSAL.

1. Pol. Code, § 4176, requiring the sheriff to serve "all" process in the manner prescribed by law, means only such process as comes to his hands, and does not, as a general law, requiring him to serve all process, render Code Civ. Proc. § 410, authorizing service of certain process by a person other than him, as a special law, a violation of Const. art. 4, § 25.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 410, in requiring a summons, when served by a person other than a sheriff, to be returned, with such person's affidavit of service, to the office from which it issued, does not require the affidavit, when returned, to be filed.

3. Where, in a suit to foreclose a mortgage, judgment by default is entered against the mortgagors for foreclosure of a lien set up in a cross complaint, a motion by them to vacate the judgment should be granted, where the record does not show that the cross complaint was served on them, and their affidavit that it was not served is uncontradicted.

4. A mortgage, and note secured by it, executed by the husband alone, and in which the wife has no interest, will not support a judgment against husband and wife jointly.

5. Where defendants suffered default, and failed to appear at the trial, they waive findings, under Code Civ. Proc. § 634.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court of city and county of San Francisco.

Action by the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society against Alfred Clarke and others for foreclosure of a mortgage. From a judgment of foreclosure, and an order denying a motion for its vacation, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Alfred Clarke, for appellants. Tobin & Tobin, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. The plaintiff brought this action to foreclose a mortgage executed by the defendant Alfred Clarke to secure payment of his promissory note for $10,200, dated January 11, 1889, and payable to plaintiff, or order, one year after date, with interest. Johanna F. Clarke and several other persons were made parties defendant, upon the ground that they had or claimed interests in, or liens upon, the mortgaged premises, which interests or liens were alleged to be subsequent and subject to the lien of said mortgage. The defendants Alfred Clarke and Johanna F. Clarke did not appear, and their defaults were entered. The defendant Samuel G. Murphy answered, and filed a cross complaint, setting up that he held a deed of a part of the said mortgaged premises and of other land, which was executed to him in June, 1891, by the defendants Clarke, and which was absolute in form, but was intended as a mortgage to secure payment of two promissory notes made by defendant Alfred Clarke for $3,000 each, with interest, and praying that the said deed be adjudged to be a mortgage to secure payment of said notes, etc. The defendant the Gray Bros. Artificial Stone Paving Company answered, setting up that it had recovered a judgment in the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco against the defendant Alfred Clarke, for the sum of $986, and $93.30 costs of suit, which judgment was still in full force and effect, and was a lien on the mortgaged premises superior to the plaintiff's mortgage and the claim of defendant Murphy. The defendant E. J. Wilson answered, setting up that he held a grant, bargain, and sale deed of a part of the said mortgaged premises, and of other lands, which was executed to him in September, 1891, by defendant Alfred Clarke, in trust, to secure payment of a promissory note for $12,000 and interest, made by said Clarke, on which there was still due and unpaid the sum of $10,450, with a prayer for proper relief.

The cause came on regularly for trial on August 29, 1894, upon the pleadings of the respective parties, and a decree of foreclosure was entered on November 17, 1894. The decree recites that: "Findings having been duly waived herein, and the court having heard the proof of the respective parties, and the evidence produced in support thereof, and having considered the same, and it appearing to the satisfaction of the court (1) that the defendants Alfred Clarke and Johanna F. Clarke were duly served with summons, together with a copy of the complaint, and that the defaults of said defendants for not appearing and answering were duly entered on August 11, 1894; (2) that the separate answer and cross complaint of the defendant Samuel G. Murphy was duly and personally served upon the defendants Alfred Clarke and Johanna F. Clarke; (3) that there is due and owing to the plaintiff from the defendants Alfred Clarke and Johanna F. Clarke, upon the note and mortgage mentioned and set forth in the complaint, the sum of $11,426.43, that all the allegations of the complaint are true, and that $350 is a reasonable amount to be allowed plaintiff as counsel fee in the action; (4) that there is now due and owing the defendant Murphy, upon the notes mentioned and set forth in his answer and cross complaint, the sum of $7,280, and that the deed therein set forth was intended as a mortgage, to secure the payment of the moneys due and to grow due upon said notes; (5) that there is now due and owing to the defendant the Gray Bros. Artificial Stone Paving Company, under a judgment set forth in its answer, the sum of $986 principal, $120.75 interest, and $13 costs; (6) that there is due and owing upon the note set out in the answer of E. J. Wilson, secured by a trust deed to said Wilson, described in his answer, a certain sum in U. S. gold coin, the amount of which is to be subsequently determined by the court in case any money shall remain applicable to said trust after satisfying the prior liens of the plaintiff and said Murphy,—it is then adjudged that the plaintiff recover from the defendants Alfred Clarke and Johanna F. Clarke the sum of $11,426, with legal interest and counsel fees, as aforesaid; that the defendant Murphy recover from the defendant Alfred Clarke the sum of $7,280, with interest; that the defendant the Gray Bros. Artificial Stone Paving Company recover from the defendants Alfred Clarke and Johanna F. Clarke the sum of $1,106.75, with interest, and $13 costs; that the defendant E. J. Wilson is entitled to recover, as trustee, from the defendant Alfred Clarke, under the note and trust deed set forth in his answer, the amount due, etc.; and that all of the real property described in the complaint of plaintiff, and in the answer and cross complaint of defendant Murphy, be sold as by law provided, and the proceeds of the sales applied in a manner specified."

In January, 1895, in pursuance of previous notice, the defendants Clarke moved the court to vacate and set aside the judgment and decree entered in the action, upon the grounds that no summons was served on either of said defendants by any person authorized or qualified to serve the same, and there was no appearance by either of them, and hence the court never acquired jurisdiction of their persons; that no findings were filed, and findings were not waived by said defendants, or either of them; that the pleading of the defendant the Gray Bros. Artificial Stone Paving Company and the pleading of the defendant E. J. Wilson were not served on said defendants, or either of them, and the trial was had in the absence of, and without notice to, said defendants. The motion was made upon the judgment roll, and the affidavits served and filed with the notice. The court denied the motion, and the defendants Clarke appeal from the order denying the same and from the judgment and decree of foreclosure.

1. The record contains an affidavit, made by one H. Monahan, in which, after stating the title of the court and cause, he deposes and says that at all the times mentioned therein he was over the age of 18 years, and not a party to the said action; that on a day named, at the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, he personally served the summons issued in said action, "which is hereunto annexed and made a part hereof, on Johanna F. Clark, one of the defendants therein named, and personally known to me to be the defendant therein named, by then and there personally delivering to said Johanna F. Clarke a copy of said summons." The affidavit then states the same facts as to the service of the summons by the affiant on Alfred Clarke, and that "copies of the complaint in the above-entitled action were attached to the copies of summons delivered to the defendants, as aforesaid, which copies of complaint were delivered by me to said defendants, and each of them, personally, at the same time and place as the copies of summons, as aforesaid." This affidavit shows a sufficient service of the summons, if such service could be made by a person other than the sheriff, as provided by section 410 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is objected, however, that, under the general law declared in section 4176 of the Political Code, and in the county government act, "the sheriff must * * * serve all process and notices in the manner prescribed by law," and that service can be made by no other person; that section 410, Code Civ. Proc., in so far as it authorizes service by a person other than the sheriff, is a special law, in conflict with the general law, and the passage of which was inhibited by section 25, art. 4, of the constitution, and hence the attempted service thereunder on appellants was insufficient to give the court jurisdiction of their persons.

Without following the very elaborate argument of counsel on this point, it is enough to say that the same point was made in reference to the service of an injunction, and held untenable, in Golden Gate Con. H. M. Co. v. Superior Court, 65 Cal. 190, 3 Pac. 628. In that case the court, referring to the language above quoted from the Political Code, said: "The section is found in the chapter defining the duties of sheriff, and does not give to or impose upon him exclusively the duty of serving all process and notices, but requires of him to serve all process and notices directed to him, or placed in his hands for service, which the law commands him to serve when addressed or handed to him." Section 410, Code Civ. Proc., was not repealed by the county government act, as claimed, but was amended and reenacted in 1893. St. 1893, p. 207.

It is further objected that the affidavit of service was never filed, and that it was improperly included in the judgment roll. But the statute did not require the affidavit to be filed. It required only that the summons be returned to the office of the clerk from which it issued, with an affidavit of its service. Code Civ. Proc. § 410. The summons was returned and filed, and the affidavit, as it states, was "annexed" thereto. This was sufficient.

2. The objection that no findings were filed, and that findings were not waived by appellants, is clearly untenable. When they suffered their defaults to be entered, and failed to appear at the trial, they waived findings. Code Civ. Proc. § 634. Besides, the recitals in the decree constitute sufficient findings, if findings were required.

3. The objection to the judgment and decree, in so far as it is in favor of the Gray Bros. Artificial Stone Paving Company and of E. J. Wilson, must be sustained. The court found that the answer and cross complaint of Murphy were served on appellants, but there is no finding, and nothing in the record to show, that the pleadings of the paving company and Wilson were ever so served; and the uncontradicted affidavits of appellants, which were filed and used on the hearing of their motion, state positively that the said pleadings were not served on either of them. But without such service the court had no power or authority to grant the said cross complainants any affirmative relief. Society v. Fella, 54 Cal. 598.

4. The note and mortgage, which were the basis of plaintiff's action, were executed only by Alfred Clarke. It was clearly error, therefore, for the court to find that there was due and owing to the plaintiff "from the defendants Alfred Clarke and Johanna F. Clarke," upon the said note and mortgage, the sum stated, and to adjudge that plaintiff "recover from the defendants Alfred Clarke and Johanna F. Clarke" the said sum. So the judgment pleaded by the Gray Bros. Artificial Stone Paving Company was against Alfred Clarke only, and it was error therefore for the court to adjudge that that company "recover from the defendants Alfred Clarke and Johanna F. Clarke" the amount of said judgment.

For the errors above noted, the judgment and decree should be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and decree are reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

Ex parte MILLER. (No. 21,185.)

GUARDIAN OF INFANT—APPOINTMENT—PROCEDURE —COLLATERAL ATTACK.

1. An order appointing a guardian of an infant, from which appeal will lie, cannot be attacked by a habeas corpus proceeding, except for want of jurisdiction to render it.

2. Civ. Code, § 203, declaring that abuse of parental authority is the subject of judicial cognizance in a civil action, and, when the abuse is established, the child may be freed from dominion of the parent, and the duty of support and education enforced, does not limit the authority to appoint a guardian on petition to the superior court, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1747. Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

In bank.

Habeas corpus proceeding to obtain custody of Lilley Miller. Writ discharged.

H. C. Grant, for petitioners. Martin Stevens and James L. Robinson, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The return to the writ issued herein shows that the said Lilley Miller is an infant of the age of about 11 years, and that she is in the custody and under the control of John McComb, by virtue of an order of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, made May 8, 1894, appointing him guardian of her person. On February 28, 1894, McComb filed a petition in said superior court, praying to be appointed guardian of her person, and thereupon the court appointed a day for hearing said petition, and directed notice to be served upon her parents by citation, at least five days before said hearing. The citation was thereupon issued out of the court, and served upon the parents, and at the hearing the said parents appeared in person and by attorney; and the court, after hearing the petition and considering the same, made an order on the 8th of May appointing McComb the guardian of the infant, and on the 12th of May letters of guardianship were issued to him, and he has since had the custody and control of said infant.

Section 243 of the Civil Code provides: "A guardian of the person or property, or both, of a person residing in this state, who is a minor, or of unsound mind, may be appointed in all cases other than those named in section 241, by the superior court, as provided in the Code of Civil Procedure." Section 1747 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that: "The superior court of each county, when it appears necessary or convenient, may appoint guardians for the persons or estates, or either of them, of minors who have no guardian legally appointed by will or deed, and who are inhabitants or residents of the county, or who reside without the state and have estate within the county. Such appointment may be made on the petition of a relative or other person on behalf of the minor, or on the petition of the minor if fourteen years of age. Before making such appointment the court must cause such notice as such court deems reasonable to be given to any person having the care of such minor, and to such relatives of the minor residing in the county, as the court may deem proper." As the parents of the child appeared in person and by attorney at the hearing upon the petition, the giving of the notice to that extent became immaterial, but it may be noted that they were also served with the notice directed by the court.

The action of the superior court in appointing the respondent as guardian of the infant was a judicial proceeding, from which an appeal could have been taken to this court (Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 3; In re Get Young, 90 Cal. 77, 27 Pac. 158); and, unless the appeal was taken within 60 days after the order of appointment was entered (Code Civ. Proc. § 1715), it became final. The right of the guardian to the custody of the infant can be attacked collaterally only upon the want of jurisdiction in the superior court to make the order; and when, upon proceedings in habeas corpus, the respondent justifies his custody of the infant by this judgment, an impeachment of the judgment is a collateral attack. The constitution (article 6, § 5) has conferred upon the superior court jurisdiction in all matters in probate; and that court is thus given control over the persons and estates of minors (Wilson v. Roach, 4 Cal. 366), and the power to appoint their guardians (Murphy v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 576, 24 Pac. 310). As the filing of the petition for the appointment of a guardian gave to the superior court jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and the appearance of the parents at the hearing of the petition, as well as the service upon them of the citation, gave to the court jurisdiction over their persons, it was incumbent upon them to present to that court any matter, if such existed, which would have justified the court in denying the petition. They cannot afterwards, upon proceedings in habeas corpus, assert a right to the custody of the infant as against the guardian, which they might have presented in that proceeding, but which they neglected to present.

Section 203 of the Civil Code is not a limitation upon the jurisdiction which has been conferred by the constitution upon the superior court, nor is it a limitation upon the exercise of that jurisdiction which is authorized by section 243. Section 243 authorizes this jurisdiction to be exercised "in all cases other than those named in section 241"; and section 1747 prescribes the procedure to be observed in the exercise of the jurisdiction. The primary purpose of section 203 is to confer a right of action in favor of a child against its parent for the abuse of parental authority, and as an incident thereto, upon establishing the cause of action, to emancipate the child from the control of the parent, and at the same time enforce in its favor and against the parent the parent's obligation of support and education. The authority for appointing a guardian for the child is not conferred by this section, and it is dependent upon an enforcement in behalf of the child of the right of action thereby authorized. In Hunt's Case (Cal.) 37 Pac. 206, the judge of the superior court had made an ex parte order directing the respondent, Kane, to take the custody of the children before any hearing had been had upon his petition for guardianship, or a judicial determination that any grounds existed for appointing a guardian for the minors. The order was also made without any notice whatever to the parents, or either of them, and without the issuance of any letters of guardianship, or requiring from Kane any undertaking; and it was held that this proceeding of the court was wholly unauthorized. What was said in the opinion concerning section 203 was merely illustrative, and was not required by the facts of the case, and cannot be invoked as authority under the facts of the present case.

The writ is discharged, and the infant is remanded to the custody of the respondent.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; McFARLAND, J.; VAN FLEET, J.

TEMPLE, J. I concur in the order dismissing the writ, and remanding the child to its guardian. I do not think section 203, Civ. Code, throws any light whatever upon the question here involved. It does not purport to be, nor is it, a limitation upon the power conferred upon the judge of the superior court in other sections. The argument that it has such effect is, I think, founded upon a mistaken view of the policy of the law. If, it is said, a guardian can be appointed in such a case on the application of any person whomsoever, in a summary proceeding, then section 203 serves no useful purpose. Why should the right to bring such an action be confined to certain specified persons, and why must it be determined in a regular action, if the same purpose can be attained in this summary proceeding? The answer is that the same purpose is not attained in the summary proceeding. When a parent is deprived of the custody of his child, and therefore of the right to its services and earnings, by the summary proceeding, he is no longer liable for its support and education. This is true as a general proposition of law, and it is recognized by our Code. Section 196, Id., provides that a parent entitled to the custody of a child must give him support and education suitable to his circumstances; plainly implying that the parent does not owe that duty to a child when he is not entitled to its custody. Section 204, Id., is: "The authority of a parent ceases: (1) Upon the appointment by a court of a guardian of the person of a child." In accordance with this idea, section 205 of the same Code provides for the case of the death of a parent chargeable with the support of a child; and section 207, that, when a parent neglects to provide necessaries for a child "who is under his charge," third persons may provide, and recover their value from such parents. In cases of divorce, and in controversies between the parents in regard to the custody of children, other sections provide for the support of the children (sections 137 and 199, Id.); but in no other case, except as provided in section 203, has the court the power to deprive the parent of his authority, and yet hold him liable for the maintenance of his child according to his condition. If a parent, because of his own incompetency or moral worthlessness, neglects his child, it would ordinarily be of no importance to have a decree requiring him to support a child which he is neglecting or abusing; but, if a wealthy parent were to abuse his authority, it would be of the first importance to the child that it should be educated as a child born in that condition of life is entitled to be. That this is the purpose of section 203 I cannot doubt, and it has no bearing whatever upon the construction to be given to section 243, Civ. Code, or section 1747, Code Civ. Proc. I therefore concur in the order.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent. It appears from the return to the writ that on February 28, 1894, John McComb filed his petition in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, describing himself as secretary of the California Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and alleging that Lena Miller, a minor, has no guardian legally appointed by will, and is a resident of said city and county; that Benjamin Miller and Rena Miller, her parents, are "unfit and improper persons to have the custody of said minor"; that she is ten years of age; that her parents reside in San Francisco; and that it is necessary to appoint a guardian of her person. Upon the filing of this petition, an order was made appointing Friday, March 19, 1894, for the hearing, and directing five days' notice thereof to be served upon the parents. Upon this a citation was issued, requiring the parents to appear on March 9th, and show cause why John McComb should not be appointed such guardian, which citation was served on March 6th, only three days before the day appointed for the hearing. The order of the superior court does not show that the parents appeared in court, but it is alleged in the return that they did, and that there was a full hearing. However this may be, the order appointing a guardian merely recites that the petition came on regularly for hearing; that due proof was made, to the satisfaction of the judge, that notice had been given to the relatives of the minor residing in the county; that the minor was a resident of the county, and needed the care and attention of some fit and proper person. "Wherefore it is ordered that John McComb be appointed guardian of the person and estate of said minor, and that letters issue upon his giving a bond in the sum of five dollars." It further appears that the required bond was given, and letters of guardianship thereupon issued. It is now held that, by these proceedings, the natural right of the parents to the custody and society of their minor child has been finally determined, and that she is henceforth subject to the exclusive control of the guardian so appointed, or of such others as may be appointed in his place.

This decision is, in my opinion, in conflict with section 203 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows: "The abuse of parental authority is the subject of judicial cognizance in a civil action brought by the child, or by its relative within the third degree, or by the supervisors of the county where the child resides; and, when the abuse is established, the child may be freed from the dominion of the parent, and the duty of support and education enforced." In Re Hunt this court rendered a decision in bank, which is reported in 103 Cal. 355, and 37 Pac. 206, and in which it was held that "the father and mother, being the natural guardians of a child, can be deprived of the custody of its person only by a proceeding under section 203 of the Civil Code." In that case a stranger had asked to be appointed guardian of two minor children of the petitioner, upon an allegation that the parents were persons of intemperate habits, and not fit to have the custody of their children. Upon the filing of the petition, an ex parte order was made by the judge of the superior court, awarding the custody of the children to the petitioner pending a hearing. After the day appointed for the rehearing, but before its completion, and before any final order in the matter, the writ of habeas corpus was issued out of this court, and afterwards the case was decided in the manner and upon the ground above stated.

It has been contended in the argument here that the point decided in the Hunt Case was not necessarily involved, or involved at all, and consequently that the expression above quoted from the opinion was obiter, and of no authority. I cannot assent to this view. While it is possible that the case might have been decided upon another ground, it cannot be denied that the ground upon which the decision was expressly put was presented by the case. It clearly appeared that an attempt had been made, in a summary statutory proceeding for the appointment of a guardian, to determine the question whether the parents of minor children had not by their misconduct (their intemperate habits) forfeited their natural right to the care, custody, and society of their children. If the issue tendered by the petition was one which the court had no jurisdiction to try in that proceeding, it is clear that the provisional order made therein, awarding the temporary custody of the children to the petitioner, was in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, and void. Upon whatever other grounds, therefore, the order might have been attacked, it is very clear that, if it was open to attack upon this ground, the petitioner was at liberty to plant himself upon it, as the report shows that he did, and the court was at equal liberty in making its decision to ignore other grounds, if any such there were, and to confine itself to this ground, if it was deemed sufficient to support its conclusions, as in fact it was. Under these circumstances, to say that the expression above quoted from the opinion is obiter is equivalent to saying that nothing can ever be decided in a case in which the same conclusion is sustained upon two independent lines of reasoning, which seems to be absurd. But the authority of that decision is assailed upon the further ground that the point decided, not being necessarily involved, was not duly considered, and, for want of due consideration, was erroneously decided, and a rule thereby established, not only contrary to the intention of the legislature, but extremely inconvenient and even dangerous in its operation. This contention deserves serious consideration. It may be conceded that the language of the decision in Re Hunt, taken in its broadest sense, and unqualified by reference to the facts of that case, goes too far. The case before the court was one of alleged unfitness of the parents, arising out of their own misconduct,—a case, in other words, of forfeiture of parental rights on the ground of parental abuse, and the language of the opinion must be understood as having reference to that state of facts. A parent might become unfit to have the custody of his children without any fault or misconduct on his part, as in case of insanity, permanent or temporary. In such a case it would generally be convenient, and often necessary, to appoint a guardian of the persons of his minor children during the continuance of his disability. To such and similar cases section 203, Civ. Code, has no application. But, in my opinion, it does apply to all such violations or neglect of parental duty as jeopardize the safety and welfare of a child to an extent justifying a forfeiture of parental dominion, and, when it applies, I see no reason why the remedy therein prescribed should not be held exclusive, as was decided in the case referred to.

The meaning of this and other provisions of our Code relating to the subject of guardianship will be rendered plainer by comparing them with the doctrines and rules of the common law in regard to the same matter. The common law recognized the natural right of parents to the care and control, and to the society, services, and earnings, of their minor children. It also recognized the duty and necessity of guarding against the abuse of parental authority. The parent, though guardian by nature of his minor children, was but a guardian after all, and, as such, subject, like all other trustees, to the jurisdiction of the chancellor. Guardians in socage and guardians in chivalry were designated by the law, and had the custody of the persons of their wards, as well as of their estates. There were also guardians appointed by will or deed under the statute 12 Car. II. c. 24. All these were trustees, subject to removal, discipline, or correction by the chancellor for any neglect or misconduct prejudicial to the ward. And upon the same grounds, and for the same reasons, the natural guardian was subject to the same jurisdiction, and it extended to every sort of misconduct or neglect by which a parent could forfeit his parental rights. It is no doubt true that, in the matter of guardianship of the person, the jurisdiction of the chancellor was exercised less freely in the care of parents (guardians by nature) than in the case of guardians designated by law, or appointed by will or deed, or appointed by the chancellor himself, in default of other designation. But, if so, it was only because the mutual benefits flowing from the natural relation of parent and child are so manifest and important as to outweigh breaches of duty which in any other guardians would be ground of removal. The interest of the child, however, was always the paramount consideration; and, when its safety or welfare was menaced, the chancellor had power to free the child from the parental dominion, and to take it under his own protection. The means by which this jurisdiction was invoked and exercised was a suit in equity against the offending parent. Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1307, and cases cited. This being the state of the law before the Codes, our legislature, in enacting section 203 of the Civil Code, has done little more than to put into the statute what was the law already. The abuse of parental authority is the subject of judicial cognizance in a civil action, and so it always was. And there is no reason to suppose that the words "abuse of parental authority" were used in a sense less comprehensive than I have attributed to them, viz. a sense which will comprehend every sort of neglect or misconduct by which a parent may justly forfeit his parental rights; or, in other words, every case in which the unfitness of the parent is predicated upon his own fault, whether of omission or commission. If this is so, it seems clear to my mind that the further intent of the provision is that, when a child is to be forever freed from the dominion of its parents upon the ground of parental abuse, the issue must be tried and determined in a civil action prosecuted in the name of the child or of a near relative or of the board of supervisors of the proper county. It is intended that the acts and facts constituting the abuse should be alleged in issuable form; that the offending parent should be summoned into the court in the usual way, and should have the ordinary right of a defendant in a civil action to defend by demurrer and answer, and to have the issue tried as other issues are tried in civil actions. And it is further intended (for such would be the necessary consequence) that a trial and determination of the issue in favor of the parent should be a bar to another action for the same cause.

In this case the proceeding was not instituted by nor conducted in the name of the child or of a relative or of the board of supervisors, and it was not a civil action, as defined in the Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 30), but a special and summary proceeding, in which, upon a petition containing no specific allegations, but couched in the baldest and vaguest general terms, the parents were cited upon five days' notice (five prescribed, three actually given) to show cause why the petitioner—a mere stranger—should not be appointed guardian, and they, as a necessary consequence, deprived permanently of the custody and society of their child. If such procedure is allowable, section 203 of the Civil Code might as well not exist. Why limit the right of action to certain designated persons, and why require or authorize a civil action, if any stranger may pass the statute by, and have a trial of the issue in a summary proceeding, the only effect of which, if the decision should happen to be in favor of the parent, would be to leave him exposed to the necessity of litigating the same matter the next day in a new proceeding, commenced by some other stranger volunteering in the child's behalf? If, instead of the proceedings by which this child was transferred to the custody of Gen. McComb, an action had been commenced as the statute provides, these parents, as defendants in such action, must have been served with a summons and copy of a complaint containing a statement of specific facts; they would have had at least 10 days to demur or answer, and the cause when at issue would have gone upon a trial calendar; there would have been time to subpœna witnesses; and, in short, the proceedings would have been conducted with that deliberation, and with the opportunities to defend, which the law deems essential where the controversy involves the smallest property or contract right. And, in case of a judgment adverse to the parents, they would have had one year to appeal, instead of the 60 days within which they were compelled to appeal from this order.

The question involved, therefore, although merely a question of procedure, is one of some practical consequence. But, even if it were otherwise, the mere fact that the statute has prescribed the remedy by action brought by some one of certain enumerated persons is a sufficient reason for insisting upon that course, unless there are other concurrent remedies allowed by law. It is said that, under section 1747 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the superior court of any county has a general authority to appoint guardians of the persons or property of resident minors, and to determine, upon the petition for guardianship therein prescribed, any and all questions upon which the necessity or propriety of such appointment depends. In a certain sense this is true. The court not only may, but must, determine whether or not "it is necessary or convenient" to appoint a guardian. But it is entirely consistent with this proposition to hold that as to one occasion for exercising the power of appointment, viz. the forfeiture of parental rights by abuse of parental authority, it must look solely to the judgment of a competent tribunal given in a proper action, brought by a proper party, in order to determine whether the occasion has arisen; or, in other words, it is entirely consistent with the conceded power and jurisdiction of the probate court in the matter of guardianship to hold that, when abuse of parental authority is the ground of application, the necessary and material allegation of the petition must be, not merely that the parent is unfit, or that he has abused his authority, but that a competent tribunal has duly given a judgment to that effect. And not only are these two propositions entirely consistent with themselves and with every provision of the Codes upon which counsel rely, but it is only by insisting upon both that all parts of the statute, and especially section 203 of the Civil Code, can be given effect. In this view, all parts of the statute are perfectly harmonized, and each operates as it was clearly intended to operate. But to hold that the legislature, while taking the pains to declare that the abuse of parental authority is the subject of a civil action, and to limit the number of those who may prosecute the action, has at the same time given full liberty to any stranger or volunteer to ignore at his pleasure the prescribed method of procedure, is to convict the lawmakers of the merest folly. I do not think such folly should be imputed. On the contrary, I think the provisions of section 203 of the Civil Code should be strictly upheld and enforced; not only because it is the law, but because it is a law which, while it conserves rights which certainly are as sacred as any rights of property, is capable of strict enforcement without incurring any of the dangers to children which counsel has supposed would ensue. The statute, as we have seen, introduces nothing new. The jurisdiction of the chancellor in England and the courts of equity in this country to try actions involving questions of parental abuse, and to dispose of the custody of children subjected to such abuse, has long been thoroughly established; and there is no reason why, independent of section 203, Civ. Code, such actions should not be maintained in this state, except that, all matters of procedure being here regulated by statute, it might be held, in the absence of any provisions similar to those of said section 203, that the provisions relating to the appointment of guardians were intended to be exclusive. As it is, however, it is plain to my mind that they were not intended to be exclusive, but that they must be administered in conjunction and in harmony with section 203.

The argument against this view is altogether based upon the supposed hardships, inconveniences, and dangers that it involves; but these, I think, may be easily shown to be purely imaginary, and, even if they were more real than imaginary, the argument from inconvenience could not be regarded if the law is plain, as it seems to me. The inconveniences resulting from the operation of a law are for the consideration of the legislature, and the courts must assume that they have been duly weighed and deliberately encountered, as being of less concern than those which the law was designed to remedy. But, I repeat, these supposed inconveniences are purely imaginary.

The substance of the argument under this head is that it is necessary in view of the welfare of children, which is the paramount consideration, that the court should have the power to proceed summarily in order to prevent the irreparable ruin which might ensue if, in the cases supposed, the children were not removed without delay from the control and influence of their wicked and depraved parents. But, conceding that such cases as counsel suppose have occurred and will hereafter occur, I cannot see why the remedy by action is not just as efficacious as the remedy pursued in this instance. The action is an equitable action; the judge is armed with all the powers of the chancellor. Whatever provisional orders it is necessary to make pending the litigation, to protect the interests or insure the safety of the child, he has as much and more authority to make than he has when sitting in probate or in a guardianship proceeding. The Code provisions relating to guardianship confer no power upon the judge to provide for the temporary custody of the child. If he has authority to make any such order, he must derive it from the equitable jurisdiction conferred upon the superior court; and, if it is derived from that source, he can exercise it as well and as amply in an action as he possibly can in a special proceeding. So far, therefore, as the exigencies of the case may demand immediate action on the part of the judge, the child is certainly as well protected, if not much more amply protected, in an action than in the special proceeding. If it is contended that provisional orders for the temporary custody of the child, made after the commencement of an action, will not be sufficient to meet the exigencies of some cases, the answer is that an action may be commenced as easily and expeditiously as a special proceeding, and what will answer in one case will answer equally well in the other. But counsel seem to claim that there may be delays in commencing an action owing to the absence or unwillingness of relatives or inattention on the part of the board of supervisors. We do not think it ought to be assumed that the board of supervisors, being advised of their duty and power in the premises, would neglect to interpose in a proper case; but allowing that they would, and that there were no relatives willing to act, there would be nothing to prevent the society for the prevention of cruelty to children, or any other charitable organization or private person, from applying to the proper court to be appointed guardian ad litem, so as to commence the action in the name of the child. And, if the case was of such pressing exigency as to justify the extreme course resorted to in this and other instances, of taking the child from its parents without any legal warrant, but with a view to legal proceedings, such a course would be as appropriately followed by an action as by a special proceeding. There is no reason, therefore, for ignoring the statute in these matters. Indeed, the minor would enjoy a much more ample measure of protection in the civil action provided for in section 203 of the Civil Code than under a mere petition for guardianship; for in that proceeding the superior court acts under a statute which confers no power to issue an injunction against the offending parent pendente lite, as may be done by the chancellor. See cases cited by Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1307, and Schouler, Dom. Rel. § 249.

To take this case as an illustration: What would have become of the infant child during the nine days intervening the filing of the petition and the day appointed for the hearing if her protection had depended upon the statutory provisions relating to the appointment of guardians, and her parents had been wicked and depraved enough to subject her to the contamination and outrage that counsel have instanced as occurring in other cases? She must have been left during that interval of time in the power of her parents, and that would have sufficed for her ruin if the courts and the law are as impotent as the argument supposes. But, in truth, they are not. To protect a child from immediate danger, the law will justify the same measures as were taken in this case; and, if the parent seeks to regain her custody by habeas corpus, a court will not put her back in his power when it appears that her welfare would be imperiled by so doing, especially when proceedings have been commenced, or are about to be commenced, to determine the parental right; and, upon commencement of the action, the court, as has been shown, could see that she was protected pendente lite.

It remains to be noted that section 203 of the Civil Code does not in itself provide for the appointment of a guardian, or even infer the necessity of such appointment in all cases covered by it. It provides a method of establishing parental unfitness arising out of parental misconduct, and for a judgment freeing the child from the parental dominion, as well as a judgment enforcing the duty of support and education. When, in such an action, the abuse of authority is established, and a judgment has been given freeing the child from parental authority, a case is then presented in which it may be necessary or convenient to appoint a guardian of the child's person. But when a child has living parents (or a living parent), in whose custody he is, and who are otherwise fit, the superior court has no authority in a summary proceeding to take him away from his natural guardians upon the ground that they have forfeited their rights by their misconduct, unless such forfeiture has been established by a judgment in the action provided for in section 203, Civ. Code.

Counsel have cited many provisions of the Civil Code and Code of Civil Procedure which they contend are inconsistent with the construction here given to section 203. There is nothing in any of these objections, and I shall not review them in detail, but I will notice the one upon which counsel seem to rely with the greatest confidence.

Subdivision 3 of section 246 of the Civil Code reads as follows: "Of two persons equally entitled to the custody in other respects, preference is to be given as follows: (1) To a parent; (2) to one who was indicated by the wishes of a deceased parent; (3) to one who already stands in the position of the trustee of a fund to be applied to the child's support; (4) to a relative." It is contended that, on the construction here given to section 203, no room is left for the operation of a provision which assumes that there may be two persons equally entitled to the custody of a minor in other respects, and one of them a parent. It is not difficult to suppose a great variety of cases to which this section would apply without trenching upon the operation of section 203. Suppose a guardian of the person of a minor child to have been appointed because its only living parent was insane, or had been convicted of a felony, or was a fugitive from the state, or was an habitual drunkard, or was living in adultery; and suppose that the parent had recovered his reason, had been pardoned, had returned to the state, had been cured of his drunkenness, or abandoned his scandalous mode of life. In the first case he would become entitled to the custody of his child on recovering his reason, if, in other respects, he was equally entitled with the guardian. In the other cases, although adjudged guilty of parental misconduct, and his natural right gone, he might still claim the guardianship by appointment in preference to a stranger no better qualified in other respects. In all these cases, and in many others that might be supposed, there would be room for the operation of section 246, which, after all, amounts to little more than the statement of a general principle to be applied in any possible case that might arise in which two persons equally entitled in other respects, but one of them the parent, were contending for the custody of a minor child.

It is next urged by counsel that it has become the settled practice in this state to forfeit the natural right of parents without an action, and two cases are cited in which this court has impliedly conceded the validity of proceedings here in question. In re Get Young, 90 Cal. 77, 27 Pac. 158; In re Vance, 92 Cal. 195, 28 Pac. 229. In neither of these cases was the point raised or considered that an action was necessary. In Re Hunt it was argued and decided by the court in bank, in accordance with the views here expressed; and the doctrine of that case, I am convinced, is a salutary and a necessary one. The natural right of a parent to the custody and society of his child is certainly equal in dignity and importance to any right of property, and ought not to be taken away with less ceremony than he would be deprived of a cart or a horse.

TURNER v. SISKIYOU COUNTY. (No. 18,297.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—LACK OF UNIFORMITY.

The county government act, § 190, subd. 16 (St. 1891, p. 385), in allowing a witness in a criminal case before the superior court of counties of the twenty-eighth class alone, "subject to the discretion of the court," the same per diem and mileage as jurors in like cases, violates Const. art. 1, § 11, requiring general laws to have a "uniform operation."

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Siskiyou county; John S. Beard, Judge.

Action by W. W. Turner against the county of Siskiyou, individually and as assignee, for witnesses' fees. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Jas. F. Lodge, Dist. Atty., for appellant. Warren & Taylor (T. M. Osmont, of counsel), for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. The defendant demurred to the complaint. The demurrer was overruled, and, defendant declining to answer, judgment was rendered for plaintiff. Defendant appeals from the judgment.

The action was brought by plaintiff to recover for fees and mileage of himself and a number of assignors, as witnesses in a certain criminal case tried in the superior court of Siskiyou county. The action is not based on section 1329 of the Penal Code, which is general in its nature, and applies to the whole state, and which gives a judge the discretionary power to direct the county auditor to draw his warrant upon the treasurer for a reasonable sum of money, to be specified in the order, for the necessary expenses of a witness in a criminal case, where "it appears that he has come from a place outside of the county, or that he is poor and unable to pay the expense of such attendance." It is brought under subdivision 16 of section 190 of the county government act (St. 1891, p. 385), which provides that, in counties of the twenty-eighth class alone, "every person subpœnaed as a witness in a criminal case before the superior court shall, subject to the discretion of the judge thereof, be entitled to the same per diem and mileage as jurors in like case; provided, that such per diem to witnesses only be allowed for actual days' attendance." This provision is clearly unconstitutional and void. It does not apply to counties of any other class. Other counties are subject, in the matter of juries in criminal cases, either to section 1329, Pen. Code, above noticed, or to provisions very similar to those of that section. The county government act is essentially a "general law" (Dougherty v. Austin, 94 Cal. 601, 632, 633, 28 Pac. 834, and 29 Pac. 1092); and the provision in question does not have a "uniform operation," as required by section 11 of article 1 of the state constitution. The difficulty is not removed by the fact that the counties are classified, and that the provision applies to all counties of a certain class; because, under section 5 of article 11, counties may be classified only for the purposes of regulating the compensation of certain public officers therein enumerated. Dougherty v. Austin, supra; Welsh v. Bramlet, 98 Cal. 219, 33 Pac. 66. In all other respects "the legislature shall establish a system of county governments which shall be uniform throughout the state." Section 4, art. 11. Cody v. Murphey, 89 Cal. 522, 26 Pac. 1081, cited by respondent, dealt with the salary of sheriff,—the very thing for which counties may be classified. The provision in question in the case at bar is local and special, because it is not in force in all parts of the state, and does not affect equally either all the people or all individuals of a class; and it is therefore invalid in a system of county governments which must be "uniform throughout the state." It is not even uniform as to the particular individuals whom it seeks to reach, because the allowance to be made depends upon the absolute will of the judge. No rules or principles are given or hinted at by which he is to "hear and determine." No facts are to be found or conclusion reached, judicially. He is not to inquire and determine, as under section 1329, Pen. Code, whether the witness came from without the county, or is poor and unable to pay the expenses of his attendance, and what would be a reasonable sum for his necessary expenses; but the witness, if he receives anything, no matter what his condition or where his residence may be, is to receive "the same per diem and mileage as jurors," and this he is to receive or not receive as the judge may arbitrarily will. If the provision in question could be considered as an enactment independent of the county government act, which must be uniform throughout the state, it would still be a local and special law, within the prohibition of section 25 of article 4 of the constitution. It would be a law "regulating county * * * business." The judgment is reversed, with directions to the superior court to sustain the demurrer to the complaint.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; TEMPLE, J.

HOLT MANUF'G CO. v. EWING. (No. 18,424.)

CONDITIONAL SALE—ELECTION OF REMEDIES.

A corporation delivered to E. a machine, taking his notes, and also a contract providing that the company did not part with its title until the notes were fully paid; that, should E. make default in any of the payments, the company might terminate the contract, and take the machine; and that all payments prior to such default should be compensation for its use. After default by E., he died, and the company presented to his administratrix its claim upon the notes for the balance due, and the claim was allowed and approved by the court. Held, that the company waived its right to retake the machine, and elected to treat the transaction as an absolute sale. Wells, Fargo & Co. v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 142, distinguished.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Yuba county; E. A. Davis, Judge.

Action in claim and delivery by the Holt Manufacturing Company, a corporation, against Rosa V. Ewing. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

W. H. Carlin, for appellant. Forbes & Dinsmore, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Action in claim and delivery of personal property. On July 8, 1893, the Holt Manufacturing Company entered into a contract with T. S. Ewing, under which the "improved link-belt combined harvester No. 426" was delivered by respondent to said T. S. Ewing, for which said Ewing agreed to pay the sum of $1,650, and to secure the same executed two promissory notes, each for the sum of $825; the first to become due September 1, 1892, and the second September 1, 1893. By said contract, which was denominated a "lease," it was stipulated that "the Holt Manufacturing Co. do not part with their title to said harvester until said deferred payments or notes are fully paid; that time is of the essence of the agreement; that should the undersigned (T. S. Ewing) make default in any of the payments, then said the Holt Manufacturing Co. shall, at their option, and without notice, terminate this agreement, and with or without legal proceedings take and retain said harvester, wherever it may be situated, and all moneys paid by the undersigned prior to such default shall be compensation for the privilege of using said harvester prior to such default." There was paid on said first promissory note on October 3, 1892, $500, and on January 11, 1893, $100. Said T. S. Ewing died intestate on March 29, 1893, and the defendant, Rosa V. Ewing, was on the 29th day of April, 1893, duly appointed administratrix of his estate, and on May 18, 1893, letters of administration were duly issued to her. Afterwards the plaintiff presented to said administratrix its claim upon said promissory notes for the balance of $249 then due upon the first note, and the amount to become due upon the second, of $884.50; in all, $1,133.50. This claim was duly verified on May 20, 1893, and was allowed by the administratrix May 26, 1893, and allowed and approved by the court on June 24, 1893; and this action to recover possession of the said property was commenced October 12, 1893. In the presentation of said claim to the administratrix the plaintiff set out a copy of said promissory notes, with the credits upon the first, but did not set out the contract or lease, or make any reference whatever thereto. Upon this state of facts the defendant contended that the plaintiff waived its right under said contract to retake the property, and elected to treat the transaction as an absolute sale, and is therefore estopped from asserting ownership to the property, or any right to recover possession thereof in this action. The cause was tried by the court, and findings and judgment went in favor of the plaintiff, and this appeal is by the defendant from said judgment, and from an order denying her motion for a new trial.

The so-called "lease" was in fact a conditional sale, under the terms of which the seller had either one of two remedies for the violation of the contract by the purchaser. It might, upon the default of the purchaser in meeting the stipulated payments, or any of them, have retaken the property, or recovered its possession in an action of claim and delivery; or, on the other hand, treated the sale as an absolute one, and brought its action upon the notes to recover the contract price of the property sold. These remedies being inconsistent, the plaintiff could elect which he would pursue, but he could not have both. Parke & Lacy Co. v. White River Lumber Co., 101 Cal. 37, 35 Pac. 442, and cases there cited. The question, therefore, is whether the presentation of the plaintiff's claim for the unpaid purchase money to the administratrix of Ewing's estate, and its approval by her and by the court, was such an election as debarred the plaintiff from pursuing its subsequent action to recover the possession of the property upon the assumption that the title had never passed to the purchaser. I think it clear that the plaintiff was bound by its election in presenting the claim. Default had been made by the purchaser long before Ewing's death. In fact, no payment had been made until more than a month after the first note became due. The right, therefore, of the plaintiff to have pursued and retaken the property existed before Ewing's death. If no default had been made prior to the presentation of the claim to the administratrix, it could properly have been presented as a contingent claim against the estate, the facts all being stated in the claim as presented; for, if no default had been made, the seller could not retake the property, and it would have been the right of the estate to have performed the contract by payment, and thus have acquired the absolute right to the property for the benefit of the estate. But, the default having occurred, and the plaintiff having the right, at and before the time of the presentation of the claim, to pursue the remedy secured to it in the contract of retaking the property, there was clearly an election not to avail itself of this right, but of looking to the estate for the payment of the balance due upon the contract. And this is the more apparent from the fact that in the claim, as presented, no mention was made of the terms of the contract, nor any assertion of any right other than the enforcement of the payment of the notes by the estate.

There are many cases cited by appellant to the effect that bringing an action for the recovery of a demand under like circumstances is such an election as debars the creditor from recovering the property under the claim that the title had not passed. That proposition is so well settled that these cases need not be cited; the only question being whether the presentation of the claim, and its allowance, was such election. Section 1497, Code Civ. Proc., provides: "Every claim allowed by the executor or administrator, and approved by a judge of the superior court, or a copy thereof, as hereinafter provided, must within 30 days thereafter be filed in the court and be ranked among the acknowledged debts of the estate, to be paid in due course of administration. * * *" It was held in Re McKinley's Estate, 49 Cal. 152, that when a claim is allowed the executor cannot afterwards contest it. In Walkerly v. Bacon, 85 Cal. 137, 24 Pac. 638, that an allowed claim against the estate has the force and effect of a judgment payable in due course of administration. In Ormsby v. Dearborn, 116 Mass. 386, it was held that the creditor who had proved a claim against an estate in bankruptcy as for goods sold and delivered to the bankrupt cannot maintain an action of replevin for the goods by proof that he did not sell them to the bankrupt. Louis v. Triscony, 58 Cal. 304, does not conflict with the foregoing authorities.

Respondent claims that plaintiff was not bound to make an election until all the circumstances are known, and the condition and value of the funds belonging to the estate are clearly ascertained; that, until so known and ascertained, it is impossible for a party to make a discriminating and deliberate choice such as ought to bind him in reason and justice; that, therefore, if he should make a choice in ignorance of the real condition of the estate, or under a misconception of the extent of claims upon the fund, it is not conclusive on him. And this, the respondent contends, is the case, whether the election has resulted in a claim being allowed by the court in the estate, or where a supposed election has been prosecuted and a judgment against the estate obtained on the rejected claim. This contention appears to be based upon the fact, disclosed upon the trial, that the claims allowed against the estate largely exceeded the value of the assets as shown by the inventory; but there is nothing in the record tending to show that the plaintiff was misled by any one as to the condition of the estate. If the plaintiff failed to investigate and ascertain whether the estate was solvent or insolvent, it cannot shield itself from the result of this want of care. So far as the record discloses, the plaintiff filed its demand against said estate voluntarily, and without in any manner being misled by the defendant.

Counsel, however, cite the case of Wells, Fargo & Co. v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 142, in which the general proposition is stated that, "before any presumption of an election can arise, it is necessary to show that the party acting or acquiescing was cognizant of his rights," and that, "when this is ascertained affirmatively, it may be very necessary to consider whether the party intended the election." That case, however, is clearly distinguishable from this. In that case Frierson, the defendant's intestate, had embezzled and converted to his own use money belonging to the plaintiffs to the amount of $195,889. After his death, and the appointment of his administrator, the plaintiffs presented to defendant their claim for said sum, with an affidavit appended averring that the estate was indebted to the plaintiffs in that amount, and also that $50,000 of this sum was paid by Frierson to the Sacramento Gas Company, and that for this amount the plaintiffs claimed a lien upon all the gas stock of the estate, and all bonds of the gas company held by defendant as administrator. The administrator rejected the whole claim. Thereafter the plaintiffs commenced a common-law action against the defendant for the whole amount of the claim as a money demand, and recovered judgment for the whole sum. Pending this suit, and before judgment, plaintiff filed a bill in equity to reach the gas stock and bonds in the hands of the administrator, being the same stock and bonds mentioned in their claim as filed. The plaintiffs recovered in that action also, and the administrator appealed from the decree in equity. The same contention was made there as here, that plaintiffs, by presenting their claim for a money demand, and obtaining judgment thereon, were debarred from prosecuting their action in equity. It was said, however, by this court, in addition to the quotations above made, that the claim presented to the administrator was for the bonds and stock as a part of the subject of the embezzlement; and the court held that under the circumstances of that case both remedies might be pursued, the judgment at law to be credited with whatever should be realized in the equitable action. The claim filed with the administrator referred to the bonds and stock, and claimed a lien thereon, thus indicating plaintiffs' intention to secure, as against other creditors, the benefit of the stock and bonds; and, the claim having been rejected, a resort to equity to secure the stock and bonds was appropriate, and not inconsistent with the claim as filed; and, this proceeding being in equity, the court had ample power to protect the estate from a double liability, as was done by the provision in the decree that whatever should be realized in the equitable proceeding should be credited upon the judgment recovered at law, which fixed the amount of Frierson's defalcation. The distinction between that case and this is apparent. The judgment and order appealed from should be reversed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; BELCHER, C.

LIND v. CITY OF SAN LUIS OBISPO. (No. 19,448.)

NUISANCE—SPECIAL INJURY.

A riparian lot owner, by the maintenance by a city of a cesspool on a stream above his lot, which, besides being offensive to all persons living in the neighborhood, causes, when the cesspool is flushed, offensive sewerage matter to be deposited on his lot, suffers a special injury, entitling him to sue to abate the nuisance.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; V. A. Gregg, Judge.

Action by Joseph Lind against the city of San Luis Obispo. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Wilcoxon & Bouldin and J. M. Wilcoxon, for appellant. William Shipsey, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. Action to abate a nuisance, in which, at the close of the evidence for plaintiff, a judgment of nonsuit and for costs was rendered against him, from which he appeals on a bill of exceptions, containing a statement of the evidence.

The defendant is a municipal corporation of the sixth class, having a population of about 3,000. Plaintiff is the owner of a lot of land within the corporate limits of the city, and a dwelling house thereon, in which he and his family reside. His lot has a frontage of 112 feet on Higuera street, and extends back westerly from said street to the center of San Luis Obispo creek. In August, 1892, while plaintiff owned and was residing upon said lot, the defendant constructed a system of sewerage in and for said city, by and through which all excremental and malodorous matter is conveyed to and discharged into a vault constructed for the purpose of receiving the same. This vault is vertically cylindrical, about 10 feet in diameter and 11 feet in depth, and is situate in the bank at the margin of said creek, about 300 feet above plaintiff's dwelling house. It has two openings on the side next to the creek, one at the bottom, and the other near the top; the lower one being closed during the dry season of about six to seven months, during which the vault is filled with solid matter, which, during the rainy season, is flushed out through the lower opening into the creek. The vault is constructed of cemented masonry, and is ventilated through a chimney or pipe about 40 feet high. The evidence shows that the stench from the vault and from the creek below for a distance of half a mile or more is so disagreeable and offensive to the residents along the creek for a distance of 1,000 feet or more below the vault as to make the occupancy of their dwelling houses extremely uncomfortable, and nearly intolerable to those who reside within 500 feet below that vault, except during times of very high water in the creek; that plaintiff and one or two of his near neighbors are most affected by the odors, but that from 150 to 600 of the resident population of 3,000 are affected by them in the same way, but less in degrees; also, that considerable quantities of the solid malodorous matter from the vault are annually deposited upon plaintiff's lot along the borders of the creek, which remain there during the greater part of the year, and intensify the stench arising from the vault. Such deposits, however, are limited to lots adjoining the creek, and to less than 20 residences.

In granting the nonsuit the court said: "In conclusion, the facts as proven on the part of plaintiff establish the existence of a nuisance disgusting and offensive to all persons who live anywhere in the vicinity of the trap or cesspool, as maintained by the defendant, and also to all persons who pass that vicinity. Divers persons who live in the vicinity have testified to the noxious odors and discharge from the cesspool, and of the discharge from the cesspool that is deposited for a long distance in the creek, and left along the creek, polluting the waters and creating a stench; that it is offensive to a great number of persons. There has been but one kind of nuisance shown, and it is common to the public and vicinity of the city in which the plaintiff lives. It may be that it is more offensive to plaintiff than to others, but the nuisance is of the same kind to the plaintiff that his neighbor suffers. If plaintiff is left to maintain this action, then the city may be subject to a like action by many other persons alike situated. The testimony shows that from one hundred and fifty to six hundred persons are alike affected, and about thirty-five families in a greater or less degree than the plaintiff. The nuisance complained of is a common public nuisance, as defined in section 3480 of the Civil Code. I think the motion for a nonsuit should be granted."

I think the court erred in granting the nonsuit. Section 3493 of the Civil Code provides: "A private person may maintain an action for a public nuisance if it is specially injurious to himself, but not otherwise." In the case of Sullivan v. Royer, 72 Cal. 248, 13 Pac. 655, a smokestack in the city of San Francisco, from which the smoke invaded private residences in the neighborhood of its location, to the annoyance and discomfort of the dwellers therein, was adjudged to be a private nuisance, for which damages were recovered, and which was ordered to be abated. The same effect is Tuebner v. Railroad Co., 66 Cal. 171, 4 Pac. 1162. In Gardner v. Stroever, 89 Cal. 26, 26 Pac. 618, it was adjudged that the owner of a slaughterhouse situated on the public highway, whose business was interrupted and injured by an obstruction of a road, was entitled to maintain an action for damages and an injunction against the maintenance of the nuisance. To the same effect is Hargro v. Hodgdon, 89 Cal. 623, 26 Pac. 1106, where it is said: "If a substantial right has been invaded, especially if the wrong be in the nature of continuing trespass, of such a character that its continuance will create a right against the plaintiff's estate, or operate to deprive plaintiff of a substantial right incident to her property, the nuisance will be abated, although the damage is merely nominal." The substantial right mentioned in the above extract means a substantial private right, as distinguished from a public right enjoyed by plaintiff in common with the public at large. The injury which may entitle a private person to maintain an action to abate a public nuisance must be an injury to plaintiff's private property, or to a private right incidental to such private property; and, where the injury is of this nature, the injured person may maintain the action, although the private rights of an indefinite number of other persons may be infringed and injured in the same way by the same nuisance. The distinction here attempted to be made is more clearly expressed by Bigelow, C. J., in the case of Wesson v. Iron Co., 13 Allen, 95, as follows: "The real distinction would seem to be this: That, when the wrongful act is of itself a disturbance or obstruction only to the exercise of a common and public right, the sole remedy is by public prosecution, unless special damage is caused to individuals. In such case the act of itself does no wrong to individuals distinct from that done to the whole community. But when the alleged nuisance would constitute a private wrong by injuring property or health, or creating personal inconvenience and annoyance, for which an action might be maintained in favor of a person injured, it is none the less actionable because the wrong is committed in a manner and under circumstances which would render the guilty party liable to indictment for a common nuisance. This, we think, is substantially the conclusion to be derived from a careful examination of the adjudged cases. The apparent conflict between them can be reconciled on the ground that an injury to private property, or to the health and comfort of an individual, is in its nature special and peculiar, and does not cause a damage which can properly be said to be common or public, however numerous may be the cases of similar damage arising from the same cause. Certainly, multiplicity of actions affords no good reason for denying a person all remedy for actual loss and injury which he may sustain in his person or property by the unlawful acts of another, although it may be a valid ground for refusing redress to individuals for a mere invasion of a common and public right." Besides the paragraph above quoted, the opinion is very instructive on the question under consideration, and should be entirely read. See, also, Stetson v. Faxon, 19 Pick. 147, as reported in 31 Am. Dec. 123, with notes; also, Wood, Nuis. §§ 602–605, and cases there cited.

In the case at bar the stench arising from the nuisance not only enters plaintiff's dwelling house through every open door and window, and deprives him and his family of the comfortable use and enjoyment thereof, and is deleterious to their health, but large quantities of the material from which the noxious odors arise are deposited upon his land near his house. Surely, all this constitutes a special injury to his private property, and private rights incidental thereto, which is not common to the public generally, nor to more than one-sixth part of the population of the small town in which the nuisance is located. I think the judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; HAYNES, C.

McFARLAND, J. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

HENSHAW, J. (special concurring). It appears by the complaint, supported by the evidence, that plaintiff suffered peculiar and special damage by reason of the deposit upon his land of quantities of offensive sewage matter. That the stench was more offensive where he resided than it was elsewhere, or that his family was exposed to greater danger of disease by reason of the nuisance, does not, in my opinion, constitute a special injury, but merely a greater injury of a general kind. But for the reason first above given, which is noted in the learned commissioner's opinion, I concur in the conclusion he reaches, and in the judgment of reversal.

I concur: TEMPLE, J.

BONNEY v. TILLEY. (No. 18,388.)

CORPORATIONS—DIRECTOR—PURCHASE OF CLAIMS.

1. A director has the right to take an assignment of a claim against an insolvent corporation for the unpaid purchase price of land, and enforce the same for the amount paid, and a judgment entered thereon will be prior to subsequent judgments, though the original vendor's lien be lost by the assignment.

2. A director purchasing at a discount an outstanding claim against an insolvent corporation can enforce the same only for the amount paid.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county; John Caldwell, Judge.

Action by John Bonney against Edwin Tilley to determine the priority of certain liens. Defendant had judgment, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

J. M. Walling, for appellant. P. F. Simonds, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. This is an appeal from the judgment entered in the case, on the judgment roll alone. The facts admitted by the pleadings and found by the court are in substance as follows: On March 7, 1893, the Midnight Gold & Silver Mining Company, a corporation, executed to the plaintiff its two promissory notes for the sum of $514 each, one payable four and the other six months after date, with interest. On the same day the said corporation also executed to one J. F. Cox its two promissory notes for the sum of $520 each, one payable four and the other six months after date. On August 20, 1893, Cox assigned his notes to the plaintiff, but no consideration for the assignment was paid by plaintiff. Thereafter, on November 24, 1893, plaintiff recovered two several judgments against the corporation on the said promissory notes, one for $1,128 and the other for $1,178. On March 10, 1893, the said corporation executed to W. H. Conly its promissory note for $14,188.80, payable on demand, and on the 16th of the same month Conly assigned the said note to the defendant, who paid him therefor the sum of $1,006 in lawful money of the United States. Afterwards, on May 13, 1893, defendant caused an action to be brought in his name, as plaintiff, to recover from the corporation the amount due on the note; and on May 24, 1893, judgment by default was entered thereon for $14,363.70, principal and interest, and for $6.75, costs of suit. On September 5, 1893, said judgment remaining unpaid, a writ of execution thereon was duly issued and placed in the hands of the sheriff of the county, with directions that he levy on, and sell in satisfaction thereof, the real property of the corporation, and on the same day the sheriff levied the writ upon certain real property of the corporation, which on October 20, 1893, after giving due and legal notice of the sale, he sold at public auction to the defendant for the sum of $2,500, that being the highest and best sum bid therefor. Thereafter the sheriff duly issued and delivered to defendant a certificate of sale of the land, and the defendant is still the owner and holder thereof. On May 11, 1893, Mary E. Gray et al., as plaintiffs, commenced an action against said corporation and said Conly to recover the sum of $1,300, and to foreclose a vendor's lien upon a certain portion of the real property of the corporation. The lien was claimed as security for the unpaid portion of the purchase money of the property, which was sold by the plaintiffs in the action to Conly on November 18, 1890, and by him transferred to the corporation. On August 25, 1893, while the action to foreclose the lien was pending, Mary E. Gray et al. assigned their claim and right to a vendor's lien to the defendant, and he paid them therefor the sum of $775. Thereafter defendant caused the action to be continued in the name of the plaintiffs, and on September 18, 1893, caused a judgment by default to be entered thereon for the sum of $1,519.90, and a decree foreclosing the vendor's lien upon said property. On September 27, 1893, defendant caused an order of sale to be issued in said action, and placed it in the hands of the sheriff of the county, and under it, after due and legal notice, the sheriff sold the premises affected by the foreclosure to the defendant for the sum of $1,619, and thereupon issued to defendant a certificate of sale of said premises, which he still owns and holds. During all the times mentioned in the complaint the said corporation was insolvent. On March 7th, when the corporation executed its notes to Cox, he was a stockholder and a director of the corporation, and he so continued until April 17th. On March 10th, when the corporation executed its note to Conly, he was a director and the president of the corporation, and he so continued until May 3d. And on March 16th, but not till after Conly assigned his note to the defendant, the latter became a stockholder and a director of the corporation. This action was commenced in January, 1894, and the prayer of the complaint was for judgment declaring the liens of plaintiff's judgments against the corporation superior and prior to the claims of defendant, as against the property of said corporation.

After stating the facts, the court below found as conclusions of law in substance as follows: (1) That the judgment in the case of Mary E. Gray et al. against the corporation was a valid judgment for the sum of $775, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the date of its entry, and was a valid lien upon the lands and premises mentioned and described therein, and was prior in point of time and superior to each of plaintiff's judgments against the corporation. (2) That the two judgments recovered by the plaintiff against the corporation were valid judgments for the sums, respectively, of $1,128 and $1,178, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum. (3) That the judgment recovered by the defendant against the corporation was a valid judgment for the sum of $14,370.54, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum. (4) That subject and subordinate to the lien of the judgment in the Mary E. Gray et al. case, to the extent of $775, with interest, the other judgments, with interest, were liens, equal in point of time, upon the rest and residue of all the real property of said corporation. In accordance with these conclusions judgment was entered, and from that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

It is claimed for appellant that the judgment is erroneous: (1) "In declaring that defendant is entitled to a prior lien for the sum of $775 on that portion of the property described in the judgment." (2) "In decreeing that defendant is entitled to enforce his judgment for $14,370.54 against the property of said corporation on an equality with plaintiff."

In support of the first point the well-settled rule is invoked that a vendor's lien is not assignable, and it is said that, conceding Mary E. Gray et al. were entitled to a vendor's lien, the sale by them to defendant of their demand against the corporation, before judgment, destroyed the lien, and no right to such lien passed to defendant. It is not denied that the claim of Gray and others was a valid claim for the full amount for which judgment was entered on it. And the court expressly found that in purchasing the claim, and in causing judgment to be entered thereon and sale to be made, "defendant was not attempting to prevent plaintiff from collecting from said corporation any amount owing by said corporation to plaintiff, nor to obtain an unlawful advantage or any advantage over plaintiff, and that no acts or act done by plaintiff were or are detrimental to the interests of the creditors of said corporation." Judgment on this claim was entered in September, 1893, and about two months later the judgments in favor of plaintiff were entered. If, therefore, that part of the judgment foreclosing the vendor's lien were eliminated, there would still be left a valid judgment which was a lien on all the real property of the corporation, and was prior and superior to the lien of plaintiff's judgments. In Mor. Priv. Corp. § 787, it is said: "Directors of an insolvent corporation, who have claims against the company as creditors, must share ratably with the other creditors in a distribution of the company's assets. They cannot secure to themselves any advantage or preference over other creditors by using their powers as directors for that purpose. These powers are held by them in trust for all the creditors, and cannot be used by them for their own benefit. It is to be observed, however, that a person who is a creditor of an insolvent corporation is not deprived of any of his rights as creditor by the fact that he also occupies the position of director of the company. He is merely incapacitated as director from using any of the powers of his position for his own benefit or the benefit of his codirectors." Under these circumstances, we fail to see that the court committed any error in adjudging that the defendant was entitled to a prior lien for the sum of $775, that being the amount which he actually paid Gray and others for their claim.

In support of the second point it is urged that, while defendant had a right to recover judgment against the corporation for the full amount due on the Conly note, the distribution of the company's assets should be made to him and other creditors ratably, and by taking into account only what he actually paid for the note, viz. $1,000. It seems to be well settled that directors of an insolvent corporation, who are creditors of the company, cannot secure to themselves any preference or advantage over other creditors in the payment of their claims. Hays v. Bank, 51 Kan. 535, 33 Pac. 318; Beach v. Miller (Ill. Sup.) 22 N. E. 464; Adams v. Milling Co., 35 Fed. 433; Hopkins' Appeal, 90 Pa. St. 69. In Cook, Stock, Stockh. & Corp. Law, § 660, it is said: "It is a fraud on the corporation and on corporate creditors for the directors to buy up at a discount the outstanding debts of the corporation, and compel it to pay them the full face value thereof. In such a case the directors may be compelled to turn over to the corporation the evidences of indebtedness, upon being paid the money which they gave for the same." We conclude, therefore, that the court erred in determining that defendant was entitled to have his judgment on the Conly note enforced against the property of the corporation, on an equality with the plaintiff, for the full amount thereof, and that he should have been limited to the amount which he paid for the note, with legal interest thereon. The judgment should be reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to modify its judgment or decree in accordance with this opinion.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to modify its judgment or decree in accordance with this opinion.

5 Cal. Unrep. 164

STOCKTON SAVINGS & LOAN SOC. v. PURVIS, Sheriff. (No. 18,386.)[1]

PLEDGE OF CROPS FOR RENT—ORAL AGREEMENT—RIGHTS OF CREDITORS OF LESSEE.

An oral agreement between landlord and tenant that title to crops raised during the term should remain in the landlord, and that the crop was to be put in warehouse in the landlord's name, and that from a sale thereof the landlord was to retain as rent an amount equal to the rent reserved in the lease, and turn over the balance to the tenant, is merely an agreement that, after the crop was harvested and stored, it should become a pledge for payment of the rent, and does not create a lien which would support an action of conversion against a sheriff for levying on the crop while growing, and seizing it under attachment against the tenant as soon as harvested.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county; William O. Minor, Judge.

Action by the Stockton Savings & Loan Society against R. B. Purvis, sheriff. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

H. G. W. Dinkelspeil and Stonesifer & Needham, for appellant. Nicol & Orr, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Action for the conversion of 1,770 sacks of wheat. The case was tried by the court, and findings and judgment were against the defendant, who appeals from the judgment upon the judgment roll alone.

The findings show the following facts: Plaintiff, a corporation, was the owner of certain lands in Stanislaus county, and orally leased the same to one Dallas for the term of one year at a cash rental of $2,140. That it was further orally agreed and understood between the lessor and lessee "that the title to said crops raised thereon during said term was to remain in said plaintiff, it being agreed and understood that the said crop was to be hauled to the nearest warehouse, and stored in the name of the plaintiff herein; that from the sale of said crop plaintiff was to receive as rent, as aforesaid, the sum of $2,140 cash, and the overplus, if any, was to go to and be the property of said R. Dallas; * * * and that no part of said crop should be in any way subject to the disposal of said Dallas." Under this oral agreement Dallas sowed the lands to wheat and barley with his own personal means, and received no advances of any kind from or through the plaintiff. Before the crop was harvested, Eppinger & Co. brought suit against Dallas and wife to recover the sum of $8,935.77, and caused a writ of attachment to be issued therein, and the defendant, as sheriff of said county, levied said writ upon the whole of the crop of wheat then growing upon said lands, and, after harvesting and sacking the same, removed it from said lands, and refused to deliver it to the plaintiff herein upon demand. Eppinger & Co. in due time obtained judgment against Dallas. The value of said wheat, after deducting the expense of harvesting and sacking, was found to be $1,417.56, and for that sum judgment was rendered for the plaintiff.

Appellant contends: First, that the plaintiff had no such title to or lien upon the wheat as would defeat the attachment; and, second, that the claim or demand served by the plaintiff upon the sheriff was insufficient in several particulars, and did not comply with the requirements of section 689, Code Civ. Proc., as amended in 1891 (St. 1891, p. 20). The tenant, under the terms of the agreement above stated, was the owner of the crop at the time it was attached. "A tenant for years or at will, unless he is a wrongdoer by holding over, may occupy the buildings, take the annual products of the soil, [and] work mines and quarries open at the commencement of his tenancy." Civ. Code, § 819. The rent reserved in this case was not a share of the crop, whereby the landlord would have been a tenant in common with his lessee in the crops, and so in possession by his cotenant; but it was a money rent at a fixed sum, not even dependent upon the value of the crop. If the crop had been a total failure, or had been consumed by fire, Dallas would still have been liable for the stipulated sum of money as rent. In Farnum v. Hefner, 79 Cal. 575, 582, 21 Pac. 955, it is said: "It is undoubtedly true, as contended, that the landlord and tenant may, by agreement, provide that all of the crops raised upon the land may be delivered to and remain the property of the landlord and be disposed of by him, and such agreement will protect the title of the landlord in the property as against an attaching creditor of the tenant. But it will be found, upon an examination of the cases cited by counsel, that in every instance where such an agreement is upheld it is made for the protection of the landlord in case of advancements by him, or for some other reason; in other words, there is some consideration shown for the agreement by which the title remains in the landlord." It may be further remarked that we find no case in which a verbal agreement is given the force and effect contended for by plaintiff. Besides, the claim or demand served by plaintiff upon the sheriff does not claim ownership of the wheat, or that it had any title thereto, but its claim was that said crops "were and are now subject to the lien of said Stockton Savings and Loan Society for rent reserved to the amount of $2,140, and that said Stockton Savings and Loan Society was, at and prior to the time of your attachment, and is now, entitled to the possession of the whole of said harvested crop for the satisfaction of the said sum of $2,140, secured by such lien."

[1] Reversed in banc. See 46 Pac. 561, 112 Cal. 236.

It is conceded by plaintiff that the statute gives no lien for rent reserved; nor was the alleged lien of plaintiff created by a mortgage of the crop, because a crop mortgage, though authorized by statute, cannot be created by a verbal agreement, or otherwise than as provided by law. At the most, it was an agreement that when the crop should be harvested and stored, it should then become a pledge for the payment of the rent; and, as this agreement to pledge the wheat had not been executed, the wheat was subject to attachment in the action of Eppinger & Co. v. Dallas. This conclusion, we think, is fully supported by Hitchcock v. Hassett, 71 Cal. 331, 12 Pac. 228.

Counsel for respondent have cited several cases which should receive attention. These cases are cited to the proposition that the agreement between the landlord and tenant may be so formed as to secure to the owner of the land the ownership of the products until the performance of a stated condition. This proposition need not be disputed, provided it be understood that the agreement in question is in such form as to effect the ends stated. In Howell v. Foster, 65 Cal. 169, there was a written instrument by which the plaintiff leased and demised the land to Mayfield for a certain term, with a covenant, among others, on the part of Mayfield, that he would till land, etc., and at the proper time would harvest and sack the grain, and thereupon deliver all of it to plaintiff, to be held by him as security for all advances made by the plaintiff to Mayfield; and said instrument further provided as follows: "And it is mutually covenanted and agreed that until such delivery and transfer by the party of the first part [plaintiff] all of said grain shall be the property of the said party of the first part, and the said party of the second part [Mayfield] shall have no right to dispose of any portion thereof." That case, as reported, does not disclose whether the lease was recorded, but the fact that it was in writing, and that it was to be security for advances does appear; and, as the landlord was to have a portion of the crop, whereby he became a tenant in common with the lessee in the crop, and through his cotenant was in possession thereof, the distinction between that case and this is apparent.

The next case—Wentworth v. Miller, 53 Cal. 9—is not in point, as in that case the lessee agreed to pay the lessor a part of the crop as rent, and to give the lessor possession of the whole crop until the rent should be paid, so that in that case also the landlord was a tenant in common with the lessee in the crop, and in possession by his cotenant. The same distinction also exists between this case and that of Sunol v. Molloy, 63 Cal. 370.

In Blum v. McHugh, 92 Cal. 497, 28 Pac. 592, there appears to have been a written lease. At all events, no case is cited where a verbal lease, with an agreement, also verbal, for a lien upon the crop to secure a money rent, has been held to be valid without possession taken by the landlord.

The agreement between the lessor and lessee did not even give the lessor a right of entry to take the crop; nor was there any provision in the verbal lease giving the lessor the right to the possession of the crop until it was stored in the warehouse in the name of the lessor. There was no provision for a re-entry. The only express condition which could be broken by the lessee was that which required the grain to be stored in the name of the lessor. A growing crop is necessarily in the possession of the party who is in possession of the land, whether he be the owner or the lessee; and, in the absence of a statute authorizing a mortgage of the crop independently of the land, it is difficult to see how such a lien can be vested in one not in possession of the land as will authorize him to pursue an action at law against one who takes the property. That such a lien may be created by a provision in the lease which is, in legal effect, a chattel mortgage, seems to be conceded by the great weight of authority; but in such case it is generally held to be necessary that the lease be recorded or filed as such mortgage,—in the absence of any statute giving effect to the lien,—in order to make it effectual against purchasers and creditors; but whether recording is necessary in this state need not be decided, since no case, here or elsewhere, that has been called to my attention, holds that a verbal agreement will create a lien in favor of the landlord which is valid against subsequent purchasers or creditors, unless he has obtained possession of the property upon which the lien was to operate. The judgment should be reversed, with directions to the superior court to dismiss the action.

ACTION FOR SERVICES—DURATION OF CONTRACTS—PERFORMANCE.

1. When a person performing labor at an agreed price and for a stated time continues in the same employment after the expiration of the term without a new agreement, it is presumed the terms of the original contract were continued, and it is admissible in evidence in an assumpsit to recover for the extra services.

2. A contract to give one's whole time as a draftsman to the interest of his employer, an architect, is not broken by doing a little work for other parties on holidays and at night, such work not resulting in damage to the employer.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Assumpsit by E. A. Hermann against J. H. Littlefield. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

James Alva Watt and Curtis Hillyer, for appellant. W. W. Watson, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action in assumpsit for work and services performed by plaintiff in assisting defendant in conducting and carrying on the business of an architect. Judgment went for plaintiff, and this appeal is prosecuted from such judgment, and from the order denying the motion for a new trial.

In the year 1887, the parties entered into a written contract, by the terms of which Hermann agreed to give his services "as a draftsman and assistant architect during the necessary and reasonable working hours of each working day, for the term of three years." Hermann also agreed "to devote his whole time and services to the interest of Littlefield's business as a draftsman and assistant architect, to use at all times his utmost reasonable exertion in and for the true and best interests of Littlefield's business, as if he were a partner with him." This agreement expired in due course of time, and plaintiff continued to remain in the employment of defendant, and performed the same character of services thereafter as before such expiration. By his answer, defendant claimed that plaintiff had made a substantial default in the performance of the terms of the contract upon his part to be performed, and asked for damages. The court, by its findings of fact, declared, in effect, that plaintiff had performed the contract as agreed upon, and further found that during the time of his employment he performed work for persons not clients of defendant, from which employment he had received the compensation of $178; and it thereupon deducted that sum from the amount found due to plaintiff, and ordered judgment for the balance.

It is contended that the court committed an error in admitting the original written contract in evidence. We think there is no weight in the contention. The writing was clearly admissible, as showing the terms of the contract under which plaintiff performed the labor. It is elementary that when a person performing labor at an agreed price and for a stated time continues in the same employment after the expiration of the term, without a new agreement, it is presumed by the law, in the absence of anything to the contrary, that the terms of the original contract are continued; and the fact that the present action is one in the nature of assumpsit in no way deprives the plaintiff of the right to introduce the contract in evidence. This principle finds full support in Castagnino v. Balletta, 82 Cal. 250, 23 Pac. 127.

The findings of fact as to the performance of the contract by plaintiff are fully supported by the evidence. We see nothing in the record disclosing any substantial breach thereof. Plaintiff appears to have done some work for other parties during Sundays, holidays, and at night; but the amount of this labor was trivial, with a single exception, and in no way resulted in damage to defendant, nor in any way interfered with his business. We see no more cause of complaint by defendant in this regard than though plaintiff had passed the time so occupied in harmless amusement. The court allowed the defendant the benefit of the money received by plaintiff from this outside work. Whether or not there was justification for this action of the court is immaterial upon the present appeal, for certainly there can be no cause of complaint upon the part of defendant based thereon. A modification of the judgment in this respect could hardly be desired by him.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

DEANE v. GRAY BROS. ARTIFICIAL STONE PAVING CO. (No. 16,000.)[1]

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—RATIFICATION—ESTOPPEL.

1. The mere fact that defendant knew that a physician was treating a third person, at the request of another, on defendant's account, and relied for compensation on defendant, and that it made no objection, does not render it liable to plaintiff for the services, on the ground of ratification.

2. Nor does it estop it to deny its liability.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Tenison Deane against the Gray Bros. Artificial Stone Paving Company, a corporation. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Fisher Ames, for appellant. Edward R. Taylor, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action by the plaintiff, a physician and surgeon, to recover the value of professional services alleged to have been rendered to one Barsotti for and under the employment of the defendant corporation. The "Gray Brothers" were the owners of a rock quarry, and George F. Gray and Harry Gray, being the Gray brothers, were president and vice president, respectively, of the defendant corporation. It is not our purpose to devote either time or labor to a detailed review and analysis of the evidence, for we have concluded that the judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded, for other reasons.

It appears that the plaintiff, in the first instance, attended the injured man at the solicitation of one Tesser, who was working in some capacity either for the Gray brothers or the defendant corporation, and the powers vested in him by reason of such employment it is unnecessary here to determine. Subsequent to the commencement of the plaintiff's services, Tesser informed one or both of the Gray brothers as to plaintiff's employment; and it further appeared that either the Gray brothers or the defendant corporation paid various bills for drugs, etc., ordered by plaintiff for the benefit of the injured man. There is also some other evidence likewise tending to some extent, at least, to show an employment by the defendant of plaintiff by an original hiring or subsequent ratification.

Upon the character of evidence of which we have presented a general outline, the court gave the jury the following instruction as to the law bearing upon the facts of the case: "It is an immaterial consideration whether Barsotti was or was not at the time of the accident to him in the employ of the Gray brothers or the Artificial Stone Paving Company (defendant herein). If the defendant employed the plaintiff to treat Barsotti for his injuries, or if defendant knew that plaintiff was so treating him on its account, and relied for compensation upon the defendant, and defendant made no objection thereto, then I instruct you that defendant is liable in this action."

The first part of the foregoing instruction in effect tells the jury that, as to the liability of defendant, it is immaterial in whose employment the injured man was at the time of the accident. If the principle of ultra vires is not in the case, the instruction is sound law, but certainly unsound if that question is properly presented for our consideration. In Fraser v. Bridge Co., 103 Cal. 79, 36 Pac. 1037, it was held that a moral obligation was a sufficient consideration to support a contract of this character. But in this instruction any consideration for the contract is omitted as a necessary element of the liability of the defendant corporation. Yet, even conceding that the defendant could prove ultra vires in the making of this contract upon a pleading presenting only a general denial, still there is no evidence in the record that this contract was ultra vires; and, in the absence of evidence to that effect, we must assume that it was within the powers of the corporation to so contract, for the law presumes in favor of the validity of contracts.

We then pass to a consideration of the remaining portion of the instruction, to wit: "Or, if defendant knew that plaintiff was so treating him on its account, and relied for compensation upon the defendant, and defendant made no objection thereto, then I instruct you that defendant is liable in this action." This statement does not embrace a sound principle of law, and necessitates a reversal of the judgment; and, whether it be claimed that such facts constitute a ratification or an estoppel, it is equally unsound. We do not see why the burden should be cast upon the defendant of making objections to plaintiff under the facts assumed by the instruction. Certainly, the mere knowledge of a corporation that some one, perchance a total stranger, has represented that such corporation would compensate a third party for services rendered to such stranger, casts no duty upon the corporation of taking any affirmative action. It was not for the corporation to disillusionize the plaintiff here as to the reliance placed by him upon the statements of the man Tesser, but rather plaintiff's business to substantiate Tesser's statements before rendering the services. It was no concern of defendant as to the truthfulness or falsity of these statements, nor any of its concern as to what anybody might say or was saying as to its responsibility for services rendered to third parties.

We conclude that knowledge upon the part of defendant that plaintiff was rendering services to the injured man, and also knowledge of defendant that plaintiff was relying upon it for compensation for the performance of such services, taken in connection with the fact that defendant, possessing such knowledge, made no objection thereto, are circumstances wholly inadequate to create a legal liability against defendant.

In re GROSBOIS. (Cr. 19.)

PRESENTMENT BY GRAND JURY—VALIDITY.

Const. 1879 omits all reference to presentments as a mode of charging a person with a public offense. Pen. Code, § 682, provides that every public offense must be prosecuted by indictment or information, except offenses tried in justices' and police courts. Section 872 requires the magistrate, after a defendant has been examined, to hold him to answer if it appears that an offense has been committed, and that he is guilty. Section 883 requires the magistrate, on holding him to answer, to return the warrant and depositions to the clerk. Section 809 provides that, when so held, defendant must be proceeded against by information or indictment. Section 1426 provides that all proceedings in actions before a justice's or police court, for a public offense of which they have jurisdiction, must be commenced by complaint under oath, etc. Held, that a "presentment" by a grand jury is unauthorized.

In bank.

Petition by A. Grosbois for a writ of habeas corpus to obtain his discharge from arrest under a warrant issued on a presentment by the grand jury. Petitioner discharged.

Peter A. Ruef, for appellant. Wm. S. Barnes, Dist. Atty., for respondent.

HARRISON, J. A grand jury that had been impaneled in the superior court for the city and county of San Francisco presented to that court the following document:

"The people of the state of California against A. Grosbois, in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, the sixth day of March, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-five. A. Grosbois is accused by the grand jury of the said city and county of San Francisco by this presentment of the crime of misdemeanor, to wit, renting houses for the purposes of ill fame, committed as follows [describing the acts constituting the misdemeanor], contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the people of the state of California. William S. Barnes, District Attorney, by A. P. Black, Assistant District Attorney.

"Names of witnesses examined, and the names of witnesses whose depositions were read before the grand jury on finding the foregoing presentment: James Gillin. John B. Martin."

The document was indorsed as follows: "Presentment for misdemeanor, to wit, renting houses for the purposes of ill fame. A true bill. W. H. Gagen, Foreman Grand Jury."

The court ordered the document to be filed with the clerk, and thereupon a bench warrant was issued, and the petitioner, having been arrested by the sheriff thereunder, has sued out a writ of habeas corpus to test the legality of his arrest.

It will be observed that the document which was presented to the superior court by the grand jury conforms in all respects, except in name, to the requirements of an indictment; and, except that it is designated a "presentment" in the body of the indictment, and is so indorsed, it has none of the characteristics of a presentment. A "presentment" is defined in section 916 of the Penal Code as follows: "A presentment is an informal statement in writing by the grand jury, representing to the court that a public offense has been committed which is triable in the county, and that there is reasonable ground for believing that a particular individual, named or described therein, has committed it." The present document is, however, a formal accusation by the grand jury, charging the defendant with a public offense. It is signed by the district attorney, instead of the foreman of the grand jury, the names of the witnesses examined are indorsed thereon, and it is also indorsed "A true bill" by the foreman of the grand jury. It is prepared upon a printed form for an indictment, and, where the word "indictment" is printed therein, it is erased, and the word "presentment" is written over the same. This change is indicated by the italicized words above. It is not necessary, however, to determine whether this document can be regarded as a presentment, since we are of the opinion, from other considerations, that the action of the grand jury was unauthorized. The chief distinction between an indictment and a presentment at common law was that the former was made at the suggestion of the crown, while the latter was made upon the knowledge of one or more of the jurors, and, instead of being indorsed "A true bill" by the foreman alone, was signed by all of the jurors. Blackstone defines a presentment as "the notice taken by a grand jury of any offense, from their own knowledge or observation, without any bill of indictment laid before them at the suit of the king." 3 Bl. Comm. 301. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25 (1), says: "An indictment is an accusation at the suit of the king, by the oath of twelve men of the same county wherein the offense was committed, returned to inquire of all offenses in general in the county, determinable by the court into which they are returned, and finding a bill brought before them to be true. But when such accusation is found by a grand jury, without any bill brought before them, and afterwards reduced to a formed indictment, it is called a 'presentment.'" Mr. Justice Field, in a charge to the grand jury (2 Sawy. 678), says: "A presentment differs from an indictment in that it wants technical form, and is usually found by the grand jury upon their own knowledge, or upon the evidence before them, without having any bill from the public prosecutor. It is an informal accusation, which is generally regarded in the light of an instruction, upon which an indictment can be framed. This form of accusation has fallen in disuse since the practice has prevailed, and the practice now obtains generally for the prosecuting officer to attend the grand jury, and advise them in their investigation." See, also, Case of Lloyd, 3 Pa. Law J. R. 60; State v. Darnal, 1 Humph. 292; Whart. Cr. Pl. § 86.

The constitution of 1849 (article 1, § 8) authorized a presentment by a grand jury as a part of the procedure for holding persons to answer for public offenses, and the criminal practice act that was enacted in pursuance of that provision (St. 1851, p. 212) provided for the finding of a presentment by a grand jury, and the proceedings thereon. Under that constitution the court of sessions had jurisdiction to inquire, by the intervention of a grand jury, of all public offenses committed or triable in its county. In 1862 the court of sessions was abolished by an amendment to the constitution, and the county court was invested with such criminal jurisdiction as the legislature might prescribe, and the district court was given jurisdiction in all criminal cases not otherwise provided for. Under these constitutional provisions, the legislature was authorized to prescribe the finding of a presentment, as well as an indictment, as a part of the duties of a grand jury, and the criminal practice act was intended to confer this authority. These provisions of the criminal practice act in reference thereto were incorporated in the Penal Code upon its adoption in 1872. The constitution of 1879, however, omits all reference to a presentment as a mode of charging a person with a public offense, and the provisions of the Penal Code upon that subject, that had been adopted with a view to the provision of the previous constitution, thereupon ceased to have any practical operation.

That the action of the grand jury in the present case was unauthorized further appears upon a consideration of the action required of the magistrate after the defendant has been examined. Section 872 requires him to hold the defendant to answer, if it appears from the examination that an offense has been committed, and that the defendant is guilty; and section 883 requires him, upon holding him to answer, to return the warrant and depositions "to the clerk of the court at which the defendant is required to appear." The object of section 872 is that the defendant be held to answer, and, when so held, he must, by section 809, be proceeded against by information or indictment. The provisions of section 682, however, that "every public offense must be prosecuted by indictment or information, except * * * (3) offenses tried in justices' and police courts," is equivalent to a declaration that offenses tried in justices' and police courts are not to be prosecuted by indictment or information; and section 1426 declares that "all proceedings and actions before a justice's or police court for a public offense of which said courts have jurisdiction must be commenced by complaint under oath, setting forth the offense charged, with such particulars of time, place, person and property as to enable the defendant to understand distinctly the character of the offense complained of and to answer the complaint." As the superior court has no jurisdiction to try a misdemeanor, and as there is no provision for a justice's or police court to try any offense prosecuted by indictment or information, it is clear that, under the present system, there is no function for a presentment by a grand jury, and no authority for the arrest of a person charged in that form with the commission of a public offense. The petitioner is discharged.

GIESEKE v. SAN JOAQUIN COUNTY.

(No. 18,358.)

STATUTES—TITLE AND SUBJECT OF ACTS.

Act April 1, 1878 (St. 1877–78, pp. 969, 986), is entitled "An act to create the office of commissioner of transportation, and to define its powers and duties; to fix the maximum charges for transporting passengers and freights on certain railroads, and to prevent extortion and unjust discrimination thereon." Chapter 3, § 9, provides that every person who shall fraudulently evade or attempt to evade the payment of his fare for traveling on any railroad shall be fined, etc. Held, that the subject of section 9 is embraced in the title.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Joseph H. Budd, Judge.

Action by E. Geiseke against the county of San Joaquin to recover certain fees alleged to be due constables for official services. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Gould & Baldwin and W. M. Gibson, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald and W. B. Nutter, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. Action to recover from the county certain fees alleged to be due constables for official services in criminal cases prosecuted under section 9 of chapter 3 of an act of the legislature entitled "An act to create the office of commissioner of transportation, and to define its powers and duties; to fix the maximum charges for transporting passengers and freights on certain railroads, and to prevent extortion and unjust discrimination thereon." The act was approved April 1, 1878, and took effect immediately. The following is a copy of said ninth section: "Every person who shall fraudulently evade or attempt to evade the payment of his fare for traveling on any railroad shall be fined not less than five nor more than twenty dollars." St. 1877–78, pp. 969, 986. The court below found that the services of plaintiff in criminal actions under said section 9 against persons for having evaded the payment of railroad fare was not lawfully chargeable to said county, and accordingly rendered judgment for defendant as to all that class of charges. The action was defended, and the judgment of the court is attempted to be justified here upon the sole ground that said section 9 is unconstitutional, for the alleged reason that the subject of it is not expressed in the title of the act. Without considering all the points urged by appellant, I think he is right in contending that the subject of the ninth section is sufficiently expressed in the title of the act. One branch of the subject of the act expressed in the title is "to prevent * * * unjust discrimination" in "charges for transporting passengers," and whatever may be conducive to this end is germane to, and within the scope of, the subject of preventing such discrimination. The following is one of the means provided by the act to prevent discrimination. The sixth section of chapter 2 of the act provides: "If any such company or any of its conductors shall permit any person whatever to travel free upon its cars except upon the exhibition of free passes issued as provided in said section [section 3], such company or conductor shall forfeit and pay for each offense the sum of $100." No doubt this is embraced in the subject expressed in the title; and, if so, why are not the means provided by section 9 of chapter 3, by which the companies and their conductors may more effectually prevent the evasion of payment of fares, germane to the same subject? In view of the heavy penalties to which the companies and their conductors are subjected for permitting passengers to evade the payment of fares, I think it was but just, as well as appropriate, and conducive to the same end, that the legislature also made the evasion of payment of fare by passengers a misdemeanor punishable by fine; thus enabling the companies and conductors more effectually to prevent such evasions, and at the same time depriving them of any reasonable excuse for not doing so. The case of Dyer v. Placer Co., 90 Cal. 276, 27 Pac. 197, is of the same nature as this. In that case it was held that a violation of section 9 of said act constitutes a public offense, and that a constable had a right to charge that county for his official service in arresting, transporting, and feeding prisoners charged with such offense. It does not appear, however, that the constitutionality of said section 9 was expressly questioned in that case, though it seems to have been necessarily involved. The questions expressly stated and decided are whether or not a violation of said section was a public offense, and whether or not the constable was bound to execute warrants of arrest for violations of said section. It is hardly conceivable that a violation of an unconstitutional act of a legislature constitutes a public offense. For further authority on the question whether the subject of the ninth section of the act is sufficiently expressed in the title, see Ex parte Kohler, 74 Cal. 38, 15 Pac. 436; Ex parte Liddell, 93 Cal. 633, 29 Pac. 251; Johnson v. Harrison (Minn.) 50 N. W. 923; Van Brunt v. Town of Flatbush, 128 N. Y. 50, 27 N. E. 973; Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 172 et seq. I think the judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

HIBERNIA SAVINGS & LOAN SOC. v. THORNTON. (No. 15,956.)

MORTGAGE DEBT—WAIVING SECURITY—ACTION ON NOTE.

1. Where a mortgage on its face purports to secure a note, the mortgagee cannot release the security, and maintain an action on the note. Barbieri v. Ramelli, 23 Pac. 1086, 84 Cal. 154, followed.

2. Defendant and his wife gave a mortgage to plaintiff on their homestead, which was community property, to secure a note. On the death of the wife, plaintiff neglected to present his claim against the estate, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1475, and the mortgaged property was set apart to the surviving husband. Held, that plaintiff could not sue defendant on the note.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society against Charles O'Neill on a note. Defendant having died pending the action, his executor, R. S. Thornton, was substituted, and, from a judgment for plaintiff, appeals. Reversed.

B. B. Newman, for appellant. Tobin & Tobin, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The defendant Charles O'Neill, and his wife, Elizabeth, executed to the plaintiff their promissory note August 24, 1888, and at the same time, for the purpose of securing its payment, executed a mortgage of certain real property, upon which they had previously made a declaration of homestead. The property was the community property of the said Charles and Elizabeth at the time of filing their declaration of homestead, and remained such until the death of Elizabeth. Elizabeth died March 27, 1890, and administration was had upon her estate in the superior court for the city and county of San Francisco. The plaintiff did not present any claim against her estate upon the note and mortgage; and on July 26, 1892, the superior court set apart the mortgaged premises to the defendant, Charles O'Neill, as the surviving husband. The present action is brought against Charles O'Neill upon the note alone, to recover judgment for its amount. The superior court held that, by reason of the failure of the plaintiff to present his claim to the administrator of the estate of Elizabeth, the mortgage lien was extinguished by virtue of section 1475, Code Civ. Proc., and rendered a personal judgment against the defendant for the amount of the note. The defendant has appealed from the judgment upon the judgment roll, upon the ground that the findings do not support the judgment.

In Barbieri v. Ramelli, 84 Cal. 154, 23 Pac. 1086, it was held that an action to recover a personal judgment upon a debt for which a mortgage security has been given, even though such security was originally valueless, by reason of prior mortgages which exceeded the value of the lands, cannot be maintained; that, if the mortgage on its face purports to be a security to the plaintiff, he must bring his action for its foreclosure. See, also, Porter v. Muller, 65 Cal. 512, 4 Pac. 531; Hall v. Arnott, 80 Cal. 348, 22 Pac. 200. In Hearn v. Kennedy, 85 Cal. 55, it was held that, when a mortgage is made by husband and wife upon a homestead which is afterwards set apart to the surviving widow, the mortgagee can neither maintain his action to foreclose the mortgage, nor have a personal judgment against the survivor, unless he first presents his claim against the estate, under section 1475, Code Civ. Proc. It may be that if the mortgagor's title to the land has become extinguished subsequent to the making of the mortgage, by title paramount, or if the mortgaged property has been destroyed or has ceased to exist (see Toby v. Railroad Co., 98 Cal. 490, 33 Pac. 550), the mortgagee need not go through the idle form of bringing an action for foreclosure before he can have a judgment on the note; but when the mortgagee, by his own act or neglect, deprives himself of the right to foreclose the mortgage, he at the same time deprives himself of the right to an action upon the note. He will not be permitted without the consent of the mortgagor to release the mortgage for the purpose of bringing an action upon the note. "He is not authorized to waive the security, and bring an action on the indebtedness" (Barbieri v. Ramelli, supra); and whether he release the security by some affirmative act, or by his neglect, is immaterial. In the present case the plaintiff neglected to present its claim, and have it allowed and paid out of the estate of the decedent. Whether, upon the facts as shown in this case, this neglect had the effect to release the mortgage lien, is immaterial. If it did have that effect, as it was the result of his own neglect, the plaintiff cannot rely upon such neglect as giving authority to bring an action against the defendant upon the note alone. If it did not have that effect, the plaintiff should have brought his action to foreclose the mortgage. The judgment is reversed.

CONDITIONAL SALE—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT—VALIDITY.

1. An executory agreement for the sale of property on condition that the owner shall not be divested of his title until the price has been paid is valid against third persons, in the absence of fraud

2. S. agreed in writing to sell to B. a number of sheep, the latter to pay a certain cash sum, and to take and "run" the sheep, and dispose of the wool for his own benefit, until he should make the last deferred payment, when he was to receive from the vendor a bill of sale. The title to the property was meanwhile to remain in S. After delivery of the sheep, and before the whole price had been paid, they were sold to defendants on execution against B., the purchasers having notice of S.'s claim. Held, that the contract created a conditional sale only, and that S.'s assignees were therefore entitled to recover the property.

Action of claim and delivery by J. V. Rodgers against H. S. Bachman and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Bradley & Farnsworth, for appellant. Davis & Allen, Lamberson & Middlecoff, and C. L. Russell, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. May 14, 1892, Jose Sefreno Silva was the owner and in possession of certain sheep then in the county of Tulare, and on that day entered into a written agreement with Joaquin Coelho Barberia and his copartners, which was signed and executed by all the parties thereto, and is as follows: "For and in consideration of the agreements hereinafter mentioned, I, the said Jose Sefreno Silva, of the first part, do hereby contract and agree to sell to the said Joaquin Coelho Barberia and Joaquin Goncafus Denes and Joaquin Coelho Dronellez and Jose Martins, all being copartners, 2,132 sheep, consisting of 902 lambs and 1,230 ewes, consideration to be paid as follows, to wit: $2,374.70 cash paid to-day, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged; the balance in two equal payments, $1,559.65 payable May 1, 1893, $1,559.65 payable October 1, 1893, all to draw interest at ten per cent. per annum, interest payable annually. It is hereby contracted and agreed by all parties that the said second parties are to take and run the aforesaid sheep until the expiration of the aforesaid named payments, free of charge to the said Jose Sefreno Silva; to have the wool, and sell or dispose of the same; to run the sheep,—it being further contracted and agreed that the sheep are to remain and be the property of the said Jose Sefreno Silva, and that the title of the sheep is to remain and vest in him, his heirs and assigns, until the aforesaid payments are made. It is further contracted and agreed that the said Silva is to give a bill of sale at the time when all the payments are made; and it is further contracted and agreed that in the event that the second parties desire to pay the said Silva on or before the time heretofore mentioned, together with the interest accrued, then he, the said Silva, hereby contracts and agrees to then make a bill of sale to the second parties or their order, or heirs or assigns. It is further contracted and agreed by the second parties that in the event anything should occur that they, the said second parties, should fail to cause the aforesaid payments to be made, or should fail to keep the sheep and their increase up to the present worth, then it is hereby contracted and agreed that the said Silva, his heirs, order, or assigns, shall have the power to take possession of this band of sheep at any time, and sell the same to best advantage, and apply proceeds to the payment of this contract, and, if any moneys be left, then same is to be paid to the said heretofore named second parties, their order, heirs, or assigns." On the day that the contract was executed the parties of the second part paid the sum therein recited to have been paid, and took possession of the sheep; and on May 2, 1893, they made the second payment therein provided for. They remained in possession of the sheep until August 8, 1893, when the sheep were sold and delivered to the defendants by the sheriff of Tulare county under an execution regularly issued against the said Barberia et al. In August, 1892, Silva sold and assigned to the plaintiff his interest in the sheep, and also assigned to him his interest in the above agreement. At the time of the purchase of the sheep by the defendants, and prior thereto, they had notice that the plaintiff claimed the sheep. The payment provided in the agreement to be made October 1, 1893, has not been made, and on October 4, 1893, the plaintiff demanded the sheep of the defendants, and on their refusal commenced the present action for their recovery, and under proceedings had therefor obtained possession of the sheep. The cause was tried by the court, who made findings in favor of the defendants and rendered judgment accordingly. The plaintiff has appealed directly from the judgment, upon the judgment roll alone, without any bill of exceptions.

[1] Rehearing denied.

It cannot be controverted that it was the purpose of the parties, when they entered into this agreement, to provide that the ownership of the sheep should remain in Silva until he should have received the price at which he had agreed to sell them. Neither can it be controverted that the owner of property may include in any executory agreement for its sale which he makes any conditions which he may desire to insert, and make their performance essential before he shall be deprived of his ownership. One who has the absolute ownership of property "may use it or dispose of it according to his pleasure, subject only to general laws." Civ. Code, § 679. The right of an owner to sell his property upon the condition that he shall not be divested of the title thereto until the price has been paid is not only not prohibited by the laws of this state, but has been frequently recognized. Kohler v. Hayes, 41 Cal. 455; Hegler v. Eddy, 53 Cal. 597. In Harkness v. Russell, 118 U. S. 663, 7 Sup. Ct. 51, may be found an exhaustive discussion of this subject by Mr. Justice Bradley, in which he has presented the history of the law in reference thereto, both in England and in the several states of this country, and in which it was held "to be established by overwhelming authority that, in the absence of fraud, an agreement for a conditional sale is good and valid, as well against third persons as against the parties to the transaction, and that a bailee of personal property cannot convey the title, or subject it to execution for his own debts, until the condition on which the agreement to sell was made has been performed." The question is always one of intention, and whenever, upon a proper construction of the instrument, it is apparent that it was the intention of the parties thereto that the sale should be conditioned upon the payment of the price, it is the duty of the court to carry out that intention. The agreement in the present action is purely executory, and contains no terms consistent with a purpose to transfer the title to the sheep before the price had been fully paid. It is distinctly agreed "that the sheep are to remain and be the property of the said Silva, and that the title of the sheep is to remain and vest in him, his heirs and assigns, until all the aforesaid payments are made." This intention to retain the title to the sheep was not defeated by their delivery to the vendees. The transfer of the possession of personal property does not convey the title, except in pursuance of an agreement therefor. The vendees became only bailees of the sheep, with the obligation on their part to "run" them until the time of the last payment, and as a consideration therefor they were to have the wool grown by the sheep. The vendees were not by the agreement under any obligation to make the payments specified therein, and in this respect the agreement differs in a marked degree from that involved in Palmer v. Howard, 72 Cal. 293, 13 Pac. 858, relied upon by the respondents. In that case St. Clair made an absolute promise to pay the price named in the instrument, and this was assigned by the court as one of the chief reasons why the agreement should be construed as a sale, rather than a bailment; whereas in the present case there is no agreement to pay the price, or by which Silva could have maintained any action against the vendees for any part thereof. If the sheep had perished or been destroyed without any fault of the vendees, the loss would have been that of Silva, and if he had resumed possession under the clause authorizing him to do so upon failure to make the payments, and upon a sale of the sheep had not obtained the amount of the agreed price, he would have had no recourse against them for the deficiency.

The provision in the present instrument that Silva was to give a bill of sale at the time when all the payments should be made indicates that the parties contemplated that until that time the title should remain in him, and in this respect also the present case differs materially from the agreement which was presented in Palmer v. Howard. In Kohler v. Hayes, 41 Cal. 458, it was said:

"The provision for the giving of a bill of sale upon the payment of the price of the piano indicated that it was not the intention of the parties that the title should pass upon the making of the agreement." We are of the opinion that the instrument in question created only a conditional sale, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the sheep from the defendants. The judgment is reversed, and the court below is directed to enter judgment upon the findings in favor of the plaintiff.

MECHANIC'S LIEN—TIME OF FILING—WHAT CONSTITUTES "IMPROVEMENT."

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, providing that if the contract, or a memorandum thereof, is not filed with the county recorder before work is begun, it shall be void, but that labor done or material furnished by any but the original contractor "shall be deemed to have been done and furnished at the personal instance of the owner, and they shall have a lien for the value thereof," does not relieve a claimant thereunder from compliance with other provisions as to the filing of the lien claim.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, provides that work done or materials furnished by any but the original contractor under a contract void for want of filing shall be deemed to have been done or furnished at the personal instance of the owner, and that the value thereof shall be a lien. Section 1187 requires every person but the original contractor to file his claim within 30 days after the completion of the building. Held, that the filing of a lien under such implied contract with the owner, prior to the completion of the building, was premature, and that the lien was not enforceable.

3. Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, requires a claim for a mechanic's lien by any but the original contractor to be filed within 30 days after the completion of the "building, improvement, or structure." Section 1183 enumerates the objects against which a lien may be enforced as "any building, wharf, bridge * * * or other structure." Held, that the word "improvement" embraced all such enumerated objects, or any one as a whole, except "building" and "structure," and did not mean the particular work done by a claimant, or the particular portion of any of such objects on which the work was done.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; F. W. Henshaw, Judge.

Action by Thomas Davis against Joseph MacDonough and another to foreclose a mechanic's lien. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank J. Fallon and Parker & Eells, for appellant. Edward P. Cole, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. The defendant MacDonough was engaged in the construction of a building in Oakland, and made several independent contracts for doing different portions of the work required for its construction, one of which was with his codefendant, McCarty, by which the latter agreed to do all the brickwork required in the building. The contract between MacDonough and McCarty, or any memorandum thereof, was not filed for record with the county recorder, and it was admitted at the trial that this contract was void. McCarty completed the work which he had agreed to do December 21, 1892, and the building was completed March 30, 1893. The plaintiff performed certain labor on the building under an employment therefor by McCarty, and on the 19th of January, 1893, filed in the recorder's office his claim of lien therefor, amounting to $1,486. The present action was brought for the foreclosure of this lien. Judgment was rendered in favor of the defendants.

It is contended by the appellant that he sufficiently complied with the statute by filing his claim of lien within 30 days after the completion of McCarty's contract, whereas the respondents contend that his filing it prior to the completion of the building was unauthorized, and that in so doing he failed to preserve his lien. The determination of this question is the only point involved upon this appeal. Section 1183, Code Civ. Proc., provides that if the contract, or a memorandum thereof, is not filed in the office of the county recorder before the work is commenced, it shall be wholly void, and the labor done and materials furnished by all persons except the contractor "shall be deemed to have been done and furnished at the personal instance of the owner, and they shall have a lien for the value thereof." If the contract is void, it is for all purposes as if no contract had been made; and the provision of the statute that the labor done shall be deemed to have been done at the personal instance of the owner, and giving him a lien therefor, makes it incumbent upon the laborer, if he would preserve the lien which is thus given him, to follow those provisions of the statute which are prescribed for preserving a lien when the laborer has in fact performed his labor at the personal instance of the owner. In Insurance Co. v. Fisher, 106 Cal. 232, 39 Pac. 758, Merritt was an original contractor, and under the express terms of the statute he could file his claim of lien within 60 days after the completion of his contract, irrespective of the time when the building was completed. Section 1187 requires "every person, save the original contractor, claiming the benefit of this chapter" to file his claim of lien within 30 days after the completion of any building, improvement, or structure; and when the labor is performed under a direct employment by the owner there is no original contractor. Sparks v. Mining Co., 55 Cal. 389. The provisions of section 1187 are universal, and, if there is no original contractor, embrace "every person," and required the plaintiff to file his claim of lien with the county recorder within 30 days after the completion of the building. Willamette Steam Mills Lumbering & Manuf'g Co. v. Los Angeles College Co., 94 Cal.

237, 29 Pac. 629. As his claim of lien was filed before the completion of the building it was premature and gave him no right of recovery. Roylance v. Hotel Co., 74 Cal. 273, 20 Pac. 573. As the owner is liable for the value of all the labor done and materials furnished in the construction of the building, and as suits to enforce the liens therefor must be commenced within 90 days after the filing of the claim of lien, there is a manifest propriety where there is no valid contract for any of the work, in requiring that the building should be completed before any claims of lien are filed, in order that they may all be adjusted in a single action. If claims could be filed prior to the completion of the building, it might happen that it would be necessary to institute actions for their foreclosure before the building was completed, and while other laborers who would be entitled to have a lien thereon would be precluded not only from filing their claim of lien, but from seeking its enforcement. But whether this was the purpose of the legislature or not is immaterial. It is the law as written, and we have no alternative but to follow it.

The contention of the appellant that the provision in section 1187 authorizing the claim of lien to be filed within 30 days after the completion of the "improvement" is to be construed as permitting the claim to be filed within 30 days after the completion of the particular work upon which the labor was performed is not only at variance with the language of the statute, but gives to the term "improvement" a different signification from that in which it is employed in other sections of the chapter. It must always be borne in mind that the remedy of a mechanic's lien is purely of statutory creation, and that the statute which creates the remedy prescribes, not only the mode of its enforcement, but also designates the objects upon which the laborer may have a lien for his labor. Section 1183 enumerates as the objects for which a lien may be enforced "any building, wharf, bridge, ditch, flume, aqueduct, tunnel, fence, machinery, railroad, wagon road, or other structure," and the labor for which a lien is given must be performed "in the construction, alteration, addition to or repair" of these objects, or one of them. In a subsequent portion of the same section these enumerated objects are grouped into "building or other improvement," and in subsequent sections they are designated as "building, improvement or structure." It is thus evident that the term "improvement," as used in section 1187, is intended to embrace the several enumerated objects in the beginning of section 1183 other than "building" and "structure." By section 1184 the notice provided in that section is to be posted upon the "improvement," and by section 1185, the land upon which the "improvement" is constructed is made subject to the lien. In all these sections—and others might be mentioned—the term "improvement" is evidently used as equivalent to the object upon which the labor has been performed, and it would be an unwarranted application of the term to construe it as equivalent to the labor itself, or to that particular class of labor for which the claimant was employed. The judgment is affirmed.

EMBEZZLEMENT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for embezzlement of a check, the evidence showed that one T. employed defendant as a broker to obtain a loan for him; that defendant went to complainant, who agreed to make the loan, and defendant was directed by her to attend to the matter of looking after the title to the land, and taking of a mortgage thereon; that defendant found the title satisfactory; that T. made the mortgage, and gave it to defendant, to be delivered to complainant on receipt of the money; that afterwards she drew the check in question for the balance in favor of defendant, who cashed it, and with the proceeds paid certain of T.'s obligations; and that defendant refused to deliver to complainant the mortgage until she settled with him for his services in the matter, and for certain other services which he claimed to have rendered her. Held, that the evidence was insufficient to sustain a conviction.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; B. N. Smith, Judge.

T. W. Van Sciever was convicted of embezzlement, and appeals. Reversed.

D. K. Trask, W. R. Bacon, and Carter & Pierce, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

VAN FLEET, J. The defendant was charged with embezzlement in converting to his own use a bank check for $1,075, the property of one Mrs. Anderson. He appeals from the judgment and an order denying him a new trial.

But one point need be noticed. It is contended that the evidence does not support the verdict, and it is clear that it does not. One Taylor desired to procure a loan of $2,200, to be secured by a mortgage upon land owned by him in San Bernardino county, and employed defendant, as broker, to negotiate the loan, and get the money for him. Defendant went to Mrs. Anderson, for whom he had previously loaned money, and with whom he had had considerable other business, who agreed to make the loan to Taylor, and defendant was directed by her to attend to the matter of looking after the title to the land in her behalf, and the taking of the mortgage. Defendant accordingly examined the land and the title, and, finding them satisfactory, procured the due execution of the mortgage by Taylor, and the same was given by Taylor to defendant, to be delivered to Mrs. Anderson upon receipt of the money. Mrs. Anderson did not have the entire amount required on hand at the time of the execution of the mortgage, but certain sums were paid over to Taylor, through defendant, from time to time, until a balance of $1,075 remained. Subsequently Mrs. Anderson drew her check in favor of defendant for this balance, to enable him to pay the money over to Taylor. Defendant cashed the check, and with the proceeds paid certain of Taylor's obligations. When Mrs. Anderson asked defendant for the mortgage, the possession of which he still retained, he refused to deliver it to her, until she should settle with and pay him for his services in the matter in hand, and certain other services which he claimed to have rendered her. She denied owing him anything, and, upon his further refusal to deliver the mortgage, procured him to be arrested, upon the charge of embezzling the check in question. This is the substance of the material evidence in the case, and, in our judgment, it wholly fails to establish embezzlement of the check. Defendant was the agent of both parties to the transaction. He was Taylor's agent for the procuring of the loan and the receipt of the money, and he was the agent of Mrs. Anderson in taking the mortgage. When the mortgage was executed and delivered to defendant, it was constructively delivered to Mrs. Anderson, and when the latter paid the money over to defendant it was a payment to Taylor, and the title to the check and its proceeds immediately passed from Mrs. Anderson to Taylor, and the former ceased to have any further property therein. It was, therefore, not the subject of embezzlement as her property, and the whole question as to the disposition made by defendant of the proceeds of the check, and as to his authority to make such disposition, about which a great deal of evidence was introduced into the case, was wholly immaterial. So far as Mrs. Anderson was concerned, if defendant was guilty of appropriating any property belonging to her, it was the mortgage, and not the check; but with that defendant was not charged. The judgment and order are reversed.

ROSE v. ROSE. (No. 15,960.)

DIVORCE—ALIMONY—COUNSEL FEES.

1. Civ. Code, § 137, providing that in divorce cases the court, pending the action, may direct the husband to pay, as alimony, money necessary to enable the wife to prosecute or defend the action, does not require the court to fix the entire amount of the counsel fees at the commencement of the action, but it may from time to time make allowances, as the case requires.

2. The mere absence from the record of the evidence on which an order for payment of alimony was based is not ground for reversing the order.

3. An allegation, in a complaint for divorce by a wife, that a certain sum was a reasonable allowance for counsel fees, does not prevent the court from ordering the payment of a greater sum.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; W. E. Greene, Judge.

Action for divorce by Maria M. Rose against Manuel M. Rose. From an order directing payment by the defendant of money for plaintiff's counsel fees, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

G. S. Langan and C. C. Hamilton, for appellant. E. M. Gibson and Welles Whitmore, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff brought this action against the defendant for a divorce, and, soon after the commencement of the action, the court, upon her application, made an order requiring the defendant to pay to her a certain sum of money as alimony, and $250 counsel fees. After the cause had been at issue, and the trial had proceeded for some time, the plaintiff made application for an additional sum of money for counsel fees. and the court made an order requiring the defendant to pay, on or before the 1st day of October, 1894, "as and for her attorney's fees rendered in this case, and for attorney's services to be rendered from this time up to the conclusion of the present trial of this action," the sum of $700. From this order the defendant has appealed, presenting the action of the court below in a bill of exceptions.

Section 137, Civ. Code, provides: "While an action for divorce is pending, the court may in its discretion require the husband to pay as alimony any money necessary to enable the wife to support herself, or her children, or to prosecute or defend the action." The amount which is to be thus allowed is necessarily left to the discretion of the trial court, inasmuch as the circumstances of no two cases are alike. The court cannot know at the commencement of the action the amount of labor that will be required, or the value of the services to be performed, in the prosecution or defense of the action on behalf of the wife, and there is no rule of procedure which requires it to fix the entire amount of counsel fees at the beginning of the action, or to prevent it from making allowances from time to time as the exigencies of the case shall seem to demand. Bohnert v. Bohnert, 91 Cal. 428, 27 Pac. 732. Unless it is made to appear that the court has been guilty of an abuse of its discretion, its order in this respect cannot be disturbed upon appeal therefrom. It was stipulated between the parties at the hearing of this application that the plaintiff had no means of her own, and it does not appear from the record that the defendant is unable to pay the amount directed. As the value of the services and the pecuniary condition of the defendant are elements entering into the determination by the court of the amount which it will direct to be paid, the court would naturally require some evidence upon these points; and unless it is made to appear that the order was made without any evidence, or without any opportunity on the part of the husband to be heard, and that it is of such a character as on its face to be inordinate in amount, it must be assumed that the discretion of the court has been properly exercised. The mere absence from the record of the evidence upon which the order was based does not authorize its reversal. The appellant must show that error has been committed. In taking the evidence for the purpose of fixing the amount of the allowance, the court is not trying an issue in the case, but is seeking for information as the basis of its order, and is not bound by the technical rules of evidence applicable to controversies between contesting litigants.

The court was not precluded from making the order by reason of the averment in the complaint that $350 was a reasonable amount to be allowed as counsel fees for the prosecution of the suit. The value of these services was no part of the plaintiff's cause of action, and need not have been named in her complaint. They were, at most, only the opinion held by her at the time the action was commenced, and which was subject to be changed by the development of subsequent circumstances. See Insurance Co. v. Fisher, 106 Cal. 234, 39 Pac. 758. The order is affirmed.

SMITH et al. v. HAWKINS. (No. 18,362.)

APPROPRIATION OF WATER—FORFEITURE BY NONUSER.

Under Civ. Code Cal. § 1411, declaring that an appropriation of water must be for some useful or beneficial purpose, and that, when the appropriator ceases to use it for such a purpose, the right ceases, not only the water rights, but rights of way for ditches, given by Rev. St. U. S. §§ 2339, 2340, over land which at the time of the appropriation belonged to the public, are lost by nonuser for five years,—the period for obtaining prescriptive title, or losing a prescriptive right by nonuser.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county; John Caldwell, Judge.

C. W. Kitts, for appellant. P. F. Simonds, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Action begun in October, 1892, to quiet the alleged title of plaintiffs to a dam, ditch, and water right for the diversion of the waters of Wolf creek in Nevada county. As early as the year 1862, one John Ross was in possession of the ditch, and sold water from the same. The ditch claimed by plaintiffs is two-thirds of a mile in length. Its original capacity was 457 inches of water, though it seems to be now so filled up as to be capable of carrying about 100 inches only. Plaintiffs claim in virtue of a deed to them executed by Ross in March, 1888, which, for the purposes of the decision, we shall assume was sufficient to convey his title to the property in dispute. Since the year 1875 taxes have been annually assessed against such property, and paid by Ross and his successors, the plaintiffs. In 1890 it was leased by plaintiffs to persons who made no use of it, but who paid two months' rental therefor, at $15 per month. Defendant owns a piece of land lying below the head of the Ross ditch and riparian to said creek. One-fourth of a mile of the length of such ditch is on defendant's said land, and was there constructed before defendant settled on the same. He having acquired title to the land under the federal homestead laws, the patent therefor was issued to him in 1891. In 1879 the defendant constructed a ditch tapping the creek about 50 feet below the Ross dam, and having a capacity of 200 inches of water under 6-inch pressure; and by that means, for 13 years next before the commencement of this action, continuously, uninterruptedly, with a claim of right, peaceably, and with the knowledge of plaintiffs and said Ross, defendant diverted such water to the extent of the capacity of his ditch, and used the same for agricultural purposes on his said land. For the period of 5 years and more next before the commencement of the action, the dam, ditch, and water right claimed by plaintiffs have not been used by Ross, or any one who has succeeded to his interest, for any useful or beneficial purpose. Neither he nor they have ever owned any property below the head of that ditch to which the water could be applied. For any purpose of profit, its use was contingent on its sale or rental to other persons, and this occurred very infrequently. The court found that plaintiffs are the owners of the property claimed by them; that enough water flows in the creek to fill both ditches to their full capacity; that the use of the water by defendant has not been adverse; that his rights to the water are subordinate to those of plaintiffs; and gave judgment in plaintiffs' favor. We think these conclusions are contrary to the evidence in several particulars.

1. The finding that, during the time defendant has diverted the water, an excess has flowed in the creek above the capacity of both ditches, finds support in an observation only of the judge of the court below, who visited the premises just prior to the judgment in the action (rendered April 3, 1893), and then saw water flowing in the creek as stated in the finding. This single observation, made near the close of the rainy season, is wholly insufficient to sustain the finding, in view of other uncontradicted evidence that during one season all of the water of the creek was taken in one of the ditches.

2. Plaintiffs' predecessor in interest appropriated water by means of his ditch, and conveyed it over and across the land of the defendant, which at the time of appropriation was a part of the public domain. While the rights of rival claimants and appropriators, as between themselves, had for a long time been recognized and adjusted, both by mining custom and adjudications in the state courts, it was not until 1866 that they met with federal cognizance and sanction. In that year the United States conferred upon those who had or who might thereafter appropriate water, and conduct the same over the public land, a license so to do; and further provided that all patents granted, or pre-emptions or homesteads allowed, should be subject to any such vested and accrued water rights, or rights to ditches and reservoirs used in connection with such water rights, as might have been acquired under or recognized by the act. Rev. St. U. S. §§ 2339, 2340. An appropriator of water under these circumstances, and while the land which he subjects to his necessary uses continues to be part of the public domain, is a licensee of the general government; but, when such part of the public domain passes into private ownership, it is burdened by the easement granted by the United States to the appropriator, who holds his rights against this land under an express grant. In this essential respect,—that is to say, in the origin of the title under which the servient tenement is subjected to the use,—one holding water rights by such appropriation differs from one who holds water rights by prescription. The differences are twofold: A prescriptive right could not be acquired against the United States, and can be acquired only by one claimant against another private individual. Again, such an appropriation, to perfect the rights of the appropriator, does not necessitate use for any given length of time; while time and adverse use are essential elements to the perfection of a prescriptive right. One who claims a right by prescription must use the water continuously, uninterruptedly, and adversely for a period of at least five years, after which time the law will conclusively presume an antecedent grant to him of his asserted right.

Section 811 of the Civil Code, discussing the extinguishment of servitudes, declares (subdivision 4): "When the servitude is acquired by enjoyment, disuse thereof by the owner of the servitude for the period prescribed for acquiring title by enjoyment extinguishes the servitude." That this section cannot in strictness be applied to rights under such an appropriation as we have been discussing becomes obvious when, as above pointed out, it is considered that there is no period prescribed for acquiring title to such rights. Section 811, therefore, deals with the extinguishment of servitudes resting upon prescriptive right,—a right vesting by reason of continued adverse enjoyment. Section 1411 of the Civil Code declares that the appropriation must be for some useful or beneficial purpose, and, when the appropriator or his successor in interest ceases to use it for such a purpose, the right ceases. This section deals with the forfeiture of a right by nonuser alone. We say nonuser, as distinguished from abandonment. If an appropriator has, in fact, abandoned his right, it would matter not for how long a time he had ceased to use the water; for, the moment that the abandonment itself was complete, his rights would cease and determine. Upon the other hand, he may have leased his property, and paid taxes thereon, thus negativing the idea of abandonment, as in this case, and yet may have failed for many years to make any beneficial use of the water he has appropriated. The question presented, therefore, is not one of abandonment, but one of nonuser merely, and, as such, involves a construction of section 1411, Civ. Code. That section, as has been said, makes a cessation of use by the appropriator work a forfeiture of his right, and the question for determination is, how long must this nonuser continue before the right lapses? Upon this point the legislature has made no specific declaration, but, by analogy, we hold that a continuous nonuser for five years will forfeit the right. The right to use the water ceasing at that time, the rights of way for ditches and the like, which are incidental to the primary right of use, would fall also, and the servient tenement would be thus relieved from the servitude.

In this state five years is the period fixed by law for the ripening of an adverse possession into a prescriptive title. Five years is also the period declared by law after which a prescriptive right depending upon enjoyment is lost for nonuser; and, for analogous reasons, we consider it to be a just and proper measure of time for the forfeiture of an appropriator's rights for a failure to use the water for a beneficial purpose. Considering the necessity of water in the industrial affairs of this state, it would be a most mischievous perpetuity which would allow one who has made an appropriation of a stream to retain indefinitely, as against other appropriators, a right to the water therein, while failing to apply the same to some useful or beneficial purpose. Though, during the suspension of his use, other persons might temporarily utilize the water unapplied by him, yet no one could afford to make disposition for the employment of the same, involving labor or expense of any considerable moment, when liable to be deprived of the element at the pleasure of the appropriator, and after the lapse of any period of time, however great. The failure of plaintiffs to make any beneficial use of the water for a period of more than five years next preceding the commencement of the action, as found by the court, results, from what has been said, in a forfeiture of their rights as appropriators. The judgment and order are reversed.

PETERS v. GRACIA et al. (No. 18,329.)[1]

BOUNDARIES—EVIDENCE—ADVERSE POSSESSION.

1. Where the best evidence of the location of a displaced monument in the boundary between two surveys is not introduced, but other evidence thereof is admitted without objection, a finding in accordance therewith is not without support.

2. Actual occupation of land up to a boundary fence will not give title by adverse possession, it being claimed by one of the owners that it was not the true boundary, and understood by both that the true line was to be ascertained by a survey.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; A. P. Catlin, Judge.

Action by George Peters against Annie L. De Rose Gracia and others to quiet title. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal. Affirmed.

A. L. Hart and A. C. Hinkson, for appellants. Armstrong & Platnauer and McKune & George, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. There are four certain swamp-land surveys in Sacramento county which are numbered, respectively, and extend in a continuous chain along the east bank of the Sacramento river, from south to north, in the following order: 147, 165, 282, and 173. The tracts 147, 165, and 173 were surveyed in the year 1858, and tract 282 in 1859; all under the act of April 21, 1858, providing for the sale, etc., of swamp and overflowed lands. St. 1858, p. 198. By section 11 of that act surveys of lands held by actual settlers were required to conform to the lines and boundaries established by such settlers. This action, begun April 23, 1892, is prosecuted by plaintiff, the present owner of said survey 282, to quiet his alleged title to a strip of land lying along the common boundary of said surveys 282 and 165,—the north line of 165 and the south line of 282. Defendants own said tract 165, and the question involved relates to the true location of said common boundary. At the time said surveys were made, it seems that one Watson was a settler on tract 165, and one Angus Ross on tract 282. Patents from the state for the lands were issued in course. In the year 1861 one Casselli became the owner of the land in survey 165. About 1869 he conveyed the same to the brothers Gracia,—Joseph and Manuel. Upon the death of both of them, a few years before the commencement of this action, their title passed to the defendants. Survey 282 was owned in 1861 by a person designated in the record as Miss Ross. She conveyed it to plaintiff in 1865. Of the four parcels mentioned, No. 147 was first surveyed, then the northwest corner of such tract 147 was adopted as the initial point for the survey of 165, thence the east bank of the river was meandered northerly, as the field notes show, "to a stake on the levee, at the end of a partition fence dividing Watson and Ross' land," and thence the line now in dispute, quitting the river, ran "with said fence south, 84 degrees 30 min. east, 65.39 chains," etc. When tract 282 was surveyed, the starting point adopted was the northwest corner of survey 165, viz. the stake at the end of said partition fence. At present a fence and ditch serve, and for many years have served, to delimit the possession of the two tracts, and these are claimed by defendants to be substantially on the line of the partition fence of 1858. The court found, however, that the old fence was destroyed by the freshet of 1861–62, which devastated that region, and was rebuilt a few paces further north, within the exterior limits of survey 282. From this fact and other evidence the court concluded that the true boundary is a little to the southward of the existing fence and ditch, and overruling, also, the defense of the statute of limitations interposed by defendants, gave judgment awarding the land in dispute to plaintiff. As to whether the fence which divided the two ranches was moved from the line it occupied in 1858, the evidence was sharply conflicting. Said Casselli testified positively that Miss Ross rebuilt it, soon after the flood of 1861–62, four or five paces further north than it stood originally. There was also evidence of parol admissions by Casselli while he owned survey 165, and also by the Gracia brothers while they held the title, that the land of plaintiff extended south of the then existing fence and ditch. True, there was testimony tending to disprove this theory, and some circumstances appear which, on the record as presented to us, do not accord well with that view; but the resolution of such conflict by the trial court cannot be disturbed here. The original monument which marked the boundary between the two parcels being thus displaced, it became necessary to ascertain such boundary by other means. For this purpose a survey made some months before the trial was admitted in evidence, without objection, which took as its starting point a monument in the boundary between tracts 282 and 173, the north line of plaintiff's land. The natural and obvious mode of ascertaining the disputed line was, it would seem, by first determining the location of the northwest corner of survey 147, the initial point of the original survey of No. 165, and thence running the lines of 165 according to the original field notes; for the south line of No. 282 was by the survey of 1859 made coincident with the previously established north line of 165. It was not proved that the northwest corner of 147 cannot be located from existing data. The late survey reversed the course suggested, and pursued a faulty method (Blackburn v. Nelson, 100 Cal. 336, 34 Pac. 775), one which would make good mistakes and imperfections, if any, in the original survey of tract 282 at the expense of the south line of that tract, when in fact that line was, relatively to the others, fixed and controlling; but, being received, it was evidence, though apparently not the best, of the location of the line in the place claimed by plaintiff, and the finding of the court in accordance therewith is not without support. It is countenanced also by the evidence of removal of the old fence.

We do not think that the court erred in overruling the objection to the testimony of Casselli, that in 1861, when he owned survey 165, Miss Ross, who then was owner and in possession of survey 282, told him that the fence was all on her premises. This, together with the whole conversation stated by the witness, was admissible as tending to show that the owners of survey 165 held in subordination to the claim of the owners of survey 282 that the latter extended beyond the fence, and with the understanding that the true line was to be afterwards ascertained. The evidence showed actual occupation of the premises in controversy by defendants and their predecessors in interest for a period of more than 30 years. But the court found that, up to a time within five years before the commencement of this action, it was well understood by defendants and their predecessors that the true division line between the two tracts was to be ascertained by a survey, and that until recently their possession was not adverse to the plaintiff. It was in evidence that an agreement existed, first, between Casselli and Miss Ross, then between Casselli and plaintiff, afterwards between plaintiff and the Gracia brothers, that the plaintiff's land extended somewhat further south than the fence and ditch, and that a joint survey would be made to fix the line. In such a case the statute of limitations does not run. Irvine v. Adler, 44 Cal. 559, Quinn v. Windmiller, 67 Cal. 461, 8 Pac. 14.

A good deal of evidence of statements made by deceased persons many years ago appears in the record,—for example, those of the Gracia brothers, to the effect that they did not claim the existing fence and ditch to mark the true line of their land; and appellants strongly urge the danger of relying upon this species of evidence when it becomes impossible of contradiction. The caution is just, but it addresses itself mainly to the trial court. In this instance the learned judge of that court saw and heard the witnesses, and their credibility was for his consideration. Moreover, he made a personal inspection of the disputed boundary, and we cannot say that his conclusions from the matters before him should have been different. The judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. THOMAS. (Cr. 35.)

CRIMINAL LAW—PRIOR CONVICTION—EVIDENCE.

Pen. Code, § 1093, provides that, in cases where the indictment charges a previous conviction, and defendant has confessed the same, the clerk, in reading it, shall omit therefrom all that relates to such previous conviction. Held, that it was error to admit testimony tending to show a previous conviction, defendant having confessed the same.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; John Ellsworth, Judge.

S. J. Thomas was convicted of burglary, and appeals. Reversed.

I. F. Chapman and W. F. Sullivan, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

HAYNES, C. The defendant was convicted of burglary in the first degree, and sentenced to imprisonment at San Quentin for 25 years, and this appeal is from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The information charged a burglary committed at the county of Alameda in October, 1894, and also charged a prior conviction of the crime of burglary in the superior court of said county on October 15, 1890. Upon arraignment the defendant confessed the prior conviction, and as to the offense charged in the information pleaded not guilty. Upon the trial a witness called on the part of the prosecution was permitted, over the objection of defendant, to testify to the following conversation which he had with the defendant after his arrest, and while the witness had him in custody, namely: "I says to the defendant: 'Ain't it a fact that you served two years in San Quentin from Alameda county, for burglary?' He said: 'No; I served two years in Folsom for burglary.'" The ruling of the court was duly excepted to, and is the only error relied upon.

Section 1158, Pen. Code, provides that the jury, if they find a verdict of guilty of the offense with which the defendant is charged, "must also, unless the answer of the defendant admits the charge, find whether or not he has suffered such previous conviction." Subdivision 1, § 1093, Pen. Code, is as follows: "If the indictment or information be for felony, the clerk must read it, and state the plea of the defendant to the jury; and in cases where it charges a previous conviction, and the defendant has confessed the same, the clerk in reading it shall omit therefrom all that relates to such previous conviction." From these provisions it is clear that if, upon arraignment, the defendant denies the prior conviction alleged in the indictment or information, that issue, as well as the issue raised by his plea of not guilty of the principal charge, must be submitted to the jury; but if, upon the arraignment, the defendant admits the previous conviction, all information touching a prior conviction must be withheld from the jury. The object had in view in charging a previous conviction is not for the purpose of evidence as to the commission of the offense upon which the defendant is to be tried, but for the information of the court, in determining the punishment to be imposed in case of conviction, as is clearly shown by sections 666 and 667 of the Penal Code. The record here does not disclose upon its face whether the clerk, in reading the information to the jury, read that part relating to the prior conviction. It must be assumed, therefore, that he complied with the provision in section 1093, which requires him, in reading the indictment to the jury, to omit therefrom all that relates to such previous conviction, and that, therefore, the jury were not informed of the prior conviction, otherwise than from the testimony of said witness. If the clerk had read that portion of the information to the jury, it would have been error requiring a reversal of the judgment (People v. Sansome, 84 Cal. 449, 24 Pac. 143), and no such error will be presumed. In People v. Sansome, supra, the defendant objected to the reading of that part of the indictment which charged a prior conviction, and to the statement of his plea thereto. The court overruled the objection, and the clerk stated: "That to the said charge of prior conviction, that the defendant confessed the same, and he was guilty." This court there held that the ruling of the court was clearly erroneous, and said, among other things, that "the evident purpose of the provision of the Code above quoted was to keep from the jurors all knowledge that the person on trial before them had been previously convicted of a criminal offense; and this is based upon the well-settled and familiar principles of law and right." In People v. Wheatley, 88 Cal. 117, 26 Pac. 95, it was said: "He may plead simply not guilty, and thus put in issue every material allegation of the indictment or information; or he may plead not guilty of the principal offense charged, and confess the previous conviction. If he confesses the previous conviction, then the clerk, in reading the indictment or information to the jury, must omit therefrom all that relates to such previous convictions, and no testimony in regard to them can be offered, or reference to them be made, during the trial."

In the case at bar, the defendant having, upon arraignment, confessed the prior conviction, or pleaded guilty thereto, there was no issue as to the prior conviction to which the testimony was applicable. It was not an admission that he had committed the offense upon which he was being tried, and was wholly inadmissible as evidence tending to prove the commission of that offense, while it thwarted the very purpose of the Code provision which requires the clerk to omit all that relates to the prior conviction when he reads the information to the jury. The admission of the evidence objected to was not only erroneous, but highly prejudicial to the defendant.

The judgment and order should be reversed and a new trial granted.

We concur: SEARLES, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are reversed, and a new trial granted.

HAWLEY v. GRAY BROS. ARTIFICIAL STONE & PAVING CO. (No. 15,909.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 13, 1895.)

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Charles W. Slack, Judge.

Action by Laura L. Hawley against the Gray Bros. Artificial Stone & Paving Company. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Fisher Ames, for appellant. Warren Olney, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an action to recover a certain sum of money, alleged to be due as rent, under a written lease. Judgment went for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Upon a careful examination of the record we are clear that the case, in all material respects, is identical with the case bearing the same title found in 106 Cal. 337, 39 Pac. 609, and upon the authority of that case the judgment and order are affirmed.

HENIGAN v. ERVIN. (No. 18,444.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 13, 1895.)

APPEAL—JURISDICTIONAL AMOUNT—APPEALABLE ORDER.

1. To determine the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court, the cost allowed a party cannot be considered.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 963, provides for appeals to the supreme court from a "special order made after final judgment." Section 964 provides that section 963 shall not apply in cases appealed from justice courts, except cases of forcible entry and detainer, and cases involving the possession or title of land, legality of a tax, etc., or in which the demand amounts to $300. Held, that an order denying a motion to strike out a bill of costs, on appeal from a justice court, in which the demand did not amount to $300, was not appealable.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county; W. H. Grant, Judge.

Action by George T. Henigan against H. Ervin. From a judgment for plaintiff on appeal to the superior court, and from an order denying defendant's motion to strike out plaintiff's cost bill, defendant appeals. Dismissed.

F. E. Baker and E. R. Bush, for appellant. R. Clark and C. W. Thomas, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. This action was commenced in the court of a justice of the peace to recover the sum of $222.20 for cord wood alleged to have been sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendant. The judgment of the justice of the peace was in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $169.95, and for costs amounting to $180.70. The defendant appealed from the judgment to the superior court, "on questions of both law and fact." A jury trial de novo was had in the superior court, which resulted in a verdict in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $22.20. Within the time limited by law, and before judgment was entered on the verdict, the plaintiff filed an itemized cost bill, amounting to $358.70, including the costs taxed in the justice's court. On the day of the filing of this cost bill the defendant gave notice that on a stated future day he would move the court "to strike out the costs claimed to have accrued in the justice's court, on the ground that plaintiff is not entitled to recover his alleged costs in said justice's court for the reasons that no verified memorandum" of such costs "was served on defendant or filed in said justice's court; and also to strike out the items of costs alleged to have accrued in the superior court, on the grounds that the plaintiff is not entitled to costs therein." And further gave notice that, in case the court determined that plaintiff was entitled to costs, he would move the court to tax the costs, "on the grounds that the costs claimed by plaintiff are erroneous, and that the disbursements claimed had not been made by plaintiff, and that plaintiff's memorandum contained items of disbursements which are not legal charges as costs in this action." But no objection to any item of the cost bill is specified, except as above stated. In the meantime, and before the questions as to costs were determined, judgment was entered on and in accordance with the verdict of the jury, reserving the matter of costs until after defendant's motion relating to that matter should be disposed of. Afterwards defendant's motions relating to costs were heard and denied by the court, and the full amount of plaintiff's cost bill ($358.70) was allowed, and inserted in the judgment, to which defendant excepted.

[1] Rehearing denied.

The defendant appeals from the judgment as at first entered before his motions relating to costs were heard or denied, and also "from an order and judgment of said superior court * * * allowing and adjudging that plaintiff recover of and from said defendant costs in said action, amounting to the sum of $350.70." The appeals are on the judgment roll, containing a bill of exceptions showing, substantially, the facts above stated.

The respondent moves to dismiss the appeals on the ground that this court has no appellate jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the cause, and I think the motion should be granted. The appellate jurisdiction of this court is defined by section 4, art. 6, of the constitution of this state, and it has no appellate jurisdiction, except such as is given by that instrument. Where the demand in suit is merely for money, as in this case, the supreme court has no appellate jurisdiction, unless such demand, exclusive of interest, amounts to $300. In this case the demand sued for is simply for money, and amounts to only $222.20. For the purpose of testing either the original jurisdiction of the justice of the peace, or the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court, the incidental costs of the plaintiff can no more be deemed a part of the demand than can the interest on the sum of money or value of the property sued for. Dumphy v. Guindon, 13 Cal. 30; Maxfield v. Johnson, 30 Cal. 545. As generally applicable to the question of the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court, see Maxfield v. Johnson, 30 Cal. 545; Gorton v. Ferdinando, 64 Cal. 11, 27 Pac. 941; Williams v. Mecartney, 69 Cal. 556, 11 Pac. 186. It has often been held by this court that, where jurisdiction depends on the amount in controversy, the ad damnum clause or the sum demanded in the complaint is the sole test. Dashiell v. Slingerland, 60 Cal. 653; Lord v. Goldberg, 81 Cal. 599, 22 Pac. 1126; Bailey v. Sloan, 65 Cal. 387, 4 Pac. 349; Solomon v. Reese, 34 Cal. 28.

It is claimed by appellant that the order denying his motion to strike out plaintiff's cost bill was a "special order, made after final judgment," in the sense of subdivision 2, § 963, Code Civ. Proc., and therefore is an appealable order. But the next following section (964) provides that "the foregoing section (963) does not apply in cases appealed from justices' * * * courts, except cases of forcible entry and detainer, and cases involving the title or possession of real property, or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll or municipal fine, or in which the demand, exclusive of interest or value of the property in controversy, amounts to three hundred dollars." The cases cited to this point are cases of which the superior courts, or late district courts, had unquestionable original jurisdiction, and consequently cases of which the supreme court had appellate jurisdiction, and therefore are not applicable to this case.

I think the appeals from the judgment and order should be dismissed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion, the appeals from the judgment and order of the superior court are dismissed.

In re PATTON. (No. 18,456.)

INSOLVENCY—PETITION BY CREDITORS—SUFFICIENCY.

1. Insolvency Act 1880, § 8, provides that a petition by creditors to have their debtor adjudged insolvent must set forth that he has made an assignment or transfer of his property with intent to defraud his creditors, or, in contemplation of insolvency, has made any payment, or transfer of his property. Held, that a petition is sufficient which states that a debtor has made a transfer of his property to a certain person with intent to defraud his creditors, and that in contemplation of insolvency he has made a transfer of his property to such person, with the circumstances of time, place, and general description of the property sold.

2. That a debtor has transferred his property with intent to defraud his creditors, and that he made such transfer in contemplation of insolvency, are facts, and not conclusions of law.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Glenn county; Seth Millington, Judge.

Petition by creditors of J. A. Patton that he be adjudged insolvent, and required to surrender his estate for the benefit of his creditors. From the judgment sustaining a demurrer to and dismissing the petition, the petitioners appeal. Reversed.

Jos. Kirk and J. H. Ball, for appellants. Charles L. Donohoe, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. The requisite number of the creditors of J. A. Patton petitioned the superior court of Glenn county that he be adjudged insolvent, and required to surrender his estate for the benefit of his creditors; and he was ordered to show cause why the petition should not be granted. In response to the order he demurred to the petition on the grounds that it "does not state facts sufficient to constitute an act of insolvency on the part of said respondent, and does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against respondent." The court sustained the demurrer, and, the petitioners declining to amend their petition, judgment passed for defendant, dismissing the petition, and for costs. The petitioners bring this appeal upon the judgment roll.

The petition states two grounds, or acts of the respondent, upon which the petitioners pray that he may be adjudged insolvent, as follows: First. "That said J. A. Patton did heretofore, to wit, on or about the 20th day of July, 1894, at the town of Willows, county of Glenn, state of California, make a transfer of his property with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud his creditors; that is to say, being then and there possessed of a stock of merchandise, consisting of dry goods, fancy goods, and furnishing goods, boots and shoes, clothing, hats and caps, groceries and tobacco, and similar goods, contained in his store conducted by him at said town of Willows, being indebted to the petitioners herein, the said respondent, J. A. Patton, did transfer said stock of merchandise and property unto one R. D. Fry, with the intent aforesaid. That said J. A. Patton was, and at all the time herein mentioned and now is, insolvent, and has not sufficient property with which to satisfy the claims and demands of petitioners." Second. "That said respondent, on or about the 20th day of July, 1894, at the town of Willows, county of Glenn, state aforesaid, being insolvent and in contemplation of insolvency, did make a grant, sale, conveyance, and transfer of a certain stock of merchandise, consisting of dry goods, fancy goods, and furnishing goods, boots and shoes, clothing, hats and caps, groceries and tobacco, and similar goods, then and there belonging to and used in the business conducted by him at said Willows, unto one R. D. Fry. That said respondent, J. A. Patton, was at all the time herein mentioned, and now is, insolvent, and has not sufficient property with which to satisfy the claims and demands of petitioners." The only deficiency attributed to the petition by respondent is "that the allegations of fraud as set out in the creditors' petition merely state conclusions of law, and are not sufficiently specific as to the facts and circumstances constituting the fraud." Section 8 of the insolvent act of 1880 provides what the creditors' petition must set forth as acts for which a person may be adjudged insolvent. Among them are the following: That he "has made any assignment, gift, sale, conveyance or transfer of his estate, property, rights or credits with intent to delay, defraud or hinder his creditors; or, in contemplation of insolvency, has made any payment, gift, grant, sale, conveyance or transfer of his estate, property, rights or credits." That the respondent did make a transfer of his property to one R. D. Fry with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud his creditors, and that, in contemplation of insolvency, he did make a grant, sale, conveyance, and transfer of his property to said Fry, are specifically stated in the petition, with the circumstances of time, place, and general description of the property sold. This was in full compliance with section 8 of the insolvent act, which prescribes what the petition must set forth. It is also entirely in accord with the practice in bankruptcy cases in the federal courts under the United States bankrupt law, substantially the same as section 8 of the insolvent act of this state. See form No. 54; Bump, Bankr. p. 933. No authority applicable to insolvency or bankruptcy cases has been cited by counsel for respondent which would sustain the demurrer in this case; the cases cited being only the ordinary actions in which relief is sought on the ground of fraud actually committed, and in which the pleading is governed by the general law of pleading, and not by a statute enacted for a special class of cases, which prescribes what facts the pleading shall set forth, as does the eighth section of the insolvent act. Besides, no fraud is necessary to constitute a majority of the acts enumerated in section 8 of the insolvent act, for which a person may be adjudged an insolvent; and at least one of such acts is charged in the petition under consideration, viz. that, "in contemplation of insolvency," the respondent sold and conveyed his property, etc. Each of the acts enumerated in said section, as well as the intention with which it was done, is a fact, and not a conclusion of law, as contended by counsel of respondent. Surely, the selling of one's property with the intent to delay creditors is a fact, upon proof of which the seller may be adjudged an insolvent; and the petition sufficiently states this fact. I think the judgment should be reversed, and the court below instructed to overrule the demurrer.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, and the court below is instructed to overrule the demurrer.

COSBY v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY. (S. F. 135.)

CONTEMPT — WHAT CONSTITUTES — VIOLATION OF NUNC PRO TUNC ORDER—VOID JUDGMENT—REMEDY.

1. In an action to establish a trust in land, the decree directed that on payment of a specified sum by plaintiffs on or before July 31, 1893, defendant should convey to plaintiffs the land, but that, "unless plaintiffs shall pay or tender said sum to" defendant on or before such day, all the "interest of plaintiffs, or either of them, in and to the said contract and premises hereinbefore mentioned, shall cease and be at an end," etc. Prior to such date, plaintiffs made an absolute assignment of their interest; but on August 1, 1893, it was reassigned to them, and on the next day they tendered such sum to defendant, who refused to convey because the tender came too late. January 25, 1895, they made another tender, which was refused. April 2, 1895, the court directed an order nunc pro tunc as of August 1, 1893, extending the time three days in which plaintiffs might tender such sum, on the ground that it had orally announced on August 1, 1893, that the time would be so extended. Held, that defendant was not guilty of contempt, because his refusal to accept such tender and convey the land was disobedience of the decree as amended by such nunc pro tunc order.

2. Where a court, without jurisdiction, adjudges a person guilty of contempt for refusing to comply with its decree, but temporarily suspends the execution of the judgment, prohibition is the proper remedy to test the validity thereof.

In bank.

Petition by James F. Cosby for a writ of prohibition to prevent the superior court of Los Angeles county, department 6, J. W. McKinley, judge, from proceeding to enforce against petitioner a judgment convicting him of contempt. Writ granted.

John D. Pope, for petitioner. Geo. R. Du Bois, Bicknell & Trask, and T. M. Stewart, for respondent.

VAN FLEET, J. Application for prohibition to prevent respondent from proceeding to enforce against petitioner a judgment convicting him of contempt for refusal to comply with a decree of said court. The material facts appearing from the very voluminous petition and answer may be briefly stated thus: John C. Kofoed and Lillie H. Kofoed brought an action in said superior court against the petitioner, Cosby, and one Samuel B. Gordon, alleging that said Gordon, while employed and acting as their attorney for the purpose, among others, of procuring the settlement and satisfaction of a certain judgment held by said Cosby against the Kofoeds, entered into a contract with Cosby, without the knowledge of the Kofoeds, whereby it was agreed that for a consideration of $200, to be paid Cosby by Gordon, Cosby should assign said judgment to Gordon for the latter's own benefit; that under this agreement Cosby retained the title to the judgment in his own name, and, at the direction of Gordon, procured an execution to be issued thereunder, and levied upon certain real estate of the Kofoeds, which was sold thereunder, and the title bought in by Cosby, to be held by him for Gordon until the latter should pay the said consideration of $200; and they prayed that Gordon be held their trustee as to all rights acquired by him under said agreement.

As a result of the trial of said action, a decree was entered in said court, by which it was adjudged that Gordon held whatever rights he had acquired under his contract with Cosby for the benefit of the Kofoeds, and that the latter should be held subrogated to all the rights of Gordon thereunder, provided they should pay or tender to Gordon on or before the 31st day of July, 1893, the sum of $79.50, paid out by Gordon in the transaction; and further directed that upon the payment or tender by the Kofoeds to Cosby of said consideration of $200, agreed to be paid him by Gordon, Cosby should receive the same in full satisfaction of said judgment so assigned by him to Gordon, and should convey to the Kofoeds the real property bought in by him at said execution sale. The decree expressly provided "that unless the plaintiff shall pay or tender said sum to the said James F. Cosby, and shall also pay to the said Gordon the sums hereinbefore mentioned as payable to him, all on or before the 31st day of July, 1893, all the right, title, and interest of plaintiffs, or either of them, in and to the said contract and premises hereinbefore mentioned, shall cease and be at an end, and thereupon and thereafter neither the said Gordon nor the said Cosby shall be held as trustee for plaintiffs, or either of them, with respect to any of the matters mentioned in this decree."

Intermediate the entry of said decree, which was on July 17, 1893, and the 31st day of July, 1893, the Kofoeds made an absolute transfer and assignment of their rights and interest under said decree to one Bradshaw. On the last-named date, Bradshaw tendered to and offered to pay Gordon and Cosby the amounts respectively required by the decree, but coupled with such tender the condition that Cosby and Gordon execute a conveyance which in its terms was not in accord with the directions and requirements of said decree, and, by reason of this condition, said tender was refused. Thereupon, on the same date, Bradshaw procured from said court a citation against Gordon and Cosby to show cause on the next day, August 1st, why they should not be held guilty of contempt for disobedience of said decree. A hearing on said citation was accordingly had, but Gordon and Cosby were held not guilty of contempt in the premises, and the rule was discharged. Thereafter, on August 2, 1893, the Kofoeds, who had on August 1st received a reassignment from Bradshaw of their rights under the decree, themselves made a tender, which it seems to be conceded was, except as to the matter of time, in conformity with the decree. This tender was, however, refused, upon the ground that it came too late, and that the rights of the Kofoeds under the terms of the decree were forfeited and lost. About this time Cosby and Gordon took an appeal from said decree to this court, but it does not appear that such appeal was so perfected as to stay proceedings under the decree, and subsequently the appeal was voluntarily dismissed. No further steps appear to have been taken by the Kofoeds in the matter until on or about the 25th day of January, 1895, when they caused a notice in writing to be served upon Cosby and Gordon of their readiness, and renewing their offer to pay the amounts required by the decree, with interests, etc., upon the execution of the required instruments of conveyance. This offer being likewise refused, upon the ground that it came too late, the Kofoeds sued out a second citation against Cosby and Gordon; requiring them to show cause before said superior court on the 2d day of April, 1895, why they should not be punished for contempt in refusing to comply with said decree. Up to this time the decree had remained of record as originally entered, requiring the payment or tender of the amounts specified therein to be made on or before July 31, 1893, in default of which the rights of the Kofoeds thereunder should be held forfeited, and there was nothing of any character appearing upon the records of said court to indicate or publish the fact that any change or modification in its terms had ever been had or attempted therein. Upon the hearing of said last-mentioned citation, however, there was evidence offered and received by the court, on behalf of the Kofoeds, tending to show that at the hearing of the first citation for contempt, above noted, had on August 1, 1893, the judge of said court had announced orally from the bench that he would grant the Kofoeds three days' further time from said 31st day of July, named in the decree, within which to make a further tender, but that the clerk had failed to make any note of such suggestion or order. This evidence was controverted by evidence on behalf of Cosby and Gordon tending to show that no such order or suggestion had been made, and that, if made, the latter never had or received any knowledge thereof; but the court, on said April 2, 1895, directed its clerk to enter an order nunc pro tunc as of August 1, 1893, granting to said Kofoeds such extension of three days. Thereupon the court proceeded with the hearing of said citation, and found the petitioner guilty of contempt in failing to comply with said decree, as thus modified by said nunc pro tunc order, and adjudged that petitioner pay a fine, and, in addition, be incarcerated in the county jail until he should comply with the requirements of said decree. The execution of the judgment having been temporarily suspended by the court, petitioner has sued out this writ to prohibit further proceedings thereunder, claiming that the action of the court in the premises was beyond its jurisdiction and void.

We are of opinion that the position of the petitioner must be sustained. It is contended with much force that the superior court had no authority to change or amend its decree at the time and in the manner attempted by the order made from the bench on August 1, 1893, extending the time of the Kofoeds for making tender thereunder. There is no question as to the power of the court at all times, in a proper case, to direct any amendment or correction in a judgment, to the end that the judgment as entered may express that which was rendered, and the record thus made to speak the fact. Mere clerical misprisions or omissions are subject to the correction of the court at any time by an order entered for that purpose. But the act of the court in this instance does not fall within that category. There was here no question but that the judgment, as entered, was exactly that rendered by the court in the first instance. The attempt made was to work a material modification and change in the terms of the decree affecting the rights of the parties thereunder, without formal motion therefor, and more than 10 days after its entry, and that at a time when, by the strict terms of the decree, the parties in whose favor the modification was made had forfeited their rights thereunder. In fact, at the date when the allotted time within which a tender was to be made elapsed, the rights of those parties in the premises were vested in a third party, and they had at that time no interest therein. Furthermore, time would appear to have been made of the essence of the right given under the decree. By the decree, if the payment or tender was not made on or before the 31st day of July, 1893, "all the right, title, and interest of plaintiffs, or either of them, in and to the said contract and premises, * * * shall cease and be at an end," etc. That such limitation may be put by the court upon the exercise of such right, and the parties concluded thereby, there is no doubt. Seventy-Six Land & Water Co. v. Superior Court, 93 Cal. 139, 142, 28 Pac. 813.

These considerations render it extremely doubtful as to the power of the court to make said modification at the time and in the manner attempted; but, in the view we take, it is unnecessary to determine that question. Assuming that, as contended by respondent, its general power over its judgment is such that the order in question, although possibly erroneous, is not void, there is yet an obvious reason why the action of the court in convicting petitioner of contempt cannot be sustained. While the recitals of the contempt judgment are somewhat vague and general, and such as to leave it in doubt upon which particular act petitioner's contempt is based, it must of necessity rest upon one of the offers or tenders made subsequent to the order extending the time. While the attempted tender of Bradshaw is like the others recited in the judgment, it is perfectly obvious that no contempt could be predicated of that tender, since it was clearly insufficient, and petitioner was not in fault in rejecting it. In fact, the order of the court in discharging him from the charge of contempt based upon that refusal manifestly proceeded upon that theory. The contempt, therefore, must consist in petitioner's refusal to accept either the offer of August 2, 1893, or that of January 25, 1895. As we have seen, at the date of these tenders there was no record evidence of any extension of the time for making such tender, but the decree stood unchanged as originally entered. It cannot be that one can be held guilty of a constructive contempt for refusing to comply with a direction or provision having no tangible existence of record, but consisting of a mere verbal announcement. Contempt of court is a specific criminal offense (Ex parte Gould, 99 Cal. 360, 33 Pac. 1112, and cases there cited); and it would be departing widely from the rule which so sacredly guards the personal liberty of the citizen to hold that a person may be convicted and punished criminally for a violation of a rule or direction having, if anything, but a mere potential existence. Decrees of court are required to be in writing, and remain of record, and those affected thereby have a right to stand by such record. It was necessary, if the court had power under the circumstances to change the decree in the particular in question, to have such change made of record, and knowledge thereof brought home to the petitioner on making the subsequent tender. Until that was done, the petitioner had a right to regard the decree as entered as the final direction of the court in the premises.

Some question seems to be made as to prohibition being the proper remedy, but, under the circumstances of this case, we have no doubt that it is. It is conceded that there is no appeal, and the judgment of contempt, although entered, has not yet been carried out or executed. In Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 327, 24 Pac. 121, the office of this writ is exhaustively discussed; and it is there held that, while the operation of the writ is primarily and principally preventive rather than remedial, and is excluded where the action of the inferior tribunal is fully completed, and nothing remains to be done under its void order, yet, if its action is only partially and not fully completed, further proceedings may be stayed by prohibition.

In the view we have taken of the question discussed, the various other objections to the validity of the judgment in question need not be here considered. It results that a peremptory writ should issue as prayed; and it is so ordered.

HAINES et al. v. SNEDIGAR. (Sac. No. 27.)

ACTION ON NOTE—DEFENSE—CROSS-EXAMINATION —BURDEN OF PROOF.

1. In an action on a note for the price of a harvester, a subsequent contract pleaded by defendant in avoidance, whereby the payees were to extend the time of payment until the next harvest, and put the machine in working order, cannot be shown on plaintiff's cross-examination.

2. If such agreement were properly in evidence, it was error to direct a nonsuit, as defendant was bound to prove either that the next harvest had not arrived, or that, if it had passed, plaintiff had failed to put the machine in working order.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Joseph H. Budd, Judge.

Action by George W. Haines and another against R. R. Snedigar on a note. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

P. J. Hazen and Jas. A. Louttit, for appellants. Minor & Ashley, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an action upon a promissory note dated June 10, 1892, made by the defendant, who is respondent here, payable to Houser, Haines & Knight, or order, October 1, 1892, and by them indorsed to plaintiffs. At the trial, the court, on motion of defendant, entered a judgment of nonsuit against the plaintiffs, who appeal from the judgment.

The complaint was in the ordinary form upon a promissory note. The answer admitted the making of the note by defendant, and its assignment to plaintiffs, and, by way of avoidance, pleaded that the note was given in part payment of a harvester purchased by defendant from the payees of the note, which harvester was warranted by the vendors to do good work, etc.; that thereafter, and on August 6, 1892, a contract in writing was entered into between the parties, by the terms of which it was agreed that the assignors of plaintiffs would let the note stand until the next harvest (harvest of 1893), and, if the vendors put the harvester in order to do good work, defendant would then pay the note, otherwise the note was to be returned to defendant with $200, for an old machine received from said defendant; that the vendors did not put the harvester in order to do good work; that defendant demanded his note and the $200, which demand was not complied with, etc.; and that the plaintiffs had notice of all the facts, etc. The foregoing is only the substance of the answer, which was pleaded in three separate counts, setting out the written contract, etc.

At the trial, plaintiffs' counsel called as a witness G. W. Haines, one of the plaintiffs, who presented the promissory note, and said it belonged to plaintiffs, and was signed by defendant; whereupon it was admitted in evidence, and the witness added, "No part of that note has been paid." On cross-examination the witness testified that the consideration of the note was a harvester. "This note and an old 'Young' machine, given to us by Mr. Snedigar as part pay, made up the price. I don't remember what the old machine was rated at; probably $300." Defendant's counsel was then permitted, against the objection of plaintiffs, to prove that, after the execution of the note, a new agreement was entered into between the parties, which agreement was produced, its execution proven, and thereupon it was, against the objection of plaintiffs, admitted in evidence.

The written agreement is as follows:

"Stockton, Cal., Aug. 6, 1892. Messrs. Houser, Haines & Knight—Dear Sirs: I hereby make you this proposition, as a settlement for the harvester that I now have on my ranch: That, if you will let my note stand until next harvest, I will then give you an opportunity to put the machine in order; and, if you can then make the machine do good and satisfactory work, I will then pay you the note; otherwise, you return the note to me, and two hundred dollars for my old machine. R. R. Snedigar."

"August 8, 1892. Mr. R. R. Snedigar: We accept your proposition of August 6, of which the above is a copy. Yours respectfully, Houser, Haines & Knight."

Plaintiffs thereupon rested their case, and defendant moved the court to grant a nonsuit, upon the ground that under the new agreement it was provided that "the plaintiffs must make the machine do good and satisfactory work, and there has been no evidence introduced going to show that the machine did do good and satisfactory work, or that any effort was made to make it do good, satisfactory work." The motion was granted and judgment of nonsuit entered.

The action of the court in admitting the evidence objected to, and in granting the nonsuit, was excepted to, and the rulings thereon are assigned as error. We think the court erred in its rulings. The defense set up by defendant involved the plea of an entirely new and distinct contract, made subsequent to the contract upon which the action was based. It was a plea by way of confession and avoidance, involving new matter to be proven by the defendant. Its allegations are, under our Code, to be treated as though denied. The entire answer is made up of affirmative matter. Whatever was necessary to be alleged therein devolved upon the defendant to prove. But he could not, by any recognized rule of procedure, offer such proofs until plaintiffs had made their case, and submitted it to the court. Plaintiffs called one of their number as a witness. He tesified to no single thing that was not admitted by the pleadings, but he was a witness, and as such defendant was entitled to cross-examine him. The limit placed upon cross-examination is so largely within the discretion of the trial court that its action in allowing a wide range to questions upon cross-examination will only be reversed in extreme cases. The court might in its discretion, as is often done, permit the defendant to prove by plaintiffs' witness, when on the stand, the due execution of an agreement important to his defense. This course, treated as a mere matter of convenience, was not open to serious objection. To permit this agreement to be then admitted in evidence was, however, quite a different matter. It was in effect to inject into the case of the plaintiffs a portion of the defense, and was subversive of known and fixed rules of procedure, and violative of the whole theory upon which those rules are founded. The proof of the execution of the written agreement of August 6, 1892, was not proper in cross-examination, and its admission in evidence was error. Greenleaf, in his work on Evidence (volume 1, § 447), after discussing the difficulty of laying down a precise rule in reference to the limit to be placed upon cross-examination, adds: "A party, however, who has not opened his own case, will not be allowed to introduce it to the jury by cross-examining the witnesses of the adverse party, though, after opening it, he may recall them for that purpose."

2. If we treat the agreement as properly in evidence, defendant was not entitled to a nonsuit. The note in suit was overdue, and upon its face constituted a cause of action. To defeat plaintiffs' apparent right to recover, defendant avers that the parties have agreed to two things: (1) To postpone payment until the next harvest; (2) that defendant should give the plaintiffs an opportunity to put the machine in order, and that they should do so before the note was payable. To sustain these propositions, defendant was bound to prove one of two things: (1) That the next harvest had not arrived; or (2) that, if it had arrived and passed, he had given plaintiffs an opportunity to put the machine in order, and that they had failed to do so. There was no proof whatever upon either of these propositions. It is admitted, inferentially at least, that the next harvest had passed. This action was commenced July 11, 1893, and this court will take judicial notice that in San Joaquin county the time for harvesting of small grain has arrived on the 11th of July. Mahoney v. Aurrecochea, 51 Cal. 429. Without some proof sustaining one or the other of these propositions, defendant was not entitled to a judgment.

The judgment appealed from should be reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

TERRY v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SAN DIEGO COUNTY. (L. A. 127.)

APPEAL FROM JUSTICE'S COURT—ADVERSE PARTIES—WHO ARE.

1. On appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace by defendants against whom the judgment was rendered, other defendants jointly liable, but not served, are not adverse parties, on whom the notice of appeal must be served.

2. In an action in a justice's court against married women on an express contract alleged to have been made by them, their husbands were properly joined, under Code Civ. Proc. § 370, but judgment was rendered against the wives only. Held that, on appeal by the wives, the husbands were not adverse parties, on whom the notice of appeal must be served.

In bank.

Application by George W. Terry for a writ of prohibition to restrain the superior court of San Diego county from hearing an appeal from a justice's court of San Diego township. Writ denied.

Aitken & Smith, for petitioner. A. C. Mouser, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an application for a writ of prohibition to restrain the superior court of San Diego county from hearing an appeal from the justice's court of San Diego township. An action was brought in the justice's court of San Diego township by George W. Terry, petitioner herein, as plaintiff, against W. H. Dinwiddie and Harriet M. Dinwiddie, his wife, Robert Daly and Rebecca A. Daly, his wife, Visa J. Cline, Charles Morris and Josephine Morris, his wife. No service of summons was had upon the defendants Morris and Cline, nor did they appear. The Dinwiddies and Dalys were served with summons, and answered. The action was upon a claim of Johnson & Co., undertakers, assigned to plaintiff, and was for services rendered by said undertakers in the burial of C. Breedlove, father of the women defendants and of C. W. Breedlove, their brother, at their instance and request. Their husbands were joined as parties defendant under the provisions of the Code. The judgment given in the justice's court was in favor of plaintiff, against defendants Harriet M. Dinwiddie and Rebecca A. Daly. No judgment in terms was asked or given against their husbands, or either of them. From this judgment the defendants Harriet M. Dinwiddie and Rebecca A. Daly gave notice of appeal to the superior court. The cause being transferred to that forum, a motion was there made by plaintiff (petitioner herein) to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that the superior court had no jurisdiction to entertain the same, for that the notice of appeal had not been served upon defendants W. H. Dinwiddie, Robert Daly, Charles and Josephine Morris, and Visa J. Cline. The motion was decided adversely to plaintiff, and the court retaining said appeal, this writ is sought to restrain it from proceeding further in the matter.

The superior court, in passing upon the motion, was not called upon to decide any controverted question of fact. The undisputed facts were that plaintiff was served with notice of appeal, and that the defendants Morris, Cline, W. H. Dinwiddie, and Robert Daly were not. The duty devolving upon the court was to determine from the record upon appeal whether the defendants not served, or any of them, were adverse parties to the appellants. Harper v. Hildreth, 99 Cal. 265, 33 Pac. 1103. The decision of the court upon the motion, by which ruling it retained the appeal, was not erroneous. Adverse parties are those who by the record appear to be interested in the judgment so that they will be affected by its reversal or modification. So far as concerns the defendants Morris and Cline, not having been served with summons and not having appeared, they are not parties litigant to the judgment, and are neither friendly nor adverse upon appeal. It was not incumbent that they should be served. Hinkel v. Donohue, 88 Cal. 598, 26 Pac. 374; Bank v. Rosenthal, 99 Cal. 42, 31 Pac. 849, and 33 Pac. 732.

As to the husbands of appellants, their status in the controversy is to be determined, as has been said, by reference to the record. By this it appears that the action was upon an express contract alleged to have been made, not by them, but by their wives, a judgment upon which would bind only the wives and their separate property. If, as was claimed upon argument, the action was prosecuted to enforce, not a voluntary agreement, but a statutory obligation against the wives, under section 292 of the Penal Code, a judgment for which could be enforced against the community property, it need only be said that, however liberal the rules of pleading may be in a justice's court, nevertheless a cause of action must there be stated, and it must be the cause of action relied on, for in that as in every court the allegata and probata must correspond, and the judgment must be upon the demand, and within the pleadings. Plaintiff charged upon no statutory obligation. There is an entire absence of averment necessary to such charge. But he did sue in assumpsit, averring the performance of services at the special instance and request of the defendant wives. Under such a complaint the husbands in the original action became proper and necessary parties defendant. Not, however, to the end that they or their property should be bound by the judgment, but solely that they might be able to aid their wives in their defense. The present utility of the statute in this progressive day may be open to question, but, however this may be, it was passed at a time when the lawmakers, perhaps with mistaken chivalry, believed that a wife brought into litigation might be the better for the comfort, protection and support of her husband's authorized presence, and in any event determined to secure it to her. Nor was the judgment of the justice's court, in terms, against the husbands' or the community property. In contemplation of the pleadings it was a judgment whose satisfaction could be had from the separate property of the wives alone. Under such a condition of the record it is impossible to regard the husbands as parties adverse to their wives upon this appeal. Their interest in the judgment and in its reversal or modification is identical in kind and character with the wives' interest. They are in court, in contemplation of law as well as in fact, to assist their wives, and not to oppose them, and in this appeal they occupy no position adverse or hostile to them. It was therefore not necessary that the husbands should have been served with notice of appeal, as "adverse parties," and this is all the superior court was called upon to decide in passing upon the motion to dismiss. By the appeal of the wives, as taken, that court obtained jurisdiction of the action. If, upon trial, it should believe it proper that the husbands should again be called in, under section 370 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it would, on proper showing, make an appropriate order to that effect. But the necessity for such action is not here under consideration. The application for a writ of prohibition is denied.

SMITH v. HAZARD. (No. 19,587.)[1]

STREET IMPROVEMENTS — PROTEST — NOTICE — ACCEPTANCE BY SUPERINTENDENT OF STREETS — HARMLESS ERROR.

1. Act 1885, as amended by Acts 1891, p. 196, known as the "Street Improvement Act," by section 2 authorizes the city council to order the improvement of "the whole or any portion, either in length or width of streets." Section 3 provides that, where the improvement is for one block or more, the written objection, duly filed, of the owners of a majority of the frontage of property abutting on the proposed improvement, shall be a bar for six months to any work, unless the owners of one-half of the frontage subsequently petition that it be done, except where the proposed improvement is of not more than two blocks located between or at the end of improved portions of streets. Held, that two adjoining blocks of unimproved street located between improved portions may be improved under separate proceedings and contracts, notwithstanding a protest.

2. Error in the exclusion of evidence is harmless where a different construction of a statute adopted on appeal renders the evidence immaterial.

3. The remedy for the acceptance of work by the superintendent of streets of a city before it is completed is by appeal to the city council.

4. Where notice of a street improvement is required to be published "by two insertions in one or more daily" newspapers, a notice published in a daily paper on Saturday and Sunday consecutively is sufficient.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; Cope, Judge.

Action by Barclay Hazard against Charles L. Smith to recover a street assessment. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

W. S. Day and Joseph J. Perkins, for appellant. Richard & Carrier, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. This is an action to recover a street assessment of $218.46 for work done by plaintiff on Micheltorena street, in the city of Santa Barbara, under contract with the superintendent of streets. On June 13, 1893, the city council, by resolution, declared its intention "to grade, curb, and gutter" said street "from the northeasterly line of Chapala street to the northeasterly line of De La Vina street," a distance of one block, and duly posted and published said resolution. Thereafter, on July 1, 1893, the owners of a majority of the frontage on the proposed improvement in due form protested against said improvement; but the city council disregarded their protest, and without delay proceeded in the matter as if no objection or protest had been made. The court below ruled that the protest was a bar to further proceedings for six months, and that all subsequent proceedings, including the assessment, were therefore void. Whether or not this ruling was correct is the principal question discussed by counsel on this appeal. The appellant contends that it was error.

The block improved was one of two adjoining ungraded blocks intervening between and bounded at each end by graded blocks; and it is not denied that the council had power to improve the two ungraded blocks thus situated, notwithstanding the protest, but respondent contends that the whole intervening unimproved space of two blocks must have been improved under one resolution of intention and one contract, and that the council was not authorized to improve each of the two intervening blocks under a distinct resolution of intention or a distinct contract, in disregard of a protest by the owners of a majority of the frontage, even though each of the intervening blocks was being so improved at the same time. I think, however, that this is a misconstruction of the street law. Section 2 of the street improvement act of 1885, as amended in 1891 (page 196), confers upon the city council general authority "to order the whole or any portion, either in length or width of streets," to be improved, etc. But section 3 of the same act limits this general authority as follows: "The owners of a majority of the frontage of property fronting on said proposed work or improvement, where the same is for one block or more, may make a written objection to the same within ten days after the expiration of the time of the publication and posting of said notice, which objection shall be delivered to the clerk of the city council, * * * and such objections so delivered and indorsed shall be a bar for six months to any further proceedings in relation to the doing of said work, or making said improvement, unless the owners of one-half or more of the frontage, as aforesaid, shall meanwhile petition for the same to be done." Further on in the same section an exception to the above limitation is expressed as follows: "And when not more than two blocks, including street crossings, remain ungraded to the official grade, or otherwise unimproved, in whole or in part, and a block or more on each side upon said street has been so graded or otherwise improved, or when not more than two blocks at the end of a street remain so ungraded or otherwise unimproved, said city council may order any of the work mentioned in this act to be done upon said intervening ungraded or unimproved part of said street, or at the end of a street; and said work upon said intervening part or end of a street shall not be stayed or prevented by any written or other objection, unless such council shall deem proper." The facts of the case at bar bring it clearly within this exception, and exclude it from the above limitation upon the power of the council; and therefore the authority of the city council to improve the street through said two intervening blocks must be that conferred by section 2 of the act, namely, "to order the whole or any portion" thereof to be graded or otherwise improved, regardless of objections by owners of lots fronting on the improvement. The plaintiff pleaded and offered to prove that both intervening blocks were being improved at the same time, though under distinct proceedings and contracts, and that the improvement of both had been completed; but the court rejected all proffered evidence of this character, to which plaintiff excepted, and contends here that the exclusion of such evidence was error. But, if the views above expressed are correct, the proffered evidence was immaterial, and its rejection harmless.

Counsel for respondent contends that the superintendent accepted the work before it was completed, according to contract, claiming that there was a narrow strip, of an average width of six inches, on which stood a fence in front of one of the lots, ungraded at the time work was accepted, though it was afterwards graded by the owner of the lot. The only remedy for this attenuated defect was to be had by an appeal to the city council. Jennings v. Le Breton, 80 Cal. 8, 21 Pac. 1127.

Section 3 of the act requires the resolution of intention to make the improvement to be "published by two insertions in one or more daily, semi-weekly or weekly newspapers published and circulated in said city," etc. The resolution in this case was inserted on two consecutive days—Saturday and Sunday—in a daily newspaper published and circulated in said city of Santa Barbara. It is contended by respondent that the publication was insufficient, because the last insertion was on Sunday. The publication was a literal compliance with the statute,—"two insertions in a daily newspaper," Sundays not excepted,—a series of acts, and not a publication for a specified period. I think the publication was sufficient (Society v. Thompson, 32 Cal. 347-354), and that the judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; SEARLS, C.

McGRATH v. CARROLL et al. (No. 15,697.)

CLAIMS AGAINST ESTATES OF DECEDENTS—PRESENTATION FOR ALLOWANCE—STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS—TRUSTS—TRACING SPECIFIC FUND.

1. Plaintiff presented a demand against the estate of decedent, which, on its face, was a claim for money lent, the items thereof being barred by limitations. On the rejection of such claim, plaintiff sued the executors, alleging that the moneys were received and held by deceased in trust for plaintiff; but the terms of the alleged trust were not disclosed, and defendants pleaded the statute of limitations. Held, that such plea was good.

2. One who claims to be a beneficiary of funds received by a decedent as trustee must present his demand against the estate for allowance, like other claims, unless the identical trust property, or its product in a new form, can be traced into the possession of the personal representatives.

3. Such claim, though presented as a simple money demand, is still based on the trust, and depends for its validity on the legality and sufficiency of the trust.

4. Where the beneficiary of a fund received by a decedent as trustee is obliged to present his claim for allowance, because unable to trace the specific trust property into the possession of the representatives, the statute of limitations, in the absence of a repudiation of the trust by deceased in his lifetime, begins to run from the time of the first publication of the notice to creditors.

5. Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1493, 1500, providing that no action can be brought on a claim against a decedent's estate unless first presented for allowance, one cannot present a simple money demand, and then maintain an action as the beneficiary of an express trust.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by James O. McGrath against George L. Carroll and others, executors of the estate of R. T. Carroll, deceased. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The claim was rejected, and in due time thereafter the claimant commenced this action. By his complaint he set up that the moneys were received and held by deceased "in trust for the use and benefit of plaintiff." The nature and terms of the trust are not, however, disclosed. The defendants, by demurrer, and by answer, pleaded the statute of limitations. When the evidence had been received, the court instructed the jury to render a verdict for defendants, which it did, and judgment was entered accordingly. In so doing the court said: "Of course, if the property was received in trust, then the statute never runs as long as the trust exists and the relation continues; and it would not run until some repudiation of the trust made by the trustee was brought home to the knowledge of the trustor. Treated as a simple money demand, it would clearly be barred on its face, inasmuch as the party did not commence a suit while Carroll was alive, but until after he died. In the case of Lathrop v. Bampton—treating this as an action in trust, and assuming that a trust was created, and if the jury believe the evidence of that witness that a trust was created, nevertheless, the testimony of Mrs. Carroll that this property has not come to her or been received by her is a failure to follow it up and identify it under the rule laid down in Lathrop v. Bampton, 31 Cal. 24, which says: 'The identity of a trust fund consisting of money may be preserved so long as it can be followed and distinguished from all other funds.' If there was any trust fund here, it consisted of money. The decision further says: 'Not by identifying the individual pieces or coins, but by showing a separate and independent fund or value, readily distinguishable from all other funds.' That has not been done. You sued to enforce a trust. You have presented a demand and claim against the estate, and that makes your cause of action. You have sued to enforce a trust in relation to money, and you have not followed the trust fund into the hands of the defendants, nor its proceeds, and place it solely upon that ground." The judgment of a trial court does not depend for its sufficiency upon the reasoning by which it is reached. The opinion of the judge may be erroneous, while the conclusion arrived at and given expression in the judgment may be just and sound. So here the ground upon which the court rested its decision is immaterial if the conclusion reached was the only one justifiable. Moreover, the language of the judge indicates an appreciation of the situation of the parties, and we are inclined to believe that it fails to give a full exposition of the principles involved, not from oversight, but because of the lack of opportunity for careful preparation and presentation which must always embarrass a judge in the swift progress of a trial. Lathrop v. Bampton, 31 Cal. 17, holds that equity will enforce a trust against the personal representatives of a deceased trustee, and without the presentation of a claim against the estate, when the identical trust property, or its product in a new form, can be traced into the estate, and so into the possession of the representatives. But a beneficiary who is unable to do this must rely on the personal liability of the trustee, and so relying has only a claim against the estate which must be duly presented for allowance. But such a claim is still based upon the trust, whatever that may have been. It has its origin in the trust, and depends for its validity upon the legality and sufficiency of the trust. The fact that the beneficiary is obliged to present his claim, and look, like a general creditor, to the assets of the estate for payment, does not change the nature of his demand, which is still one for property due under a trust accounting; it merely has changed his remedy.

In an express trust the statute of limitations is not set in motion against the beneficiary during the term of its existence, unless the trustee has in some unequivocal way, with notice to the beneficiary, repudiated the trust. If, during his lifetime, the trustee has not done this, his death will not be held to be such a repudiation. The rights of the beneficiary remain unaffected by this event. His remedies, however, will depend upon his ability to trace the specific trust property. When, as here, he is obliged to look to the general assets, and to present his claim, in the absence of repudiation the statute of limitations is set in motion from the time of the first publication of the notice to creditors. No action can be brought by the holder of such a claim unless it be first presented (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1493 and 1500), and every claim must sufficiently indicate the nature and amount of the demand, to enable the executor and judge in probate to act advisedly upon it. Henderson v. Ilsley, 11 Smedes & M. 11. As no holder of a claim may maintain an action upon it unless it has first been presented, it follows as a necessary sequence that the only action the holder may maintain is one founded upon the claim presented. Lichtenberg v. McGlynn, 105 Cal. 45, 38 Pac. 541. In this case the claim presented was a simple demand for money lent, accompanied by a demand for legal interest, with which such moneys are charged. No hint or suggestion is made of a trust, and the debts set out were all long barred by the statute of limitations. Upon such a claim the executors had no discretion. Their plain duty was to reject it as they did. Code Civ. Proc. § 1499.

In the complaint for the first time there is a plea of trust (without disclosure of its terms even then), and the defendant executors are compelled to meet a cause of action unsupported by the claim presented, and a claim founded thereon which had never been presented, and upon which they had never been called to pass. They did this by pleading the statute of limitations, which was a good plea directed against the rejected claim that plaintiff was compelled to set forth in his complaint. They might also have pleaded the variance and nonpresentation in abatement, but under the circumstances we are of the opinion that the point is sufficiently presented by the plea of the statute, and this seems to have been in the mind of the court when it said: "Treated as a simple money demand, it would clearly be barred on its face, inasmuch as the party did not commence a suit while Carroll was alive, but until after his death. * * * You have presented a demand and claim against the estate, and that makes your cause of action." For the foregoing reasons, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

SISKIYOU COUNTY v. GAMLICH. (No. 18,337.)

Condemnation Proceedings—Decision of Supervisors—Collateral Attack—Admissibility of Evidence—Recitals in Petition—Burden of Proof—Amendment of Pleading—Discretion of Trial Court.

1. In laying out a highway under Pol. Code, §§ 2681–2690, the board of supervisors exercises judicial functions, and its order approving the report of the viewers cannot be collaterally attacked on the ground that it was made on insufficient evidence.

2. In an action to condemn a right of way for a public road over defendant's land, a member of the board of supervisors may identify a petition offered in evidence as the one presented to and acted on by the board.

3. In an action to condemn a right of way for a public road, a petition which had been presented to and acted on by the board of supervisors, in which the petitioners state that "we are, each and all, freeholders" of the road district, "and taxable therein for road purposes," is conclusive as to those facts.

4. In an action to condemn a right of way for a public road, it is only necessary, in order to make out a prima facie case, for plaintiff to prove the presentation to the board of supervisors of a regular petition, with a sufficient bond, the record of the board showing the appointment of viewers, the report of the viewers and its approval, the assessment of damages and the setting apart out of the proper fund of the money awarded defendant, his refusal for 10 days to accept the same, and the order to commence suit for condemnation.

5. In such action the presumption is in favor of the regularity of the board's action, and the burden is on defendant to show affirmatively the contrary.

6. In a proceeding to condemn a right of way for a public road, after a petition to the board of supervisors, a member of such board may testify as to the damages which will be sustained by defendant.

7. An application by defendant during the trial to amend his answer is addressed to the discretion of the trial court, and its action will not be disturbed unless it appears that defendant was prejudiced thereby.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Siskiyou county; J. S. Beard, Judge.

Proceedings by the county of Siskiyou against Charles Gamlich to condemn a right of way for a public road over defendant's land. From a judgment of condemnation, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jas. F. Farraher, for appellant. Jas. F. Lodge and R. S. Taylor, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. This is an action for the condemnation of a right of way for a public highway over the lands of defendant. The complaint alleges that the required petition in writing for laying out a new road, signed by at least 10 freeholders of the road district in which defendant's lands are situated, and taxable therein for road purposes, was presented to the board of supervisors; that the necessary accompanying bond was filed, and approved by the board; that three viewers were appointed, one of whom was the county surveyor, and that two of the viewers proceeded to view, survey, and lay out said proposed road; that they filed their report, showing the course, termini, length, width, and probable cost of the road, with the names of the landowners who did not consent and the amount of damages claimed by each, and recommended its construction; that defendant would be damaged by the location and opening of the route so established in the sum of $10, as reported by the viewers, and that the right of way over defendant's lands was necessary for the creation of said highway; that the board approved the report, but defendant refused to accept the damages awarded him; and thereafter an order was regularly made and entered by the board directing the district attorney of the county to institute this action. The answer denies most of the averments of the complaint, and then, as an affirmative defense, alleges that, while the hearing of the petition referred to in plaintiff's complaint was pending, a petition signed by 10 freeholders residing within the road district, and taxable therein for road purposes, was filed with the board of supervisors, asking for the opening up of a road over a different route from the one set out in the complaint; that the petition was accompanied by a good and sufficient bond, which was approved by the board and filed, and that viewers were thereupon appointed to view the proposed route and report thereon; that the viewers thereafter reported favorably upon said route, and recommended that it be declared a public highway; that the board rejected said report and refused to grant the prayer of said petition; that the route so petitioned for forms a more direct and practicable route, and of cheaper construction, than that set out in the complaint, and will serve all the purposes and subserve the interests of the general public much better than the other one. The case was tried by the court without a jury, and judgment of condemnation was entered as prayed for in the complaint, from which and from an order denying a new trial defendant appeals.

1. At the commencement of the trial counsel for plaintiff moved the court to strike out from defendant's answer the alleged affirmative defense set out therein, and the motion was granted. This ruling is assigned as error, but we think it proper. The facts set up in that part of the answer stricken out did not constitute a defense to the action. It was for the board of supervisors to determine whether a new road was necessary or not, and, if necessary, over what route it should be laid out and constructed. Pol. Code, §§ 2681–2690. In laying out a public road the board of supervisors exercises judicial functions, and its order approving the report of the viewers cannot be collaterally attacked on the ground that it was made upon insufficient evidence. Damrell v. San Joaquin Co., 40 Cal. 154; Humboldt Co. v. Dinsmore, 75 Cal. 604, 17 Pac. 710; Los Angeles Co. v. San José Land & Water Co., 96 Cal. 93, 30 Pac. 969.

2. Plaintiff offered in evidence the petition presented to the board of supervisors, and defendant objected to its reception on the ground that the parties who signed it were not shown to be taxpayers and taxable in the road district, and on the further ground that it had not been identified or proved to be the petition presented. The plaintiff then called as a witness Supervisor Jackson, and asked him to state whether or not the board of supervisors took action upon the petition shown him. Defendant objected to this question on the ground that it was incompetent, and that the minutes of the board were the best evidence of the action taken. Both objections were overruled, and these rulings are assigned as errors. The evidence of the witness Jackson was clearly admissible to identify the petition offered in evidence as the one presented to and acted upon by the board. In the petition the petitioners state that "we are, each and all, freeholders" of the road district, "and taxable therein for road purposes." The action of the board shows that this statement must have been found to be true, and for the purposes of this case, under collateral attack, the finding must be held conclusive. There was therefore no error in admitting the petition in evidence.

3. The defendant's motion for nonsuit was properly denied. To make out a prima facie case it was only incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove the presentation of a regular petition to the board of supervisors, with a good and sufficient bond, the record of the board showing the appointment of viewers, the report of the viewers in proper form and its approval, the assessment of damages and the setting apart out of the proper fund of the money awarded defendant, his refusal for 10 days to accept the same, and the order to commence suit for condemnation. Los Angeles Co. v. San José Land & Water Co., supra. All these facts were sufficiently proved by the plaintiff.

4. Defendant offered to read in evidence, from the records of the board of supervisors, all entries and minutes made therein relating to the petition in question, for the purpose of showing that the board neither approved the bond offered in evidence by the plaintiff, nor found that the signers of the petition were freeholders within the road district. It was objected that the absence of an affirmative showing and finding of the facts referred to could not defeat the action, and the mere absence of such findings was all defendant here offered to show. The court properly sustained the objection, holding that the presumption was in favor of the regularity of the action of the board, and that the burden was on the defendant to show affirmatively the contrary.

5. The defendant offered to prove that there was a shorter and more practicable route than the one sought to be condemned, and, in support of his right to do so, cites City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 27 Pac. 604. But, as we have already said, the question of the necessity for a new road and of its location was a matter for determination by the board of supervisors, and not by the court. The case cited is not in point. That was a direct proceeding for the condemnation of land, without any intermediate action taken before suit by any board or tribunal acting in a judicial capacity, and passing upon the necessity and practicability of the proposed route.

6. The defendant called as a witness one of the supervisors who acted on the petition, and asked him: "At the time it was presented, or at any time afterwards, did the board of supervisors take or hear any evidence as to the age or ages of any of the parties who signed that petition?" The question was objected to as immaterial and irrelevant, and the court asked: "What is the object of this testimony, Mr. Farraher?" "Mr. Farraher: We want to prove that the board of supervisors heard no evidence on this proposition." The court sustained the objection, and it is earnestly urged that the ruling was erroneous. There was and is no suggestion or claim that any of the signers were minors, and proof of their age or ages before the board was not required.

7. Some of the supervisors who acted on the petition were called as witnesses to testify as to the damages sustained by defendant. It is objected that their testimony was neither competent nor material, and it is said, "It was a part of their judicial duty in the premises to determine this damage, and their records were the best evidence of such determination." The witnesses were certainly competent to testify as to the damages which the defendant would sustain by reason of the laying out of the road; and, while there was some conflict in the evidence upon the question, that introduced by the plaintiff was amply sufficient to justify the finding of the court.

8. While defendant was putting in his evidence, he asked leave to amend his answer by adding thereto a denial that he was present at any meeting of the board of supervisors when the matter of opening said proposed highway was acted upon by them, or that he had any notice of the time and place set for the hearing of said matter. On objection of plaintiff the court refused to allow the amendment, and this ruling is assigned as error. The application was addressed to the sound legal discretion of the trial court, and its action will not be disturbed unless it appears that it abused its discretion and the defendant was prejudiced thereby. We see no such abuse of discretion as would justify a reversal of the judgment on this ground.

The above are all the points requiring special notice, and in our opinion the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; BRITT, C.

BOWMAN et al. v. WHITE. (No. 15,959.)

INJURY TO EMPLOYE—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

Defendant's train having run into a washout, causing the death of an employé, the issue of defendant's negligence with respect to keeping the road in good repair should have been submitted to the jury; the question of contributory negligence not being involved, and the evidence as to whether the train was sent out to repair the track being conflicting.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; A. A. Sanderson, Judge.

Action by William Bowman and others against L. E. White for negligently causing the death of Victor Bowman. From a judgment of nonsuit, and an order denying their motion for a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

A. Morgenthal, for appellants. Oliver P. Evans, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. Respondent, in connection with his lumber business, owned and conducted a railroad running from his mill to the timber, about eight miles distant. Upon Monday morning, December 9th, at 6 o'clock, and while it was yet dark, Victor Bowman, an ordinary laborer, in connection with the engineer, fireman, foreman, and other laborers, started upon a working or construction train over the road. They had proceeded but a few hundred yards when the train ran into a washout some 40 feet in length and 14 feet in depth. Bowman and the engineer were killed, and others of the party injured. This action was brought by representatives of Bowman for damages suffered by reason of his death; and, upon the evidence offered by plaintiff, a nonsuit was granted. This appeal is prosecuted from the judgment, and from the order denying a motion for a new trial.

The facts of the case, as disclosed by the evidence, are quite meager; and, in addition to those already stated, it further appeared that heavy storms of rain had been prevalent for some time; that during the previous week these men with this train had been engaged in repairing the roadbed wherever damaged by the elements; that Saturday evening previous to the accident was the last time the road had been used, the washout therefore necessarily having occurred subsequent to that time. There is also evidence found in the record tending in some degree to show the cause of the washout to be traceable to the breaking of a flume of defendant which was used in carrying water to the mill, and which was situated above and near the roadbed.

The defendant was bound to keep his road in good repair after construction, and this was a duty he owed to his employés as fully and completely as to his passengers if he had been engaged as a common carrier of such; and, if the injury to the employé upon the train is caused by reason of a defective roadbed, that employé is entitled to recover for such injury; for, if the defective roadbed was the direct and proximate cause of the injury, no question of the negligence of fellow servants is involved.

There is no question of contributory negligence in the case, and the nonsuit was granted, and must be sustained, if sustained at all, upon the absence of negligence upon the part of defendant; and the true determination of that question forces us to a consideration of the nature of the work carried on by the construction train in connection with its employés, and particularly as to its mission upon this fatal morning. This is not the proper time to pass upon the weight and character of the evidence, but the record discloses beyond a doubt some evidence to the effect that this train left the mill, bound for a point upon the road some 4½ miles distant, known as "Rose Curve." There is also some evidence that the train was bound for that point for the purpose of there repairing the road, and possibly there is some evidence to the effect that it intended to return from that point to the mill with a load of wood. But, whatever its purpose may have been in starting for that point of destination, we think it immaterial. Its object in going there, whether it was for wood, or for the purpose of repairing the track, or for some other cause, in no way affects the question under consideration; for, if it started to that point in the line of its duty, the defendant was bound to furnish it a safe roadbed and track upon which to travel. If not absolutely bound so to do, he was at least required to exercise that degree of care in furnishing a safe roadbed and track demanded by the law. There is some evidence in the record indicating that this construction train, at the time of the accident, was upon the track for the purpose of repairing defects in the road, wherever found, as it passed upon its way; and, if that be the fact, the rule of law applicable to such a case may be found stated in Vaughn v. Railway Co., 83 Cal. 18, 23 Pac. 215. But it is sufficient here to say that the evidence does not all point that way, and a conflict therein is clearly apparent. There being such a conflict, no question of law was raised, but rather a pure question of fact, which should have been solved by the jury alone.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; VAN FLEET, J.

(S. F. 94.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 13, 1895.)

CERTIORARI—PROHIBITION—WHEN LIES.

1. Certiorari will not lie to review an appealable order or judgment, though they be void.

2. Since an appeal lies from, and is an adequate remedy to prevent execution of, an order of court appointing a receiver of, and directing a sale by him of, property of a plaintiff in a divorce action, to satisfy a judgment of alimony against him, prohibition will not issue for such purpose, though the order is void as in excess of the jurisdiction of the court.

In bank.

Petition by George E. White against the superior court for certiorari to review, and prohibition to stop the execution of, an order of defendant court appointing a receiver of petitioner's property, and directing a sale to satisfy a judgment for alimony had against him as plaintiff in a divorce action. Writs denied.

Barclay Henly and Edward Lynch, for petitioner. Henry E. Highton, for respondent.

VAN FLEET, J. This is an original proceeding, which, in the matter of remedies sought, is somewhat multifarious, and consequently not susceptible of single definition. Petitioner asks for certiorari to review, and prohibition to stop the execution of, a certain order of the respondent court complained of. From the petition and the return thereto, it appears that in an action for divorce pending in said superior court, in which the petitioner, George E. White, is plaintiff, and one Frankie White defendant, a decree of divorce was entered in May, 1889, and the question of the property rights of the parties referred to a referee for report thereon. Subsequently, in June, 1894, a receiver was appointed in said cause to take charge and possession of the property, real and personal, of the plaintiff therein, the petitioner here, and hold, manage, and control the same, under the supervision of said superior court, until further order in the premises. On February 9, 1895, the report of the referee having been received, said court made and entered its final decree in said action, awarding to the defendant therein, Frankie White, the sum of $100,000, as permanent and final alimony, allowances, etc., and directing that the receiver theretofore appointed be continued as such, and take all necessary and proper measures to enforce and secure the payment and satisfaction of the amount awarded by said decree, and certain unpaid monthly allowances due, and, after such payment, to hold any residue of said property subject to the further order of the court. Thereafter, on the 19th day of April, 1895, said court, on application of the defendant in said cause, and against the objections of the petitioner, made an order therein requiring and directing said receiver to proceed as such, and sell the property of the petitioner, so far as should be necessary, in satisfaction of said judgment. It is this last-mentioned order which is made the subject of attack herein. Petitioner alleges that the making of said order directing a sale by said receiver of petitioner's property, consisting in large part of lands in different counties of the state, for the satisfaction of a mere money judgment, such as it is contended the final decree in said cause in effect is, is beyond the jurisdiction of said superior court, and contrary to the course of the law, for various alleged reasons not necessary to be here recited; that the only competent way in which said property can be sold in satisfaction of said judgment or decree is by execution at the hands of the sheriff; and that a sale by said receiver will operate to deprive petitioner of his property without due process of law.

Without examining into the question of the power of the court to make said order, it is apparent, we think, at the threshold, that, upon the facts stated, petitioner is entitled to neither remedy sought.

1. It is very clear that the facts do not make a case wherein certiorari may be availed of. That writ will lie only where there is no appeal from the judgment or order complained of. Code Civ. Proc. § 1068; Stuttmeister v. Superior Court, 71 Cal. 322, 12 Pac. 270, and cases there cited. The order in question is a special order, made after final judgment, and, as such, is made the subject of appeal by express terms of the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 939, subd. 3; Id. § 963, subd. 2; Slavonic I. M. B. Ass'n v. Superior Court, 65 Cal. 500, 4 Pac. 500; Livermore v. Campbell, 52 Cal. 75; Calderwood v. Peyser, 42 Cal. 110); and, being so appealable, it cannot be reviewed by certiorari. Nor does it make any difference in this respect if the order be, as contended, in excess of the jurisdiction of the court making it, and consequently void. Void judgments and orders are not the less appealable by reason of that fact (Livermore v. Campbell, supra); and, when that remedy is afforded, it excludes the right to certiorari, notwithstanding the order be void in the extreme sense (People v. Shepard, 28 Cal. 115; Stoddart v. Superior Court [Cal.] 41 Pac. 278). "It may be readily admitted," says Mr. Justice McFarland, in delivering the opinion of the court in the case last cited, "that the court had no jurisdiction to make the order; but, as the order is appealable, certiorari will not lie, because it lies only when 'there is no appeal.'" So far, then, as the remedy by certiorari is concerned, it would be wholly unprofitable to consider the question as to the jurisdiction of the respondent to make the order complained of.

2. And we regard it as equally clear that the case is not one for prohibition. The writ of prohibition lies only where there has been an excess of jurisdiction, and there is "not a plain, speedy and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law." Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103. The petitioner having the right of appeal from the order under consideration, the question arises whether this right affords him "a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy" for the correction of the wrong complained of, since, unlike the provision with reference to certiorari, the mere right of appeal, independently of its affording adequate relief, does not, ipso facto, deprive him of the remedy by prohibition. Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 327, 397, 24 Pac. 121. It is well established, however, that when an appeal affords a complete and adequate remedy, and the same ends may be accomplished, although perhaps not in so expeditious a manner, the party is not entitled to the extraordinary remedy by prohibition, but must have resort to his remedy by appeal. In Agassiz v. Superior Court, 90 Cal. 101, 27 Pac. 49, it is said: "Petitioners have the right to appeal from the order refusing to dissolve the attachment, and would have an appeal from any final judgment in the case; and such appeal being 'a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, in the ordinary course of law,' within the meaning of section 1103 of the Code of Civil Procedure, prohibition does not lie. A remedy does not fail to be speedy and adequate because by pursuing it through the ordinary course of law more time would probably be consumed than in the proceeding here sought to be used; and it makes no difference that in this instance a question of jurisdiction incidentally depends upon the validity of an attachment." In Grant v. Superior Court, 106 Cal. 324, 39 Pac. 604, a writ of prohibition was sought to restrain the superior court from making an order fixing the compensation of a receiver, whose appointment in the action was admittedly void, and it was said by this court: "We are of opinion that, whether the proceeding which the petitioners seek to arrest is or is not without or in excess of the jurisdiction of the superior court, the writ of prohibition ought not to issue, for the reason that the petitioners have a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy by appeal from any order the court may make, by which they would be injuriously affected. * * * If we are right in the conclusion that any party aggrieved by an order of court directing him to pay the receiver's compensation, or directing payment out of a fund in which he is interested, has an appeal from such order, as from a final judgment in an independent proceeding collateral to the main action, and that he may stay all proceedings upon such order, pending his appeal, by filing a proper undertaking, there can be no need of a writ of prohibition in such a case, and it will not lie. See cases referred to in Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 398, 24 Pac. 121." In this case no reason is urged why the right of appeal which petitioner enjoys will not furnish him complete and full relief in the premises. By such appeal the hand of the superior court, and that of its instrument, the receiver, can be effectually stayed pending its determination, by giving the proper bond; and thus the rights of the petitioner be adequately preserved until finally determined. Under such circumstances, as suggested in Grant v. Superior Court, supra, there can be no necessity for prohibition. In this view it becomes quite as impertinent here as in disposing of petitioner's right to certiorari to inquire into the power of the court to make the order in question.

It follows that the rule must be discharged, and the application denied. It is so ordered.

BOYCE v. FISK. (No. 18,443.)

EXCESSIVE RATE OF INTEREST—EQUITABLE RELIEF—SATISFACTION OF MORTGAGE—MORTGAGE DEBT BARRED—DECREE.

1. Under Civ. Code, § 1918, providing that parties may contract in writing for the payment of any rate of interest, equity will not relieve one who has contracted to pay interest largely in excess of the current rates, in the absence of accident, mistake, actual fraud, or undue influence.

2. The administrator of a deceased mortgagor is not entitled to have the mortgage satisfied while the mortgage debt, valid in its inception, remains unpaid, even though an action thereon by the mortgagee is barred by limitations.

3. Where an administrator whose intestate owed a valid mortgage debt, which is barred by limitations, brings action against the mortgagee to quiet title, the court may decree that the action be dismissed unless plaintiff pay the mortgage debt within a specified time.

4. In such action a judgment which decrees that, on plaintiff's failure to pay the amount of the mortgage, all his title to the property shall cease and defendant's title shall be good and valid, is erroneous, since its effect would be to grant defendant an affirmative remedy for his outlawed debt.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; J. R. Webb, Judge.

Action by William T. Boyce, administrator of the estate of Thomas Boyce, deceased, against Asa Fisk, to quiet title, and for other relief. From a decree for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Modified.

Boone & Schlesinger and Geo. L. Hood, for appellant. Tupper & Welsh, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought to obtain a decree to the effect that Thomas Boyce was at the time of his death the owner in fee simple of an undivided half of section 15 in township 14 S., range 14 E., Mt. Diablo B. & M., situate in the county of Fresno, state of California; that an accounting be had to determine the amount due to defendant upon a mortgage, and that defendant has no right, title, or interest in the land, except as a mortgagee thereof; and that upon the payment to defendant of such sum as may be found due him, if any, he be required to satisfy his mortgage. The cause comes up on the appeal of plaintiff from the final decree, and is presented upon the judgment roll, unsupported by any statement or bill of exceptions. The findings show that on the 7th day of August, 1880, Thomas Boyce was the owner of the tract of land hereinbefore mentioned, and that on said last-mentioned day he borrowed from Asa Fisk, the defendant and respondent herein, the sum of $260, and made to the latter his promissory note in writing, in the words and figures following: "San Francisco, Cal., Aug. 7, 1880. $260.00. Thirty days after date (without grace) I promise to pay to Asa Fisk, or order, the sum of two hundred and sixty dollars, to be paid only in gold coin of the government of the United States of America, for value received, with interest thereon, in like gold coin, from maturity, at the rate of four (4) per cent. per month, until paid; interest to be paid monthly in advance, and if not so paid to become a part of the principal, and bear thereafter the same rate of interest, compounded monthly in advance,—for value received. This note to be paid at the office of Asa Fisk. [Signed] Thomas Boyce." To secure the payment of the said promissory note, Boyce executed and delivered to Fisk a deed of conveyance, absolute in form, but intended as a mortgage, of the tract of land hereinbefore mentioned, and at the same time, and as further security, assigned to said Fisk a policy of insurance, fully paid up, upon the life of him, the said Boyce, issued by the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company of Hartford, Conn. No part of the promissory note, principal or interest, was ever paid by Boyce, or by any one, up to the date of his death, which occurred on the 11th day of October, 1892. On the 28th of March, 1893, Fisk collected $1,150 on the said policy of insurance, and applied the same on account, and in part payment of the interest then due on the said promissory note. Fisk paid all the taxes levied upon the land, amounting to $108.31, and never claimed to hold or own the land except as a mortgagee. Plaintiff was duly appointed administrator of the estate of said Thomas Boyce, deceased, April 17, 1893, and duly qualified and is still acting as such administrator. The court further found that, "by the agreed statement of facts herein, that it has been stipulated that the court may grant to either party such proper legal or equitable relief as either party may be entitled to under said stipulation and the pleadings and facts in the case, and in accordance therewith, and as an equitable adjustment and decision." The court then proceeded to allow to defendant, Fisk, interest upon the promissory note, according to its terms, for four years from its date, and 7 per cent. per annum upon the amount thus found due at the expiration of said term of four years; deducted the sum collected on the insurance policy in 1893, leaving a balance due at the date of the decree of $1,606.06; and decreed that upon the payment of said sum of $1,606.06, with legal interest thereon from the date thereof, within one year from said date, viz. May 14, 1894, the defendant should satisfy the mortgage; also, that, should plaintiff fail within one year from said date to pay said sum of money, then and in that event his right to the land should cease and be barred, and defendant's title thereto should be good and valid, and that each party should pay his own costs. A decree was entered accordingly.

The contention of appellant is that the terms imposed by the superior court upon plaintiff, as a condition of the redemption of the property, are unreasonable and exorbitant; that the terms of the promissory note to defendant were so manifestly unjust and oppressive that a court of equity should refuse to uphold them; and that plaintiff should only be called upon to return the money borrowed, with legal interest thereon. We can only look to the amended complaint, answer, findings, and decree, in determining the questions presented. The real question, under these circumstances, is, do the findings respond to the issues, and do they support the decree? Finding 8 is to the effect that the parties have stipulated "that the court may grant to either party such proper legal or equitable relief as either party may be entitled to under said stipulation and the pleadings and facts in the case, and in accordance therewith, and as an equitable adjustment and decision." Turning to the complaint, we find therein no charge or suggestion of mistake or accident in making the note, or that defendant, Fisk, was guilty of any misrepresentation, fraud, or oppression in procuring decedent, Thomas Boyce, to make the note or execute and deliver the securities. If the plaintiff as representative of Thomas Boyce, deceased, is entitled to any relief in a court of equity,—if he is entitled to redeem the mortgaged property without a compliance with the terms and conditions of the agreement made by his decedent,—it must be upon the ground that the terms and conditions of the promissory note were so onerous as to authorize the court to refuse to enforce its provisions. In this state "parties may agree in any contract in writing for the payment of any rate of interest, and it shall be allowed, according to the terms of the agreement, until the entry of judgment." Civ. Code, § 1918. Courts of equity are as much bound by the laws of the land as courts of law, and neither may set aside or annul contracts made in strict compliance therewith, with impunity. The rate of interest provided for in the note to Fisk was, no doubt, largely in excess of the current rates prevailing at the date of the note in question. At an early period in the history of this state, the rate of interest agreed upon in this note would have been much below current rates. When given, it was much greater than such rates. No doubt the excess of interest is a circumstance which, coupled with others tending to show actual fraud, or such circumstances of oppression and overreaching as warrant the inference of undue advantage, is sufficient cause for setting aside a contract. But without some such showing a court of equity may not disregard the contract which the parties have deliberately made, and make a new one for them. If the court, under such circumstances, can decree the rate of interest stipulated in a given written contract as being too large, and establish a lower rate, then, by parity of reasoning, it should be at liberty, in a similar case, but where the rate of interest agreed upon is deemed too small, to fix a larger one; and thus it would in effect become the guardian of business men, and be at liberty to supervise and modify all their contracts. Had Fisk brought an action to foreclose his mortgage within the lifetime of his demand, can there be any doubt but that, in the absence of any showing of fraud or mistake, he would have been entitled to a decree? We think not. The fact that his debt is barred by the statute of limitations does not absolve his mortgagor, who would redeem the mortgaged property, from paying the debt. The moral obligation remains, and rests upon the mortgagor who would redeem, to pay, as a condition thereof, the sum of money which the mortgagee could have recovered but for the bar of the statute. Spect v. Spect, 88 Cal. 437, 26 Pac. 203; Booth v. Hoskins, 75 Cal. 271, 17 Pac. 225; Grant v. Burr, 54 Cal. 298; Zellerbach v. Allenberg, 99 Cal. 69, 33 Pac. 786.

We have examined with care the several cases cited by the appellant in support of his contention. Brown v. Hall, 14 R. I. 249, which may be regarded as a leading case, was a bill to redeem from a mortgage, in which the complainant sought to have the interest (5 per cent. per month) reduced to a legal or reasonable rate, on the ground that the stipulated rate was grossly exorbitant. The complainant stated particularly the circumstances under which the note and mortgage were originally given, for the purpose of showing that he did not fully understand the terms of the note when he signed it, and that the defendant took advantage of his necessities and inexperience, and of his confidence, to overreach and impose upon him. The court allowed the conventional interest for six months, under a statute of Rhode Island which permitted borrowers and lenders to make their own terms in regard to interest, and reduced the interest to a reasonable rate after the maturity of the note. It is not plain, from the report, what the evidence showed, but it may fairly be inferred that it went beyond the allegations of the complaint, for the court said: "We hesitate at this decision only because the facts on which we rest it are very imperfectly alleged in the bill. The facts, however, were put in evidence without objection, and, this being a bill to redeem, we do not think we ought to oblige the complainant to submit to unjust terms of redemption by reason of any technical defect, but should rather permit him to amend, if amendment be necessary, on proper terms." It is very apparent that in that case the elements of fraud and oppression on the part of the mortgagee concurred with the rate of interest charged to convince the court that such fraud had been practiced as to warrant a reduction of the conventional rate of interest agreed upon. Hough v. Hunt, 2 Ohio, 495, was a case in which Hough, being pressed for money, applied to Hunt for a loan of $2,600. Hunt agreed to lend him $10,000 on condition that he, the said Hough, should purchase from him 593 acres of land at $20 per acre, being more than double its value. A portion of the money was loaned. In an action by Hough for relief the court rescinded the contract for the land, being of opinion that Hunt had taken an unfair advantage of Hough's necessities. The court said: "When a person is incumbered with debts, and that fact is known to a person with whom he contracts, who avails himself of it to exact an unconscionable bargain, equity will relieve on account of the advantage and hardship. Where the inadequacy of the price is so great that the mind revolts at it, the court will lay hold of the slightest circumstances of oppression or advantage to rescind the contract." In Butler v. Duncan, 47 Mich. 94, 10 N. W. 123, a young man of dissolute and prodigal habits, in want of money, had given his note for $5,000, secured by mortgage, with interest at 10 per cent. per annum, on all his property, and had received only about $2,000 and 160 acres of land, for $3,200, which was worth little over $1,000. In rescinding the contract the court said: "To state the transaction mildly, it was taking advantage of Duncan's weakness and anxiety, and, under the guise of an apparently fair business transaction, exacting a usurious interest, which a court of equity cannot sanction." In this last case, as in the Ohio case supra, it is apparent that an attempt was made to evade the usury law of those states, which in itself, if fully proven, was sufficient to invalidate the contracts, and which, coupled with circumstances of fraud on the part of the parties loaning their funds, served to justify the rulings. In the present case the loan was made, not in evasion of, but pursuant to, the letter and spirit of the law, and no circumstances of fraud are charged. The case of Sime v. Norris, 8 Phila. 84, seems to fully sustain the contention of appellant, yet we do not think it can be upheld as the law of this state. The case was this: In 1864 the defendant, Norris, at San Francisco, Cal., had made his promissory note to Robbins for $4,125, payable 30 days after date, with interest at 2½ per cent. per month, payable monthly in advance, and, if not so paid, to be compounded and become a part of the principal, and bear like interest. The action was by an indorsee against the maker. The claim, when sued, amounted to over $26,000, and Sharswood, J., said, "I think this contract, though lawful, was an oppressive and unconscionable one, which the courts of this state [Pennsylvania] ought to have no hand in enforcing according to its letter," and ordered judgment for the principal and the legal rate of interest then prevailing in California, viz. 10 per cent. per annum. The strongest showing in behalf of appellant which we have found is contained in Story's Equity Jurisprudence, at section 331, where he says: "And here we may apply the remark that the proper jurisdiction of courts of equity is to take every one's act according to conscience, and not to suffer undue advantage to be taken of the strict form of law or of positive rules. Hence it is that, even if there be no proof of fraud or imposition, yet if, upon the whole circumstances, the contract appears to be grossly against conscience, or grossly unreasonable and oppressive, courts of equity will sometimes interfere and grant relief, although they are certainly very cautious of interfering, unless upon very strong circumstances. But the mere fact that the bargain is a very hard or unreasonable one is not generally sufficient per se to induce these courts to interfere. And indeed it will be found that there are very few cases not infected with positive or actual fraud in which they do interfere, except where the parties stand in some very peculiar predicament, and in some sort under the protection of the law,—from age or character or relationship." The cases cited by the learned author tend to show that except in case of fraud or imposition, and except where the parties stand in some peculiar predicament, by reason of age or condition, such as expectant heirs, sailors, and the like, courts of equity only interfere in the most extraordinary cases. The fact that a bargain is a very hard or unreasonable one is not in itself sufficient, and that is all that can be said of the contract in the present case.

But that part of the judgment which decrees that, upon the failure of plaintiff to pay the amount remaining unpaid on the mortgage, all his right and title to the mortgaged premises shall cease and determine, and the title of the defendant thereto shall be good and valid, and plaintiff shall be barred from asserting any claim, interest, or title to said premises, is unwarranted and erroneous. The proper judgment would be that upon the failure of plaintiff to pay the said amount within the time specified by the court the action be dismissed. Cowing v. Rogers, 34 Cal. 655; Booth v. Hoskins, 75 Cal. 271, 17 Pac. 225. Although plaintiff cannot have his title quieted, under the facts here presented, while the money for which the mortgage was given remains unpaid, still the defendant can have no affirmative remedy for his outlawed debt, which the judgment, as it stands, would give him. If plaintiff were suing in his own right, it might, perhaps, be plausibly argued that by his complaint he waived the defense of the statute of limitations against the barred debt of defendant; but an administrator will not be permitted to waive either the general statute of limitations, or the failure of a party to present his claim. The judgment must therefore be modified as above indicated.

The cause is remanded, with directions to the superior court to modify the judgment as above indicated by striking therefrom all of the clause immediately preceding the last clause therein, commencing with the words, in folio 72 of the printed transcript, "It is further ordered," and ending with the words, in folio 73, "said premises or any part thereof," and by inserting instead thereof a provision that, if the plaintiff shall not pay the amount found to be unpaid upon the mortgage within a specified time after the entry of the modification of the judgment,—the time to be fixed by the superior court,—then this action shall be dismissed. In all other respects the judgment appealed from is affirmed. Neither party is to recover costs of this appeal.

FIRST NAT. BANK OF FRESNO v. DUSY et al. (No. 18,409.)

COURTS—POWER TO CORRECT DECREE—ACTION TO FORECLOSE MORTGAGE—EVIDENCE.

1. In an action to foreclose a mortgage and a pledge of stock, the court found that the stock was assigned to plaintiff, and was held as security for the payment of the note; but the judgment failed to make any disposition of the stock, and directed only the sale of the land to satisfy the judgment. Held, that the failure to include such stock in the judgment was an error of law, which the court could not correct on motion, after the judgment was entered.

2. In an action to foreclose a mortgage and a pledge of stock, it appeared that the mortgagor gave the mortgage and a certain other note as an additional security for the note secured by the pledge, and that plaintiff claimed only the amount due on the latter note. Held, that it was not error to admit in evidence the former note and mortgage.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; J. R. Webb, Judge.

Action by the First National Bank of Fresno, a corporation, against Frank Dusy and Samuel Davis, to foreclose a mortgage and a pledge of stock. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Dusy appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Wiley J. Tinnin, for appellant. Geo. E. Church, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Action to foreclose a mortgage and a pledge of water stock. Findings and decree passed in favor of the plaintiff, and Dusy, the debtor and mortgagor, appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial. The demand sought to be foreclosed was a promissory note for $1,900, made by Dusy to the plaintiff December 28, 1889, payable on demand. Said note also provided that in case of suit a reasonable attorney's fee should be allowed by the court. As security for the payment of this note, Dusy assigned to the bank 16½ shares of the capital stock of the Fowler's Switch Canal Company. The complaint further alleged that on December 20, 1892, defendant Dusy, as further security for the payment of said note, executed and delivered to O. J. Woodward his promissory note of that date, for $4,500, payable on demand, and at the same time executed to said Woodward a mortgage on certain real estate therein described, which note and mortgage Woodward duly assigned and transferred to the plaintiff, and prayed for judgment for the amount of said first-named promissory note, with interest as therein provided, and for the sum of $200 as a reasonable attorney's fee in the action, and that said mortgaged premises and said water stock be sold to satisfy the same. Defendant's demurrer to the complaint was overruled, and defendant Dusy answered, and denied that the mortgage described in plaintiff's complaint is a lien on any of the property described therein, and also denied that the note for $4,500 and the mortgage were executed to Woodward to secure the payment of said $1,900 note, and alleged that said $4,500 note and mortgage were delivered to Woodward in trust to take up and deliver to the defendant three of defendant's promissory notes, one of said notes being the one for the sum of $1,900, mentioned in plaintiff's complaint, and that all three of said notes aggregate the sum of about $4,500; that Woodward violated said trust, in that he failed to take up said notes, or either of them, and that he had placed said mortgage on record as a lien on defendant's property, and that he transferred said $4,500 note to plaintiff without the knowledge and consent of the defendant, and in violation of his said trust and agreement; that the bank took said transfer with full knowledge of the trust and agreement between Woodward and defendant; and that said note and mortgage were without any consideration whatever. Defendant also filed a cross complaint, setting out substantially the same facts, and prayed for judgment against the plaintiff for his costs. Plaintiff answered the cross complaint, denied that Woodward agreed in any way whatever to take up or cancel any of defendant's notes as a condition of the execution of said note and mortgage, and alleged, as was alleged in the complaint, that defendant executed and delivered said note and mortgage as further security for the payment of said note for $1,900. The findings were in favor of the plaintiff upon all the issues, and judgment was entered thereon. It appeared from the evidence that at the time the note for $4,500, and the mortgage to secure the same, were executed, Dusy was indebted to the Bank of Selma upon two promissory notes, one for the sum of about $1,300, and the other for $800, and interest on each of them; that one of these notes was secured by a pledge of stock in the Fowler's Switch Canal Company, and the other by a mortgage upon the same property mortgaged to Woodward; that Woodward was a director in the Bank of Selma, and was president and general manager of the First National Bank of Fresno, the plaintiff in this action, and that his intention was to have this mortgage as additional security for defendant's indebtedness to the Bank of Selma, as well as for the $1,900 note held by plaintiff; but the Bank of Selma was satisfied with the security already held by it, and declined to avail itself of the additional security, and in this action the plaintiff only sought to recover the amount due upon the $1,900 note, together with its costs and a reasonable attorney's fee, as provided for in said $1,900 note, as well as in the collateral note and mortgage.

The court did not err in admitting in evidence the collateral note and mortgage. That, as well as the $1,900 note, was set out in the complaint; and as it was conceded in the complaint that appellant's indebtedness to the plaintiff was only the amount of the original note and interest, and as only that sum was recovered, appellant was not prejudiced by any of the rulings upon the admission of evidence specified by appellant, whether they were technically correct or not. They need not therefore be considered in detail. It does not appear that it would have benefited appellant if plaintiff or Woodward had paid the claims held by the Bank of Selma; and, as the court found upon sufficient evidence that Woodward did not agree to pay those claims, appellant was not prejudiced by the ruling of the court upon the question whether he had paid them. These remarks also dispose of the questions put to Stroud in relation to the same matter.

It is also specified by appellant in his statement on motion for a new trial that the decision of the court is against law, in that the pleadings and evidence in said action show that defendant, to secure the $1,900 note, delivered to plaintiff 16½ shares of the Fowler's Switch Canal Company's stock, and that no finding is made in regard thereto, and that the judgment neither orders said shares of stock to be sold nor to be delivered to defendant, and that said shares of stock are left in the hands of plaintiff without any consideration to defendant. The third finding is to the effect that appellant assigned said stock to the plaintiff, and that plaintiff now holds said stock as security, and that said stock is evidenced by the certificate issued to O. J. Woodward as trustee, and numbered 463. It is true, however, that neither the order for judgment nor the judgment as entered made any disposition of said stock; and this omission presents the principal question in the case.

The findings in said cause were filed and judgment entered on the 28th of April, 1894, and notice of defendant's intention to move for a new trial was given on May 8th. Appellant's statement on motion for a new trial was served on plaintiff's attorney June 6, 1894. On June 18, 1894, the plaintiff served and filed notice that on the 23d of June, 1894, the plaintiff would move the court to amend the conclusions of law filed in said action by inserting after the word "mortgage," in a designated place, the words "together with the said sixteen and one-half shares of stock"; and also to amend the judgment herein by inserting in a designated place the words "together with the sixteen and one-half shares of stock also described therein." This motion was based upon an affidavit made by counsel for the plaintiff: "That, by mistake and inadvertence, said court omitted to find, as a conclusion of law, that the said plaintiff is entitled to have said shares of stock sold, and the proceeds applied to satisfy said judgment so made and entered herein; and, by like inadvertence, the judgment so made, given, and entered herein failed to provide that said shares of stock be sold, and the proceeds applied to the payment of said judgment." Defendant's counsel objected to the consideration of the motion: First, "that the judgment therein had been duly given or made, rendered, and entered in said action, and that also the said matter was then pending on motion for a new trial, and was without the jurisdiction of the court"; second, "that the said motion and the said affidavit were each irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, in that the findings and conclusions of law and judgment had been rendered and entered." The court overruled these objections, and ordered the clerk to amend the conclusions of law as requested by plaintiff, and also to amend the judgment by inserting the words stated in said notice of motion; and to this ruling of the court, and the order so made, the defendant excepted.

Counsel for respondent, upon this point, says that "the only change made was to make the judgment entered conform with the judgment as pronounced by the court." If that were true, there would be no question as to the power of the court to make the amendment. But the water stock was not included in or affected by the order of the court upon which the judgment as originally entered was based. The conclusions of law were, in substance, simply that the plaintiff was entitled to a judgment for a specified sum of money, with a specified sum as attorney's fees and costs of suit; that the said amounts were a valid lien upon the lands and premises described in the complaint; and that plaintiff is entitled to have said premises sold according to law, and the proceeds applied, etc.; and concludes with the order, "Let judgment be entered accordingly." It is clear that the judgment as originally entered was in precise accordance with the conclusions of law and the order of the court. Whether the water stock should be sold at all to satisfy the plaintiff's claim, or whether it should be sold before resorting to the real estate embraced in the mortgage, or whether the stock should be surrendered to the defendant, were judicial questions, which the court failed to pass upon, and this failure was an error of law which it was not in the power of the court to correct upon motion. It is true the complaint alleged a lien upon the stock, and prayed that it might be sold as well as the real estate, and the court found, as a fact, that the stock was assigned to the plaintiff, and was then held as security for the payment of said $1,900 note, and no reason appears upon the face of the judgment roll why it should not be sold in satisfaction of the plaintiff's judgment. But, as said above, the making of an order that it be sold involves judicial action, and we think the better rule is, as to such omissions or mistakes, that it is not in the power of the court, after the entry of judgment, to make a new order directing the sale of other property than that embraced in the original order and the judgment entered thereon; that such direction would be equivalent to exercising a revisory power over the judgment itself by the same authority that pronounced it. See Freem. Judgm. § 70, and cases cited in note 2. The same author, in the same section, says: "To entitle a party to an order amending a judgment, order, or decree, he must establish that the entry as made does not conform to what the court ordered." And, again: "On the one hand, it is certain that proceedings for the amendment of judgments ought never to be permitted to become revisory or appellate in their nature; ought never to be the means of modifying or enlarging the judgment or the judgment record, so that it shall express something which the court did not pronounce, even though the proposed amendment embraces matters which ought clearly to have been so pronounced."

The decision of the court, referred to in sections 632 and 633 of the Code of Civil Procedure, when filed, amounts in law to a rendition of the judgment. Water Co. v. West, 99 Cal. 347, 33 Pac. 928. "The rendition of a judgment is a judicial act. Its entering upon the record is merely ministerial." Crim v. Kessing, 89 Cal. 478, 26 Pac. 1074. In Sichel v. Carrillo, 42 Cal. 507, the question whether conclusions of law could be changed before the entry of judgment thereon was made, but not decided. In Condee v. Barton, 62 Cal. 1, it was held that the conclusions of law first announced were not final and beyond the reach of the court, so as to preclude the court from changing them at any time before the judgment is entered. In Broder v. Conklin, 98 Cal. 362, 33 Pac. 211, it was said that section 633 of the Code of Civil Procedure "requires the court in giving the decision to state the facts found and the conclusions of law separately, and provides that, after the decision has been given, judgment must be entered accordingly. The judgment which is to be entered upon the decision is the sentence of the court in conformity with the conclusion of law, and must find its basis therein"; and it was further said that "they [the conclusions of law] may be changed by the court any time prior to the entry of judgment"; citing Condee v. Barton and Crim v. Kessing, supra. See, also, In re Cook's Estate, 77 Cal. 229, 17 Pac. 923, and 19 Pac. 431, where Condee v. Barton, supra, is cited.

I do not find any case in this state where the question as to the power of the court to change or add to its conclusions of law after the entry of the judgment has been expressly decided; but the language used in the cases above cited, inferentially at least, limits the power of the court in this regard to a period which expires with the entry of the judgment. In Egan v. Egan, 90 Cal. 21, 27 Pac. 22, it was said: "It clearly appears in the present case that the matter contained in the amendment made by the order appealed from was not omitted from the judgment by reason of any neglect of the clerk in recording the same, but was intentionally excluded therefrom by the court itself at the time it rendered the judgment. If it should be admitted that the court ought to have included the provisions of this stipulation in its decree, its failure to do so was an error, resulting either from a misconception of the law applicable to the facts before it, or from a failure to give sufficient consideration to those facts. In either case it was an error of law committed at the trial, which the defendant should have sought to remedy through her motion for a new trial." The principle there decided, we think, is conclusive of the question under consideration. This conclusion, however, is strongly supported by the case of Forquer v. Forquer, 19 Ill. 71, where it was said: "This was not a clerical mistake of the clerk in entering up the decree which was rendered by the court, but was an error of the court in rendering the decree, which should be reversed on error. There is nothing to show that the court noticed the prayer of the bill that the rights of the widow, in the lease, should be reserved to her in the sale to be made of the premises, and that the judge intended to reserve such right in the decree. The draft of the decree was drawn by the complainants' solicitor, and he swears that he inadvertently omitted to insert the saving clause, according to the prayer of the bill. The presumption is that the court inspected the draft thus drawn, and pronounced it as the decree of the court without critically comparing it with the bill, and hence was inadvertently led into the error which undoubtedly exists in the decree. The clerk correctly copied into the record the draft of the decree as it was rendered. If the judge's minutes showed that there was a saving clause, we might presume that the draft prepared by the solicitor did not express the whole of the decree, and that the clerk had, by mistake, omitted to enter the saving clause in the decree, when the amendment might have been authorized by the statute of jeofails; but there is nothing to show that the court had an intention to insert such saving clause. This, then, was clearly a judicial, and not a clerical, error, which can only be corrected in this court."

We cannot say that the omission of the court to dispose of the water stock by the decree was not prejudicial to appellant, and, as it was clearly erroneous, the motion for a new trial should have been granted. The amendment of the order for judgment, and the amendment of the judgment itself, being unauthorized and beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and therefore void, did not change the situation. If the motion for new trial should have prevailed, the amendment not having been made, it should have been granted notwithstanding the amendment. But, as the pledge of the water stock was admitted by the answer, the stock should have been included in the order for judgment, and in the judgment and order of sale.

The cause should be remanded, with directions to the court below to amend its order for judgment, and the judgment therein, so as to include said water stock in the order of sale, and directing that said water stock shall be first sold, unless the defendant shall otherwise direct; and the judgment, as so amended, should be affirmed, appellant to recover his costs on this appeal.

We concur: BRITT, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, it is ordered that this cause be remanded to the court below, with directions to modify the judgment so as to include said water stock in the order of sale; and, as so modified, the judgment be affirmed, appellant to recover his costs on this appeal.

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 23, 1895.)

APPEAL — REMITTITUR — MODIFICATION OF JUDGMENT.

A motion on appeal for a modification of a judgment for payment of costs must be made before the remittitur issues.

In bank.

Judicial settlement of the accounts of J. W. Goodwin, administrator with the will annexed of John Levinson, deceased. An order allowing the account with the exception of one item was, on appeal, modified and affirmed. On motion to modify judgment for payment of costs. Denied.

For former opinion, see 41 Pac. 483.

PER CURIAM. Motion to recall the remittitur herein for the purpose of securing a modification of the direction made therein for the payment of the costs of the appeal. Without reference to the merits of the motion, it comes too late. The remittitur was regularly issued on September 6, 1895, and this motion was not noticed until October 18th following. If respondent desired a modification of the judgment in any respect, the proper application should have been made before the going down of the remittitur. Gray v. Palmer, 11 Cal. 341. When the remittitur has been duly and regularly issued, without inadvertence, we have no power to recall it. This court thereupon loses jurisdiction of the cause, except in a case of mistake, or of fraud or imposition practiced upon the court, neither of which elements appear in this case. People v. Sprague, 57 Cal. 147; Rowland v. Kreyenhagen, 24 Cal. 52. Motion denied.

PEOPLE v. JAMES et al. (Cr. 41.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 25, 1895.)

FORGERY—INDICTMENT—VARIANCE—IDEM SONANS.

1. Though furnishing intoxicating liquors to Indians is prohibited by law, Indians may be convicted of forging an order to furnish liquor to "bearer."

2. The names "Crusius," as alleged in an indictment, and "Crushes," as shown by the proof, are idem sonans.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Del Norte county; James E. Murphy, Judge.

Henry James and W. H. Miller were convicted of forgery, and appeal. Affirmed.

R. W. Miller and Eugene McNamara, for appellants. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

VAN FLEET, J. Defendants were convicted of forgery, the charge being that, with intent to defraud Frank Crusius and Gottlob Hess, they forged a false and fraudulent order for the delivery of chattels, in these words: "March 26, '95. Please give to bearer 5 gal. beer, and oblige, Frank Crushes," —and passed said order upon Gottlob Hess.

1. The evidence discloses that the defendants are Indians, and it is urged in their behalf that inasmuch as the sale or furnishing of intoxicating liquor to Indians is positively prohibited by law, and made a felony, the order in question was without legal efficacy and void, and therefore not the subject of forgery; that, even if genuine, it was not an instrument which the defendants were capable in law of making use of, because the person upon whom it was drawn was not permitted to honor it; and, consequently, that the false making of it could not operate to the injury or defrauding of any one, and for that reason the act did not constitute forgery. This argument assumes that the supposed infirmity of the forged paper appears upon its face, and consequently was bound to be taken notice of by the person upon whom it was drawn. But such is not the fact. The paper is drawn to bearer, and, assuming defendants' position to be true in the instance of a paper disclosing its invalidity upon its face, this paper, in the hands of other than an Indian, was susceptible of being made the engine of fraud and injury. In this view, the fact that it was presented and passed by the defendants is wholly immaterial, and may be laid out of consideration as a false factor. If, upon its face, the paper is capable of being used to defraud those who may act upon it as genuine, it is within the statute. People v. Monroe, 100 Cal. 664, 35 Pac. 326, and cases there cited. In that case substantially the same objection was made as here, and it is there said by Mr. Justice Garoutte, speaking for the court: "There is no question but that a writing which is a nudum pactum is not the subject of forgery; but a contract which a court will not enforce, or even recognize, because it is against the policy of the law, cannot be termed a 'nudum pactum.' A forged contract, even though it covers a subject-matter which makes it void as against public policy, upon its face may present such an appearance that, if genuine, it might injure another, and such a one satisfies the test which we have laid down." In People v. Krummer, 4 Parker, Cr. R. 219, replying to a like objection, it is said: "We are never called upon to determine whether in legal construction the false instrument or writing is an instrument of a particular name or character. It is a matter of perfect indifference whether it possesses or not the legal requisites of a bill of exchange, or an order for the payment of money, or the delivery of property. The question is whether upon its face it will have the effect to defraud those who may act upon it as genuine, or the person in whose name it is forged. It is not essential that the person in whose name it purports to be made should have the legal capacity to make it, or that the person to whom it is directed should be bound to act upon it if genuine, or have a remedy over." Tested by these principles, the contention of defendants cannot be sustained.

2. The objection that the demurrer to the information should have been sustained because it is alleged that the intent was to defraud one "Frank Crusius," and the forged instrument alleged is signed "Frank Crushes," is without merit. Within the doctrine of idem sonans, there is no material variance or difference in the names.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

(S. F. 118.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 13, 1895.)

CERTIORARI—WHEN LIES—FINAL ORDER IN CONTEMPT.

1. On a petition for writ of certiorari to review an order of court, facts affecting the validity of the order can only be considered as they affect the question of jurisdiction.

2. Certiorari will not issue to review an order of court adjudging the petitioner guilty of contempt in disposing of his property in violation of a decree of divorce enjoining him from so doing, on the ground that the restraint is perpetual, since it is an error which can be corrected by appeal.

3. Certiorari will not issue to review a final order of guilty in contempt proceedings because of an erroneous ruling on a plea of former jeopardy, since the plea does not go to the jurisdiction.

4. After a cause has been assigned to one department of the superior court, a transfer to another department, though irregular, will not render proceedings in the latter for contempt of an order made by the former, while the cause was under its control, void for want of jurisdiction, and subject, therefore, to review by certiorari, since the jurisdiction of causes is by the constitution (article 6, § 6) vested in the court, and not in departments.

In bank.

Petition by George E. White against the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco for a writ of certiorari. Writ denied.

Barclay Henly and Edward Lynch, for petitioner. Henry E. Highton, for respondent.

VAN FLEET, J. Application for certiorari to review an order of said court (department 4 thereof) adjudging petitioner guilty of contempt.

In the case of George E. White vs. Frankie White, pending in said superior court, wherein petitioner is the plaintiff, the superior court entered a decree divorcing the parties; and by said decree, after reserving the property rights of the parties for future consideration, it is provided: "That until the further, supplemental, and final decree aforesaid is duly entered, recorded, and carried into effect, the plaintiff, his agents, attorneys, trustees, employés, and servants, and each of them, be, and they hereby are, enjoined and restrained from selling, conveying, alienating, assigning, transferring, mortgaging, hypothecating, incumbering, or in any manner disposing of, embarrassing, complicating, or affecting the community property of the plaintiff and the defendant, real and personal, or any part or portions thereof, and his own separate property, real and personal, including all moneys and securities the plaintiff has on hand, and the income derived from said property, or any part or portions thereof, except that plaintiff may be permitted to pursue and carry on his usual and ordinary business; and, with respect to the whole of said property, from doing or permitting or suffering to be done any act or acts in violation of the rights, or any of them, of the defendant respecting the subject of this action, or tending to render the judgment or decree in favor of the defendant, or any part thereof, ineffectual." Subsequent to the entry of said decree, the superior court appointed a receiver in said action, and directed him to take possession and control of all the property of petitioner, and hold it subject to the direction and control of the court. The proceeding for contempt against petitioner was commenced since the making of the decree and order aforesaid, and the acts charged as constituting such contempt were in making two certain leases of his lands, in violation of the injunction contained in said decree, and in interfering with and obstructing the receiver in the efforts of the latter to take possession of said property. Petitioner, having been duly cited and tried, was found guilty of the acts charged, and it was adjudged that they constituted a willful contempt of said court; and petitioner was sentenced to suffer five days' imprisonment in jail, and to pay a fine of $500. He seeks by this proceeding to have the judgment of contempt annulled.

Numerous grounds are urged against the validity of said judgment, but we regard most of them as possessing little, if any, merit. Many of the allegations contained in the very voluminous petition, and a considerable part of petitioner's argument, relate to matters of fact and propositions of law which can by no possibility arise or be considered upon certiorari, for the simple reason that they in no manner involve the question of jurisdiction, but go only to that of mere error in the rulings of the superior court in the matter complained of. Nothing is better understood than that on this proceeding the single question involved is whether the lower court has exceeded its jurisdiction. If it has not, no matter how grievously it may have erred to the prejudice of the petitioner, either in matters of fact or matters of law, this writ will not afford an avenue of relief. Central Pac. R. Co. v. Placer Co., 43 Cal. 365; Whitney v. Board, 14 Cal. 479; Buckley v. Superior Court, 96 Cal. 119, 31 Pac. 8; Loaiza v. Superior Court, 85 Cal. 11, 35, 24 Pac. 707. The question being purely one of power, the mere manner in which the contempt proceeding was tried, the rulings of the court upon the admissibility of evidence, and kindred matters, are things wholly without the range of our investigation. Nor can we look into the evidence to inquire as to its sufficiency to sustain the finding and conclusion of the superior court. If the court had jurisdiction, and the recitals of the judgment or order are sufficient to sustain it, those recitals are conclusive upon us in this proceeding. We are confined to the record. "If the order is one which the court had power to make, it is not for us to inquire whether this power was properly exercised or not. The writ of review is not a writ of error." Von Roun v. Superior Court, 58 Cal. 358. "The mere grounds upon which the determination was reached may or may not be correct in themselves. These may be supported by evidence inadmissible when tested by the rules governing the introduction of evidence. The reasons given for the conclusion arrived at may or may not be such as address themselves to the judgment of others; but erroneous views entertained, or incorrect reasons assigned, or evidence erroneously admitted in deciding the controversy, do not make a case of want of jurisdiction." Central Pac. R. Co. v. Placer Co., supra. In Ex parte Ah Men, 77 Cal. 198, 19 Pac. 380, it is said: "Nearly all of the objections urged against the validity of the judgment convicting petitioner of a contempt are answered by the recitals in the judgment itself. If the record were silent as to the jurisdictional facts, jurisdiction would be presumed; but the judgment itself recites all the facts necessary to the exercise of jurisdiction by the court. * * * The matters adjudicated are conclusive, and no evidence dehors the record can be received to impeach them." See, also, Ex parte Sternes, 77 Cal. 156, 19 Pac. 275; Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Board of Equalization, 97 Cal. 318, 32 Pac. 312; Buckley v. Superior Court, 96 Cal. 119, 31 Pac. 8.

These considerations strip the case of much of its bulk, and render it unnecessary to notice in detail many questions raised, which it will readily be perceived are swept aside by the principles above announced.

Within those principles falls the objection that the superior court had no power to put the restraint upon petitioner's right to dispose of his property which it does by the injunction contained in its decree, and, consequently, that petitioner was guilty of no contempt for violating it. It is not questioned that the court had jurisdiction of the action for divorce, and power to put a proper restraint upon the disposition of the property, pending the final determination of the rights of the parties therein; but it is claimed that the restraint here is practically perpetual, and that this it was beyond the power of the court to make. It is perfectly obvious that this, if true, would not amount to an excess of jurisdiction, but an error, merely, which could be corrected upon appeal; and, until so corrected, the decree would be obligatory upon the parties, and they would violate its terms under pain of contempt. In re Cohen, 5 Cal. 494.

Within the same general principles is the further objection that the facts alleged in the petition show that the petitioner has been twice in jeopardy for the acts for which he was convicted of contempt. In Muir v. Superior Court, 58 Cal. 361, in passing upon the same objection, the court say: "The defense of a former adjudication does not go to the jurisdiction of the court. In this case, when the question of whether the contempt charge has been before adjudicated was raised, the court had the same power to pass upon it as it had to pass upon any other question in the case; and, if it erred in holding that there was not such former adjudication, as claimed, the error cannot be reviewed upon certiorari. That writ lies only in cases where the inferior tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction."

This leaves substantially but one objection to be disposed of. It is claimed that neither the department of said court in which the contempt proceeding was tried, nor the judge thereof, ever acquired jurisdiction of said cause or of the parties, for the reason, as it is alleged, that said divorce action was never lawfully transferred thereto. This contention is based upon the fact, set forth in the petition, that the action was originally assigned for trial to department 1 of said court, and after being there partially disposed of, and said decree of divorce entered therein, was by the presiding judge of said court transferred for further disposition to said department 4, wherein the judgment of contempt was entered. The rule of said court providing for the method of transferring a cause from one department to another is set out, and facts are alleged showing that the order transferring the action of White vs. White was not made in accord with the requirements of that rule, but in disregard and violation thereof; and it is urged that, by reason of this fact, department 4 and the judge presiding therein never became vested with power to hear or determine said contempt, and that its judgment in the premises is void. But, taking the facts to be true,—and they are not denied,—they in no way involve the question of jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of causes is vested by the constitution in the court, not in any particular judge or department thereof. The constitution, in fact, says nothing about departments. It provides that there may be as many sessions of the court at the same time as there are judges (section 6, art. 6); but, whether sitting separately or together, the judges hold but one and the same court, and the jurisdiction they exercise in any cause is that of the court, and not the individual. The division into departments is purely imaginary, and for the conveniences of business and of designation. Transferring a cause for trial or disposition from one of those departments to another does not effect a change or transfer of the jurisdiction of that cause; that remains at all times in the court as a single entity. The same section of the constitution provides that the judges of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco shall choose a presiding judge from their number, who "shall distribute the business of the court among the judges thereof, and prescribe the order of business"; and it seems that the judges of that court have adopted rules for the guidance of the presiding judge in the performance of that duty, which it was competent for them to do, so long as those rules violate no express or implied provision of law. But it is perfectly obvious that, however proper those rules may be, or however desirable or essential to the impartial and orderly conduct of the business of the court that they should be adhered to, their violation in any instance cannot affect the jurisdiction of the court over a cause. The power to distribute and regulate the business of the court resting with the presiding judge, though it be exercised in a grossly unfair and arbitrary manner, is not an excess of power, but an abuse of it. The remedy for such abuse rests in the hands of the judges of that court, since they have the power to remove that functionary at their pleasure, and substitute another in his stead. And possibly, in an instance where the violation of the rules of the court by the judge, without notice to a party litigant, worked the latter an injury, by depriving him of some substantial right, the act would amount to an irregularity which could be corrected on appeal. Callahan v. Hickey, 63 Cal. 438. But we do not understand that, after a cause has been once assigned, it may not be reassigned or transferred, even irregularly, without jeopardizing the jurisdiction of the court therein. The power of the presiding judge in the premises is not exhausted by the original assignment of an action or proceeding. Such construction would tend to impede, rather than facilitate, the administration of the business of the court, and defeat in large part the very purpose of the provision in question.

We have considered the other points made, but, as they are all in our judgment covered by what has been already said, they require no special notice. We are satisfied that the record does not disclose an excess of jurisdiction, and consequently no case is made for our interposition by the remedy of certiorari. It follows that the writ should be dismissed, and it is so ordered.

SCHULTZ et al. v. McLEAN et al. (No. 19,457.)

CONTINUANCE—PLEADING—AMENDMENT — DEMURRER—TRIAL—OBJECTIONS WAIVED—EVIDENCE—REVIEW.

1. On the third trial of a cause wherein plaintiff has had a continuance by stipulation, a motion for the further continuance, to amend his complaint and obtain evidence, is properly denied where the affidavit neither shows the amendments desired nor alleges want of evidence to support the amended complaint.

2. Error in refusing to grant a continuance to amend a pleading is waived by the subsequent filing of an amended pleading.

3. On the third trial of a cause, an allowance of 24 hours after denial of a continuance, within which to amend the complaint, will be deemed sufficient, where it is not claimed that the amended pleading filed within that time did not contain all the desired averments, or that the brief time allowed rendered their presentation defective, and it appears that plaintiff, some time previous to the motion, knew in what particulars he desired to amend.

4. Time within which to demur to an answer to an amended complaint is properly denied where plaintiff does not show that the answer is subject to demurrer, and that some advantage will be gained by the demurrer.

5. After a third trial of a cause, an order to proceed to trial after the filing of an answer to the amended complaint, without allowing plaintiff time for preparing for trial, will be deemed proper where plaintiff does not claim want of evidence to rebut affirmative matter in the answer, the cause was set for trial by stipulation, and his affidavit for a new trial does not show that he had any other evidence.

6. Code Civ. Proc. § 443, fixing the time within which to demur to an answer, applies only to an answer to the original and not an amended complaint, the allowance of a demurrer in the latter case being within the discretion of the court.

7. An appearance by plaintiff before a judge, and obtaining rulings from him on motions presented, with knowledge that he has acted as counsel for defendant, is a waiver of his right to urge the disqualification of the judge on that ground.

8. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 592, the submission of special issues to the jury is within the discretion of the court.

9. Where the evidence is not in the bill of exceptions, it will be assumed that it was sufficient to support the findings of the court.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; B. T. Williams, Judge.

Action by George Schultz and others against George D. McLean and another to have a deed absolute in form declared a mortgage, and for a transfer of the legal title to them on payment of the money due under the mortgage. From a judgment for defendants and an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Pierson & Mitchell and D. H. Whittemore, for appellants. T. M. Osmont and E. P. Cole, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. 1. When this action was called for trial in the superior court the plaintiffs moved for a continuance, and its denial is assigned by them as one of the errors of law committed at the trial. In connection with their motion for a continuance, the plaintiffs filed affidavits setting forth the history of the case, and stating that it would be required to file an amended complaint, and that until such amended complaint was filed and issue joined thereon, and a reasonable time allowed for the purpose of procuring the necessary evidence, the cause could not be tried. The cause had been tried twice before, and the judgments rendered in favor of the plaintiffs reversed by this court. The complaint upon which the last trial had been had was filed July 30, 1889, and the answer of the defendant McLean was filed August 3, 1889. Robinson made no answer, and his default had been entered. The cause was tried upon these issues, and judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiffs, April 30, 1890. From this judgment, McLean appealed, and the judgment against him was reversed February 9, 1892, and the cause remanded for a new trial. 93 Cal. 329, 28 Pac. 1053. Robinson took a separate appeal from the judgment, and October 4, 1892, upon the stipulation of the plaintiffs, confessing error, the judgment against him was reversed, and the remittitur filed in the court below October 9, 1892. In reply to this motion of the plaintiffs, it was shown on the part of the defendants that in August the cause had been set for trial on the 12th of September, and that prior to that date, at the request of counsel for the plaintiffs, the defendants' counsel had consented to a continuance of the trial to some time in October, and that on the 3d of September a stipulation was made by the attorneys for the respective parties, consenting that the cause might be set for trial "at any time between the 5th and the 15th days of October, 1892, that may suit the convenience of the judge called to try the same," and that pursuant to this stipulation the cause was, by order of the court, set for trial on the 11th day of October. The court thereupon denied the motion. The plaintiffs did not claim that they were unable to proceed to trial upon the issues as they then stood upon the record, or that they were unable to present all the evidence necessary to establish the averments of their complaint, nor did they designate to the court any particulars in which they desired to amend their complaint, or that they desired to present any different issues from those upon which the cause had been previously tried; and, in view of the fact that before they went to trial they filed an amended complaint, it must be held that, so far as the motion was made upon this ground, it was removed by the filing of such complaint. At the time the motion was made, the court was not informed of the nature of the amendments that the plaintiffs desired to make to the complaint, or that they were unable to establish the averments that they might include in such amended complaint; and in the absence of some showing of this nature, and in view of the fact that the cause had been twice tried, the court was justified—at least until they had asked leave to amend their complaint, and pointed out the particulars in which they desired to amend it—in assuming that they were prepared to establish their cause of action.

2. After the denial of this motion, the plaintiffs asked leave to file an amended complaint, and that a reasonable time might be granted them therefor. The court gave them the leave, but directed that it should be filed within twenty-four hours. The plaintiffs insisted that this was too short a time, and excepted to the order upon the ground that the time allowed therefor was insufficient. We cannot perceive any error in this action of the court. It is not claimed on behalf of the appellants that the amended complaint which they filed does not contain all the averments which they desired to incorporate therein, or that, by reason of the brief time which was given for its preparation, it does not properly present their cause of action. In view of the previous trials of the cause, and the rulings of this court upon the previous appeals, the court was justified in assuming that the facts, as well as the mode of presenting them, were familiar to the plaintiffs. The reversal of the judgment against Robinson was upon their own confession of error, and was granted by the court at their request, and not by reason of any consideration of the court itself, and the plaintiffs did not by such reversal first learn of the necessity for an amendment to their complaint. Their stipulation, after becoming aware of the error upon which they consented to a reversal of the judgment, that the cause might be set down for trial for some time between the 5th and 15th days of October, shows that they must have known at that time the particulars, if any, in which they desired to amend their complaint.

3. Upon the filing of the amended complaint, Robinson demurred thereto, and after argument thereon the demurrer was overruled, and, Robinson declining to answer, his default was entered. McLean filed his answer the next day after the amended complaint was filed, and the court thereupon ordered the parties to proceed to trial. The plaintiffs objected thereto upon the grounds that they were entitled to a reasonable time after issue joined within which to prepare the cause for trial, and that they had not had sufficient time within which to examine the issues involved in the action, and that they also had the statutory right to at least 10 days after service of McLean's answer within which to demur thereto, and to raise an issue of law thereon, before being compelled to try the issues of fact. Their objection was overruled, and they excepted thereto. The answer of McLean consists chiefly of denials of the averments in the amended complaint, and of a plea of the statute of limitations, and an averment of good faith in making the purchase of the lands involved in the action. The plaintiffs did not claim that witnesses by whom to establish the facts alleged by them were not at hand, or that any evidence was wanting with which to rebut the affirmative matters shown by the answer; and inasmuch as the cause had been set for trial on the 11th of October, with their consent, and with the presumption that they knew the points in which they intended to amend their complaint, it would have shown a want of diligence on their part not to have had the witnesses present with which to proceed to trial. Upon their motion for a new trial they did not present any affidavits showing that they had any other evidence, or that any facts could be presented by them in addition to those which they did present at the trial which then took place. Their claim of the right to time within which to demur to the answer is untenable. They did not then suggest any ground of demurrer, nor did they afterwards upon the motion for a new trial, nor have they upon this appeal specified any grounds upon which they could have demurred to the answer, or that there was any issue of law which they desired to have determined before the issues of fact were tried. Unless it is made to appear that an answer is subject to demurrer, and that the plaintiff could have derived some advantage by demurring to it, he cannot claim to have been deprived of any right because he is not granted time to determine whether he will demur. The provisions of section 443, Code Civ. Proc., are applicable to the original pleadings in a cause, and not to pleadings which are amended at the trial, or during its progress. The court has the same right to exercise its discretion in determining the time within which an answer or demurrer shall be filed to the amended pleading which it allows as it has in determining whether it will allow such amended pleading; and, unless it shall appear that it has abused this discretion, its action will not be reviewed.

4. After this motion for a continuance had been denied, the plaintiffs then objected to further proceeding with the cause upon the ground that the superior court of that county had no jurisdiction to try the same, by reason of an order having been made transferring the cause to the county of Santa Barbara for trial. It appeared that on the 4th of June, 1892, an order was made, upon the application of McLean, for a transfer of the cause to the county of Santa Barbara, upon the ground that the judge of the county of San Luis Obispo was disqualified by reason of having been counsel for McLean. When this order of transfer was made, the cause had been removed from the superior court of that county, and was pending in the supreme court upon the appeal of Robinson from the judgment therein, and no notice of the motion had been given to Robinson; and, upon these matters being brought to the attention of the court, it made an order on the 18th of June vacating its previous order of transfer. The papers in the cause had not been transferred to Santa Barbara county, but remained with the county clerk of the county of San Luis Obispo. Whether the plaintiffs would have had the right, upon a proper motion therefor, to have the cause transferred to another county for trial, need not be decided. After having stipulated on September 3d that the cause might be set for trial at any time "that may suit the convenience of the judge called to try the same," and, in pursuance thereof, Judge Williams having been called to preside in that court, and the plaintiffs having appeared before him, without objection to his trying the cause, and obtained leave to file an amended complaint, and argued the demurrer thereto, they must be deemed to have waived any right to move for a transfer by reason of the disqualification of Judge Gregg.

5. Whether the court would submit special issues to a jury was a matter within its own discretion. Code Civ. Proc. § 592.

6. In their notice of intention to move for a new trial, the plaintiffs stated, as one of their grounds of said motion, the insufficiency of evidence to support the findings; but they have not incorporated into the bill of exceptions any of the evidence that was given at the trial, or specified any particular in which it was insufficient. It is stated in the bill of exceptions that at the trial they produced before the court their evidence tending to prove the allegations of their amended complaint, and also evidence in rebuttal of that introduced by the defendant. It must therefore be assumed that the evidence fully sustained the findings of the court. The judgment and order are affirmed.

FORCIBLE DETAINER—FAILURE OF LANDLORD TO REPAIR.

Under Civ. Code, § 1942, authorizing the tenant, on refusal of the landlord to repair, to make the necessary repairs, not to exceed one month's rent, or to vacate the premises, the tenant, after remaining in possession on refusal of the landlord to repair, without making the repairs, cannot defend in an action for forcible detainer, on refusal to pay rent, because of such failure to repair.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. Murphy, Judge. Unlawful detainer by Kate Moroney against W. B. Hellings and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

T. M. Osmont and T. J. Crowley, for appellants. Clement, Cannon, Kline & Stradley, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Appeal from the judgment. The action is one in unlawful detainer, for the forfeiture of a lease, the recovery of the possession of the demised premises, and for treble rents. Hellings and his wife were the lessees. Walk was a subtenant, and entered under the Hellings after the three-days notice to pay or vacate had been served upon them. The complaint, which is in the usual form, sufficiently pleads plaintiff's cause of action. The answer denied that any sum of money was due as rent, and, by way of cross complaint, pleaded that by the indenture of lease it was expressly agreed that all necessary repairs during the term of the letting should be made, and the expense therefor borne, by plaintiff; that during the time mentioned in the complaint, when it was claimed that rent was due and unpaid, the water pipes of said premises "became impaired and leaky, and greatly increased the monthly water rate," and caused the tenants occupying the premises to vacate; and that the plaintiff, after frequent demands, still refused to repair the water pipes, or to permit defendants Hellings to do so. All to the damage of the defendants in the sum of $260.

Complaint is made by appellants that the court failed to find upon their allegations as to defective water pipes, their demand that plaintiff make necessary repairs, and plaintiff's refusal to make them, or to permit appellants to do so. But these averments rest upon the claim that it was plaintiff's duty to make these repairs, under the lease. The lease was admitted in evidence, and the court properly found that it contained no such covenant, and that plaintiff's obligations as landlord were those only imposed upon her by law. The bill of exceptions contains all of the evidence admitted in the case, and the evidence offered and rejected. By this it appears that no leak was proved to exist. It was merely suspected that one existed, because of the size of the monthly water bills. Examination of the pipes had been made by a plumber, at the expense of plaintiff, and no leak discovered. The premises were in habitable and tenantable condition. The tenants thought a leak existed, and that it was situated under the sidewalk, between the water meter and the house. They wished to tear up the sidewalk to investigate, and plaintiff would not permit them to do so. There was upon this matter no other rights and duties between the parties than such as arose in law. In the absence of an agreement to the contrary, it was the landlord's duty to repair dilapidations which rendered the premises untenantable; and, if he did not, then the tenants had the option of making the necessary repairs, not to exceed in cost one month's rent, or to vacate, and be discharged from further liability for rent. Even if the landlord refused to allow the lessee to make such repairs, the refusal would be meaningless, and would not and could not modify or destroy the tenant's right under the Code. Civ. Code, § 1942. The failure to find becomes, therefore, immaterial, since the finding itself, even if in appellants' favor, could not have benefited them. They neither repaired nor vacated, but remained in possession, and claimed damages for the alleged condition of the premises as an offset to the rent. The averments of the cross complaint become immaterial, either in defense or as a cross complaint, and no findings were necessary upon them (Diefendorff v. Hopkins, 95 Cal. 343, 28 Pac. 265, and 30 Pac. 549), for the rights of the lessees were only those defined by the Code (Van Every v. Ogg, 59 Cal. 563; Sieber v. Blanc, 76 Cal. 173, 18 Pac. 260; Green v. Redding, 92 Cal. 548, 28 Pac. 599). For like reason the evidence rejected by the court was properly rejected, since its admission could not have aided appellants in their defense or cross complaint. It was therefore rightly excluded as immaterial. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

FISCHER et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (S. F. 121.)

RECEIVER OF CORPORATION—AUTHORITY TO APPOINT—IMPROPER APPOINTMENT—REMEDY—PROHIBITION—INJUNCTION—VALIDITY.

1. A court has no power, pending an action against a corporation, to displace the corporate management, and put in its place a receiver and the court, in the absence of a statute giving it such power. Fischer v. Superior Court, 32 Pac. 875, 98 Cal. 67, distinguished.

2. There is no statute in California giving a court the power, pending an action against a corporation, to displace the corporate management by a receiver and the court.

3. Where a court undertakes, pending an action against a corporation, to displace the corporate management by a receiver and the court, without statutory authority, prohibition is the proper remedy.

4. An injunction against a stockholder of a mining corporation and others, restraining them from withdrawing certain moneys then deposited in banks or elsewhere in the name of such corporation, or in the name of a certain person appointed receiver, and from selling any of the mines of the corporation or any interest therein, cannot be said "to suspend the general and ordinary business of a corporation," within Code Civ. Proc. § 531, requiring notice to defendant of the application for the writ in such cases.

In bank. Original petition by Jacob A. Fischer and others for a writ of prohibition to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco and others to restrain further proceedings under certain orders of such court. Granted.

Wheaton, Kalloch & Kierce, for petitioners. Crittenden & Van Wyck, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This is an original petition here by Jacob A. Fischer, M. A. Wheaton, and the Consolidated Golden Gate & Sulphuret Mining & Development Company, a corporation, for a writ of prohibition to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, and the Honorable James M. Troutt and Honorable James M. Seawell, judges of said court, and also to John F. Pinkham, a receiver appointed by said Troutt, as judge of said court, in a certain action therein pending, in which Charles J. Behlow is plaintiff and the said Jacob A. Fischer et al. defendants, commanding said court and judges and said Pinkham to desist from taking any further proceedings, etc., under the order appointing said Pinkham receiver, or under a certain injunction issued in said action, or under an order and citation by which it is proposed to punish said petitioners Fischer and Wheaton for contempt in refusing to deliver certain real property to said receiver. The proceeding in prohibition here was submitted upon a demurrer to the petition, and also an answer filed by said judges and a separate answer by said receiver Pinkham. The complaint in the action in which Pinkham was appointed receiver was filed April 19, 1895. The theory and averments of this complaint are, briefly, that in the year 1889 the plaintiff, Behlow, together with the defendant Fischer and F. C. Loftus and William C. Long, constituted a copartnership, and that as copartners they owned the mining claims and properties involved in this proceeding, and situated in Tuolumne county; that on or about September 1st of said year 1889 the said copartners, for the purpose of carrying on the business of said copartnership by said copartnership under a corporate name, agreed to organize a corporation to be called "the Consolidated Golden Gate & Sulphuret Mining & Development Company"; that the said partners should convey and transfer to said corporation their mines and mining property; that the capital stock of said corporation should consist of 60,000 shares; that 48,000 shares should be divided between said copartners, and issued to them individually, in certain proportions agreed upon, and that the remaining shares should be afterwards disposed of as they might determine, but that said corporation, when organized, should not be an independent corporation, and should be "but the name and mere medium of the copartnership in carrying on its business, and that the copartnership should be the real and beneficial owner of the property transferred into the name of said corporation." It is averred that such corporation, with the name before stated, was duly organized on or about the 20th day of August, 1889, and that on September 4, 1889, the said copartners by deed conveyed, assigned, and transferred to said corporation "all the said mining claims, real property, water rights, water ditches, water privileges, stamp mill, hoisting works, furnace, amalgamating plant, engine, boilers, water wheel, tools, implements, and other property," except a certain mining and placer claim, described, "and all other property, of whatever kind or nature, situate on, or in the course of erection, or about said mining claims and real property," and also "the moneys of said corporation then on hand." It is then averred that plaintiff, Behlow, did not get all the shares of the stock of the corporation to which he was entitled; that Fischer wrongfully procured certain shares to be issued to Behlow for his (Fischer's) benefit; that he afterwards, by false representations of the value of the mining property, induced Behlow to sell him 22,000 shares of said stock for less than their real value; that said Fischer, as president of said corporation and general manager, together with the majority of the board of directors, whom he controls, and who have conspired with him, have misappropriated dividends, and caused wrongful certificates of stock to be issued, and will so conduct the business that it will become valueless, etc., to the irreparable injury of plaintiff. There are many other averments, which need not be here mentioned, some of which, however, will be noticed hereafter. The prayer is that Fischer be required to account for moneys and personal property "of the copartnership or corporation" unlawfully appropriated by him or his agents; that certain stock held by the defendant Rozalia Fischer be adjudged to be the property of the said copartnership; that the defendants be enjoined from doing certain things with respect to the said mining properties; and that a receiver be appointed to take possession and charge of all said mining properties, "and to work, operate, and develop said mines, during the pendency of this action, and to take possession of and hold all the net profits thereof, subject to the further order of this court." The court on April 20, 1895, in accordance with said prayer, appointed said Pinkham receiver, who went to Tuolumne county to take charge of said property, and demanded the same of said petitioner, Fischer, who was in possession for said corporation under a decree and order of the superior court of Tuolumne county. The orders granting the injunction and appointing the receiver were made without any notice to petitioners or any bond from plaintiff on the appointment of the receiver. Fischer, on the advice of Wheaton, who was counsel for Fischer and for said corporation, refused to deliver possession, whereupon a citation was issued to them both to show cause why they should not be punished for contempt.

In addition to the facts set out in said complaint, the petition for this writ contains averments of these other facts: In January, 1892, the said Behlow and others commenced a certain other action in the superior court of Tuolumne county against the said Fischer, said corporation, and others. For convenience, we will call the action last above named the "Tuolumne Case," and the second action, in which Pinkham was appointed receiver, the "San Francisco Case." The Tuolumne case was substantially the same as the San Francisco case. In the former case the court, after a trial, rendered a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs therein, but upon an appeal to this court the judgment was reversed. See 102 Cal. 208, 36 Pac. 509, where the facts are very fully stated in the opinion of Mr. Justice Harrison. After the remittitur went down the pleadings were several times amended, and it was finally tried the second time upon the fourth amended complaint, in which Ed. C. Loftus and his wife, Mariam, were the sole plaintiffs, and the said Behlow was a defendant, and made answer. In that case one Lane had been appointed receiver, and continued to act as such, having possession and control of said property, until after the appointment of Pinkham in the San Francisco case. The said Tuolumne case was tried in the superior court of that county during the months of January and February, 1895; and on April 16, 1895, the said court made and entered its findings and decree, wherein it was found and adjudged, among other things, that said corporation never agreed to act, and never did act, as the agent of said copartnership, nor was any copartnership business carried on through said corporation; that it has been the owner of said mining properties since September, 1889, and since then was in full possession thereof, working it, as a corporation, exclusively in its own right, until possession was taken by said Lane as receiver; that the title of said corporation to said mining properties be quieted as against all of the defendants therein, including said Behlow; that all of said defendants be adjudged to have no right, title, or interest in or to said properties; and that said defendants, including said Behlow, be, and they were, enjoined from claiming or asserting any right, title, or interest in or to said mining properties, or any part thereof, adversely to said corporation. After entering this decree the court, on April 20, 1895, made an order that the receiver, Lane, deliver possession of said property to the said corporation, and to Fischer as its agent and manager, and such possession was given about 5 or 6 o'clock on April 23d. Immediately afterwards Pinkham, receiver in the San Francisco case, demanded possession. These averments of the petition are substantially admitted by the respondents herein, except that they assert that cerain rulings of the court in the Tuolumne case, with respect to the pleadings of said Behlow in said case, and evidence offered, prevented him from having his rights properly adjudicated therein. He was a party to that action, however, and any wrong rulings of the court touching his pleadings or evidence were mere errors, to be corrected upon appeal.

Petitioners contend that the said admitted averments of their petition, together with the fact that no previous notice had been given the corporation, show a want of jurisdiction either to grant the injunction or appoint the receiver. The general rule, no doubt, is that so harsh a measure as the appointment of a receiver to take property out of one's possession without trial will not be indulged in by a court without previous notice to the defendant. It would be unjustifiable, except where it clearly appeared that irreparable injury would be done during the few days necessary for a hearing on notice, and even in such an extreme case a temporary injunction would usually be sufficient. "A motion to appoint a receiver will not be entertained unless notice has been given to the defendant, if practicable, and the appointment will not be made without notice, save in case of irreparable pending injury." Beach, Rec. § 141, and notes. In the case at bar, if the superior court of San Francisco had known what the petitioners could have shown it on notice, it would probably not have so far disregarded the decree of the superior court of Tuolumne as to have granted an injunction and appointed a receiver in favor of one whom a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction had just enjoined from asserting any right to the property involved, especially when such property was then in the possession of the other court and its receiver. With such knowledge, it probably would not have peremptorily taken the property away from the corporation a second time until it had itself heard the merits of the controversy. Indeed, there are authorities to the point that a court has no power to appoint a receiver where one had already been appointed by another court of equal co-ordinate jurisdiction, and was in possession. In Beach, Rec. § 15, it is said: "As between courts of the same state, when a receiver has been appointed by one court, and has obtained possession of the property or fund over which he was appointed, he cannot be in any manner interfered with by a receiver subsequently appointed, or by any proceeding whatever in any other action brought in any court." See, also, Merrill v. Lake, 16 Ohio, 405; Stearns v. Stearns, 16 Mass. 167; Pugh v. Brown, 19 Ohio, 211. In Young v. Railroad Co., 2 Wood, 606, Fed. Cas. No. 18,166, the court says: "If there are any adjudicated cases which would authorize this court to interfere with the possession of a receiver appointed by another court having jurisdiction, and who is in the actual possession of the property, they have never fallen under my observation. The authorities all sustain the opposite doctrine;" citing a number of cases. Respondents contend that the rule does not apply here, because the second receiver did not attempt to take possession until after the first receiver had delivered possession to the corporation. However, as the first receiver was in possession when the order of the San Francisco court appointing Pinkham was made, it is doubtful if the validity of said order can be determined, except upon the facts existing when it was made. But whether these matters—suggested by said averments in the petition—involve considerations of mere error and abuse of discretion, or raise issues of jurisdiction, is a question which we do not deem it necessary to be here decided, because, in our opinion, the averments of the complaint show a want of power to appoint the receiver. We may remark, however, that the appointment of a receiver to take property and business out of the hands of persons in possession and claiming ownership thereof, without requiring a bond from the plaintiff in the action, would in most cases be a gross abuse of discretion.

It is to be observed that the order complained of makes Pinkham receiver of the corporation. He is to take possession of the mining properties of the corporation, and to "develop, work, operate, and run said mining claim and mill, and to employ such persons and laborers as may be necessary to continue the development and business of said mines and mining claims, and to pay out and disburse such moneys as may be necessary to work, operate, develop, and carry on the business of said mines," etc. This is to displace the corporate management, and to put into its place the receiver and the court; and it seems to be well settled that a court has no power to do this, except in cases where it has been given by statute, and that prohibition is a proper remedy for its attempted exercise. Neall v. Hill, 16 Cal. 145; French Bank Case, 53 Cal. 495; Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 327, 24 Pac. 121; People's Home Sav. Bank v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, 103 Cal. 34, 36 Pac. 1015; Harrison v. Hebbard, 101 Cal. 152, 35 Pac. 555. In Neall v. Hill, supra, where a receiver had been appointed to take possession of the property of a corporation, the court said: "It is well settled that a court of equity, as such, has no jurisdiction over corporate bodies for the purpose of restraining their operations or winding up their concerns. We do not find that any such power has ever been exercised in the absence of a statute conferring the jurisdiction." In the French Bank Case the court say: "Irrespective of the effect of the fifth subdivision of section 564 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which will be presently considered, there is no jurisdiction vested in courts of equity to appoint a receiver of the property of a corporation in a suit prosecuted by a private person. This is only to say that there is no jurisdiction vested in these courts in such a case to dissolve a corporation; for the power of a receiver, when put in motion, of necessity supersedes the corporate power." Holding directors accountable for abuse of their trust is, of course, a different thing. The general authorities on the subject are to the same effect. Beach, Rec. § 403, speaking of receivers of corporations, says, "It is, in the first place, to be remarked that the jurisdiction to appoint a receiver in these cases is wholly statutory." The question to be determined, therefore, is whether or not there is any statutory provision under which power is given a court to appoint a receiver, in a case like the one at bar, during the pendency of the suit. The question last stated was exhaustively considered in the French Bank Case. In that case a receiver had been appointed by the trial court in a suit brought by creditors of a corporation alleged to be insolvent, and upon certiorari it was held that the court had no jurisdiction to make the appointment. In that case it was held that such jurisdiction was not conferred by any subdivision of section 564 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or by any other provision of said Code, or any legislative enactment. There it was sought to maintain the appointment upon the ground, among others, that the corporation was insolvent. In the case at bar the respondents do not base their right upon the insolvency of the corporation; but, if they did, the court declared in the French Bank Case that "there is no statute of this state —none to which we have been pointed—which undertakes to confer upon a private person, either as stockholder or creditor, the right to maintain an action to dissolve a corporation upon the ground that it is insolvent, or to obtain relief by seizing its property out of the hands of the constituted management, and placing it in the hands of a receiver." And this being so, what other provision of the Codes or of the statutes is there which confers the power to appoint a receiver under the facts presented in the case at bar? We cannot see any, and have not been referred to any, which confers such power. How is plaintiff's position any better than that of a creditor or stockholder? Indeed, plaintiff bases his right very largely upon the fact that he is a stockholder of the said corporation.

It is difficult to understand upon what ground the right to a receivership is based in the case at bar, or what that position is, which, it is contended, lifts the plaintiff in the case above the principles hereinbefore stated, and enables him, through the agency of a receiver, to take from a corporation the management of its affairs during the pendency of an action. Respondents seem to contend that the whole doctrine is swept aside by the mere averment that the said Consolidated Golden Gate & Sulphuret Mining & Development Company is a mere medium of a partnership, and not an independent corporation. But the complaint in the San Francisco case admits and declares that said company was duly organized as a corporation in 1889; that in said year all the mining properties involved were conveyed to said corporation, and that it has ever since been the owner in fee of said properties; that its capital stock was issued to the members of the partnership, except the shares reserved; that said capital stock is of great value, 19,200 shares thereof being alleged to be worth "not less than one hundred thousand dollars ($100,000)"; that ever since its organization, in 1889, said corporation has carried on the business of operating said mining properties, except when said receiver, Lane, appointed in the Tuolumne case, was in possession thereof; and that said corporation "asserts and claims that it is the owner and entitled to the possession of said mines, mining claims, moneys, and other property, and that it is an independent corporation, and that said partnership and the members thereof have no right, title, or interest, beneficial or otherwise, in or to said mines, mining claims, moneys, or other property." Here, then, upon the face of the complaint, we have the case of a corporation de jure and de facto, having the legal title to certain mining properties, carrying on the business of operating the same as mines, and asserting full ownership and right of possession thereof; and this is the very case in which, under the authorities, a court has no power, during the pendency of a suit by a private person, to take the control of the property and business of the corporation out of the corporate management, and give it to a receiver. And, these facts being admitted and declared, the rule is not changed, nor is any new power given the court, by the other averments of the complaint. Otherwise the rule would be worthless, and any corporation in the state, acknowledged to be in the legal ownership and possession of certain property and business, could be dispossessed of that property and business through the appointment of a receiver whenever a party saw fit to make some averment similar to those contained in the complaint in Behlow v. Fischer. The position of the plaintiff in that case is no better than that of a creditor or stockholder, neither of whom could rightfully procure the appointment of a receiver during the pendency of an action against a corporation.

The authority relied upon by respondents is the case of Fischer v. Superior Court, 98 Cal. 67, 32 Pac. 875. That was a petition for a writ of prohibition commanding the superior court of Tuolumne county to desist from acting under an order appointing said Lane receiver in the action hereinbefore designated as the "Tuolumne Case," and the writ was denied. But that decision was made upon the basis that there had been a trial and adjudication of the rights of the parties, and that the appointment of Lane was part of the final judgment and decree. He had been appointed before judgment, but judgment had been rendered in favor of plaintiffs (erroneously, as it afterwards appeared), and by the judgment he had been reappointed. This court, in its opinion in Fischer v. Superior Court, say: "The application for the writ and the order to show cause was made prior to the rendition of the aforesaid judgment, but that judgment includes the authority under which the receiver is now acting, and for that reason we shall address ourselves to the legal sufficiency of that authority." The additional words, "although the jurisdictional question presented is probably the same under either order," in no way change the decision, or make it authority upon the question of the power to appoint a receiver before judgment. The court further says, "It will not be necessary to enter into a discussion of the principles and authorities relied upon to sustain the proposition that a court of equity cannot appoint a receiver to take possession of the property of a corporation pending litigation, for petitioner's case fails before it reaches that position." Now, the power of a court to appoint a receiver, under subdivision 3, § 564, Code Civ. Proc., "after judgment, to carry the judgment into effect," is a very different thing from the power sought to be exercised in the case at bar. Whether that subdivision applies to a judgment obtained against a corporation in a suit brought by a private person is not a question arising here, but Fischer v. Superior Court is not authority to the point that in such a suit a receiver can be appointed pending the action. The judgment upon which that decision was based was afterwards reversed, and a subsequent judgment rendered in the Tuolumne case adjudging that said company was an independent corporation, owning said mining properties, and operating them for itself and on its own account.

Our conclusion is that there was no jurisdiction in the court to make the order appointing the said Pinkham receiver in the said case of Behlow v. Fischer et al., and that under the views above expressed a writ should issue, commanding the respondents herein to desist from taking any further proceedings under said order, or under the order citing petitioners to answer for contempt. This makes it unnecessary to consider other points made by petitioners,—as, for instance, that petitioners violated no order or process of the court, because there was no order or process commanding them to deliver property to the receiver, and that they did not interfere with the possession of the receiver, because he had no possession.

The injunction complained of restrains the petitioners and all of the defendants in the San Francisco case from withdrawing certain moneys then deposited in certain banks or elsewhere, in the name of said corporation, or in the name of said Lane, and from selling any of the mines of the corporation, or any interest therein. Although this injunction was granted without notice, we cannot say that its effect is "to suspend the general and ordinary business of a corporation," and that, therefore, it is invalid, under section 531, Code Civ. Proc. The remedy would be a motion in the superior court to dissolve the injunction, and an appeal from an order denying said motion. As to said injunction, the prayer of the petition is denied. It is ordered that a peremptory writ of prohibition issue, commanding the respondents to desist from taking any proceedings under the order appointing John F. Pinkham receiver, and under the order citing petitioners for contempt, as prayed for in the petition.

FOGEL v. SAN FRANCISCO & S. M. RY. CO. (No. 16,011.)

Railroad Companies—Personal Injuries—Contributory Negligence—Evidence—Physician as Expert Witness—Remarks by Counsel—Verdict—Reversal.

1. In an action for injury from being thrown from a car by its coming to a sudden stop, by reason of a defective switch, while being run at a high rate of speed, evidence that other persons than plaintiff were thrown from the car and injured is admissible to overcome the claim of defendant that plaintiff's injuries were caused by his negligence in jumping from the car when in motion.

2. In an action for injuries received in an accident due to a defective switch, evidence by a skilled switch tender as to whether anything was not done that could have been done to have avoided the accident is inadmissible, as invading the province of the jury.

3. Where a witness shown to be a physician has been "examined at length" as to plaintiff's injuries, it will be assumed that a proper foundation has been laid to enable him to testify as a medical expert.

4. The fact that plaintiff's counsel, in an action against a railroad company passing through a city, for personal injuries, said that "there is no road in the city * * * that has caused so many accidents as this road, as is well known," is not ground for reversal, where it was casual, and did not evidently influence the jury.

5. A verdict on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; A. A. Sanderson, Judge.

Action by Jacob Fogel against the San Francisco & San Mateo Railway Company for personal injuries. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Morrison, Stratton & Foerster, for appellant. H. I. Kowalsky and A. Everett Ball, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. The plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for injuries to his person alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant's servants and employés, in consequence of which he was thrown from one of its moving cars. The answer denied any liability on the part of defendant, and alleged that the injuries sustained by plaintiff "were occasioned by the negligence of said plaintiff in jumping from said car while the same was in motion, and that the said negligence of said plaintiff proximately contributed to the injuries alleged to have been received by him." The case was tried before a jury, and by the verdict plaintiff was awarded damages in the sum of $1,000, for which judgment was entered. From this judgment, and an order denying its motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

It was proved on behalf of the plaintiff that the car on which he was riding was going at a greater speed than usual, and that on coming to a switch the front wheels passed onto the switch and the hind wheels remained on the main track; that the car was thereupon brought to a sudden stop, and the plaintiff was thrown off, and, when picked up, was found to be badly bruised and unconscious. John W. Tracy was a witness for plaintiff, and was asked: "Was anybody else thrown off of the car?" He answered: "Yes, sir; a lady." J. J. Kerr was a witness for defendant, and on cross-examination was asked if he saw the plaintiff lying on the ground, and answered that he did. He was then asked: "Did you see anybody else lying on the ground besides this man?" "A. Yes, sir; I saw a lady." "Q. Was she injured?" "A. Not very much. We picked her up." Similar questions were propounded on cross-examination to defendant's witness Conrad Trieber. All of these questions were objected to by defendant upon the ground that they were irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, and the objections were overruled. It is claimed that the questions objected to were not relevant to the issues presented by the pleadings, and that the testimony as to the injury of the lady tended to prejudice the minds of the jury against the defendant. The testimony was evidently offered to meet and overcome the defendant's theory that plaintiff's injuries were caused by his own negligence in jumping from the car when it was in motion, and for that purpose it was clearly competent and admissible.

William Craven was a witness for defendant, and testified that he was an oiler on the electric road of the defendant, his business being to oil the switches and curves; that it was his duty to examine the switches, and see that they were in good order, and that on the day the accident occurred he examined the switch where plaintiff was hurt at about a quarter past 6 in the morning and again about 11 o'clock; and that on both of these occasions it was in good order. He was then asked the following questions: "Mr. Craven, was anything omitted that could have been done, that a man of foresight could have advised, or were you as careful as a man could have been to have avoided an accident, on this day?" "Well, now, in your opinion as a railroad man, used to working on railroads, was everything done that could have been done in the matter to obviate or prevent this accident?" Both questions were objected to by plaintiff upon the ground that they were immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent, and the objections were sustained. The rulings of the court were correct; both questions call for the opinion of the witness upon a matter of fact, which was the principal question at issue, and which it was the sole province of the jury to decide.

A physician was called as a witness for plaintiff, and stated that he was called to see him on the day he was injured, and then proceeded to testify as to his injuries and condition. He was asked if he had ever examined the patient in consultation with any other physician, and answered that he had, with Dr. F. S. Cook. Dr. Cook was then called as a witness, and "was examined at length by counsel for plaintiff." During the examination, counsel for plaintiff asked: "I want to know, doctor, what is the present condition, physically, of the plaintiff?" Defendant objected to the question upon the ground that it was irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, and that the proper foundation had not been laid for a question of that kind. The Court: "Have you examined him lately?" "A. Yes, sir; some five weeks ago." The court then ruled that the witness might tell what he found his condition to be when he examined him physically. It is now claimed that the admission of the testimony of the witness, against the defendant's objection as to his competency, was error, "in view of the fact that his competency to testify as a medical expert had not been shown." But it does not appear that he was not competent to testify. He was shown to be a physician, and was "examined at length," and the presumption must be that the proper foundation had been laid to enable him to testify as a medical expert.

During the closing argument of counsel for plaintiff to the jury, he remarked, "There is no road in the city and county of San Francisco that has caused so many accidents as this road, as is well known." An exception to the remark was taken by counsel for defendant, and the court said, "I would not repeat it." It is claimed that the remark was improper, and tended to prejudice the minds of the jury against defendant. The judgment cannot, in our opinion, be reversed on this ground. The remark, while improper, appears to have been casual, and there is nothing to indicate that the minds of the jurors were or could have been prejudiced by it against the defendant.

Finally, it is claimed that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict, but we think it quite sufficient for that purpose. There was some conflict in the evidence, but that was a matter for solution by the jury and the trial court. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; HAYNES, C.

FERNANDEZ et al. v. BURLESON et al.
(No. 18,272.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 25, 1895.)

MINES—LIENS—DESCRIPTION OF PREMISES—SUFFICIENCY.

1. The fact that a particular description by metes and bounds, of a mining claim, in a notice of a lien, is incorrect, will render the notice invalid.

2. Where the same persons own two mining claims in the same mining district, only one of which has on it improvements, and it appears that the mines are known by the names of the parties working them, a notice of lien reciting that it is for work done within a designated period of three months on a mining claim, with improvements, located in a particular mining district of a certain county, owned by the persons (naming them) who had the work done, does not identify the claim with the improvements with sufficient certainty to create a lien thereon.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Siskiyou county; J. S. Beard, Judge.

Action by John Fernandez and others against I. C. Burleson and others to enforce mechanics' liens on a mining claim. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Warren & Taylor and T. M. Osmont, for appellants. Farraher & Raynes, for respondents.

BRITT, C. Plaintiffs (eight in number) united in this action under the permissive clause of section 1195, Code Civ. Proc., to enforce liens claimed by them, respectively, for balances due from defendants on account of labor performed by plaintiffs, severally, at the request of defendants, on a mining claim in Siskiyou county. Defendants constitute a mining partnership under the name of Burleson & Parsley. They owned a mining claim called the "Bare Bar Claim," and employed plaintiffs to work thereon. Their answer admitted that the balances alleged are due to the plaintiffs, respectively, but denied that the work was done on the premises described in plaintiffs' several claims of lien. There was judgment for the plaintiffs (seven of them), directing the sale of said Bare Bar property, and the application of the proceeds to the payment of the demands of the successful plaintiffs, with costs and attorneys' fees. The correctness of the judgment depends upon the answer to the question whether the property thus directed to be sold is described at all in the claims of lien filed in the office of the county recorder under section 1187, Code Civ. Proc. In this particular the notices were all in the same form. That of Fernandez, taken as an example, stated: "I * * * give notice of my intention to hold and claim a lien * * * upon that certain mining claim situated in the Virginia Bar mining district, county of Siskiyou, state of California, particularly described as follows [giving a specific description, by monuments, metes, and bounds]; containing twelve acres, more or less, * * * with all improvements, including wheels, pumps, and all mining facilities and appurtenances situated thereon. The said lien being claimed and held for * * * work done * * * upon said premises * * * from the 27th day of June, 1892, to the 8th day of September, 1892, * * * at the special instance and request of Burleson & Parsley, the owners and reputed owners thereof." It is conceded that the description by monuments, metes, and bounds, thus stated, does not apply in any part to the Bare Bar property, where plaintiffs did their work, but does apply with entire accuracy to an adjoining mining claim, known as the "Otto Bar," in which defendants had, with other persons, some interest, but which was not worked at all during the year 1892. It was in evidence, however, that there were no wheels, pumps, or mining facilities on the Otto Bar mining claim, while there were such on the Bare Bar claim; that mines in the vicinity were "generally known by the names of the parties running them"; that the Bare Bar claim was commonly called the "Burleson & Parsley Caim"; that mining claims were somewhat numerous in that neighborhood, but defendants worked no other.

The court found that the claims of lien as filed contained a description of the property intended to be charged sufficient for identification, and that any one familiar with the locality can readily identify the Bare Bar mine as the mining claim which plaintiffs intended to charge with their liens. We discover no evidence to justify this finding. The contention of respondents' counsel, as we understand it, is that the boundaries given in the claim of lien may be disregarded, and that the other circumstances stated, viz. that the lien is claimed upon mining ground, in a specified mining district, with all improvements, including wheels, pumps, etc., situated thereon, for work done by the claimants between specified dates, at the request of Burleson & Parsley, the owners and reputed owners thereof, will "enable a party familiar with the locality to identify the premises intended to be described with reasonably certainty, to the exclusion of others," and hence is sufficient. Mills Co. v. Kremer, 94 Cal. 209, 29 Pac. 633. But, in the first place, there is no warrant in the law or in the abstract equity of the case for rejecting the boundaries by which the notice of lien states that the property is "particularly described." One of the most important requirements of the statute governing the creation of such liens is that the notice shall contain a description of the property to be charged sufficient for identification. Code Civ. Proc. § 1187. Without such description the notice would in some instances be of no value to the owner, and could rarely be of any use to creditors, purchasers, or other lien claimants dealing with the land. Phil. Mech. Liens, § 378. If this were a case of mistake as to some incident of the description, the mistaken circumstance, like a false call in a deed, would be rejected (Mills Co. v. Kremer, supra); but, on the contrary, the error is of the essence of the description. To reject the particular description, and rely on the adventitious circumstances which accompany it, would be to invert the maxim that the incident follows the principal, and not the principal the incident. Civ. Code, § 3540. The notice of lien is not an instrument susceptible of reformation. Goss v. Strelitz, 54 Cal. 640. Therefore the monuments and lines by which the property is said in the notice to be "particularly described" cannot be expunged from the notice, but must be read as part of it. So read, it is misleading in a particular where it should be substantially true. Wagner v. Hansen, 103 Cal. 107, 37 Pac. 195. Secondly, were the particular description omitted and the other circumstances stated in the notice alone consulted, we do not think that a person familiar with the locality merely could thereby identify the premises with reasonable certainty to the exclusion of others. He would also need to know that the claimant worked on the premises, and when he worked there, knowledge of which matters cannot be implied from mere knowledge of the locality. Besides, the statute requires that the notice itself must describe the property on which the work was done. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1183, 1187. A notice that the property to be charged is the property where claimant worked does not take the first step towards compliance with the statute. Nothing, then, remains except the reference to pumps, wheels, and mining facilities, and to the names of the owners. It is shown affirmatively that the defendants claimed and were reputed to own an interest in the Otto Bar mine; and the reference to the wheels, pumps, etc., is (on our present assumption) to them as situate upon unascertained land. On these facts, at the very most, one might suspect that the Bare Bar mine was intended; but that he could identify it with reasonable certainty to the exclusion of other premises is incredible. The judgment and order should be reversed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

DAGGETT v. GRAY et al. (No. 19,410.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 25, 1895.)

CONVERSION—DEMAND—PLEADING OVER.

1. A complaint alleging that defendants, being in possession of property, converted the same to their own use, need not allege demand and refusal.

2. Failure to allege demand and refusal in an action for conversion is cured by an answer setting up ownership to the property in controversy.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Action by Daggett against Gray and others for conversion. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

For opinion in department, see 40 Pac. 959.

Parrish & Mossholder and Walter Rose, for appellants. Johnston Jones and D. L. Withington, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. This action was brought to recover damages from the defendants for the conversion by them of a stock of drugs in the Hotel Brewster Building, in San Diego. The defendants demurred to the complaint upon the ground that it did not state a cause of action, and, upon the overruling of their demurrer, answered the complaint. The cause was tried by the court, and judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff, from which and an order denying a new trial the defendants have appealed.

1. The demurrer was properly overruled. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff had been appointed receiver in an action then pending in the superior court of the county of San Diego, in which one Brickey was the defendant, and that as such receiver he was on the 17th day of March, 1893, "the owner and lawfully entitled to the immediate possession of a stock of goods in the drug-store in the Hotel Brewster Building, in San Diego, in said county," and that on said 17th day of March, 1893, "the defendants, then being in possession of said goods, unlawfully converted and disposed of the same to their own use," whereby he had sustained damage. The defendants urge that this complaint is defective by reason of a failure to allege that the plaintiff had made a demand upon them for the property, and a refusal on their part to comply with such demand. As demand and refusal does not of itself constitute conversion (Steele v. Marsicano, 102 Cal. 666, 36 Pac. 920), but only evidence from which conversion in certain cases may be found, so conversion may be established by proof of other acts on the part of a defendant concerning the property. If the relation of the defendant to the property is such that a previous demand is essential in order to establish conversion on his part, proof of such demand must be made at the trial, but the demand need not be alleged. The allegation that the defendants "converted and disposed of the property to their own use" is the allegation of a fact sufficient, in the absence of a special demurrer, to sustain a judgment. Upon the trial of an issue on this averment, the plaintiff would be at liberty to introduce evidence of a demand and refusal, if such evidence were sufficient or necessary to establish the conversion; and he would also, under this averment, be authorized to offer evidence that the defendants had sold or otherwise dealt with the property in repudiation of the claim of the plaintiff. "Where conversion is alleged as a fact, in general terms, that is sufficient to admit of any evidence on the trial of issue joined that tends to establish such conversion, and the plaintiff is not bound to allege the particular acts or acts which constitute conversion, in an action of this character. Averments which sufficiently point out the nature of the pleader's claim are sufficient, if under them, upon a trial of the issues, he would be entitled to give all the necessary evidence to establish the claim." Berney v. Drexel, 33 Hun, 34. See, also, Johnson v. Lumber Co., 45 Wis. 119; Railroad Co. v.

Robinson, 133 N. Y. 246, 30 N. E. 1008. The other objections to the complaint urged in the brief on behalf of the appellants would be relevant if there had been a demurrer on the ground of uncertainty or ambiguity; but as these grounds were not specified in the demurrer they were waived, and cannot now be considered.

2. Whatever defect there may have been in the complaint in this particular was removed by the answer of the defendants, wherein they alleged their ownership of the goods, and denied that the plaintiff had had "at any time since the 12th day of March, 1893, any interest in, or been entitled to the possession of," the property sued for. The rule is well settled that a complaint which lacks the averment of a fact essential to a cause of action may be so aided by the averment of that fact in the answer as to uphold a judgment thereon (Pom. Rem. & Rem. Rights, § 579; Schenck v. Insurance Co., 71 Cal. 28, 11 Pac. 807), even though a demurrer to the complaint for the want of this fact had been erroneously overruled (Cohen v. Knox, 90 Cal. 266, 27 Pac. 215. The rule in those cases which holds that when the defendant came lawfully into the possession of the property, a demand and refusal must be established in order to charge him with conversion, and must be alleged in the complaint, in order to permit of such proof, ceases when the defendant admits in his answer that he has converted the goods to his own use, or alleges facts showing that a previous demand would have been futile. The denial in the answer of a tenant of his tenancy, and of the title of his landlord, obviates the necessity of proving or alleging a notice to quit. Smith v. Shaw, 16 Cal. 88; Simpson v. Applegate, 75 Cal. 342, 17 Pac. 237. Upon the same principle, the claim by a bailee, in his answer, of the ownership of goods intrusted to his keeping, and a denial of any title in his bailor, obviate the necessity of proving a demand for the goods before bringing suit, and waive the omission of an allegation of such demand. The judgment and order are affirmed.

WISE v. ROSE. (Sac. 16.)

ANSWER—DENIAL—SUFFICIENCY—WAGER—CONSTRUCTION.

Where plaintiff, in an action against the stakeholder to recover back money wagered on a horse race, alleged that, before the race was run, he repudiated the wager, and served written notice thereof on defendant and on the other party, defendant's answer, admitting all the material facts except that he denied on information and belief that plaintiff repudiated said wager, and served written notice upon defendant and upon the other party, before the race, and alleging that he could not "positively say" whether the notice was received prior to the race, was insufficient as a denial.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Joseph H. Budd, Judge.

Action by K. D. Wise against L. J. Rose, Jr., to recover a certain sum of money. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Woods & Levinsky, for appellant. Jas. A. Louttit, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. It is alleged in the complaint that plaintiff and A. B. Spreckels laid a wager of $500 on the result of a horse race to be run on the Stockton course between September 17 and 22, 1894, each depositing with the defendant his stake of $500, under an agreement that defendant should pay the stakes ($1,000) to the winner; that before the race was run, and before it was or could have been known or determined whether plaintiff had won or lost the stakes, he repudiated the wager, and served written notice of such repudiation upon Spreckels and upon defendant, and, two days thereafter, demanded of defendant his said stake of $500; but that defendant has failed and refused to return to him said sum of $500, or any part thereof. In his answer, defendant admits the wager, and that plaintiff and Spreckels each deposited with him a stake of $500, pursuant to a written agreement between them, which was also deposited with him, of which the following is a copy: "San Francisco, Cal., Aug. 15, 1894. In the match race between the mare She and Jennie June the conditions are as follows, to wit: L. J. Rose (Jr.) is stakeholder. The race to be trotted at Stockton, California, during the fall meeting. Each principal to select one judge; they to select a third judge. The principals to agree upon a starter. The race to be three best heats in five, and trotted to rule. Positions to be decided by tossing up. The race to be for five hundred dollars a side. Play or pay. K. D. Wise. A. B. Spreckels." That thereafter the following further written agreement was executed between plaintiff and Spreckels: "Sacramento, Cal., Sept. 10, 1894. The undersigned agree to trot the match race between She and Jennie June on the 18th day of the present month, over the Stockton course. A. B. Spreckels. K. D. Wise." That, at the time and place thus appointed, the said Jennie June failed to appear, although requested by the judges of the race so to do, but that the mare She did appear in accordance with the terms of said agreement, and did trot over said course at said time, and did win said race; and thereupon the judges of said race did so decide and declare in writing, as follows: "Stockton, September 18, 1894. In the match race between She and Jennie June the latter did not appear when called; and She came up, and was given the word, and, after trotting over the course in 2:22, was declared the winner of the race. Chris. Green, C. E. Needham, B. F. Langford, Judges." Defendant qualifiedly denied, as hereinafter stated, the alleged repudiation of the wager, and notice thereof to him and Spreckels, on the ground that he "has no information or belief sufficient to enable him to answer the allegation"; but "admits that on the 18th day of September, 1894, he received an alleged telegraphic repudiation from said plaintiff, but whether the same was received by him prior to the time when said event occurred, or was to have occurred, or prior to the time when said wager was decided, this defendant cannot positively say." Further answering, the defendant "admits that he has not paid to the said plaintiff the sum of five hundred dollars, or any part thereof, but denies that he still has or holds said sum, or any part thereof, and in this behalf alleges that after the happening of the said event, to wit, the winning of the said race by the said mare She, that he delivered to and paid to said A. B. Spreckels, in accordance with the terms of said written contract or agreement hereinbefore set forth, the full sum of $1,000." The plaintiff demurred to the answer on the ground that it does not state facts constituting a defense, and, at the same time and upon the same ground, moved the court for judgment in favor of plaintiff on the pleadings. The court sustained the demurrer, and also rendered judgment for plaintiff on the pleadings. Defendant brings this appeal from the judgment on the judgment roll, with a bill of exceptions, showing merely the action of the court on the demurrer and motion for judgment. It does not appear that defendant offered to amend his answer, nor that he expressly declined to amend; but he does not complain that he did not have leave to amend, nor pretend that he desired to amend, his answer, but simply contends that his answer stated a defense to the action, and that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer, and in rendering judgment in favor of plaintiff.

Unquestionably, the plaintiff was entitled to judgment on the facts stated in his complaint (Johnston v. Russell, 37 Cal. 670; Hill v. Kidd, 43 Cal. 615; Gridley v. Dorn, 57 Cal. 78); and there is no pretense that the answer denied any material fact alleged in the complaint, except the averment that plaintiff notified the defendant of his repudiation of the wager before the race was won, and before it was known, or could have been known, whether plaintiff had won or lost the wager. The answer shows that the race was trotted by the mare She alone, as the second event in the afternoon of September 18, 1894, and expressly admits that defendant received telegraphic notice of plaintiff's repudiation of the wager on that day, and does not deny that he received such notice before the race was trotted by the mare She, but merely avers that "defendant cannot positively say" whether or not the telegram was received by him before the event occurred or before the wager was decided. This is not a denial of the allegation in the complaint that he had notice of the repudiation before the race was run, and before it was known, or could have been known, whether plaintiff won or lost the wager; nor is it an averment that defendant did not know that he received the telegram before the race was trotted, and before it was known which party won; and surely it could not have been intended as an averment that he did not believe the telegram was received by him before the race was trotted. Nor in this construction of the express admission in defendant's answer affected or qualified by the previous denial (on the ground of want of sufficient knowledge or belief) "that on the 18th day of September, 1894, and prior to the time when the event occurred, or was to have occurred, or prior to the time when said wager was decided, plaintiff repudiated said wager, and served written notice of said repudiation upon said defendant and his representative, one Walter Maben, also upon said A. B. Spreckels and his representative, one Ben Harris." This copulative denial of four distinct matters, two of which, at least, are immaterial, is not a denial of any one of them. While the repudiation of the wager on September 18th is expressly admitted, the answer is plainly evasive of the material allegation in the complaint that such repudiation and due notice thereof were prior to the occurrence of the event by which alone it could be determined whether plaintiff won or lost the wager.

Appellant offered to prove that the words "Play or pay," in the agreement, mean that, after the stakes were placed, neither party could repudiate without consent of the other, even though one of the horses should die before the day set for the race. The court properly refused to hear this evidence, since the regulations and usages of the turf are subject to the laws of the state.

I think the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

BROOKS v. SAN FRANCISCO & N. P. RY. CO. (No. 15,871.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 26, 1895.)

APPEAL—TIME OF TAKING—NEW TRIAL—IMPOSING CONDITIONS—DISCRETION.

1. In order to secure a review of the sufficiency of the evidence, an appeal from a final judgment must be taken within 60 days (Code Civ. Proc. § 939), though a motion for a new trial is undecided.

2. The court, in granting a motion for a new trial, may, in its discretion, require the moving party to pay the other party's counsel fees and expenses necessarily incurred in such motion.

3. An order of the court granting a new trial, on the ground that the verdict is not supported by the evidence, will not be disturbed except for an abuse of discretion.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Cross appeals from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; A. A. Sanderson, Judge.

Action by Eugenia Beatrice Brooks against the San Francisco & North Pacific Railway Company. There was a judgment for plaintiff. Both parties appeal from an order granting a new trial, and defendant appeals from the judgment. Appeal from judgment dismissed, and order affirmed on both appeals.

Clement, Cannon, Kline, & Stradley, for plaintiff. Sidney V. Smith, for defendant.

SEARLS, C. This was an action to recover damages sustained by the infant plaintiff for personal injuries received while a passenger upon the railway train of the corporation defendant. The cause was tried before a jury, and a verdict rendered in favor of plaintiff for $5,000. Judgment was entered thereon February 26, 1894. Defendant in due time moved for a new trial, which was granted, "upon the payment by defendant to plaintiff of the sum of $300 for counsel fees and expenses necessarily incurred in said motion." This order was made June 25, 1894. On July 23, 1894, defendant gave notice of an appeal to this court from the order of the court below granting the new trial upon the condition specified in the order, and on the same day gave notice of an appeal from the final judgment entered in the cause February 26, 1894. On June 25, 1894, plaintiff gave notice of an appeal to this court from the order of the court below granting the new trial. These appeals were all duly perfected, and are all based upon a single transcript.

The foregoing dates as to the entry of judgment and appeal therefrom are given for the purpose of showing that defendant's appeal from the final judgment was not taken within 60 days after the rendition thereof, and hence that, under section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the sufficiency of the evidence to support such judgment cannot be reviewed on such separate appeal; and as, upon the judgment roll, the judgment seems regular, we may dismiss from consideration the separate appeal therefrom and turn our attention to the two appeals from the order granting the new trial. The contention of the plaintiff is that to grant a new trial at all was error and an abuse of the discretion lodged in the court, while the defendant bases its appeal upon the ground that it was clearly entitled upon the record to a new trial, and therefore that the condition imposed by the court below was erroneous.

First, as to the appeal by defendant. That a nisi prius court has the power to impose terms as a condition of making an order for a new trial is too well settled to need argument in its support. In Rice v. Gashirie, 13 Cal. 54, which, in view of the fact that the motion was founded upon errors of law occurring at the trial, and hence at first blush would seem not to have been a case involving turpitude on the part of the losing party, the court below granted a new trial upon condition that the moving party should pay the costs. Upon an appeal by the moving party this court, speaking through Baldwin, J., said: "The terms upon which a court will grant a new trial are peculiarly a matter within its discretion. This must necessarily be so, for so many reasons relating to the conduct, management, and peculiar circumstances of the trial may exist that it would be impossible to prescribe any general rules on the subject. If error at law intervenes, a party may take his exceptions and prosecute his appeal without motion for a new trial; but, if he makes his motion, and relies upon that for redress against an improper verdict, he must subject himself to the equitable power of the court. The verdict may have gone against him, in some degree or wholly, by his own neglect or default, or even the rulings of law be chargeable to his own laches or want of diligence. In such cases it may be proper to grant him a new trial, yet only upon equitable terms. We cannot interfere with this exercise of discretion unless upon a clear showing that it has been abused, or that the terms were grossly unreasonable." In the present case the motion for a new trial was based, among others, upon the ground of the "insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict." This is a ground appealing peculiarly to the discretion of the trial court. And wherever the conditions are such that the court below is authorized in its discretion to impose terms as a condition to granting a new trial, this court will interfere only in those cases where it manifestly appears that there has been an abuse of such discretion. The following cases in this court recognize and uphold the right of the trial court in one form and another to impose terms and conditions in granting and refusing motions for new trials: Sherman v. Mitchell, 46 Cal. 578; Gillespie v. Jones, 47 Cal. 264; Chapin v. Bourne, 8 Cal. 294; Harrison v. Peabody, 34 Cal. 178; Dreyfous v. Adams, 48 Cal. 131; Benedict v. Cozzens, 4 Cal. 381; Corbor v. Morse, 57 Cal. 301; Gregg v. Railroad Co., 59 Cal. 312; Davis v. Southern Pac. Co., 98 Cal. 13, 32 Pac. 646. In the case last cited the jury had found a verdict in favor of plaintiff for $15,300. Defendant moved for a new trial. The trial court made an order that, if plaintiff should consent that the judgment be reduced to $9,000, the new trial would be denied, and that otherwise it would be granted. Plaintiff consented to the reduction, and the motion was thereupon denied. Defendant appealed from the order. Counsel for appellant attacked the power of the court to make such an order, and contended that, if the court thought the verdict excessive, its duty was to grant a new trial. This court, speaking through McFarland, J., after admitting that the position of appellant was a strong one, added: "But whatever might be considered the weight of reason and foreign authority on the question above stated, if it were res integra here, the right of a court to do what is complained of in the case at bar is too firmly established in this state by a long line of decisions to be now questioned." The principle involved in that case is the same as that underlying the present one, and goes to the power of the court to impose terms in granting and refusing motions for new trials. A review of the record fails to disclose any basis for concluding that there was an abuse of discretion in imposing terms as a condition to granting the motion for a new trial. It follows that the order appealed from by defendant should be upheld.

Second, as to the appeal of plaintiff from the order granting such new trial. The infant plaintiff, a young girl of the age of 12½ years, a passenger on the 5 p. m. train of the defendant from Tiburon to San Rafael, on Sunday, July 6, 1890, seated in next to the rear car, and designing to stop at San Rafael, remained on board the train when it stopped at the regular station in said last-named city, supposing her car would be detached from the train a couple of blocks beyond said station, and that she could then and there leave the car at a point nearer her temporary home. The train did not stop or detach cars as plaintiff had anticipated, but moved on up a grade of 100 feet per mile at a rate of speed of 8 to 10 miles per hour, when the plaintiff, being alarmed at being carried beyond her home, started for the rear car, as she stated, to find the conductor, and upon reaching the platform fell from the car, as she says, whereby her right foot and ankle were crushed by the wheels of the car, rendering amputation of the leg necessary. The theory of the plaintiff was that defendant was accustomed to drop off cars from the rear of its trains at a point two or three blocks north of the San Rafael station, and switch them to a side track; that passengers residing in the vicinity of such switch and side track were, and for some years had been, accustomed, with the knowledge of the defendant, to remain on such cars until they were detached from the train, and that this custom had been so uniform and general that plaintiff was entitled to rely, and did rely, upon its observance; and that the failure of the defendant to stop its train on the day in question, and at the point indicated, in conformity to such custom, was such negligence as rendered defendant liable for the consequences to the plaintiff. Plaintiff introduced some evidence tending to establish such custom. Defendant took issue with plaintiff as to the existence of the habit or custom indicated above, and introduced evidence tending to prove that, under its summer schedule or arrangement in 1890, it ran trains on week days leaving San Francisco by boat for Tiburon, where connection was made with the cars as follows: At 3:30 p. m., at 5 p. m. and at 6:15 p. m. The 3:30 train ran through to Cloverdale; the 5 p. m. through train ran to Santa Rosa. To accommodate the local travel to San Rafael a local train also ran to that point on the 5 p. m. schedule, pulling out of Tiburon five minutes in advance of the Santa Rosa train, and on reaching San Rafael it discharged its passengers, ran up the track to a point above the switch, near the point where the plaintiff expected to alight, and was backed upon a siding to permit the through train to pass. This through train dropped no cars at San Rafael on week days. The 3:30 train on week days did ordinarily drop off two cars above the switch, and they found their way back by gravity, and were shunted upon the side track. Upon this local train, and upon the 3:30 train, it is apparent, from the testimony, passengers did remain on board, at times, at least, and land at or near the switch, which is north of and beyond the station. On Sunday in 1890 there was no considerable number of passengers for San Rafael at 5 p. m., and the local train was not run; but the Santa Rosa train carried all the passengers, stopped at the station in San Rafael, but did not stop at the switch or drop off any cars, as they were all needed to bring down passengers from above on Monday morning, who were accustomed to go up Saturday evening to spend Sunday in the country. This is but an outline of the testimony. We shall not comment upon it, for the reason that it is not desirable to express any opinion upon the facts of a case which must be again tried beyond what is absolutely necessary. It is sufficient to say that the court below was warranted in granting a new trial. It was said in Cole v. Wilcox, 99 Cal. 549, 34 Pac. 114, by Harrison, J.: "The action of the trial court in granting a new trial, for the reason that the former verdict or decision was not supported by the evidence, is so much a matter of discretion that, unless it appears that there was an abuse of that discretion, this court will not interfere with its action." There is no abuse of discretion apparent in the present case.

The order appealed from by the plaintiff and the order appealed from by the defendant, and each of them, should be affirmed, and as, upon such affirmance, the judgment appealed from will, upon the compliance of defendant with the condition upon which the motion for a new trial was granted, cease to exist, the appeal from the judgment should be dismissed, each party to pay her and its own costs on appeal.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from by the plaintiff and the order appealed from by the defendant, and each of them, is affirmed, and as, upon such affirmance, the judgment appealed from will, upon the compliance of defendant with the condition upon which the motion for a new trial was granted, cease to exist, the appeal from the judgment is dismissed, each party to pay her and its own costs on appeal.

WISE et al. v. WILLIAMS et al. (No. 18,317.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 26, 1895.)

ALLOWANCE BY ADMINISTRATRIX—MORTGAGE TO SECURE RUNNING ACCOUNT—PRIOR INDEBTEDNESS.

1. A finding that a claim was not allowed by an administratrix is improper where the only evidence on that issue was the testimony of the attorney of said administratrix, read from a transcript taken on a former trial before another judge, and was to the effect that he signed the allowance at her request and in her presence.

2. A finding that a mortgage was not intended to secure a note executed by the mortgagor prior to the mortgage is not sustained by the evidence where it appears that the mortgage was executed to secure a running account, that the amount of said note was charged to the account, that the note was surrendered and a statement of his indebtedness rendered to the mortgagor without objection, that at the time the mortgage was executed the mortgagees had for sale merchandise of the mortgagor of almost equal value with his then indebtedness, and the only testimony of an opposite tendency was that of the mortgagees' bookkeeper, who stated that the "mortgage was not given to secure any special indebtedness," and that said note "was evidently surrendered and a new note taken."

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Merced county; Joseph H. Budd, Judge.

Action by John H. Wise and another against J. E. P. Williams and others to foreclose a mortgage. Defendants had judgment, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Edw. P. Cole and D. H. Whittemore, for appellants. T. C. Law, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. Appeal by plaintiffs from a judgment in favor of defendants, and from an order denying plaintiffs' motion for a new trial. This is the third appeal in this cause. To the first complaint a demurrer was filed, and sustained by the court, and judgment entered for defendants. On appeal the judgment was reversed (72 Cal. 544, 14 Pac. 204), and the cause remanded for trial. On November 17, 1887, the cause was tried, and judgment rendered in favor of the defendants. An appeal was taken from that judgment, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. The judgment and order were reversed (88 Cal. 30, 25 Pac. 1064), and the cause sent back for a new trial. On the first appeal it was held by this court that as the complaint showed the demand to have been presented to the administratrix in due time, and to have been allowed by her and approved by the judge in due time, it was not barred by the statute of limitations. Upon the second appeal it was held, among other things, that the presentation and allowance of the claim were in due time, upon the ground that due notice to creditors had not been given prior to such presentation. The facts material to the present appeal are as follows: On the 2d day of May, 1877, John Connell made to the plaintiffs, copartners under the firm name of Christy & Wise, his promissory note for $3,000, payable one day after date, with interest at 1½ per cent. per month, payable quarterly, and if not so paid to be added to the principal and bear like interest, etc. Thereafter, and under date of May 12, 1877, said John Connell and Sarah Connell, his wife, to secure the payment of said promissory note, executed to plaintiffs their mortgage upon certain lands situate and being in the counties of Merced and Stanislaus. The mortgage was duly acknowledged by the wife May 14, 1877, and duly recorded May 18, 1877, in Merced county, and on May 22, 1877, in the county of Stanislaus. Thereafter, and on the 24th day of October, 1877, John Connell and Sarah, his wife, recorded their declaration of homestead in the county of Merced, upon the property covered by the mortgage. Thereafter John Connell died intestate, and on the 19th day of July, 1880, Sarah Connell, his widow, was duly appointed administratrix of his estate, and such proceedings were thereafter had that the homestead was by the court set apart to said Sarah Connell, as the surviving widow of John Connell, and released from administration. According to the complaint, which is denied by the answer, the claim of plaintiffs upon said promissory note and mortgage for $2,813.69 was duly presented to the administratrix December 21, 1880, allowed by her, approved by the judge of the superior court, and duly filed on said last-mentioned date. Sarah Connell died intestate February 17, 1882, and defendant John Hallinan was duly appointed administrator of her estate. In April, 1883, defendant J. E. P. Williams was appointed administrator of the estate of John Connell. This action was commenced in August, 1883, and all claim against the estate of John Connell, except upon the mortgaged premises, was expressly waived. Defendant John Hallinan, as administrator of the estate of Sarah Connell, and as guardian of John B. Connell, minor son of John and Sarah Connell, deceased, answered. Williams, the administrator of John Connell, did not, so far as appears, answer the complaint. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and written findings filed. Several of these findings are attacked as being unsupported by and as contrary to the evidence. Two or three only of these findings need be examined.

The tenth finding is, in substance, that the plaintiffs did not on the 20th day of December, 1880, or at any other time, present their claim to Sarah Connell, administratrix of the estate of John Connell, deceased, or to any administrator thereof, and that no claim of plaintiffs was ever allowed or approved by the administratrix or by any administrator of the estate. It having been held upon the former appeal that the presentation of the claim on December 20, 1888, was in time, the only question now to be considered is whether or not the evidence shows a presentation on that day, and an allowance by the administratrix. The only evidence on this point was the testimony of E. Jackman, who was the attorney for the administratrix, and had his office in Merced. His testimony, as well as all the other testimony in the case, was, by stipulation, read from the transcript of the evidence taken on a former trial before a different judge. He says, in substance, that the claim was sent to him by plaintiffs, and he presented it to the administratrix at his office; that she had just come into town on a wood wagon, and, when requested to sign her name to the allowance, she said she was tired, excited, and sick, and he (the witness) wrote her name at her request, and that she placed her mark thereto, as he thought, though, from the lapse of time, he did not remember especially as to the mark which was placed between the words upon the paper, thus: "Sarah Connell, X, by E. Jackman." The witness added, in answer to the question as to her having placed her mark after the name, that, to the best of his knowledge and belief, she placed it there. The following is the entire indorsement: "The within claim presented to Sarah Connell, administratrix of said deceased, is allowed and approved for $2,813.69, this 20th day of December, 1880. [Signed] Sarah Connell, X, by E. Jackman." This indorsement is preceded by the title of the court and cause, and is followed by the order of allowance and approval of the superior judge. Whether or not Mrs. Connell made the mark to her signature is a matter of no consequence. Jackman is shown by the evidence to have signed her name at her request and in her presence, and that was sufficient. Under such circumstances, the finding of the court referred to cannot be upheld. While the trial court has the right to refuse to believe the testimony of a witness, though not directly contradicted, that right is not to be arbitrarily exercised. If the witness is a credible person, and his testimony is not inherently improbable, nor opposed to other circumstances in proof, nor in any way contradicted, it ought to be accepted. As the judge of the court below did not see the witness on the stand, and had, so far as appears, no better opportunity than we have of estimating his credibility, and as we are unable to discover any inherent improbability in his testimony, we think it not improper to hold that this finding is not justified by the evidence.

The other findings demanding attention are the third and eleventh, the former of which finds that the mortgage was not given to secure the promissory note for $3,000, but that said note and mortgage were given to secure the payment of the account due plaintiffs on their ledger, amounting to $1,249.62 and no more, and for such other amounts as might thereafter be due them from John Connell on ledger account. The eleventh finding is to the effect that plaintiffs have been paid in full long before the commencement of this action, and prior to the death of Sarah Connell, in February, 1882. The propriety of this last finding depends upon the correctness of the third. The allowance of plaintiffs' claim on the 21st day of December, 1880, for $2,813.69, is prima facie evidence that such sum was then due, but was not conclusive against the heirs of John Connell, deceased, who could, under section 1636 of the Code of Civil Procedure, show that the claim was not properly allowed. It was so held on the former appeal in this case. 88 Cal. 35, 25 Pac. 1064. The books of plaintiffs were in evidence, and showed, as found by the court, that on the 2d day of May, 1877, there was a balance due thereon to plaintiffs from John Connell of $1,249.62. Between that date and June 25, 1877, this balance was increased to $2,552.94. A single item going to make up this balance constitutes the only subject upon which there can be, in the light of the evidence, any doubt. It is an entry, of June 25th, of a charge, on account of "bills receivable," of $2,009.46. The evidence tends to show that this amount was due upon an old note held by plaintiffs against John Connell, which was surrendered by the holders. It also tends to show that a statement of account was rendered to Connell on June 25, 1877, with this item charged, and again December 31, 1877, and, so far as appears, no objection was ever offered to the balance as rendered. The only evidence which can be relied upon by the respondents to sustain the contention that this item was not included in the sums to secure which the mortgage was given is to be found in the testimony of W. P. Gerlach, a witness on the part of the plaintiffs, who had been their bookkeeper during the period in which the account with John Connell was made, and who, upon the point in question, was interrogated as follows: "Q. This amount here in Exhibit H1, 'By balance of account rendered, $2,552.94,' to what does that refer? A. To the account sent June 25, 1877. Mr. Connell did not have credit on the ledger for the note or mortgage sued on. That note and mortgage does not affect the ledger account. There was no other indebtedness from John Connell, outside of this running account, and the note and mortgage were given to secure any balance there might be on the books.

The plaintiffs took the note and mortgage to secure any balance due from time to time,—to secure the running account, but not to cover any special indebtedness; to secure the amount due from John Connell at the time, and any amount that might thereafter accrue. In the account of June 25, 1877, the entry of note for $2,009.46 was a note then due from Mr. Connell to Christy & Wise, and was evidently surrendered, and a new note taken." The court below must have concluded from the expression of the witness, "The plaintiffs took the note and the mortgage to secure any balance due from time to time,—to secure the running account, but not to cover any special indebtedness," that the witness intended to convey the idea that the note for $2,009.46 was not so secured. We do not so understand the witness. By the term, "but not to cover any special indebtedness," the witness, judging from the context, simply meant that the note and mortgage in suit were given, not to secure a special or specific sum of money, but the balance then or thereafter to become due, whatever it might be. The witness cannot be understood to have meant to except specialties or a specialty from the indebtedness secured, for the reason that the note for $2,009.46 was not a specialty, in the technical sense, and none are shown to have existed, except it may be the mortgage sought to be foreclosed. And when the witness said this particular note "was evidently surrendered, and a new note taken," he must have referred to the note in suit, as there is no evidence of any other notes in the case. Again, when viewed in the light of the probabilities of the case, we think the conclusion reached must be the same. On May 14, 1877, plaintiffs credited John Connell with $1,235.20, the net proceeds of wool sold by them for him. It is reasonable to suppose that this wool had been in plaintiffs' hands at least as early as the date of the mortgage (May 12, 1877), and before its acknowledgment. If this is correct, then plaintiffs, if the note for $2,009.46 was not included in the indebtedness secured by the mortgage, must have taken such mortgage when there was a balance due them, in excess of the value of the wool on hand, of only some $14.42,—a sum so small as not to warrant the expense of a mortgage. It is true that, in view of future advances to be made, careful business men might exact a mortgage in advance; but the same care would be likely to exhibit itself by securing a present indebtedness,—something tangible and real,—as well as a future and contingent one. The conclusion that the note in question was not included in the balance intended to be covered by the mortgage, founded, as it is, solely upon what at most was but an indefinite expression of the witness, was not, in view of the conduct of all the parties, and in view of the prima facie case in plaintiffs' favor made by the account as allowed, and in the face of the evidence furnished by the books of plaintiffs, sufficient to warrant the finding that the note and mortgage in suit were given to secure the sum of $1,249.62, and no more, of the then present indebtedness. It must follow that if the $2,009.46 was secured by the note and mortgage of May, 1877, there is still something due the plaintiffs over and above all payments made; and hence the judgment and order appealed from should be reversed, and a new trial ordered.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; BELCHER, C.

GRUNSKY v. PARLIN. (Sac. 8.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 26, 1895.)

SALE BY INSOLVENT—BONA FIDE PURCHASER.

1. Though a sale by an insolvent was prima facie fraudulent, a finding that the vendee purchased in good faith will not be disturbed on evidence, though conflicting, that the vendee had no knowledge of the vendor's insolvency, that the price agreed upon was the fair value of the property, and that he afterwards offered to make the deferred payments to the vendor's assignee.

2. An insolvent vendor's fraudulent intent will not affect a bona fide purchaser.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Ansel Smith, Judge.

Action by Otto Grunsky, assignee in insolvency of O. H. Hull, against C. A. Parlin, to set aside a sale. Defendant had judgment, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

James H. Budd, John E. Budd, and Minor & Ashley, for appellant. Nicol & Orr and F. H. Smith, for respondent.

BRITT, C. Hull was a dealer in stationery and musical instruments. His voluntary petition in insolvency was filed June 16, 1893, and in due course plaintiff was chosen his assignee. At sundry times within three days next before said June 16th, Hull sold to defendant certain pianos and organs, and notes and other contracts previously taken by him in the course of business with his customers. The amount of the sales to defendant was $1,385, of which $656 was paid in cash, and by agreement the sum of $729 was to be subsequently paid in installments. Plaintiff brought this action to set aside such sales, alleging that the same were made to prevent the coming of the property to the possession of the assignee, and its ratable distribution among Hull's creditors, and to defeat the objects of the insolvent act of 1880. The trial was by the court, which found that the defendant made his purchases in good faith, without the intent charged and for sufficient consideration. Defendant had judgment accordingly. Appellant urges that the findings are unsupported by the evidence.

The transfers in question were not made in the ordinary course of the business of Hull, and hence were prima facie fraudulent. Section 55 of the insolvent act. There was also evidence of other circumstances tending to cast suspicion on them. But, on behalf of defendant, there was evidence which tended to show that he had no information of Hull's insolvent condition, that the prices paid and agreed to be paid were the full and fair value of the property he purchased, that he has offered to make to the assignee the payments deferred under his arrangements with Hull, and that his conduct, speaking generally, was not inspired by any fraudulent motive. The presumption of fraud was subject to rebuttal (Bernheim v. Christal, 76 Cal. 567, 18 Pac. 683), and, though the evidence in some parts was sharply conflicting, yet there was sufficient, if believed, to rebut such presumption. What credence should be allowed to it was a matter for the trial court to determine. These remarks apply as well to the choses in action assigned to defendant as to the pianos and organs, though appellant argues that the facts were so different regarding the former that, as to them, at least, he should have had judgment.

It is also contended that, in failing to find whether Hull entertained the fraudulent intent alleged in the complaint, the court omitted to dispose of a material issue. But, since the findings exonerated the vendee of the charge of fraud, the intent of the vendor ceased to be of any consequence in the case. A transaction of this nature cannot be vacated because of the fraud of the seller, in which the purchaser had no part, and of which he had no notice. Bank v. Northrup, 22 N. J. Eq. 58.

The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; SEARLS, C.

GREGORY v. SPIEKER. (No. 18,404.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 23, 1895.)

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS — ACTION BASED ON FRAUD—CONTRACTS—VALIDITY—RESTRAINT OF TRADE—BREACH—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

1. Defendant sold plaintiff a certain medicine compound and the good will of the business, and agreed not to sell any of the same medicine in a certain locality. Subsequently, he secretly engaged with another person in the sale of the same compound, under a different name. Held, that plaintiff's action for breach of the contract was one "for relief on the ground of fraud" (Code Civ. Proc. § 338), and the statute of limitations therefore did not begin to run against such action until after discovery of the fraud.

2. Civ. Code, § 1673, provides that every contract to refrain from exercising a lawful business otherwise than is provided by the next two sections is "to that extent" void. Section 1674 provides that one selling the good will of a business may covenant to refrain from carrying on such business within a specified county so long as the buyer or person deriving title under him to the good will carries on a like business. Held, that a covenant not to carry on a business in a certain county is not entirely void for failure to limit the covenant to the time during which the covenantee or his assigns might carry on the business, but is only void to the extent that it transcends section 1674.

3. A contract for the sale of the good will of a business of selling in a certain county a certain medical compound is broken by the vendor selling in such locality the same compound under a different name, and representing it as superior to the original compound.

4. In such an action the measure of damages is the loss suffered by the vendee, and not the profits made by the vendor, in the sale of the similar compound.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; A. P. Catlin, Judge.

Action by Victor J. Gregory against J. J. Spieker. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

D. E. Alexander and Albert M. Johnson, for appellant. Armstrong & Bruner, for respondent.

BRITT, C. Action begun October 4, 1892, to enjoin the violation of a contract, and to recover damages for the fraudulent breach thereof. The following facts, among others, were alleged by plaintiff and found by the court below: Defendant owned a liquid compound known as "Robert's Kidney and Liver Bitters," and the formula for the manufacture thereof, and the good will of the business of making and vending the same. On January 7, 1884, while engaged in such business at the county of Sacramento, and having then a large sale of such bitters in said county and throughout this state, the defendant made a bill of sale to one Lee, by the terms of which he sold and transferred to Lee all right, title, and good will of the said bitters theretofore manufactured by him; also, the recipe for manufacturing the same, and all labels, printing matter, boxes, etc., pertaining to the manufacture thereof. The instrument concluded as follows: "And I furthermore agree not to manufacture or sell any of said Robert's Kidney and Liver Bitters in this county. J. J. Spieker." Said Lee was the agent of plaintiff in this transaction, and on the following day, January 8, 1884, he assigned to plaintiff the property and rights acquired by him under said instrument of January 7th. Thenceforward the plaintiff manufactured and sold said bitters, and is yet so engaged. About February 5, 1884, defendant, with intent to injure plaintiff's business, combined and conspired with one T. M. Lash to manufacture and sell the same bitters under the name of "Lash's Kidney and Liver Bitters," and thereafter, for several years, such combination, first under the style of "T. M. Lash & Co.," and later under that of "Lash's Bitters Company," manufactured and sold such bitters in said county and throughout the state. Defendant then dissolved his connection with Lash, but under the style of "Lash's Bitters Company" continued, until the time of the commencement of this action, the same business of making and selling Robert's Kidney and Liver Bitters by the name of "Lash's Kidney and Liver Bitters." Defendant fraudulently concealed from plaintiff the fact of his interest in the business of T. M. Lash & Co. and Lash's Bitters Company, and the fact also that said Lash's Bitters were compounded of the same ingredients as the said Robert's Bitters, until he divulged such facts upon the trial of a certain action between him (Spieker) and said Lash in April, 1892, up to which time plaintiff was without knowledge or information thereof. By reason of false representations made by defendant to plaintiff's customers, to the effect that Lash's Bitters differed from and were superior to Robert's Bitters,—he knowing that they were compounded of the same ingredients,—said customers, or some of them, were induced to purchase the former instead of the latter, whereby the profits of plaintiff's business were mostly cut off. Some further history of this same compound, and the dissensions of those concerned in its preparation and sale, may be found in Spieker v. Lash, 102 Cal. 38, 36 Pac. 362.

Defendant pleaded, among other matters, the bar of the statute of limitations (sections 337, 443, and subdivision 4 of section 338, Code of Civil Procedure). The court held that the action was not barred, and rendered judgment perpetually restraining defendant from manufacturing or selling in Sacramento county the said Robert's Kidney and Liver Bitters, or any preparation compounded of its constituents, and from conducting the sale of Lash's Bitters in such manner as to interfere with the good will of Robert's Bitters anywhere in the state, and from endeavoring to draw off plaintiff's customers; also, that plaintiff recover all the net profits made by defendant in the sale of Robert's under the name of "Lash's Bitters" from February 5, 1884, to October 4, 1892, which profits were found, by means of a reference and accounting had under order of the court, to be the sum of $51,872. The appeal is on the judgment roll, no evidence being brought up.

It is argued by appellant that plaintiff's cause of action lies solely in defendant's breach of contract; that the fraud charged and found is merely for the purpose of excusing delay in the commencement of the action, and is not the substantive ground upon which relief is sought; hence that the action is not saved by the provision of section 338, Code Civ. Proc., that, in an action for relief on the ground of fraud the cause of action is not to be deemed to have accrued until the discovery of the facts constituting the fraud. But we are of opinion that the facts, as found by the court, show that fraud was so ingrained with the breach of contract by defendant that the action, as regards the bar of the statute, at least, must be treated as one for relief on the ground of fraud. The breach was accomplished underhandedly, by secret confederacy with another, and the use of his name to cloak the movements of the defendant, and by deceit, inducing third persons to believe that defendant's product differed from, or was superior to, that of plaintiff. Deception practiced on one person to the injury of another may be actionable fraud as to the latter. Blakeslee v. Starring, 34 Wis. 538.

Sections 1673, 1674, Civ. Code, real as follows:

"Sec. 1673. Every contract by which any one is restrained from exercising a lawful profession, trade, or business of any kind, otherwise than is provided by the next two sections, is to that extent void.

"Sec. 1674. One who sells the good will of a business may agree with the buyer to refrain from carrying on a similar business within a specified county, city, or a part thereof, so long as the buyer or any person deriving title to the good will from him carries on a like business therein."

Here Spieker agreed "not to manufacture or sell any of said Robert's Bitters in this county," not limiting his covenant to the time during which the buyer might carry on the business, as provided in the latter section quoted. For this reason, it is contended that his contract with Lee was void in this particular. We think it reasonably clear that no design to impose a limit on the time during which defendant was restrained from carrying on the business in Sacramento county is inferable from the contract, and in that respect it transgressed the statute. But the statute does not render the whole provision void. It avoids it only "to that extent," viz. the extent that it transcends the permissive clause of the statute. Within that limit, it is valid. This must be regarded as the settled construction of the statute. Ragsdale v. Nagle, 106 Cal. 336, 39 Pac. 628, and cases cited. The judgment here proceeds further, however, and in this regard the respondent concedes that it should be modified. It is said that defendant has not used the trade name sold by him; that he did not part with the right to make and vend all bitters; and that, so long as he did not apply to them such trade name, nor represent his product to be the same as plaintiff's, he did not violate his contract. But the contract purports to transfer "all right, title, and good will of the bitters known as 'Robert's Kidney and Liver Bitters.'" This meant the liquid known, when compounded, as "Robert's Bitters"; not merely the name by which it was known. It may be that he retained some right to make and sell the same bitters by whatever designation other than "Robert's" he chose to give them (Spieker v. Lash, 102 Cal. 38, 36 Pac. 362); but by the terms of the contract he incapacitated himself to exercise this right at all in Sacramento county, and to exercise it anywhere to the impairment of the good will he sold to plaintiff (Snow v. Holmes, 71 Cal. 142, 11 Pac. 856; Knoedler v. Glaenzer, 5 C. C. A. 305, 55 Fed. 898); and it seems to us that representing to plaintiff's customers that the same preparation by a different name was superior to Robert's Bitters tended to draw them from plaintiff, and to injure the good will he had bought and paid for.

The court adopted a false rule as to the measure of damages. It proceeded upon the theory that, as in trade-mark and patent cases, the defendant was compellable to render to plaintiff the net profits of the business of selling Lash's Bitters. Trade-mark cases only are cited to support this branch of the judgment. Graham v. Plate, 40 Cal. 493; Manufacturing Co. v. Gato (Fla.) 7 South. 23; Avery v. Mieker (Ky.) 3 S. W. 609. But here, though plaintiff alleged an infringement of his trade-mark by defendant, the court expressly found against that averment. In cases like the present the damages are rarely susceptible of accurate proof, but the measure, expressed generally, is the value of the business lost to plaintiff, not the gain of defendant, which may be more or less than plaintiff's loss, though such gain may be considered in evidence. It should be shown to correspond, in whole or in part, with the loss of plaintiff. Peltz v. Eichele, 62 Mo. 171, 180; Lashus v. Chamberlain, 5 Utah, 140, 13 Pac. 361; Howard v. Taylor, 90 Ala. 241, 8 South. 36; Warfield v. Booth, 33 Md. 63; 2 Sedg. Dam. § 632. Nothing here appearing of the amount of plaintiff's loss, the allowance of damages beyond a nominal sum was error.

The judgment of the superior court should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment of the superior court is reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial.

BIDDICK v. KOBLER. (No. 18,441.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 27, 1895.)

TRIAL—EVIDENCE—OBJECTION TO EVIDENCE—PUBLIC LANDS—TOWN SITES—JUDGE'S DEED—CONCLUSIVENESS.

1. Though a mere general offer to prove certain facts is an improper method of presenting offered evidence, and should not be allowed except by consent of counsel, where the objection to such an offer is not on the ground that the offer is an improper method, it will be presumed that the method used was by consent.

2. Rev. St. U. S. § 2387, provides for the granting of public lands settled on as a town site to the judge of the county court, in trust for the occupants thereof, the trust to be executed under regulations prescribed by the legislature of the state in which the lands are situated. Act March 12, 1885, § 24, providing as to the conclusiveness of the judge's deed, relates to the regularity of the preliminary proceeding; section 11 requires an action by a "party out of possession"; and section 10 requires one "for the recovery of the possession of such premises" to be brought within a certain time. Held that, in an action by the grantee in such a deed, to quiet title to the land conveyed, defendant, who was in possession, may show that, at the time of the execution of the deed, he was in possession and entitled to the occupancy of the land.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Plumas county; G. G. Clough, Judge.

Action by Josiah Biddick against John B. Kobler. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

C. E. McLaughlin, for appellant. Goodwin & Webb, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action is prosecuted to quiet title to a small parcel of land claimed by the plaintiff to a part of lot 3 in block 5 in the town of Crescent Mills, in Plumas county. The complaint is in the usual form. The premises in controversy are within the town site of Crescent Mills (an incorporated town), which was surveyed and platted in 1882 upon public lands of the United States, under the provisions of section 2387 of the United States Revised Statutes, authorizing the judge of the county court to enter lands settled upon and occupied as a town site, and for which a patent was issued by the United States October 26, 1888, to the superior judge of said county, "in trust for the several use and benefit of the occupants thereof according to their respective interests, the execution of which trust, as to the disposal of the lots in such town, and the proceeds of the sales thereof, to be conducted under such regulations as may be prescribed by the legislative authority of the state or territory in which the same may be situated." The statute under which said trust was administered was the act of our legislature approved March 30, 1868, and the amendments thereof. For the original act, see St. 1867–68, p. 692; and, as amended, see St. 1885, p. 115, or Pol. Code, under section 4442, p. 723.

The plaintiff claims under a deed executed by the superior judge January 7, 1890, which purports to convey to him lot 3 in block 5, "as appears from the official plat of the survey of said town-site now on file and of record in the office of the county recorder of said Plumas county." The defendant, in addition to denials, alleged that for more than 22 years before the commencement of the action, and at the time the town site was surveyed and platted, he was, and ever since has been, the sole and exclusive occupant of the disputed premises, and that neither the plaintiff nor his grantor had ever been in the possession or occupation thereof; that in 1871 defendant inclosed his lot, and erected a boundary or division fence between the lands of plaintiff and defendant, and inclosed within defendant's inclosure the land in dispute; that plaintiff and his grantor agreed to and acquiesced in said boundary; that the said parcel in controversy had ever since remained inclosed as part of defendant's lot, and cultivated and improved as such, adversely to the plaintiff, down to the present time; and that he had paid all taxes thereon. Plaintiff introduced in evidence the original plat and field notes of the town site, and described the parcel in litigation (a triangular piece of ground in the southeast corner of lot 3), and also the patent for the town site, and the said deed from the superior judge for said lot 3, and rested. Thereupon counsel for the defendant offered to prove that in 1871 defendant built a line or division fence between his lot and that of the plaintiff, which included within the boundaries and inclosure of the defendant the land here in dispute; that, at the time the survey and application for patent were made, the land in controversy was so within the inclosure of defendant, and was occupied by him; that the land in question was never at any time in the possession or occupancy of the plaintiff; that the boundary line or fence above mentioned was acquiesced in by the grantor of plaintiff and by the plaintiff for more than 22 years; that defendant had been in the adverse possession of the parcel in controversy, occupying and claiming the same, ever since 1872, and had paid all taxes, state, county, and municipal, levied upon the same, though the land, since 1882, has been assessed according to the town plat, which it was always supposed indicated the fence as the boundary between the two lots. Plaintiff objected "to the offer as immaterial, incompetent, and irrelevant, with the exception of that we stated [referring to the statute of limitations]." The court thereupon ruled that "it is incompetent and immaterial as the statute stands," and made findings, and entered judgment for the plaintiff. The defendant appeals from the judgment, the facts being brought into the record by a bill of exceptions; and the question here is whether the facts so offered to be proved would, if proved by competent evidence, constitute a defense to the action.

A mere general "offer" to prove a variety of things, without producing the witnesses or evidence whereby they are to be proved, or segregating the different items, is an improper method of presenting offered evidence, and should not be allowed unless by consent of parties. In the case at bar, however, the objection was not made upon the ground that the offer was an improper method, and therefore we will assume that this method was used by consent; and we think that the court below erred in sustaining the objection to appellant's said offer. The appellant should have been allowed to prove, if he could, that when the deed of the judge was made to respondent, and during all of the time when preliminary steps were being taken to acquire title to the town site, and distribute the same to those entitled to particular parcels of land, the appellant was in the actual possession of the part of the lot here in contest, and that, therefore, respondent was not during said time the occupant thereof, or in any way entitled to the same. Under the grant of congress, particular parcels of land are to go to the "occupants," or those entitled to the occupancy thereof; and the trust is to be executed under such regulations as the legislature of the state may prescribe. It was said by the supreme court of Kansas in Rathbone v. Sterling, 25 Kan. 448: "We do not doubt the power of the legislature to provide for a contest and decision in the first instance, and before the probate judge or commissioners, and to give to such trial all the force and effect of a regular trial before a court." And although, under the "regulations" prescribed by the legislature of California, the superior judge does not act judicially, but merely makes deeds under certain circumstances as a matter of course, still a provision that a deed of the judge should be conclusive against all persons who should not bring actions against the grantees within a specified time would, no doubt, be valid. There are provisions of that kind in our statute as to certain persons; but we find nothing of the kind which is applicable to one in the alleged position of appellant; that is, one in the actual possession and occupancy of a piece of land, and entitled to such occupancy.

There are only three provisions of the statute relating to the conclusiveness of the judge's deed,—sections 24, 11, and 10 of the act of March 12, 1885. Section 24 relates merely to the regularity of the preliminary proceedings; section 11 refers merely to the bringing of an action by a "party out of possession"; and section 10 provides that an action for "the recovery of the possession of such premises" must be brought within a certain time after the recording of the deed. Appellant's rights are not affected by either of these provisions. Whether or not he has any right in the premises which would warrant a court in giving him any affirmative relief is not a question in this case. Respondent brought this action relying upon his paper title, viz. his deed from the judge; and appellant may rely upon his actual possession as a defense to the action, if he can show that at the time of the execution of said deed he was the occupant and entitled to the occupancy of the land in contest, and respondent never was either the occupant or entitled to the occupancy of said land. If respondent was not the occupant, within the meaning of the grant of congress, he was not entitled to the deed from the judge; and, as we have seen, there is no statutory provision making the deed conclusive as against appellant. These views are sustained by the following authorities, which, indeed, go much further in the same direction than we are called upon to go here: Treadway v. Wilder, 8 Nev. 91, 9 Nev. 71; Lechler v. Chapin, 12 Nev. 65; Rathbone v. Sterling, 25 Kan. 444; City of Helena v. Albertose, 8 Mont. 499, 20 Pac. 817; Hall v. Ashby, 2 Mont. 489. The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

KNOWLTON v. MACKENZIE et al. (DAVIS, Intervener. No. 15,304.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 27, 1895.)

TRIAL—FINDINGS BY COURT—MODIFICATION OF JUDGMENT—APPEAL—FAILURE OF TRANSCRIPT TO SHOW SERVICE OF NOTICE OF APPEAL.

1. The fact that a finding of fact is placed after the conclusions of law, and is given as a fact resulting from the other findings of fact, does not prevent it from being a finding of fact, to enable the appellate court to review which appellant must have excepted thereto, and incorporated the evidence in a statement or bill of exceptions.

2. Where defendant refuses to sign a stipulation authorizing the court to modify a judgment, an expression by his counsel of willingness to obey any order of the court does not authorize the court to increase the amount of the judgment against defendant.

3. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1045, providing that, if an original pleading or paper be lost, the court may authorize a copy to be filed, a copy of a notice of appeal with proof of service may be supplied.

4. An appeal will not be dismissed for failure of the transcript to show that notice of appeal was served, where, in answer to such motion, appellant files a certified copy of an order of the court, directing that a copy of the original notice of appeal, which had been lost, with affidavit showing service, be filed nunc pro tunc.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. Rearden, Judge.

Action by one Knowlton against one Mackenzie and others, in which George O. Davis intervened. From a judgment for Davis against defendant Kaufman, the latter appeals. Modified.

Garber, Boalt & Bishop, for appellant. James G. Maguire, Frank Shay, and Geo. W. Towle, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The defendant Mackenzie was engaged as a stockbroker in San Francisco, and on the 3d of December, 1886, made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors to C. H. Kaufman, the appellant herein, under the provisions of title 3, pt. 2, div. 4, of the Civil Code, and on the same day transferred to him certain money and other personal property. Included in the property so transferred were certain mining stocks belonging to M. H. McDonald, which were subsequently sold by Kaufman under directions from one Scott, to whom McDonald had transferred her claim against Mackenzie, and for which Kaufman realized the sum of $5,316.55. The court found that the sum of $1,494.03, which had been received by McDonald from Kaufman, should be considered as a payment upon this claim, and found, as a conclusion of law, "that the intervener, George O. Davis, is entitled to a judgment against the defendant C. H. Kaufman, assignee of John Mackenzie, in the sum of $3,822.52." Davis was the successor in interest, through Scott, to the claim of McDonald, and had filed a complaint in intervention in the action. These findings of the court were filed January 21, 1889, and judgment thereon was signed and filed on the same day, and entered of record January 31, 1889, by which it was adjudged "that the intervener, George O. Davis, do have and recover of and from the defendant C. H. Kaufman the sum of $3,822.52." May 24, 1889, the court made an order, which was entered in its minutes, that the judgment be modified "by striking out therefrom $3,822.52, and substituting in lieu thereof $5,769.52, so that the said George O. Davis shall have and recover of and from the said C. H. Kaufman the sum of $5,769.52, instead of the sum of $3,822.52," and that said modification be made nunc pro tunc of the 31st of January, 1889, and that the clerk of the court make an entry thereof in the original judgment entered in the judgment book. Thereupon the clerk drew a line in red ink, upon the face of the judgment, through the figures $3,822.52, and inserted directly after them, in red ink, the figures $5,769.52, and wrote on the margin, "Modified by the order of court May 24, 1889." From this judgment Kaufman has appealed upon the judgment roll alone, without any bill of exceptions.

1. The finding that Kaufman realized the sum of $5,316.55 from the sale of the stocks belonging to McDonald, the respondent's assignor, is the basis of the judgment against him, and, in the absence of any qualifying finding of fact, would have authorized a judgment against him for that amount. The further finding that of the moneys received by McDonald the sum of $1,494.03 was to be deducted from this amount, and that the remainder of the moneys received by her were to be treated as a dividend upon her general claim against Mackenzie, must be regarded upon this appeal as authorized by the evidence before the trial court. If the appellant would question the conclusion of this finding, it was incumbent upon him to except thereto, and have the evidence thereon presented in a statement or bill of exceptions. This finding is placed after the conclusions of law, and is given as a fact resulting from the other findings of fact, but does not cease to be a finding of fact by reason of its position. Upon the findings, therefore, the court was authorized to render the judgment which was originally given and entered in favor of the intervener.

2. The subsequent modification of the judgment was unauthorized. After the court had rendered judgment in accordance with its findings, such judgment could be changed only through a motion for a new trial or upon appeal. As a judgment must depend upon the conclusions of law drawn from the findings of fact (Broder v. Conklin, 98 Cal. 360, 33 Pac. 211), before a judgment drawn from these findings of fact can be changed, the findings of fact must themselves be changed, so as to support a different judgment; and, as the court loses all power to change its findings of fact after the entry of judgment (Smith v. Taylor, 82 Cal. 533, 23 Pac. 217; Los Angeles Co. v. Lankershim, 100 Cal. 532, 35 Pac. 153, 556), the only mode in which the findings of fact can be changed is by means of a motion for a new trial (Egan v. Egan, 90 Cal. 15, 27 Pac. 22). This proposition is not controverted by the respondent, but it is claimed that the action of the court in modifying the judgment was authorized by a stipulation of all the parties to the action. This contention, however, is not sustained by the terms of the order or of the stipulation upon which the order is based. The appellant not only did not sign the stipulation, but the order modifying the judgment recites that it was signed "by all the respective parties in this action, except the defendant Kaufman," and also that "said Kaufman, by his attorney, being present, and having refused to sign any stipulation, but expresses the willingness of the assignee to obey any order of the court in the cause." Whatever may have been intended by the statement of his attorney that the assignee was willing "to obey any order of the court in the cause," it did not confer upon the court any authority to modify the judgment that had been entered against him, by increasing the amount for which he was declared liable. The stipulation of the other parties for increasing the amount of the judgment against him could not confer any such authority, and, in the face of the express declaration by the attorney that his client refused to sign any stipulation, the court was not authorized to accept the attorney's statement of the "willingness" of his client as the equivalent of a stipulation. The attorney is only the agent of the client for the management and conduct of the cause while it is pending before the court for determination, and as such agent he has authority to bind his client in all matters pertaining to the conduct and management of the suit. The ground upon which it is held that a client is bound by the stipulations of his attorney in those matters that are not directly connected with the conduct of the trial, or the procedure of the court in which the cause is pending, rests upon the presumption that the client has given authority to his attorney to make such stipulation; but, whenever it appears that the attorney has entered into an agreement in direct opposition to the instruction of his client, there is no ground for such presumption. As a general rule, a stipulation of the attorney will be presumed to have been authorized by the client, as well in order to uphold the action of the court as for the protection of the other party to the stipulation; but when the adverse party, as well as the court, is aware that the attorney is acting in direct opposition to his client's instructions or wishes, the reason of the rule ceases, and the court ought not to act upon the stipulation, nor can the adverse party claim the right to enforce a judgment rendered by reason thereof. For the purpose of prosecuting or defending an action the authority of an attorney ordinarily terminates with the entry of judgment (Kellogg v. Gilbert, 10 Johns. 220; Weeks, Attys. at Law, § 239), except for the purpose of enforcing the judgment or seeking to have it set aside or reversed. When a judgment in the cause has once been entered under the direction of the court, the rights of the client have been finally determined, and the attorney ceases to have any authority to consent to its modification to the prejudice of the client without his consent. In the present case the court had adjudged that the liability of the appellant to Davis was only $3,822.52, and, before his attorney could consent that this liability might be increased by nearly $2,000, there was needed more than the presumption of authority which existed during the conduct of the trial and prior to the rendition of the judgment. In Preston v. Hill, 50 Cal. 43, it was directly held that an attorney has no authority to bind his client by the compromise of a pending action without express authority from the client, and that the court is not authorized to enter a judgment upon such consent if the objection of the client is brought to its notice, or to enforce it in favor of the party for whom it was entered with knowledge that it was given without the consent of the client. The principles of that case and the reasoning of the court in its opinion fully sustain the position of the appellant herein in resisting the action of the court in modifying the judgment which was originally entered against him.

3. It is urged by the appellant that the court erred in entering the judgment against him individually, rather than in his representative capacity; that, as the findings of fact show that he received the money realized from the sale of the stocks as the assignee of Mackenzie, the judgment should run against him in the same manner. It is not necessary to determine whether this was error, as the respondent in his brief has consented that the judgment may be modified in this respect.

4. A motion was made to dismiss the appeal herein upon the ground that the transcript fails to show that the notice of appeal was served upon the respondent. In reply thereto the appellant has filed, as a portion of the record in the cause in the superior court, a copy of certain proceedings therein, properly certified by the clerk of that court, from which it appears that the original notice of appeal has been lost, and that it has been established to the satisfaction of that court that the notice of appeal (a copy of which is set forth in the printed transcript herein) was on the 28th day of January, 1880, served upon the attorney of record for the respondent herein, and that a written admission of the service of said notice was by such attorney indorsed upon the same, and that the said notice of appeal was on the same day filed in the office of the clerk of that court, and that the court thereupon made an order directing that a copy of said notice of appeal, together with the affidavit showing its original filing and service, be filed nunc pro tunc, and that the same has been so filed. It was held, in Perri v. Beaumont, 88 Cal. 108, 25 Pac. 1109, that, if the evidence of the service of a notice of appeal as contained in the transcript is defective, the appellant will be allowed to show by proper proof that a sufficient service had been made, and, under the rule there given, an appeal will not be dismissed for failure of the transcript to contain proof of the service of the notice, if the appellant is able to show that service has been, in fact, properly made. Section 1045, Code Civ. Proc., provides that, "if an original pleading or paper be lost, the court may authorize a copy thereof to be filed and used instead of the original," and upon the order of the court made in the present case the substituted papers are entitled to the same weight as would be the originals.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied, and the superior court is directed to strike from the judgment the modification made therein May 24, 1889, and to cause the judgment against the appellant, Kaufman, to be entered against him as assignee of John Mackenzie, and in favor of the respondent Davis, for the sum of $3,822.52, as of the date of its original entry, January 31, 1889.

KUMLE v. GRAND LODGE, ANCIENT ORDER OF UNITED WORKMEN OF CALIFORNIA. (No. 18,457.)[1]

MUTUAL BENEFIT INSURANCE—VALIDITY OF MEMBERSHIP CERTIFICATE — ACTION ON — APPEAL—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR.

1. In an action by the beneficiary of an insurance certificate against a benefit society, the introduction of the certificate is prima facie evidence of decedent's good standing in the society, though an allegation in the complaint that decedent performed all the conditions of the certificate is denied by the answer, which alleges that at the time of his death decedent was suspended from the society for nonpayment of assessments.

2. Where the constitution of a benevolent society provides that a member may appeal from the decision of his lodge to the grand lodge, and from the grand to the supreme lodge, the beneficiary of an insurance certificate, whose claim is rejected by decedent's lodge and the grand lodge, is not precluded from suing on the certificate because she did not appeal to the supreme lodge, the constitution not providing that the action of the supreme lodge should be final.

3. A statement in the assignment of errors as to what the evidence establishes is not a compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 659, providing that, when the notice of motion for a new trial designates as a ground thereof the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, the statement shall specify the particulars in which the evidence is insufficient. Dawson v. Schloss, 29 Pac. 31, 93 Cal. 194, followed.

4. An assignment of error, that "the verdict on special issues was error," made to each of several special findings, is not a valid objection to such findings.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Yuba county; E. A. Davis, Judge.

Action by Julia E. Kumle against the Grand Lodge, Ancient Order of United Workmen of California, on an insurance certificate. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Eugene N. Deuprey and C. A. Webb, for appellant. W. H. Carlin and Jacob Samuels, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. Appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. The action is brought by Julia E. Kumle to recover $2,000, as the beneficiary named in a certain beneficiary certificate issued by the defendant corporation to Peter Kumle on the 14th day of November, 1870, in the words and figures following:

"Grand Lodge, Ancient Order of United Workmen of California. No. 8,007. $2,000. This certificate, issued by the authority of the Supreme Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, witnesseth: That brother Peter Kumle, a master workman degree member of Sharon Lodge, No. 142, of said order, located at Brownsville, in the state of California, is entitled to all the rights and privileges of membership in the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and to participate in the beneficiary fund of the order to the amount of $2,000, which sum shall, at his death, be paid to his wife, Mrs. Julia E. Kumle. This certificate is issued upon the express condition that said Peter Kumle shall in every particular, while a member of said order, comply with all the laws, rules, and requirements thereof. In witness whereof, the Grand Lodge of California has caused this to be signed by its grand master workman and recorder, and the seal thereof to be attached, this 14th day of November, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine. Attest: H. G. Pratt, Grand Recorder. William H. Jordan, Grand Master Workman. [Seal of the Grand Lodge.]"

"We, the undersigned, master workman and recorder of Sharon Lodge, No. 142, do hereby countersign this certificate, and attach the seal of this lodge hereto, rendering the same valid and in full force, this 29th day of November, 1879. A. J. Hankin, Master Workman. Attest: F. P. Thurman, Recorder. [Seal of subordinate Sharon Lodge, No. 142.]"

The complaint may be said to be in the usual form in such cases. It contains a copy of the foregoing certificate, and, among other allegations, avers the acceptance of the certificate by Peter Kumle; that he, in every particular, complied with all the laws, rules, and requirements of the Ancient Order of United Workmen; that he, up to the time of his death, which occurred December 4, 1891, contributed to the funds of the order as required by the laws and rules thereof, and had at the time of his death duly performed all the conditions on his part to be performed in relation to said beneficiary certificate, and in relation to the payment thereto, to entitle the beneficiary named therein to have and recover $2,000, as in said certificate set forth, etc. The answer specified the objects of the corporation defendant; admitted the membership and issuance of the certificate to Kumle, but denied that he continued to be or was such member at the date of his death, or that he complied with the laws and regulations of defendant, and averred his suspension from the order for nonpayment of assessments more than six months before his death; set forth portions of the constitution of the order providing for suspension for nonpayment of assessments, etc. At the trial the plaintiff introduced in evidence the foregoing certificate; proved that plaintiff was the wife of Peter Kumle during his lifetime, and the person named in the certificate as the beneficiary; that Peter Kumle died December 4, 1891; and that no portion of the $2,000 mentioned in the certificate had been paid; and thereupon rested her case. Counsel for defendant moved for a nonsuit upon the grounds that plaintiff had failed to support the allegations of her complaint, or to show that the provisions of the certificate had been complied with by Peter Kumle, to whom the certificate issued, and that the proofs failed to support the allegations of the complaint upon which the right to recover was based. The court overruled the motion, to which ruling counsel for defendant excepted, and the action of the court is assigned as error.

[1] Rehearing denied.

The question involved in appellant's motion, broadly stated, is this: Was the burden of proof cast upon plaintiff to show that, under the certificate issued to him by the defendant, he had, in every particular, while a member of the order, complied with all the laws, rules, and requirements thereof, as provided in said certificate; and, if so, was the proof sufficient to support the allegations in this behalf? The complaint avers, in general terms, such compliance. The answer denies such compliance, and avers that Kumle had failed to pay his assessments; that on March 29, 1891, he was suspended for the nonpayment of assessments for the month of March, 1891, and had not, up to the time of his death, been restored to membership, and was not at the date of his death a member of the order. The whole question is in a nutshell. The plaintiff's right of recovery being dependent upon the fact that the deceased was a member in good standing at the time of his death, and such fact being denied by the answer, the burden of proof to establish it is on the plaintiff. Siebert v. Chosen Friends, 23 Mo. App. 268. But the issuing of a certificate of membership by a mutual benefit society is evidence of the holder's good standing in the order when it issued, and such good standing will be presumed to continue, unless there is legitimate proof that it no longer exists; and, to rebut such presumption, it devolves upon the defendant, in the absence of proof thereof by plaintiff, to show the loss of such good standing. Order of Foresters v. Zak, 136 Ill. 185, 26 N. E. 593; Stewart v. Supreme Council, 36 Mo. App. 319; Mulroy v. Knights of Honor, 28 Mo. App. 463; Supreme Lodge v. Johnson, 78 Ind. 110; Mills v. Rebstock, 29 Minn. 380, 13 N. W. 162; Elmer v. Association (Sup.) 19 N. Y. Supp. 289. In Stewart v. Supreme Council, supra, the court, in affirming the action of the court below in denying a nonsuit, said: "We think the court did not err in refusing to nonsuit the plaintiff. The plaintiff made out a prima facie case by offering the benefit certificate, which recites that Hugh Stewart is a member in good standing, and that she offered to make proof of his death to the defendant, which the defendant refused to receive. The status of the member, once fixed, is presumed to continue." "In an action upon a life insurance policy, although the answers in the applications are warranties, the burden of proof is on the defendant to show the falsity of any such answers, in accordance with the general rule that the law does not require a party to prove a negative." Bac. Ben. Soc. § 469; Insurance Co. v. Ewing, 92 U. S. 377; Insurance Co. v. Gridley, 100 U. S. 614. The burden of establishing the failure to pay assessments is upon the defendant. Tobin v. Society, 72 Iowa, 261, 33 N. W. 663; Spencer v. Association (N. Y. App.) 37 N. E. 617; Black, Ben. Soc. § 454, and cases there cited. The motion for a nonsuit was properly denied.

2. Appellant claims that the court had no jurisdiction to hear and determine this cause, for the reason that the claim of plaintiff was submitted to the Grand Lodge of California, which decided against the validity of the claim, and no appeal was taken therefrom to the Supreme Lodge. The contention is that, plaintiff "having failed to exhaust such procedure and take such appeal, she waived the right to appeal, and also any right to proceed in the courts of the land as against the tribunal of the order." I fail to observe anything in the record which brings the plaintiff within the rules of law invoked by appellant. (1) There is nothing in the certificate, constitution, laws, or regulations of the order, so far as the records show, requiring differences of the character involved in the present controversy to be submitted to the order for adjustment, or, if submitted, making its action final. (2) There was no submission of the controversy, in the sense of an arbitration. The Ancient Order of United Workmen is a fraternal, charitable, beneficial, and benevolent order, and is governed by a supreme lodge, and in this state by the Grand Lodge of Ancient Order of United Workmen of California, and by subordinate lodges. The Grand Lodge of California has exclusive original jurisdiction over all subordinate lodges, subject to the provisions of the Supreme Lodge constitution and right of appeal. The Grand Lodge, by its constitution, "guaranties to each member of the order of the W. [Workmen] degree (to be paid to such person or persons as said member may have directed while living) the sum of two thousand dollars: provided said member shall have complied, in all particulars, with all the laws, regulations, and requirements of the order." It issues all certificates, which are to be countersigned by the master workman of the subordinate lodge of which the recipient is a member, with the seal of the subordinate lodge attached, etc. Peter Kumle was a member of one of these subordinate lodges, viz. of Sharon Lodge, No. 142, situate at Brown's Valley, in the county of Yuba, and, as such member, received in due form the certificate hereinbefore set forth. The constitution of subordinate lodges provides, in reference to appeals therefrom, that "any member considering that injustice has been done by the decision of the lodge may, within one month thereafter, appeal in writing to the G. M. W. of [or] Grand Lodge, if in session," etc. This right of appeal is given to members only, and cannot apply to the plaintiff, who was not a member. What she did in fact do was to present her papers and proofs of death to one Meek, who was a member of the order, to submit them for her to the Grand Lodge, and to secure and demand from it the payment of the $2,000. Meek filed a written request that the Grand Lodge would consider the matter, giving reasons therefor, and showing that the subordinate lodge had refused to acknowledge the claim. The Grand Lodge appointed a committee, which reported against payment, and its report was approved. The privilege of an appeal from the Grand Lodge is given as follows: "Any member of the Grand Lodge, or any party to an appeal determined by the Grand Lodge, may appeal to the Supreme Lodge from the decision of such Grand Lodge." As plaintiff was not and could not be a party to an appeal determined by the Grand Lodge, and was not a member thereof, she could not appeal therefrom to the Supreme Lodge. In all this, and in the absence of some rule or law of the order in view of which the contract might be supposed to have been made, I observe nothing to differentiate the application of plaintiff to defendant for the payment of her demand from the ordinary demand of payment by a creditor from his debtor. The alleged debtor, being a corporation, in its refusal to pay acted through the channel or medium usually provided for reaching a conclusion in similar cases. "An association cannot, by its constitution or by-laws, confer judicial powers upon its officers or committees, so as to enable such officers or committees (without voluntary submission to their authority on the part of lodges or members) to adjudge a forfeiture of property rights, or to deprive lodges or members of their property, or to arbitrarily take property away from one set of members, and give it to another set. This is on the ground that the creation of judicial tribunals is one of the functions of sovereign power, and because to allow such powers to be conferred would be contrary to public policy, just as agreements to refer future controversies to arbitration cannot be enforced. An adjudication of these officers or committees which has this effect of forfeiture of property or property rights is not good, either as an award or as a judgment." Bac. Ben. Soc. § 123, and cases there cited. It must not be understood from the foregoing quotation that Grand Lodges may not, by their laws, regulate the internal policy of the lodges under their jurisdiction, or that subordinate lodges may not, by their regulations, provide when, how, and under what circumstances membership and consequent rights and privileges may be obtained and lost. The question of the extent to which such regulations may reach, and of the power of the associations to make their determination thereof final, involves considerations upon which there is a wide divergence of opinion, as expressed in the reported cases. We are not concerned with that question, for the reason that in the present case the defendant has not attempted by its laws to make its action either exclusive or final, and upon the money demand of the plaintiff, growing out of a contract with the defendant, we have no doubt but that the superior court of Yuba county had jurisdiction.

Defendant's notice of motion for a new trial stated, as one of the grounds of the motion, "insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, and that it is against law." The statement on motion for new trial contains no such specification of the insufficiency of the evidence as will warrant us in an examination of the question. Section 659 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "when the notice of the motion designates, as the ground of the motion, the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict or other decision, the statement shall specify the particulars in which such evidence is alleged to be insufficient." There is not in fact any specification in the statement of the particulars in which the evidence is alleged to be insufficient. In the assignment of errors, and under the head of "Insufficiency of the Evidence to Justify the Verdict," there is a statement consisting of four paragraphs, in which the attorney sets forth his views of the result of the testimony. We quote the first paragraph, as fairly illustrative of the whole. It is as follows: "The evidence conclusively established that Peter Kumle was, by operation of law of the order, and binding upon him, suspended from the subordinate lodge, Sharon, No. 142, A. O. U. W., and from all of the benefits and privileges of the Ancient Order United Workmen, California, March 28, 1891. Also, that said Peter Kumle was not at any time reinstated, or his beneficiary certificate renewed, under the laws of the order, after March 28, 1891. Furthermore, the proof positively determined the fact that Peter Kumle was not in the order, A. O. U. W., California, either in good standing or at all, when he died, December 4, 1891, and that all rights and privileges that he may ever have had were long previously forfeited and waived by his own acts, and that his beneficiary certificate stood avoided and of no effect." This question was fully considered in the late case of Dawson v. Schloss, 93 Cal. 194, 29 Pac. 31, and the opinion in that case is so full and explicit that nothing need be added here to show the defects in the present statement. See, also, Baird v. Peall, 92 Cal. 235, 28 Pac. 285; Menk v. Insurance Co., 76 Cal. 50, 14 Pac. 837, and 18 Pac. 117; Eddelbuttel v. Durrell, 55 Cal. 277; Spotts v. Hanley, 85 Cal. 155, 24 Pac. 738; Parker v. Reay, 76 Cal. 103, 18 Pac. 124. In this case there was, in addition to the general verdict, special findings by the jury upon 23 special issues submitted to them, which findings are objected to in the following manner: Under the head of "Errors of Law Occurring at the Trial, and Excepted to by the Defendant," is the following: "The verdict on special issue 1 was error." And the same statement is made as to each of the findings upon the other 22 issues. These special findings, which are in themselves amply sufficient to support the judgment, stand without valid objection. The other objections urged do not call for special mention. There are a few errors of law assigned, based upon the admission and rejection of evidence, but, as they are not urged by appellant, we need not comment upon them. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; HAYNES, C.

HAIGHT v. SEXTON. (No. 15,843.)

HARMLESS ERROR—REVIEW ON APPEAL—INSOLVENCY—ACTION BY ASSIGNEE—FINDINGS.

1. A finding by the trial court on evidence in which there is no substantial conflict will not, on appeal, be disturbed.

2. A reversal of a judgment cannot be had because a finding was made on an issue outside the pleadings, where other findings in the cause are sufficient to support it.

3. Where, in an action by an assignee in insolvency for possession of property, defendant claims under a bill of sale, a finding that defendant procured it by fraud is proper as a fact bearing on defendant's right to possession, though the issue of fraud is not raised by the pleadings.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Charles W. Slack, Judge.

Action by Robert Haight, assignee, against David T. Sexton. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Sullivan & Sullivan, for appellant. Alex T. Vogelsang and I. I. Brown, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Action by an assignee in insolvency to recover possession of goods and chattels as the property of the insolvents. It is mainly urged that the findings of the trial court that the insolvents were entitled, at the date of the adjudication of insolvency, to the possession of the property, and that defendant had no right thereto, is not supported by the evidence; but we are constrained to hold against such contention. While the evidence is such as to make the impression upon our minds that the court below might well have found to the contrary, and that such finding would have been clearly sustained by the evidence, there is nevertheless to be found in the record evidence tending to support the view taken by the trial court of a character to raise a substantial conflict upon the point; and under the well-established rule obtaining in such cases we are not at liberty to disturb the findings.

As to the finding that defendant procured the delivery of the bill of sale, under which he claimed to hold the property, to be made to him by fraud and misrepresentation, it may be conceded, as contended by appellant, that it is without any issue in the pleadings, and therefore erroneous. But it is an error which cannot avail appellant, since the other findings in the case fully support the judgment, and the finding objected to becomes immaterial. As we regard it, however, the finding should be taken more in the nature of a probative fact from which the court deduced the ultimate fact that defendant was not entitled to the possession of the property. In this view it was not improper, there being evidence tending to support it.

We perceive no prejudicial error in the rulings of the court upon the objections made to the introduction of the record in the insolvency proceedings; nor upon the ground as to the authority of the assignee to maintain the action. Independently of the question as to the power of the court to direct the assignment to be made by the clerk nunc pro tunc, we think the authority of the assignee was sufficient to entitle him to maintain an action for the mere possession of the property. The judgment and order are affirmed.

NEWELL v. STEELE et al. (No. 16,012.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—EVIDENCE.

A judgment based on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; William T. Wallace, Judge.

Action by Emily S. Newell against Mary J. Steele and others. From a judgment for plaintiff and order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

William H. Jordan, for appellants. James G. Maguire and W. C. & L. G. Burnett, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by defendants from the judgment and an order denying a new trial in a case wherein plaintiff was awarded damages for a withdrawal of lateral support, and consequent injury to her property; and the single question presented is whether the evidence supports the findings, the contention being that it does not. It would be profitless to state the evidence, or advert specially to the views of counsel for appellants in his very able and ingenious effort to sustain his contention, since it is clear to us, after a very careful examination of the evidence, that the fact which, under the settled doctrine of this court, bars us from reversing a case upon the facts,—a substantial conflict in the evidence,—is presented by the record. This conflict is sharply defined upon the two main issues,—that of previous reasonable notice of defendants' intention to make the excavation complained of, and the exercise of reasonable care in doing the work; and while, upon the question of damages suffered, we are inclined to think the lower court adopted rather extreme figures, in view of the testimony of most of plaintiff's own witnesses, there is evidence to sustain this finding as well, and it cannot therefore be disturbed. The judgment and order are affirmed.

YEARSLEY v. SUNSET TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO. (L. A. 30.)

MASTER AND SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE—DEFECTIVE APPLIANCES.

A servant engaged in stringing wires on telephone poles cannot recover from his master damages for injuries received from falling from a tree, by reason of a limb breaking, which he had climbed in order to arrange the wires which passed through the tree.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. H. Clark, Judge.

Action by A. P. Yearsley against the Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Company, a corporation. From a judgment of nonsuit, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

McComas & Schutze, for appellant. Graff & Latham, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. Plaintiff brought an action against defendant to recover damages for personal injuries received by him while in its employ. He was nonsuited, moved for a new trial, and now appeals from the judgment, and also from the order denying his motion. The facts may be briefly stated as follows: Plaintiff was a lineman of defendant, a telephone and telegraph company, and was ordered by defendant to string a line of wire upon certain telephone poles. A pepper tree, situated upon private land, and between two of these poles, was to some extent an obstruction in stringing the wire. Thereupon plaintiff climbed the tree, and, while engaged in arranging the wire, the limb upon which he was standing gave way, and he was precipitated to the ground, with serious injury to himself.

The judgment of nonsuit was properly granted, as we fail to discover by the record any evidence of negligence upon the part of the defendant. Appellant's argument goes to the extent that defendant was guilty of negligence in furnishing defective appliances to be used in stringing the wires. But it cannot be claimed that this pepper tree was an appliance furnished by defendant. It belonged to a stranger, and was upon private property. Even conceding it an appliance, and a defective one, it was one of plaintiff's own choosing, and he must bear the burdens resulting from a bad exercise of judgment upon his part. Let us suppose plaintiff had fallen from a defective fence encountered in the line of his duty while stringing this wire, and had suffered injuries; would defendant be liable? Or let us assume that he had undertaken to swim a stream while in the line of his duty, and had been drowned; would there be a liability against defendant? We fail to discover it. Plaintiff was ordered to do certain work, namely, string wires. He was furnished the poles upon which to string them. Without demanding further appliances of any kind, or informing defendant that others were needed, he proceeded with the work, and, while so engaged, called to his aid additional appliances, of his own selection. He stands in the same position as though he had chosen for his use a frail plank or a rickety ladder, rather than a pepper tree. As to the comparative knowledge of plaintiff and defendant pertaining to the defects in the tree, and the dangers arising from its use as an appliance, we pass the subject without consideration. For the foregoing reasons the judgment and order are affirmed.

WULFF v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SAN JOAQUIN COUNTY. (S. F. 195.)

RECEIVERS—SALE OF BUSINESS PENDENTE LITE.

In a suit for the dissolution of a partnership, in which a receiver was appointed, the court, pendente lite, may order a sale of the business and good will of the partnership, the partnership being insolvent, and the business being carried on by the receiver at a loss.

Department 1. Writ of review to superior court, San Joaquin county; J. K. Law, Judge.

Petition by one Wulff against the superior court of San Joaquin county and J. K. Law, acting judge, to review a judgment in the case of one Parsons against petitioner. Judgment affirmed.

Paul C. Morf and James A. Loutitt, for petitioner. John E. Budd and F. H. Gould, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is a writ of review, issued by the supreme court in the above-entitled action, to review the action of the superior court of San Joaquin county, in ordering a sale of certain partnership property, now in the hands of a receiver, consisting of the stock and good will in a certain paint, oil, and wall paper business in the city of Stockton.

The action of Parsons v. Wulff was for a dissolution of the partnership and an accounting. Wulff filed his answer, denying the allegations of the complaint, and the cause had not come to trial at the time the order for a sale of the partnership business was made. It is contended upon the part of petitioner that until a dissolution of the partnership had been decreed by the court, it had no power to order a sale of the partnership business, and such is the question presented for our consideration. The record of the lower court is before us, including certain supplemental findings of fact made by it, and by that record, taken as a whole, this jurisdictional question must be determined. Blair v. Hamilton, 32 Cal. 52. The record discloses the petition for sale to have been filed by the receiver, and the petition states that the partnership is largely insolvent; that it is for the best interests of the creditors and the partnership that the business be sold, and that it be sold as a whole; that the business, since it came into the hands of the receiver, has been carried on at a loss, and that the loss will be still further increased if the business is continued; that the business has been conducted in a proper and skillful manner by the receiver, an experienced man; and that, by a continuance of the business, the assets will be dissipated and lost to the partners and creditors. Taking into consideration the fact that the assets were not equal to the liabilities, and that the first claim upon the assets rested with the creditors, and that their right to present their claims at any subsequent stage of the litigation was still existent, we think their interests were proper subject-matter for the cognizance of the court in dealing with these assets, notwithstanding they were in no way parties to the record. And, taking all the facts into consideration, we see no excess of power exercised by the trial court in ordering the sale. It must be conceded that the court, by its receiver, had the power to sell perishable property, and upon the showing here made this business was clearly property of that character. The assets consisted of articles of trade and the good will of the business. The tangible assets were becoming dissipated and lost, in spite of care and skill in the management of them, and without these assets the good will would seem to be entirely valueless. These two classes of property were indissolubly connected, and, if the court had the power to sell either, it had the power to sell both. Likewise, the book accounts. If any part of these assets could be sold, and it was for the best interests of the copartnership and the creditors that these accounts should go with the business, the court had the power to so adjudge.

A litigious partner, by means incident to litigation, might be able to delay the entry of a decree of dissolution for years and thereby encompass the utter destruction of the entire partnership assets; and it would seem, in the interests of parties having claims upon these assets, that a court of equity was vested with the right to give relief by converting them into money. But few cases in point have been cited upon either side. In Crane v. Ford, 1 Hopk. Ch. 115, the power of the court to sell partnership property pendente lite is fully recognized; and in Marten v. Van Schaick, 4 Paige, 479, the court said, in speaking of a newspaper partnership: "If a receiver is appointed, he must proceed and sell the establishment without delay, and in the meantime the business must be carried on by him as usual, so that the good will thereof may be secured to the purchaser, and the full value of the establishment realized by the partners on such sale. But the court will not take upon itself the responsibility of continuing the publication of a political paper by a receiver any longer than is absolutely necessary to prevent a sacrifice of the property." And again, in Williams v. Wilson, 4 Sandf. Ch. 380, the court said: "Then, as to the course to be pursued by the receiver, when vested with the good will of the concern, it is impossible for him to conduct an insane hospital, or a lazaretto for foreign immigrants. The only practical course is for him to sell immediately the lease of the premises where the business was conducted, with the good will of the business and the movables which belong to the institution. And, in order to give efficacy to the sale of the good will, either of the parties may become the purchaser." An analogous principle is recognized in McLane v. Railroad Co., 66 Cal. 629, 630, 6 Pac. 748. In the cases cited, the court held itself possessed of the power to sell, by reason of an actual, present necessity of sale, in order that the assets might be preserved, to the final good fortune of the parties interested therein. There was no more reason for a sale in those cases than in this case. The assets of the present partnership are rapidly depreciating, in spite of the exercise of care and skill in their management, and it would appear to be a mere matter of time when they would become wholly lost. We conclude that the facts in the present case are such that a power of sale in the court, pendente lite, existed. For the foregoing reasons, the orders complained of, made by the trial court, were within its jurisdiction, and they are hereby affirmed.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; VAN FLEET, J.

ROSENTHAL et ux. v. MERCED BANK.

(No. 18,373.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 28, 1895.)

HOMESTEAD—TENANCIES IN COMMON—DEED—AFFIDAVIT DENYING GENUINENESS—ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

1. A homestead cannot be created by a cotenant in lands held as such cotenant.

2. Since the filing of a declaration of homestead by a tenant in lands held in common does not create a homestead therein, a subsequent conveyance to him of his cotenant's share is ineffectual for that purpose.

3. The mode of creating a homestead in lands as prescribed by Civ. Code, §§ 1262–1264, is exclusive.

4. Where, in an action to quiet title, defendant claims under a deed from plaintiff, a copy of which is annexed to the answer, and plaintiff fails to file or serve an affidavit denying its genuineness and due execution, they are "deemed admitted," under Code Civ. Proc. § 448, and the deed need not be put in evidence.

5. A conveyance of land other than a homestead, by a husband alone, transfers his title therein, though the deed is not acknowledged.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Merced county; Joseph H. Budd, Judge.

Action by A. Rosenthal and wife against Merced Bank, a corporation, to quiet title. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Jas. F. Peck, for appellant. Farrar & Ostrander, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Rosenthal and wife brought this action to quiet their title to lot 7 in block 147 in the city of Merced. The complaint was in the usual form. Defendant answered, and, in addition to denials, alleged that since July 20, 1893, it has been the owner in fee simple of said premises, "on which said last-mentioned date the said plaintiffs made, executed, acknowledged, and delivered to defendant their certain deed in writing, a copy of which said deed is hereto annexed, marked 'Exhibit A,' and hereby referred to and made a part hereof; and on the 11th of October, 1893, in an action then pending before the superior court of Merced county, between the same parties hereto, by the judgment of said court, duly given and made, it was adjudged and decreed that said deed transferred and conveyed said premises described in the complaint herein to defendant, and said judgment has never been reversed, annulled, or set aside, and the same is now a final judgment of said court." Said Exhibit A, attached to said answer, purports to be a copy of a deed signed by A. Rosenthal and Betsy Rosenthal, said signatures being followed by the words, "Signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of Samuel C. Bates," but no acknowledgment appears thereon. The plaintiffs did not file or serve an affidavit denying the genuineness and due execution of said deed under the provisions of section 448, Code Civ. Proc. The cause was tried by the court, and findings and judgment were in favor of the plaintiffs; and from said judgment the defendant appeals upon the judgment roll, including a bill of exceptions.

A preliminary recital, under the head of "Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law," states, among other things, that "the defendant failed and refused to introduce any evidence whatever in said cause." The followlowing are, in substance, the facts found, viz.: That plaintiffs are, and since prior to the year 1877 have been, husband and wife; that on March 10, 1877, Charles Crocker was the owner in fee in said lot, and on that day granted and conveyed the same to the plaintiff A. Rosenthal and his brother, D. Rosenthal, and that said deed was duly recorded in said year; that on and prior to June 15, 1882, the plaintiffs resided with their family in a dwelling house upon said lot, and claimed and used said lot and dwelling as their home and homestead; that said A. Rosenthal has never selected any homestead; that on the 15th of June, 1882, said Betsy Rosenthal selected the said lot and dwelling house as the homestead of herself and her said husband, and executed and acknowledged the selection and declaration of said homestead in due form for the joint benefit of herself and husband, and said declaration was duly filed for record and recorded in the office of the county recorder of said county on June 16, 1882; that "said premises so selected as a homestead were at the time of such selection in the exclusive occupation of the plaintiffs, and were inclosed with a picket fence, and they have been ever since such selection, and are now, inclosed with a picket fence, and in the exclusive possession of the plaintiffs, as their homestead," and that the actual cash value of said premises at the time of said selection was $2,500, and that the present actual cash value does not exceed $3,000; that on the 20th day of July, 1883, said D. Rosenthal executed and delivered to said A. Rosenthal a grant, bargain, and sale deed of said premises, which was duly acknowledged, and was afterwards, on the 4th day of August, 1883, duly recorded; and that plaintiffs have ever since the execution of said deed been the owners in fee, and as their homestead, of said lot No. 7, mentioned in the complaint. The bill of exceptions specifies that the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding that the plaintiffs have, ever since the execution of said deed of D. Rosenthal to A. Rosenthal, been the owners in fee, and as their homestead, of the said lot, because, as appellant claims, the deed alleged in defendant's answer, and the genuineness and due execution of which are admitted by the pleadings, was a transfer and conveyance of said premises from plaintiffs to defendant.

It is admitted by plaintiffs' attorney that no affidavit denying the genuineness and due execution of the deed, a copy of which was attached to defendant's answer, had been made or served upon defendant. Upon these facts, appellant contends: First, that a homestead cannot be declared upon realty held in tenancy in common; that, therefore, the lot in question was not a homestead, and could be conveyed by the deed, such as is attached to the answer, whether it was acknowledged or not; and, second, that, whether the lot was a homestead or not, all the title that plaintiffs attempted to prove was acquired by them prior to the date of the deed to defendant, set out in the answer, and that the genuineness and due execution of that deed are admitted by the pleadings, plaintiffs having failed to file an affidavit denying its genuineness and due execution. It is conceded that, at the time the declaration of homestead was filed, the legal title to the lot in question was vested in A. and D. Rosenthal, as tenants in common.

It has been uniformly held in this state that a homestead cannot be created upon land held in cotenancy, or tenancy in common, in favor of one of the cotenants (Wolf v. Fleischacker, 5 Cal. 244; Giblin v. Jordan, 6 Cal. 416; Seaton v. Son, 32 Cal. 481; Cameto v. Dupuy, 47 Cal. 79; Bank v. De la Guerra, 61 Cal. 109; Fitzgerald v. Fernandez, 71 Cal. 504, 12 Pac. 562), even though the declarant supposed himself to be the sole owner (Seaton v. Son, 32 Cal. 481), and that a conveyance by the husband and wife of an undivided moiety of the land would destroy the homestead right (Carroll v. Ellis, 63 Cal. 440). As early as 1865 it was said, in answer to an effort to overturn this rule: "It is now too late to reinvestigate the reasons upon which those decisions are based. The first of the series (Wolf v. Fleischacker) was made nine years ago. The decision was affirmed in several cases [naming them], and since that time the construction of the statute upon the point involved has been regarded as settled. The parties in this case may have relied upon those decisions in dispensing with the signature of the wife to the mortgage." Elias v. Verdugo, 27 Cal. 418. As recently as in Re Carriger's Estate, 40 Pac. 1032, it was said: "It is well settled in this state that a homestead cannot be created by a cotenant in lands held by tenancy in common." Under these uniform decisions, it must be held that, at the time that the declaration of homestead was filed by Mrs. Rosenthal, the land was not susceptible of being impressed with a homestead. It is equally clear that, unless the land was impressed with the characteristics of a homestead at the time of making and filing her declaration, it did not become a homestead by any subsequent act of a third party, or by the subsequent conveyance from the cotenant to her husband. See Reynolds v. Pixley, 6 Cal. 165. Sections 1262–1264 of the Civil Code prescribe the mode of creating a homestead in lands, and the mode thus prescribed is exclusive.

The declaration of homestead by Mrs. Rosenthal did not, therefore, create a homestead in the land, and the title of her husband therein was not affected, but could be conveyed by a deed from himself alone; and it was not necessary that his deed should be acknowledged, in order to be effective as a transfer of his title. A copy of this deed was annexed to the answer of the defendant, and, as the plaintiffs did not file an affidavit denying its genuineness and due execution, they are "deemed admitted" (Code Civ. Proc. § 448), and it was not necessary for the defendant to offer the deed in evidence. The judgment is reversed.

BLYTHE v. AYRES et al. (S. F. 119.)

PROBATE PRACTICE—ENTRY OF DECREE.

A proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. § 1664, providing that any person claiming to be heir to a decedent may file a petition to the probate court praying it to declare the rights of all persons in the estate, is not a civil action, within section 668, requiring that judgments shall be entered in the "judgment book"; and the entry of a decree in such a proceeding in the minute book of the probate court is sufficient.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Proceeding by Florence Blythe against Abbie Ayres and others to determine the rights of all persons in the estate of Thomas H. Blythe, deceased. Defendants' motion to dismiss the proceeding was denied, and they appeal. Affirmed.

S. W. & E. B. Holladay, for appellants. Garber, Boalt & Bishop, W. W. Foote, W. H. H. Hart, and Henry I. Kowalsky, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Appellant Henry T. Blythe and others moved the court sitting in the matter of said estate to dismiss the above-entitled proceeding, upon the ground that the party entitled to judgment therein had neglected to demand and have the same entered for more than six months. Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subd. 6. His motion being denied, this appeal is taken.

The facts are that in the proceeding had under section 1664 of the Code of Civil Procedure,[1] in the matter of said estate, the order or decree of the court determining heirship and rights to property was upon October 22, 1890, spread at length upon the probate minutes, as required by section 1704 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Appellant prosecuted his appeal from this decree, basing it, as appears from the transcript therein filed, upon the entry thereof made in the minute book. That appeal having been decided adversely to his contention, he makes this motion to dismiss all proceedings taken under said section 1664, for the neglect of respondent, but lately discovered, in failing to have the decree or judgment from which he appealed entered in the proper book. To support the contention, the claim is made that the proceeding under section 1664, Code Civ. Proc., is a civil action; that the final determination of a civil action is a judgment; that a judgment must be entered in a judgment book (Id. § 668); that this judgment admittedly was not so entered; and that the penalty for the omission should be a dismissal.

[1] Code Civ. Proc. § 1664, provides that any person claiming to be heir to a decedent may file a petition in the probate court praying the court to declare the rights of all persons in the estate.

But the proceeding under section 1664, Code Civ. Proc., while partaking in form of the nature of a civil action, is not a civil action; and the final determination, while having features in common with a judgment, is not a judgment in a civil action. It is unnecessary to discuss the nature and scope of this proceeding, for that has already been elaborately done in this estate in Blythe v. Ayres, 102 Cal. 254, 258, 36 Pac. 522, as well as in the case of In re Burton, 93 Cal. 463, 29 Pac. 36, where it is said: "The proceeding permitted by section 1664 of the Code of Civil Procedure is a special proceeding (Smith v. Westerfield, 88 Cal. 374, 26 Pac. 206), and is embraced within the scope of 'matter in probate' as clearly as is the proceeding for the sale of real property to pay debts of an estate." Moreover, the very contention raised upon this appeal has twice before been presented in motions made by parties to the original proceeding, and both times decided against the contention. In Blythe v. Ayres, No. 15,479 (36 Pac. 588), the record showed the entry of the decree appealed from in the probate minute book, and a motion was made to recall the remittitur as having been improvidently issued, upon the ground that the record disclosed that no entry of the judgment appealed from had been made, the point made being that the entry should have been made in the judgment book; and in Blythe v. Ayres, No. 15,788 (38 Pac. 1108), the motion was made after suggestion of a diminution of the record, for that it did not disclose an entry of the judgment, and the entry shown to have been made in the minute book was not sufficient. In denying these motions, since consent could not confer jurisdiction, it was of necessity held that the final decree, when spread at length upon the minute book of the court in probate, was properly entered. The order appealed from is affirmed.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—PROBATE PRACTICE—JUDGMENT—ENTRY.

An entry of a judgment in probate proceedings in the minute book instead of the judgment book is sufficient to sustain a decree of distribution based thereon.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Appeal by Henry T. Blythe and others from a decree of distribution in the matter of the estate of Thomas H. Blythe. Affirmed.

S. W. & E. B. Holladay, for appellants. Garber, Boalt & Bishop, W. H. H. Hart, W. W. Foote, H. I. Kowalsky, and T. I. Bergin, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is an appeal by Henry T. Blythe and others from the decree of distribution in the matter of the above-entitled estate. The petition for distribution was presented by Florence Blythe. She averred, as the foundation of her claim, the decision and judgment made in the matter of said estate in the proceeding entitled "Florence Blythe vs. Abbie Ayres et al." The appellants appeared, joined issue with the petitioner, and pleaded nul tiel record. Upon the hearing the decision of the court as entered in the probate minute book upon October 22, 1890, was offered and admitted in evidence over the objection of appellants. Appellants, in turn, "offered and demanded that they be permitted to prove that no such judgment existed against them as is alleged against them in the said petition for distribution, because the said judgment (rendered October 22, 1890, in the action or proceeding of Florence Blythe vs. Abbie Ayres et al.) had never been entered in the judgment book; the time to appeal from said judgment had never arrived; the said judgment had never been entered; the action or proceeding was still pending; the alleged appeal taken by Henry T. Blythe et al. as from said judgment was taken by inadvertence, under the impression that said judgment had been entered, and without the knowledge of said parties or their attorneys of the nonentry of said judgment; that said Henry T. Blythe et al. were parties defendant in said action or proceeding, and were making a bona fide claim to the heirship and ownership of said estate; that said alleged appeal of Henry T. Blythe et al. as from said judgment was futile; that the action of the supreme court as in affirming said judgment was without jurisdiction and void; that its remittitur to the superior court certifying its said action was void; that said remittitur was never attached to the judgment roll, and no minute of said affirmance of the supreme court was ever entered on the docket of said superior court." The court sustained the objection of petitioner to this offer. The offer, it will be observed, was to show that the alleged judgment did not exist, because it had never been entered in the judgment book. No claim was made by petitioner that it had been so entered. Indeed, petitioner rested her cause upon the affirmative showing that entry had been made in the minute book. That this entry was sufficient has thrice been decided in the matter of this estate. Blythe v. Ayres (S. F. 119; filed November 30, 1895) 42 Pac. 641. There was thus before the court an affirmative showing of a sufficient entry. For appellants to have proved that it was not entered in some other book could not have advantaged them, and the refusal of the court to allow them to make such proof could not have injured them. The decree and order appealed from are affirmed.

The order of this court, made upon application of appellants herein, restraining the probate court from proceeding further in the matter of the distribution of said estate, is also vacated and dissolved.

Appeal of DAVIS.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—APPEAL FROM PROBATE—JUDGMENT—EVIDENCE.

1. The decision of the trial court against a claim of kinship to an intestate, the claim being based on exceedingly light and flimsy evidence, will not be disturbed.

2. A judgment of distribution of a decedent's estate will not be disturbed on appeal by a person not interested in the estate.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Appeal by Sarah Davis from a decree of distribution in the matter of the estate of Thomas H. Blythe. Affirmed.

For other appeals, see 36 Pac. 522, 588, 37 Pac. 392, and 42 Pac. 642.

Timothy J. Lyons, John H. Dwist, and Jas. Alva Watt, for appellant. W. H. H. Hart, Garber, Boalt & Bishop, H. I. Kowalsky, and W. W. Foote, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an appeal by Sarah Davis from a decree of distribution to Florence Blythe Hinckley of the property and estate of Thomas H. Blythe, deceased. The said Blythe died intestate in April, 1883. Letters of administration upon his estate were issued in that year to Philip A. Roach, who was afterwards succeeded by others as administrators. More than one year after the issuance of letters the respondent herein, Florence Blythe Hinckley,—then Florence Blythe,—commenced proceedings under section 1664 of the Code of Civil Procedure to have the claims of all persons to said estate, and its distribution, ascertained and declared in the manner provided by that section. She filed her petition in October, 1885, claiming to be the daughter and sole heir of said deceased, and entitled to the distribution of his whole estate. The court duly made an order requiring all persons, named or unnamed, to appear on February 1, 1886, and exhibit their claims of heirship, ownership, or interest in said estate, which was duly published; and on said day nearly 200 persons appeared, claiming such heirship. Within the time prescribed by law, said Florence filed her complaint, setting forth the facts constituting her heirship to the deceased, and her claim to said estate; and the numerous persons who had appeared filed pleadings, or "answers," as they are called in the section, setting up the facts constituting their claims to heirship and distribution. They are mostly associated in certain groups, and their claims were mostly inconsistent with and hostile to each other; each group contending that the deceased was descended from parents different from those alleged by either of the other claimants. After various proceedings, not necessary to be mentioned here, and after a full hearing and trial, the court, in October, 1890, made its decision and entered its decree or judgment, by which it was adjudged and decreed that the said Florence was the daughter of said deceased, and his sole heir, and therefore entitled to the distribution of the whole of said estate; and that neither of the said persons appearing as aforesaid, nor any other person, was heir to said deceased, or entitled to any of said estate. From this judgment various appeals were taken, but upon all the appeals the judgment was affirmed. See Blythe v. Ayres, 102 Cal. 254, 36 Pac. 522, also eight other cases there mentioned; Id., 96 Cal. 532, 31 Pac. 915; Hinckley v. Ayres (No. 15,788) 105 Cal. 357, 38 Pac. 735. Two of the persons who appeared and answered and took appeals, as above stated, were William Savage and his brother, David Savage; and these two were brothers of the appellant Sarah Davis. These two brothers, during the above-mentioned proceedings, presented and contested for the claim of the group called the "London Savages"; and this appellant, although she knew that this claim, in which she was interested jointly with her brothers, was thus being litigated, and gave testimony, by a deposition, for her brothers in support of that claim, did not appear as a party; and she now claims the right to open up and again contest for the said alleged London Savage heirship, and to disregard all the proceedings and decisions above mentioned,—which, after full and protracted litigation resulted in the judicial determination of all said conflicting claims in favor of said Florence,—upon the ground that there was no legal service upon appellant of the notice of said proceeding, because she was not individually named in said notice or in an affidavit for publication. Of course, under these circumstances, she is entitled to no equitable consideration, and must stand upon her strict legal rights, if any such she has.

The contention of appellant is that the said proceedings and decree under Code Civ. Proc. § 1664 (styled "Blythe v. Ayres") are not conclusive as against her. But that question does not necessarily arise in this case. Considering the state of the law before the enactment of section 1664, the character of the remedy which that section was intended to provide is quite apparent. It was intended to construct a wider, better, and more just and effective method of determining heirship to one dying intestate, where there are many conflicting claimants of such heirship. It gives a longer time, and affords ampler opportunities to contestants to present and litigate their claims, than they formerly had, when the ordinary decree of distribution was conclusive; and we have no doubt that the legislature intended by said section to make the decree under it conclusive against all persons, and the unquestioned basis for the decree of distribution which was to follow. And this, of course, the legislature could do in a proceeding in rem, such as the one under discussion. But we are not called upon in this case to determine definitely whether or not the somewhat bungling language of the section has in any material way obscured what was apparently the legislative intent. In the case at bar the question arises upon the objections by appellant to the introduction by the respondent of the prior proceedings in the administration of the estate of Thomas H. Blythe, including the proceedings under said section 1664, and the judgment and decree rendered therein. These proceedings were properly set forth by respondent in her petition for distribution, and they were all specifically denied by the appellant in her answer to said petition. If there is any one of the averments of the petition—from the death of Blythe to the moment when the answer was filed—that is not denied by the answer we have failed to discover it. The English language seems to have been tortured in the answer through apparent fear that the denials might not be considered comprehensive and complete. She denies that any proceeding was taken under section 1664, or that any person appeared and filed an answer therein, or that any judgment was rendered, or any appeal taken by any one. The following are some specimens of said denials: "The said Sarah Davis denies that said or any decision so duly or otherwise given or made or as aforesaid or otherwise or at all was in the words or figures following, to wit, as set forth in the said petition, or otherwise or at all." "The said Sarah Davis denies that said or any judgment so or otherwise duly or otherwise given or made or entered or otherwise as aforesaid or otherwise or at all was or is in words or figures following, to wit, as set forth in the said petition, or otherwise or at all." "The said Sarah Davis denies that the said or any judgment still remains in full or any force or effect or otherwise or at all, or has not been in any wise reversed or vacated or annulled, or that certain or any of the aforesaid parties, or any party who appeared as above stated or otherwise in said cause or any cause, or at all, or who appeared upon the or any trial of said or any cause as above or otherwise stated, or at all, appealed from said or any judgment to the supreme or any court of said or any state of California or otherwise or at all," etc.; and it is denied in similar verbiage that "the supreme court or any court or otherwise or at all" rendered judgments on said appeals. It is quite apparent, therefore, that the said evidence objected to was properly introduced in proof of averments denied by the appellant, and necessary to respondent's application for distribution. Moreover, the evidence objected to was admissible, generally, as proof of respondent's status as sole heir of the deceased. Whether it would be conclusive as against appellant, or whether it would have been evidence at all against her on the question of the status of respondent, if appellant were "interested in the estate," is, as before stated, not a necessary question here. Upon the issue of her interest in the estate the court below allowed her to introduce all the evidence she had to offer; and it found that she is in no manner akin to said Blythe, deceased, and has no interest in or claim to any of his estate. It is contended that the finding is against the evidence, and that we ought to say here that upon the testimony introduced by appellant the court below should have found that she is akin to the deceased, and has an interest in his estate. But the testimony on that point was of an exceedingly slight and flimsy character, and we would be without warrant in disturbing the conclusion of the trial judge on this question of fact. See Blankman v. Vallejo, 15 Cal. 646; Mogk v. Peterson, 75 Cal. 501, 17 Pac. 446; Baker v. Insurance Co., 79 Cal. 41, 21 Pac. 357; Elwood v. Telegraph Co., 45 N. Y. 553; Sipple v. State, 99 N. Y. 289, 1 N. E. 892, and 3 N. E. 657. Therefore, as the appellant has no interest in the estate, she is not concerned with its distribution. There are no other points in the case necessary to be noticed. The judgment and decree of distribution appealed from are affirmed.

In re MULLIN'S ESTATE. (S. F. 3.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 3, 1895.)

WITNESS—PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS—CROSS-EXAMINATION—WILLS—EXECUTION—SIGNATURE OF TESTATOR—PUBLICATION—REQUEST TO WITNESS TO SIGN.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 2, providing that an attorney cannot be examined, without the consent of his client, as to communications made to him by the client in the course of professional employment, does not preclude an attorney who witnessed a will he had drawn for decedent from testifying as to testator's mental capacity and instructions in regard to the will, as, by requesting him to witness the will, decedent waived the provisions of the statute.

2. Nor does subdivision 4, which contains the same provision in regard to physicians, preclude the physician who attended decedent during his sickness, and who, at decedent's request, witnessed the will, from testifying as to his mental capacity.

3. Such physician, after testifying as to decedent's mental capacity, may be cross-examined as to his learning and qualifications as an expert, and as to the character of decedent's sickness.

4. That testator, in response to the statement of his attorney in regard to signing the will, that "You can make your cross, and I can sign for you, if you so direct," stated, "Very well; do so," shows a sufficient signature by testator.

5. The testator, in response to the question of his attorney, "What is this instrument?" (testator having just signed it), responded, "That is my will," is a sufficient publication.

6. That testator, in response to the question of his attorney as to whether he wished certain persons, in whose presence he had just signed and acknowledged his will, to witness the same, answered "Yes," is a sufficient request for such persons to witness the will.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Appeal by Mary T. Mullin, in the contest of a will in the matter of the estate of Henry J. Mullin, from a judgment refusing to admit a will to probate. Reversed.

Geo. A. Proctor and D. I. Mahoney, for appellant. Dunne & McPike, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Mary T. Mullin, widow of deceased, offered his will for probate. A contest over its administration was raised by the brothers and sister of the deceased. The jury, upon special issues presented for their consideration, found that the deceased at the time of the making of the purported will was not of sound and disposing mind; that the deceased did not subscribe his name to the will, nor did any person so subscribe his name in his presence and by his direction; that no such subscription was made in the presence of the attesting witnesses, or was acknowledged by deceased to them to have been made by him or by his authority. In accordance with these findings, the court entered its judgment and decree denying the instrument probate, and from this decree, and from the order denying a new trial, the proponent appeals.

1. George A. Proctor, called as a witness for proponent, was a subscribing witness to the will, and was also the attorney at law of the deceased in preparing and drawing the will. Proctor was summoned to prepare the will. He visited the deceased, who was then in his last sickness, received his instructions, retired to an adjoining room, reduced them to writing, and returned to the sick chamber, where the will was executed, he becoming a subscribing witness. Objection was made by contestants to questions put to him upon direct examination touching the declarations made to him by deceased, and the instructions given him, and the occurrences at the interview immediately preceding the drafting of the instrument, upon the ground that the evidence was incompetent under section 1881, subd. 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure.[1] The court sustained the objection. In this it erred. Evidence of the occurrences between the attorney and testator, and the latter's instructions, would have offered a valuable aid to the jury in determining the question of the testator's mental capacity at the time of the testamentary act, which followed immediately. The testimony was therefore clearly material, and the conversation was admissible if not in violation of section 1881, Code Civ. Proc. That section is designed to protect the interest of the client. It is his privilege to seal the lips of his attorney, or to permit him to make disclosures of confidential communications. When a testator has requested his attorney to become an attesting witness to his will, he thereby expressly waives the privilege. It is so held by the court of appeals of New York, under the provisions of section 835 of their Code of Civil Procedure, which in substance is identical with section 1881, subd. 2, of our own. As is said in Alberti v. Railroad Co., 118 N. Y. 77, 23 N. E. 35: "But, although dead, he may leave behind him evidence which indicates an express intention to waive the privilege; as, for instance, where he requests his attorney to sign the attestation clause of his will, he by so doing expressly waives the provisions of the statutes, and makes him a competent witness to testify as to the circumstances attending its execution, including the mental condition of the testator at the time. In re Will of Coleman, 111 N. Y. 220, 19 N. E. 71." It is true that the New York Code, in section 836, now expressly authorizes an attorney who has become a subscribing witness to a will to testify to its preparation and execution; but this provision was inserted by amendment adopted in 1892, and merely followed the judicial declaration to that effect. In Re Flint's Estate, 100 Cal. 395, 34 Pac. 863, our Code provisions and the policy of the law are fully considered; and In re Wax's Estate, 106 Cal. 343, 39 Pac. 624, adopts the interpretation above quoted.

[1] Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 2, provides that "an attorney cannot, without the consent of his client, be examined as to any communication made by the client to him, or his advice given thereon in the course of professional employment."

2. Dr. John Lagan was called as a witness by proponent. He was a practicing physician and surgeon, attended the deceased professionally during his last sickness, and was a subscribing witness to the will. These facts were brought forth upon his direct examination. After detailing the circumstances attending the execution of the will, he was asked—still upon direct examination—his opinion of the "mental sanity" of the deceased at the time of such execution, and answered: "At the time he signed he appeared to me to be of sound mind. That is my opinion." Upon cross-examination the court permitted counsel to interrogate the witness as to the character of his patient's affliction, which appeared to be serous apoplexy, resulting in hemiplegy, and to show that the brain is involved and affected by this disease; likewise, that the accompanying paralysis evinced itself upon the Thursday preceding the Monday upon which the will was executed and the testator died. In addition, the witness was interrogated as to the disclosures which the autopsy made of the physical condition of the deceased, and finally he was subjected to a cross-examination, keen and comprehensive, touching his professional learning and qualifications, and as an expert. Appellant contends that this cross-examination was error—First, in violating the privilege accorded by section 1881, subd. 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure;[2] and, second, in permitting a cross-examination touching the expert qualifications of a witness who had been called to testify, as would an ordinary layman, merely to the mental condition of the deceased at the time he was called in to attest the will. But these objections are not to be upheld. In making his attending physician a subscribing witness to his will, the deceased did exactly what he effected in the case of his attorney at law,—waived the privilege, and invited a full and proper examination of the matters and facts upon which their lips would otherwise have been sealed. The evidence was not objectionable as evoking privileged matter, and was pertinent and admissible, if within the range of legitimate cross-examination. And that it was we entertain no doubt. Upon direct examination the jury was informed that this witness was a physician and surgeon, with years of experience and practice, and that he was the physician who attended the testator during his last sickness. Then, for their enlightenment, he is asked his opinion of the mental condition of the testator at the time of the testamentary act, and answers that he was of sound mind. The answer to the question of necessity involved the use of the intimate knowledge by the physician acquired in prescribing for and treating his patient. It would be absurd to say that it was to be limited to the outward seeming and appearance of the patient at that particular moment, or, in other words, that the witness would have been justified in answering (exempli gratia) that from external appearances, and judging as a layman, his opinion was that he was of sound mind, but that using his professional skill and knowledge and intimate acquaintanceship with the patient, acquired as his physician, his opinion was that he was mentally incompetent. Having answered that in his opinion the man was of disposing mind, there were open to the cross-examiner two fields of inquiry: First, the soundness of the witness' judgment, or, in other words, his qualifications as an alienist; and, second, the character of the patient's infirmities,—that is to say, the facts and circumstances upon which the judgment was exercised and the conclusion reached. The cross-examination was confined within these bounds, and was strictly proper.

3. The jury, finding upon special issues, declared that Mullin neither subscribed nor authorized the subscription of his name to the will; that no such subscription was made in the presence of the attesting witnesses, or acknowledged by deceased to have been made by him or by his authority; that the instrument was never declared by Mullin to the attesting witnesses to be his last will; that the attesting witnesses did not sign in the presence and at the request of Mullin; that the instrument was not witnessed as a will by two competent witnesses, each signing his name in the presence of Mullin and at his request; and, finally, that Mullin did not make his mark to said will in the presence of said subscribing witnesses. These findings are absolutely without support, excepting such as they receive from the conclusion reached and expressed by the jury, that, at the time of the making of the will, Mullin was not of sound and disposing mind. If into each of these special verdicts it is to be read, by intendment, that none of these things was done because Mullin was not of sound and disposing mind at the doing of them, then these findings may at least be understood, if not approved. But if they are to be accepted for their face value, as declarations by the jury that the acts did not take place, and the alleged facts had no existence, then are they at absolute variance with the uncontradicted testimony. Three persons were present at the time of the execution of the will. All were called as witnesses. All testified to substantially the same occurrences, and there was no conflicting or opposing evidence. The testimony of the witness Proctor, corroborated by that of the other two, is as follows: "I walked around to the right of the bed, and asked Mr. Mullin if he desired me to read the instrument that I held in my hand. He said 'Yes.' I read it in a loud tone of voice, and when I finished I asked him if that was the disposition he wanted made of his property. He said 'Yes.' I said, 'Do you want your wife to act as executrix without bonds?' He said 'Yes.' I then said, 'Please sign this instrument,' and he made a motion with his right hand to reach up this way (showing), and I reached and handed him the pen that was on the stand. He made the remark, as I put the pen in his hand, 'I am afraid I cannot sign it.' Doctor Lagan supported his back, his hand trembled considerably, and I said, 'If you cannot sign your name, Mr. Mullin, it is not necessary, under the law. You can make your cross, and I can sign it for you, if you so direct me.' He says, 'Very well; do so.' He made his cross by my supporting his wrist and hand. He held the pen in his fingers; his hand was trembling very perceptibly; and I steadied his hand, and he made his mark. I then stepped to the stand, and wrote 'Henry E. Mullin,' as it appears there, and my name to the left of it, as a witness to that mark; and I then stepped back to his bedside, and said, 'Mr. Mullin, what is this instrument?' and he replied, 'That is my will.' I asked him, 'Do you request Doctor Lagan, Mr. Duggan, and myself to witness it?' He answered 'Yes.' We each of us signed our name at the bottom of the instrument as they appear on the instrument." This evidence does not require analysis. It shows a legal execution of the instrument, provided the deceased had sufficient mental capacity and understanding, and it is not contradicted. MULLER v. ROWELL. (L. A. 29.)

AGREED STATEMENT OF FACTS—FINDINGS BY COURT.

Where the parties agree to a statement of facts which is sufficient to support the judgment, a formal finding of facts by the court is unnecessary.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; John L. Campbell, Judge.

Action by Joseph Muller against Elmer E. Rowell. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. E. Rowell (A. Brunson, of counsel), for appellant. Paris & Allison, for respondent.

VAN FLEET, J. This is an appeal from the judgment upon the judgment roll, with a bill of exceptions, and the only point made for a reversal is that the lower court did not file findings, which were not waived. While the record shows that no formal findings were signed and filed by the judge, it does disclose that the parties presented and filed an agreed statement of facts covering all the issues, and it is recited: "That upon the said statement of facts hereinbefore set forth being filed in the cause, the court ordered judgment in favor of the plaintiff in the said action upon the facts of the case as disclosed by the said statement of facts before referred to and set forth, and that thereupon and on the same day judgment was made and entered in the said action in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant as prayed for in the complaint." It thus appears that the court adopted the facts stipulated by the parties as the facts of the case, and based its judgment thereon. Under such circumstances, and it appearing that these facts fully support the judgment, no other or more formal findings were required. The statement of facts so agreed to took the place and served all the purposes of a formal finding by the court. Brewster v. Hartley, 37 Cal. 15. It is only where the facts are in issue that findings thereon by the court are necessary in any case; and, where the parties stipulate in writing as to what the facts are, and file such stipulation in the action, it is in all substantial respects the equivalent of admitting them in the pleadings. It is very apparent, we think, from the record, that this appeal was taken purely for delay, since it presents the merest pretense of merit, without any in fact; and we think it a case where, as respondent suggests, the appellant should be mulcted in damages as for a frivolous appeal. The judgment is affirmed, with $50 damages.

CASTRO v. GEIL et al. (No. 15,820.)

EQUITY—RESCISSION—PLEADING—STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS—TAKING ADVANTAGE OF BY DEMURRER—RUNNING OF STATUTE.

1. Civ. Code, § 38, provides that the conveyance of a person of unsound mind "not entirely without understanding" may be avoided. Section 39 provides that a person of unsound mind under guardianship can make no conveyance. Held, that a complaint alleging that a grantor, at the time of the execution of a deed, was, from disease, etc., and from the undue influence exercised by the grantee, incompetent to manage her property, and was incompetent to understand, and did not understand, the nature of the transaction, does not show that she was "entirely without understanding," and therefore merely shows that the deed was voidable.

2. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4, providing that actions for relief on the ground of fraud must be brought within three years, the cause of action in such cases though not to be deemed to have accrued until the discovery of the fraud, a complaint in such an action which shows that the fraud occurred more than three years before the commencement of the action is demurrable unless it alleges the discovery thereof within the three years.

3. Where the statute had commenced to run against a decedent, the minority of his heirs does not prevent the running of the statute against them.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county; N. A. Dorn, Judge.

Action by Juan B. Castro against Josefa S. Geil and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

A. Craig, W. H. Webb, and J. A. Johnson, for appellant. S. F. Geil and John J. Wyatt, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. This action was brought by the plaintiff to quiet his title to a lot in the town of Monterey. On December 14, 1882, Maria Antonia Pico De Castro, the mother of plaintiff, executed a deed purporting to convey said property to the plaintiff in fee simple. The deed was duly acknowledged, and two days thereafter was recorded. Said Maria Antonia Pico De Castro died December 12, 1883, intestate. The defendants, claiming as heirs at law of said intestate, answered the complaint, and at the same time filed a cross complaint, alleging "that at the time said Maria Antonia Pico De Castro signed said deed, she was, from disease, old age, ignorance, weakness of mind and body, and from the undue influence and control exercised over her by said Juan B. Castro, mentally incompetent to manage her property, or of transacting any business whatever, and was then and there incapable to comprehend or understand, and in fact did not comprehend or understand, the character, nature, or effect of said transaction," and that she was then, and for a long time prior thereto had been, of unsound mind. Defendants further alleged that said Maria Antonia Pico De Castro died intestate on December 12, 1883, leaving, surviving her, as next of kin and her only heirs entitled to inherit the premises described in the complaint, the plaintiff and the defendants; that, as between the parties to the action, the plaintiff was entitled to an undivided $^{30}/_{60}$ thereof, and the several defendants, in different proportions therein stated, the remainder thereof; and prayed that said deed be set aside and canceled; and that the parties to this action be declared to be the owners in fee of said premises in the proportions above set forth; and that the plaintiff be required to convey to the defendants their said interest. The plaintiff demurred to said cross complaint, upon the grounds—First, that said cross complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; and, second, that the cause of action therein stated is barred by the provision of subdivision 4 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This demurrer was overruled, and plaintiff answered the cross complaint, putting in issue all the material allegations thereof. The cause was tried upon the cross complaint and the answer thereto, and findings and judgment were in favor of defendants, and this appeal is by the plaintiff from said judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The demurrer should have been sustained. Section 338, Code Civ Proc., limits the time within which the actions there enumerated shall be commenced to three years. Subdivision 4 of said section is as follows: "(4) An action for relief on the ground of fraud or mistake. The cause of action in such case not to be deemed to have accrued until the discovery, by the aggrieved party, of the facts constituting the fraud or mistake." In People v. Blankenship, 52 Cal. 619, it was held that, "when the acts constituting the fraud occurred more than three years before the commencement of the action, the plaintiff must allege the discovery thereof within three years, in order to avoid the bar of the statute." That was an action to set aside a deed on the ground of fraud, and it was held the demurrer should have been sustained. See, also, People v. Lumber Co., 99 Cal. 459, 460, 34 Pac. 96; Boyd v. Blankman, 29 Cal. 19.

The cross complaint alleges that the deed from Maria Antonia Pico De Castro to appellant was made on December 14, 1882, and that she died December 12, 1883. This cross complaint was filed April 5, 1893, or more than 10 years after the execution of the deed, and it contains no averment as to the date at which the alleged fraud and undue influence of appellant were discovered. It is contended by respondents, however, that it is alleged that at the time said deed was executed, and for a long time prior thereto, said grantor had been of unsound mind, and that, therefore, the deed was void, "without regard to any fraud or undue influence"; meaning thereby that the deed was wholly inoperative, and did not convey to or vest in appellant any title or seisin. "The deed of a person non compos mentis, who is not under guardianship, transfers a seisin, and is merely voidable." Devl. Deeds, § 73, and cases cited in note 4. To the same effect are the provisions of our Civil Code (section 38): "A person entirely without understanding has no power to make a contract of any kind, but he is liable for the reasonable value of things furnished to him necessary for his support or the support of his family." Section 39: "A conveyance or other contract of a person of unsound mind, but not entirely without understanding, made before his incapacity has been judicially determined, is subject to rescission, as provided in the chapter on rescission of this Code." And section 40 provides: "After his incapacity has been judicially determined, a person of unsound mind can make no conveyance or other contract, nor delegate any power or waive any right, until his restoration to capacity. * * *" In More v. Calkins, 85 Cal. 177, 190, 24 Pac. 729, it was said: "I think the demurrer to the second cause of action attempted to be stated in the complaint, based upon sections 38 and 39 of the Civil Code, was properly sustained. That A. S. More was 'entirely without understanding' is not directly or indirectly, definitely or indefinitely, stated in the complaint, and therefore the instrument executed by him was not void." This language applies with equal force and propriety to the case before us. It is therefore conclusively settled that the deed in question vested the title in appellant, and that it could not be divested otherwise than by judicial action, or the voluntary conveyance of the grantee; and, if by judicial action, that the complaint must allege facts which show upon the face of it that the action is not barred by the statute of limitations.

The doctrine of laches, as applied in equity, need not be considered, as the statute of limitations here invoked applies to equity cases. Boyd v. Blankman, 29 Cal. 19; Broderick's Will Case, 21 Wall. 503, 520.

Respondents also contend that some of them are minors, and that they are not affected by the statute of limitations. But the cross complaint shows that these minors were not heirs of appellant's grantor when the deed was made, their parents, through whom they claim, being then, and for years afterwards, in life; and subsequent disabilities do not stop the running of the statute. Alvarado v. Nordholt, 95 Cal. 116, 30 Pac. 211; McLeran v. Benton, 73 Cal. 329, 14 Pac. 879.

It follows that the judgment and order appealed from should be reversed, with directions to sustain said demurrer, and with leave to all parties to amend their pleadings if they shall be so advised.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, with directions to the court to sustain said demurrer, with leave to all parties to amend their pleadings as they may be advised.

LAVER v. ELLERT et al., Commissioners.

(No. 15,947.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—CITY HALL COMMISSIONERS—POWERS.

St. 1870, p. 738, creating the new city hall commissioners, provided that they should adopt such plans for the erection of such city hall as in their judgment were best calculated to serve the purposes of the city and county of San Francisco. Act March 24, 1876, created the present board of new city hall commissioners, and directed it to take charge of the new city hall, and to proceed with the construction of the building "according to the plans heretofore adopted for a permanent building as contemplated by an act of the legislature," etc., and provided that no change in the plans or specifications should be made after proposals for doing work or furnishing materials were called for. Held, that the present commissioners have the same discretionary powers to change the plans and specifications of such building as their predecessors.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Augustus Laver against L. R. Ellert, William Broderick, and H. T. Creswell, the commissioners composing the board of new city hall commissioners, for an injunction. From a judgment entered after sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Gale & Peery and J. T. Fleming, for appellant. W. S. Barnes and Stafford & Stafford, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from the judgment entered after demurrer sustained. It appears from the complaint that the board of new city hall commissioners had entered into a contract with the firm of O'Connell & Lewis for the erection and construction of a dome upon the new city hall in the city and county of San Francisco, in place of a square clock tower contemplated by the original plans. It was averred that the dome, if constructed, would be wholly unlike, in external appearance, the tower, which was to be built according to the adopted plans; that it would cost more, and "would be greatly out of harmony with the other parts of said building already completed, and materially detract from its architectural beauty." A perpetual injunction was sought against the defendants, to restrain them from proceeding further under the contract, and a judgment was asked decreeing the contract to be null and void. A demurrer was sustained to the complaint upon the ground that it failed to state a cause of action.

The question presented involves the power of the board of new city hall commissioners to make any deviations in the construction of the building from the plans adopted by the commissioners in 1871, under the provisions of the act of 1870. St. 1869–70, p. 738. This question, however, has ceased to be of any public importance whatever, and, indeed, of very little concern to the plaintiff himself, by reason of the ratifying act of the last legislature, which it is conceded validates the contract, even if, in the first instance, it were improperly entered into by the commissioners. St. 1895, p. 165; Nevertheless, we are of opinion that the court properly sustained the demurrer. The act of the legislature creating the new city hall commissioners (St. 1870, p. 738) provided that the commissioners should "adopt such plans for the erection of said city hall as in their judgment best calculated to serve the purposes of said city and county, having in view the necessity of providing a permanent building which will furnish sufficient and suitable rooms to accommodate the different courts and boards of city and county officers, hall of records, and also offices for the various officers of said city and county." The object of the act was to secure the erection of a permanent and suitable building for the purposes named, and the duty enjoined upon the board of adopting plans was to further this object. Nowhere, by the act, was the original board prohibited from changing or modifying the plans, when once adopted, and for the proper performance of the duty imposed upon them it was necessary that some discretion should be left to them in the matter. They should have the power to correct mistakes in plans once adopted. They should have the power to vary an adopted plan, if further investigation satisfied them that the execution of it would not achieve the end in view. Nothing in this act can fairly be said to prohibit the commissioners from changing or modifying plans once adopted, if, in the bona fide exercise of their judgment, they believed the changes or alterations would better meet the objects of the law. By the act of the legislature approved March 24, 1876, the present board of new city hall commissioners was called into being, and was directed to take charge of the new city hall and improvements therein, "and to proceed with the construction of the building on said premises known as the new city hall, according to the plans heretofore adopted for a permanent building, as contemplated by an act of the legislature," etc. It is this language which appellant claims deprives the commissioners of any and all discretion, and compels them to proceed with the work under the plans adopted by the former board. But such a construction is not supported by reason, nor borne out by the language of the act itself. It cannot be seen why the successors of the original board should not have the same discretionary powers which were vested in their predecessors, nor do we find in the terms of the act any express declaration depriving them of that discretion. By section 4 of the act they are empowered to employ an architect. By section 6 it is made the architect's duty to draw specifications of the work to be done, and make drawings therefor. Quite as much room is left for the exercise of discretionary power in the matter of the specifications as in the matter of the original plans, and discretion over the specifications is expressly awarded to the new board; but by section 14 of the act the right of the board to change adopted plans is expressly recognized. It is there declared "that no change or modification in the place [plan] or specification shall be made after proposals for so doing work or furnishing materials shall be called for." We conclude that the discretionary powers of the present board under the act of 1875–76 are not different from those enjoyed by their predecessors, and that the contemplated change was not in abuse or in excess of a reasonable exercise of those powers. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

WITTE v. TAYLOR. (L. A. 56.)

REAL-ESTATE AGENTS—COMMISSIONS.

A contract by defendant to pay plaintiff a specified commission after six months from the delivery to defendant of a deed for a one-half interest in a ranch owned by a third person is indivisible, and plaintiff cannot, upon defendant's purchase of a one-third interest in such ranch, recover a proportionate commission.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Riverside county; J. S. Noyes, Judge.

Action by William A. Witte against R. B. Taylor to recover commissions for the sale of real estate. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. W. Chynoweth, for appellant. E. W. Freeman, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action to recover commissions for the sale of certain real estate. A general demurrer was sustained to the complaint, and plaintiff appeals from the judgment rendered thereon. The action is based upon the following clause of a written contract entered into between plaintiff and defendant: "It is further understood and agreed that when said Taylor can secure from Plez James, of Anaheim, a deed conveying to said Taylor the undivided one-half interest in said ranch now owned by said Plez James in said Nevada ranch, then said Taylor will pay said Witte the sum of $2,000 as a commission on said purchase and sale from said James; and said Taylor agrees that he will purchase said lots in East Riverside and Hastings from said Witte for the sum of $1,000, the said purchase from said James to be at terms satisfactory to said Taylor, and the said sums of $2,000 as commission and $1,000 for lots to be due and payable at any time after six months from date and delivery of deed from said Plez James for said one-half interest in said ranch to said Taylor." The complaint sets out the contract, and then alleges that plaintiff used his best efforts to make the sale, and succeeded in obtaining from James an offer to sell said undivided one-half of the ranch to defendant, but that defendant refused to purchase said undivided one-half, but thereupon purchased an undivided one-third from said James, upon terms satisfactory to him (defendant). The complaint prays for judgment for the sum of $1,333.33, that sum being a proportionate amount of the agreed compensation of $2,000. The complaint fails to state a cause of action. It is based upon a written contract, and there is no allegation that a compliance has been had with its terms, but, on the contrary, the affirmative allegations show that the main condition precedent to the payment of the commission has never occurred. Again, the commission was not to be paid until six months "from date and delivery of deed from said Plez James for said one-half interest in said ranch to said Taylor," and it is not even claimed that the time above referred to has ever arrived. The action has been brought upon the theory that the contract is separable, and that the commissions pro tanto should be paid in proportion to the amount of land purchased by Taylor. The contract does not so provide, and it is not for this court to change its terms. It is not even alleged that the sale of the undivided one-third interest in the ranch was made to Taylor by reason of the labor and influence of plaintiff. But, beyond all that, it is impossible for this court to say that defendant agreed to, or was even willing, to pay any commission whatever for the purchase of an undivided one-third interest in the ranch. We think the contract is indivisible in this regard, and must stand or fall as a whole. For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

YORE et al. v. BOOTH. (No. 18,302.)

LIFE INSURANCE—BENEFICIARIES—"LEGAL HEIRS" — EVIDENCE — DECLARATIONS OF INSURED—CONCLUSIVENESS.

1. Where one designates his "legal heirs" as beneficiaries in a life policy, an irrevocable interest in the policy vests in those then living, and, on their birth, those subsequently born, who would on insured's death be his heirs.

2. In an action by beneficiaries on a life policy, declarations of insured as to his age in applications for other insurance are inadmissible to show that the age given by him in the application on which the policy in suit was issued was false.

3. The fact that insured signed the name of his wife, who survived him, to the applications, and that the wife was one of the beneficiaries of the policy in suit, did not render the applications admissible, in the absence of evidence that the wife was actually cognizant of their contents.

4. In an action on a life policy, evidence that the proof of death furnished by plaintiff states that insured was born in 1829 does not require a finding that the statement by insured in his application that he was born in 1830 was false.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Yuba county; E. A. Davis, Judge.

Action by Eliza Yore and others against A. G. Booth, receiver of the Bankers' & Merchants' Mutual Life Insurance Association, on a life policy. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Van Ness & Redman, for appellant. Forbes & Dinsmore and Mastick, Belcher & Mastick, for respondents.

BEATTY, C. J. This is an action by the widow and children of Peter Yore, deceased, to recover the amount of a policy on his life issued May 10, 1886, by the Bankers' & Merchants' Mutual Life Insurance Association, and made payable to his "legal heirs." The defendant is receiver of said association, and is appealing from a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The policy in question was issued upon a written application made by Peter Yore, and the action is defended upon the ground that in his application he stated that he was only 56 years of age, when in fact he was older. At the trial the defendant, in order to prove the falsity of the statement as to age, offered in evidence (1) an application made by the deceased to the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company in 1868, in which he stated that he was born in 1825; (2) a statement made in 1878, in an application to the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, that he was born in 1829; (3) an entry on the great register of Sierra county, made in 1879, showing that he was born in 1822. All this evidence was rejected, upon the ground of incompetency. I was at first inclined to regard this ruling as erroneous, but an examination of a large number of cases has convinced me that it is sustained at all points by the decided weight of authority.

It seems to be the settled doctrine, with but slight dissent in the courts of this country, that a person who procures a policy upon his own life payable to a designated beneficiary, although he pays the premiums himself, and keeps the policy in his exclusive possession, has no power to change the beneficiary, unless the policy itself or the charter of the insurance company so provides. In other words, it is held that the beneficiary named in the policy, although he has parted with nothing, and is simply the object of another's bounty, has acquired a vested and irrevocable interest in the policy, which he may keep alive for his own benefit by paying the premiums or assessments if the person who effected the insurance fails or refuses to do so. It is contended, however, that this doctrine is inapplicable to a case in which the designated beneficiaries are the "legal heirs" of the person effecting the insurance, because a living person has no heirs, and therefore it is argued no interest can vest in anyone during his lifetime. But this would seem to be a very technical ground for making a distinction in the application of a doctrine which, if it is a sound and wholesome one, ought to protect these plaintiffs and others in like situation as completely as if they had been named. It appears that, when Peter Yore applied for his insurance, he had a wife and a number of children living. If he had designated them by name, or the survivors of them, as his beneficiaries, and had added a proviso that any after-born child should come in for an equal share, we can see no reason why such designation would not have been effectual, and this, in legal effect, is what he did. If, in the case supposed, an interest in the policy would have vested in the named beneficiaries, as we think it would, the same interest vested in these plaintiffs on the issuance of the policy, and it was not in the power of Peter Yore thereafter to change beneficiaries or revoke his benefaction. This precise point was so ruled in Weisert v. Muehl, 81 Ky. 336, and we have not been referred to any case holding the contrary. From this it follows that, as to these plaintiffs, any declarations of the deceased not made at the time of procuring the policy, or as part of the res gestæ, were hearsay and incompetent. The authorities in support of this proposition are numerous, and need not be cited here.

It is, however, claimed that the application to the Pacific Mutual should have been admitted, because it was signed by Eliza Yore (the widow). But her name was so signed by her husband, and not by her in person. Undoubtedly, the statements made in that application would have been competent evidence against her in an action upon the policy issued thereon, but in favor of a stranger they are not evidence without proof that she was actually cognizant of them, and there was no such proof in this case.

The proof of death furnished by one of these plaintiffs was admitted in evidence, and contained a statement that the deceased was born in 1829. Appellant contends that, in the absence of any explanation or rebuttal, the court could not, in the face of this evidence, avoid finding that the statement of deceased that he was born in 1830 was false. We do not think, however, that this statement in the proof of death, wholly immaterial, as it was, and evidently hearsay, was of such weight and cogency as necessarily to overcome the presumption in favor of the truth of the statement upon which the policy was issued.

In view of these conclusions, the other points discussed by counsel become immaterial. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

RICE v. TRINITY COUNTY. (No. 18,365.)

COUNTIES—BOUNDARIES—SURVEYOR GENERAL.

Pol. Code, § 3969, providing that the survey of the boundary lines between counties may be "made by the surveyor general," on application of the board of supervisors of any county affected thereby, does not require that the survey should be made personally by the surveyor general or his deputy. His approval of a survey by a surveyor appointed by him is sufficient.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Trinity county; T. E. Jones, Judge.

Action by S. H. Rice against Trinity county. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Thomas B. Bond, for appellant. James W. Bartlett, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff brought this action to recover from the defendant its proportionate share of the cost of surveying and definitely marking out the boundary line between the counties of Humboldt and Trinity, on the one side, and the county of Mendocino, on the other side. The defendant demurred to the complaint on various grounds, and the demurrer was sustained. The plaintiff declined to amend, and thereupon judgment was entered that he take nothing by his action, from which he appeals.

The facts stated in the complaint are, in substance, as follows: Each of the counties named was at all the times mentioned in the complaint a body corporate and politic, and an organized county of the state of California. The southern boundary line of the counties of Humboldt and Trinity is coincident with the northern boundary line of the county of Mendocino, and is the fortieth parallel of north latitude. The whole length of this boundary line is 57.492 miles, and the length of it between the counties of Humboldt and Mendocino is 25.725 miles, and between the counties of Trinity and Mendocino is 31.768 miles. On the 22d day of July, 1891, the said boundary line was not marked by natural objects or lines, or by surveys lawfully made, and on that day the board of supervisors of Mendocino county made application to the surveyor general of the state to have the said line surveyed and definitely established. In pursuance of this application, the surveyor general, on August 17, 1891, duly appointed the plaintiff a surveyor to make a survey of said boundary line, and authorized and empowered him to make such survey. In pursuance of said appointment and authority, the plaintiff made a survey of said boundary line, and definitely marked the same, and established the common corners of said three counties on the fortieth parallel of north latitude. The said survey was made between September 1, 1891, and December 18, 1891; and on the last named day the surveyor general duly approved the same, and it was filed in his office, and is of record therein. The cost of making said survey was $5,161.66, and the proportion thereof chargeable to the defendant was $1,427.19. In November, 1892, and within a year after the last item of account had accrued, plaintiff filed with the clerk of the board of supervisors of defendant, and duly presented to said board for allowance, his claim and bill for his services in making said survey, the same being properly made out and verified. The said claim came up to be heard by the said board on January 4, 1893, and on that day the board made an order rejecting the claim, and refused to allow the same or any part thereof. It is then alleged that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $1,427.19 for the costs of making said survey; that the services of plaintiff in making the survey were reasonably worth that sum, and the same is due and owing by defendant to plaintiff; and that no part thereof has been paid. Wherefore plaintiff demands judgment, etc.

The Political Code contains the following provisions:

"Sec. 483. It is the duty of the surveyor-general: * * * (2) When required, to survey and mark the boundary lines of counties, cities, villages and towns."

"Sec. 3969. All common boundaries and common corners of counties not adequately marked by natural objects or lines, or by surveys lawfully made, must be definitely established by surveys jointly made by the surveyors of all the counties affected thereby, and approved by the boards of supervisors of such counties, or by a survey made by the surveyor-general, on application of the board of supervisors of any county affected thereby."

In sustaining the demurrer the superior court adopted the view, now most strongly relied upon by respondent, that, under the provisions of the Code above cited, a survey to establish the common boundary between two or more counties must be actually made in the field by the surveyor general in person, or by a deputy, and that in no other way can a legal and effective survey for such purpose be made; that, inasmuch as the complaint fails to show that the survey which forms the basis of the action was so made, no case is made showing any legal obligation upon defendant to pay any part of the cost of said work. This, in our judgment, is an erroneous view of the meaning and purpose of the statute. In providing that such surveys shall be "made by the surveyor-general" it was never contemplated by the legislature that that officer should go personally into the field, and direct or perform the detail work of running lines and marking boundaries. The general character of the many and important duties to be performed by the surveyor general, as such, and as ex officio register of the state land office, are wholly incompatible with any such requirement. What is meant and intended is that the survey shall be made under his direction and supervision, and, when completed, shall have his official sanction and approval. When so made and approved, the survey becomes his act, and is "made by the surveyor-general." By necessary implication the law, in casting upon the surveyor general the duty of making public surveys, clothes him with the requisite power to enable him to properly perform that duty, and for this purpose it is perfectly competent for him to employ surveyors and other functionaries usual and necessary in running the lines and doing the detail work required. He is made the agent of the state for the making of such surveys, and as such agent he may delegate the mechanical part of the work to others. Civ. Code, § 2349. Nor is it necessary that the field work should be done by or under the direct supervision of a deputy. The surveyor general is given but one deputy (Pol. Code, § 343), and has no power to appoint more (Id. § 877); and the general duties and powers of the deputy are the same as those of the principal (Id. § 865), excepting, of course, that they are exercised in the name of the latter. There is therefore no more reason for supposing that the legislature intended such work to be done by the deputy than by the surveyor general himself.

The other points made by respondent against the sufficiency of the complaint do not call for special notice, as they are without merit. The judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer.

GIBSON et al. v. WHEELER et al. (L. A. 49.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 3, 1895.)

MECHANIC'S LIEN—FINDINGS—VARIANCE.

1. Plaintiffs, in their complaint in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, having alleged that they furnished material, under agreement with the contractor, and that there was a sum due from the owner to the contractor, cannot recover against the owner under a finding that the owner had paid out more than the contract price.

2. A finding that, after said material was furnished, the owner promised to pay therefor, will not entitle plaintiffs to a lien, nor, on account of the variance, will it support a personal judgment.

3. A finding that the owner purchased certain material from plaintiffs will not sustain a judgment on account of the variance.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; J. W. McKinley, Judge.

Action by W. P. Gibson and another, partners, against Ella A. Wheeler and another, to enforce a material man's lien. Plaintiffs had judgment, and defendant Ella A. Wheeler appeals. Reversed.

W. R. Bacon and M. K. Young, for appellant. R. B. Treat and C. K. Holloway, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action to foreclose a material man's lien. The owner of the property, Wheeler, and Tetro, the contractor, are joined as defendants. Plaintiffs recovered judgment in the sum of $122.73, which sum was adjudged a lien upon the property, and defendant Wheeler now appeals upon the judgment roll, without a bill of exceptions. The status and rights of the contractor are not here involved. The main contention of appellant is that a fatal variance exists between the allegations of the complaint and the findings of fact made by the trial court. The complaint alleges that a certain balance of the contract price, which was $768, is still in the hands of the defendant Wheeler, and bases a right of recovery upon that ground. It not being necessary to record the contracts, owing to the fact that the contract price was less than $1,000, it would seem that no recovery could be had under any other theory than the one suggested. To be sure, we find an allegation in the complaint that "A. Tetro, as the agent and contractor for the owner, Ella A. Wheeler, entered into a contract with the plaintiffs, by which said plaintiffs agreed to furnish material," etc.; but there is no allegation anywhere that Wheeler agreed to pay for this material under any such contract or any contract, and it is quite apparent upon the face of the statement itself, and even more apparent when we consider the pleading as a whole, that such allegation is not, and was not intended by the pleader as, an allegation that the contractor bought this material acting as the agent of the owner, Wheeler, but it is evident that the statement is made in the sense of the term "agent" as used in section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and such was the construction given a similar allegation of a pleading by this court in Renton v. Conley, 49 Cal. 185.

The court found as a fact that defendant Wheeler had paid out more than the contract price of the building prior to the commencement of this action, and owed the contractor nothing. As a general rule of law, in a case like the one at bar, this finding of fact would defeat plaintiffs' right of recovery against Wheeler; but it is claimed that certain other findings of fact made by the trial court support the judgment, and to those our attention will now be addressed. The court found that when plaintiffs had furnished material to the contractor to the value of $104, and which material was used in the construction of the building, Wheeler requested plaintiffs to furnish no further material, as the contract price had been exhausted, and then and there agreed to pay plaintiffs for the material so furnished to the amount of $104, and no more. Standing alone, there is no comfort for respondents to be derived from this finding of fact, and it is doubly objectionable when viewed in the light of the complaint. Even if the complaint was broad enough to justify this finding, still an agreement by the owner of the building to pay a present existing indebtedness could never furnish material sufficient to base a charge of mechanic's lien upon the building. There are cases named in the statute where materials are deemed to have been furnished at the instance and request of the owner, and charges of lien so created, but there an entirely different principle is involved. We know of no case where an assumption of a debt, or an agreement to pay a debt, by the owner, will carry or create a right of lien. Again, no such contract is sued upon in the complaint. The contract there relied upon for recovery is one made by the contractor with plaintiffs prior to the furnishing of the material. The contract founded upon by the court is one made by the owner with plaintiffs, and made after the materials were furnished and used in the construction of the building. As to the binding force and effect of this promise made by Wheeler to pay the sum of $104 (by reason of its being oral and probably without consideration), we refrain from deciding. We also conclude, by reason of variance between the complaint and the finding, which we have already noticed, that plaintiffs are not entitled to a personal judgment for this amount.

The court made a finding to the effect that, subsequent to the agreement referred to in the above-mentioned finding, defendant Wheeler bought certain materials from plaintiffs upon her own account to the amount of $18.33, to be used, and which were used, in the construction of the building, and a recovery and lien is also adjudged for this amount. But, as we have seen, the complaint proceeded upon no such theory. No such contract, or any contract with defendant, is alleged therein, and the finding is without, and not justified by, the issues made. Certainly, upon a judgment roll containing no bill of exceptions, plaintiffs' cause of action cannot be better proved than stated.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

EASTERBROOK v. FARQUHARSON.[1]

(No. 15,839.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 6, 1895.)

LEASE—IMPROVEMENTS BY LESSEE—CONTRACT BY LESSOR TO PURCHASE—APPRAISAL—RIGHT TO INTEREST—UNLIQUIDATED CLAIM.

1. In a suit by a lessor to determine the amount due the lessee under a lease providing that the lessee should erect a building on the land, and that on the last day of the term the lessor should pay the lessee two-thirds of its appraised value; that the appraisal should be made by three persons, two selected by the parties, and the third by such two, and that, if two-thirds of the value "so determined" should not be paid on said day the amount of the appraisement should bear interest at 2 per cent. per month, compounding monthly until paid,—it appeared that both parties appointed appraisers in due time, but that they failed to select a third, or to agree on an appraisal. Held, that complainant was not chargeable with the stipulated interest on a valuation fixed by the court.

2. A lease required the lessor on the last day of the term to pay the lessee two-thirds of the value of a building erected by the lessee on the land, to be fixed by three appraisers, one appointed by each party and the third by the first two; and that, if the two-thirds "so determined" was not paid on such day, it should bear interest at 2 per cent. per month, compounding monthly. Appraisers were named by each party, but they failed to appoint a third, and no appraisal was made. Held, in a suit by the lessor to determine the amount due the lessee, that, since the amount was unliquidated, and unascertainable from the contract, complainant, who had made no default under the contract, was not chargeable with legal interest on the amount ascertained by the court from the date of the expiration of the lease to the date of the judgment.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; A. A. Sanderson, Judge.

Bill by D. E. Easterbrook against David Farquharson. Decree for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Modified.

Haven & Haven, for appellant. J. F. Cowdery and Robert Harrison, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff, as lessor, and one Apel, as lessee (to whose rights defendant succeeded), entered into a contract of lease which provided for the erection of a building by the lessee upon the demised land, and the payment by him of a stipulated ground rent. It further provided that the lessor, upon the last day of the term, would pay to the lessee two-thirds of the appraised value of the building, which value was to be ascertained and determined as follows: "Each party shall select a disinterested, practical builder of good repute and standing, residing and doing business in said city and county, and they two shall select a real-estate dealer in said city and county; the three to appraise and determine such value. Such selection shall be made ten (10) days before such term expires, and a majority of the three shall determine such value. Each party shall pay one-half (½) of the charges of said persons so selected. If two-thirds (⅔) of the value so determined shall not be paid on said day (provided said building shall then be standing), the amount of such appraisement shall draw and bear interest at the rate of two (2) per cent. per month, compounding monthly until paid, and shall be a lien and incumbrance upon said demised premises." The building was erected by defendant, and on the appointed day each of the parties named an appraiser. These two failed to select the third, and failed to agree upon the value of the building. Time passed. The premises were duly surrendered to plaintiff, but no adjustment was had of the difficulty, though communications looking to this end were had between them. Finally, about six months after the date of the expiration of the lease, plaintiff went into court with a complaint setting up the facts, averring his readiness at all times to pay the defendant two-thirds of the cash value of the building, asserting the impracticability of the scheme of appraisement contemplated in the lease, and asking the court to determine the value of the building at the date of the termination of the lease, and to fix the amount due from him to defendant. The defendant made answer generally admitting the allegations of the complaint, but denied the impracticability of the method of determining the value set forth in the lease, and averred that the sole impracticability came from the lack of qualifications of the appraiser selected by plaintiff. He claimed the building to be of the value of $80,000. The court, in its findings, did not fix responsibility for the failure to agree upon either the plaintiff or his appraiser. It determined that the value of the building at the expiration of the lease was $48,000, two-thirds of which sum was decreed to be due defendant from plaintiff, with interest thereon at the rate of 2 per cent. per month, compounding monthly, from the date of the expiration of the lease to the entry of judgment. Plaintiff paid the principal amount found due by the judgment, and appeals from that portion charging him with interest. The questions presented are: (1) Is plaintiff liable for conventional interest under the terms of the contract? (2) Is he liable for interest at the legal rate?

[1] Rehearing denied.

1. Other covenants of the lease provide for interest at the rate of 2 per cent. per month, compounding monthly, and a consideration of them may aid in the interpretation of the disputed clause. If rent be unpaid when due, the amount shall bear interest at the stipulated rate, compounding monthly. If the lessor shall pay insurance premiums, the amount so paid shall bear the conventional interest until paid, and a like provision is found as to payment by the lessor of taxes. In each of these cases the interest is a compensation for the detention of money as defined by section 1915 of the Civil Code, and it is something more. The high rate exacted and the monthly compound are designed to prevent default, and to insure a prompt performance of conditions, as well as to penalize the delinquent. In each case the lessee can avoid the penalty by paying a known and fixed amount at a known and definite time. By the covenant in dispute the lessor did not agree to pay to the lessee, upon the last day of the term, two-thirds of the then value if determined, and, if not determined, then the amount when found due to bear interest at the rate of 2 per cent. a month, compounding monthly until paid, from the last day of the term, which, in effect, was the interpretation and decree of the court. What he did agree to pay was two-thirds of the value, determined in a specific way; and if upon the last day of the term he did not pay the sum "so determined" as interest and penalty for his default, the amount was to bear the stipulated interest. Every consideration points to this as the true interpretation of the contract. First, the contract itself declares that it is the amount due under the appraisement which is to bear interest; thus contemplating a breach and default by the lessor before the interest begins to run. Again, it is quite reasonable to suppose that one might be willing to lay himself liable to the penalty of so high a rate of interest if the liability for it arose only by his default. But it is not easy to believe that he would agree to pay it unless the question of his liability could be determined by his own conduct. But under the construction given, and without any default on his part, the lessor could neither prevent the interest from beginning to run nor could he, within any reasonable time, check its accumulation. Such are the actual circumstances of this case. It appears that the lessor did all that the contract called upon him to do, but the appraisement was not made. The record fixes no responsibility upon him for the failure. He could not pay upon the appraised value. Yet two-thirds of the appraised value was what he was holden for. Here, then, he was stopped by no default of his own. Nor could he make a tender, for unless by inspiration or prevision he offered the exact amount of an undetermined sum, his tender would not avail to stop interest. Patterson v. Sharp, 41 Cal. 133; Graham v. Linden, 50 N. Y. 547. In short, plaintiff was so situated that he could do nothing other than he did do, which was to ask a court of equity to find and decree the sum. And we think it clear that he was not liable for conventional interest upon that sum.

2. To entitle respondent to interest as damages he must bring himself within the terms of section 3287 of the Civil Code. That section awards interest to every person who is entitled to recover damages, certain, or capable of being made certain by calculation, where the right of recovery is vested in him upon a particular day. But damages are compensation for the unlawful act or omission of another (Civ. Code, § 3281), and, as has been said, appellant had been guilty of no wrong. He went into court asking a settlement of his account with respondent, and under section 1917 of the Civil Code the sum bore interest only from the day of its judicial ascertainment. When, at the date of the expiration of the lease, the appraisers had failed to determine the value of the building, the scheme of valuation contemplated by the lease had come to an end so far as to entitle the lessee to seek the aid of a court to ascertain the amount due him by the lessor. In such an action interest would have been allowed only from the date of the judgment. Civ. Code, § 1917. The lessee failed to avail himself of this right of speedy determination and payment, and his failure cannot be urged as ground for the award of interest in an action which the lessor was finally compelled to bring against him. No useful purpose can be subserved by a discussion of the authorities upon the question of allowing interest upon unliquidated claims. The task has been performed by this court in the case of Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 60, 18 Pac. 100. The language there employed in summarization is, mutatis mutandis, apposite to this case: "We are not prepared to say, in general terms, that no interest in any case can be recovered in an action upon contract for an unliquidated demand. Mix v. Miller, 57 Cal. 356, decided since the adoption of the Code, and McFadden v. Crawford, 39 Cal. 662, decided previously, attest the doctrine that in this state interest is allowable on such demand under some circumstances. These were cases in which the contract had been fully performed by the creditors, the fruits thereof accepted by the debtors without objection, and they were clearly in default; and in the latter case the only question was as to value. But where, as in the case at bar, the amount of these services, their character and value, can only be established by evidence in court, or by an accord between the parties, and are not susceptible of ascertainment, either by computation or by reference to market values or other known standard, we are of opinion plaintiff is not entitled to interest prior to verdict or judgment." To the same effect are the cases of Brady v. Wilcoxson, 44 Cal. 245, and Coburn v. Goodall, 72 Cal. 498, 14 Pac. 190. But here, not only is the demand unliquidated, and unascertainable from the face of the contract or from well-established market values, and not only does it require process of law for its ascertainment, but the party against whom the award is made has never been in default, and finally has been the first to resort to equity to the end that he might ascertain and pay the amount justly due respondent. For the foregoing reasons, the appeal is sustained, and the judgment of the trial court is ordered modified by striking therefrom the portion appealed from which awards interest to respondent to the date of the entry of judgment.

FLICK et al. v. BELL. (Sac. 11.)

PAROL LICENSE—REVOCATION.

A landowner orally granted B. a license to construct a reservoir and lay pipes on his land to convey water from a certain spring, in consideration that B. would give him the right to use such water in case of fire, and would so construct the reservoir as to enable him to take water therefrom in case of fire. There was no agreement as to the time they should be maintained. B. afterwards expended $1,500 in improvements, which were used by him and such landowner. Held, that the landowner, or his grantees with actual notice, could revoke such license only on condition that the licensee should be permitted to remove his improvements, if it could be accomplished without material loss, or, if not, that the licensor should make just compensation therefor.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Shasta county; Edward Sweeny, Judge.

Action by Carl Flick and others against Joseph E. Bell to enjoin defendant from removing certain water pipes and destroying a certain reservoir situated on plaintiffs' land, to adjudge that defendant had no right or claim to such pipes and reservoir, and to quiet plaintiffs' title thereto. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Frank W. Smith and L. V. Hitchcock, for appellants. Aaron Bell, Clay W. Taylor, and J. Chadbourne, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This suit was brought by appellants to enjoin the defendant from removing certain water pipes and destroying a certain reservoir situate upon the lands of appellants, and to adjudge that respondent has no right or claim to said pipes and reservoir, and to quiet plaintiffs' title thereto. The answer of defendant alleged that in 1890 one Samuel Gruber was the owner in fee and in the possession of the lands, described in the plaintiffs' complaint; that defendant then desiring to construct said reservoir and lay said pipes for the purpose of conveying water from a certain spring, and using the same for power and other useful purposes, upon respondent's premises, in the town of Shasta, applied to said Gruber for the right, license, and privilege to construct said reservoir and lay said pipes in and upon said land; that Gruber, in consideration that the defendant would give him the right to use water from said reservoir in case of fire, and would so construct the reservoir, with trapdoors and openings, as to enable him to take water therefrom in case of fire, orally granted defendant the right, license, and privilege to construct said reservoir and lay down said pipes; that defendant agreed to the terms and conditions imposed by Gruber, and constructed said reservoir and laid said pipes, and that said Gruber and defendant used and continued to use and enjoy the same uninterruptedly until said Gruber conveyed said land to plaintiffs, in August, 1892; that plaintiffs purchased said lands with full and actual notice and knowledge thereof; that defendant constructed said reservoir and laid said pipes, and that the same belonged to and were the property of defendant; and that, ever since the purchase and occupation of said lands by plaintiffs, defendant has continued to use and enjoy said reservoir and pipes in the same manner as before, down to the commencement of this action, without objection and with the acquiescence of plaintiffs. The answer further alleged that plaintiffs have never revoked said right, license, and privilege, nor attempted to rescind said agreement so made and entered into by said Gruber and defendant. The findings followed the allegations of the answer, and judgment was entered for the defendant for costs. The appeal herein is by the plaintiffs, from said judgment, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial. The errors specified go to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings, and to certain alleged errors in the admission and rejection of testimony, and that the findings do not support the judgment.

As to the first and second findings of fact, it is sufficient to say that the evidence is conflicting, and these findings therefore cannot be disturbed. As to the third finding, to the effect that plaintiffs had not revoked the rights, privileges, or license granted by Gruber to the defendant, nor given any notice of their intention to do so, nor taken any steps to rescind the agreement for which said rights and privileges were granted, it is contended by appellants that the conveyance of the lands by Gruber to the plaintiffs was a revocation of the license, and that the beginning of the present action is evidence of the revocation of any right, privilege, or license existing prior thereto; and this finding, and the further contention on the part of the appellants that the pipe and reservoir became part of their land, and that respondent has no right to remove the same, present the principal questions in the case.

The excavation for the reservoir in question was 10x14 feet, and 5 feet in depth, and was walled up with stone and cement. From the spring to the reservoir there is about 2,500 feet of pipe, part of it 1¼ inches, and the remainder 1¾ inches, in size; and from the reservoir to defendant's place in the town of Shasta, where the water is used, there is 800 or 900 feet of pipe. At the time the excavation was commenced, defendant supposed the place selected was upon the town site. Finding that he was upon Gruber's land, he obtained permission, as the court found, to proceed with and complete the work, upon condition that he would provide means of access to the reservoir, so that, in case of fire, Gruber might use the water. This condition the defendant complied with. At the time the license was given by Gruber, the defendant had expended about $100, and about $1,500 more was expended in completing the work. There does not appear to have been any agreement or understanding as to the length of time the pipe line or reservoir should be maintained. That an unexecuted parol license may be revoked by the licensor at any time, either expressly, or by a conveyance of the premises to be affected thereby, or that his death will so operate, is clearly settled; but, as to executed parol licenses, the decisions in the different states are not only conflicting, but incapable of being reconciled. One line of cases holds that a parol license to be exercised upon the land of another creates an interest in the land, is within the statute of frauds, and may be revoked by the licensor at any time, no matter whether or not the licensee has exercised acts under the license, or expended money in reliance thereon. Another line of cases holds that the licensor is deemed to be equitably estopped from revoking the license after permitting the licensee to perform acts thereunder, or to make expenditures in reliance upon the license. In Flickinger v. Shaw, 87 Cal. 126, 25 Pac. 268, it was held that an executed license may become an agreement for a valuable consideration, and where the revocation of the license would operate as a fraud upon the licensee, who has expended money and made improvements upon the faith of it, equity will hold the owner of the land as a trustee ex maleficio, to prevent such revocation; and in Grimshaw v. Belcher, 88 Cal. 217, 26 Pac. 84, it was held that, "in cases where the revocation of the license would be a fraud, courts of equity give a remedy, either by restraining a revocation, or by construing the license as an agreement to give the right, and compelling specific performance"; and the following authorities from other states more or less directly support the conclusion reached in those cases: Clark v. Glidden, 60 Vt. 702, 15 Atl. 358; Brewing Co. v. Morton, 47 N. J. Eq. 158, 20 Atl. 286; Railroad Co. v. Mitchell, 69 Ga. 114; Cook v. Pridgen, 45 Ga. 331; Curtis v. Water Co., 20 Or. 34, 23 Pac. 808, and 25 Pac. 378; Nowlin v. Whipple, 120 Ind. 596, 22 N. E. 669; Saucer v. Keller, 129 Ind. 475, 28 N. E. 1117; Pierce v. Cleland, 133 Pa. St. 189, 19 Atl. 352; Lee v. McLeod, 12 Nev. 280. Coming to the case before us, if the license given by Gruber to the defendant is revocable unconditionally, at his pleasure, or that of his successors in interest, and upon such revocation the personal property placed by defendant upon the licensor's land becomes his property, it follows that Gruber might have revoked the license the moment the defendant had completed the work, and before he had enjoyed for a single day the fruits of his labor and the expenditure of his money. Such revocation, followed as it must be (upon the theory of appellants) with the absolute forfeiture and loss of defendant's labor and property, would shock the sense of justice of every right-minded man, and would be a stain upon the administration of justice. Nor is it necessary, in order to do justice, to hold that the license given by Gruber amounted to a grant of any interest in the land, nor, upon the other hand, to hold that the license is not revocable at the pleasure of the licensor; but in such cases equity may impose, as a condition of such revocation, that the licensee may remove his improvements, if that can be accomplished without material loss, or, if not, that the licensor shall make just compensation therefor, as the circumstances of the case may require. The license given by Gruber having been executed by the defendant at large expense, the plaintiffs, having purchased with notice of the facts, are in no better position than Gruber, who granted the license. Their action was not brought for the purpose of revoking the license upon such terms as equity might impose, but for the purpose of depriving the defendant, not only of the use of the improvements under the license, but of all right of property in the improvements, and of appropriating the same to their own use, without compensation to the defendant. The evidence of Tucker and Hocking was properly admitted, as it tended to prove the fact that a license was given by Gruber.

Appellants' contention that "the issue presented by the pleadings as to whether or not the pipe and reservoir had been attached to and become a part of the real estate," should have been found by the court, is not sound. That is a conclusion of law from the facts, and as such was found by the court. We find in the record no ground upon which the judgment and order should be reversed, and advise that they be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; BELCHER, C.

In re WALKER'S ESTATE. (Sac. 34) [1]

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 10, 1895.)

ATTESTATION OF WILL—ERRONEOUS NAME.

Where a witness, in attesting a will, inadvertently wrote the surname of the testator instead of his own, there was no sufficient compliance with Civ. Code, § 1276, providing that each of the attesting witnesses must sign his name at the end of the will. McFarland, Garoutte, and Van Fleet, JJ., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Butte county; John C. Gray, Judge.

C. G. Warren and F. C. Lusk, for appellant. Wm. H. Schooler and Reardan & White, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Appeals from the judgment revoking the probate of a will and from the order denying a motion for a new trial. The facts disclosed by the evidence without conflict are as follows: The will of Ozias Walker, deceased, was written by C. G. Warren, the attorney at law of the testator, and was executed in the presence of H. C. White and C. G. Warren, who were requested by the testator to attest, as witnesses, its execution. The requirements of the statute were complied with in all respects saving that the witness C. G. Warren, in signing his name as a witness at the end of the will, inadvertently wrote the name "C. G. Walker," thus employing his own initials but the testator's surname. Upon this showing the court revoked the probate of the instrument, and the propriety of its action in so doing is the sole question presented upon this appeal.

At the outset of this consideration it is proper to say that the right to make testamentary disposition of property is not an inherent right or a right of citizenship, nor is it even a right granted by the constitution. It rests wholly upon the legislative will, and is derived entirely from the statutes. In conferring that right the legislature has seen fit to prescribe certain exactions and requirements looking to the execution and authentication of the instrument, and a compliance with these requirements becomes necessary to its exercise. As has been said (In re O'Neil, 91 N. Y. 521): "While the primary rule governing the interpretation of wills when admitted to probate recognizes and endeavors to carry out the intention of the testator, that rule cannot be invoked in the construction of the statute regulating their execution. In the latter case courts do not consider the intention of the testator, but that of the legislature." As a prerequisite to the exercise of the testamentary right in this state, the legislature has prescribed for the execution and authentication of wills such as this the following requirements: "(1) It must be subscribed at the end thereof by the testator himself, or some person in his presence and by his direction must subscribe his name thereto. (2) The subscription must be made in the presence of the attesting witnesses, or be acknowledged by the testator to them to have been made by him or by his authority. (3) The testator must, at the time of subscribing or acknowledging the same, declare to the attesting witnesses that the instrument is his will. And (4) there must be two attesting witnesses, each of whom must sign his name as a witness at the end of the will, at the testator's request and in his presence." Civ. Code, § 1276. It is not for courts to say that these requirements, or any of them, are mere formalities, which may be waived without impairing the status of the instrument. It is not for courts to say that a mode of execution or authentication, other than that prescribed by law, subserves the same purpose, and is equally efficient to validate the instrument. The legislative mandates are supreme, and there is no right to make testamentary disposition except upon compliance with those mandates. It may be freely conceded that the question under consideration is of a nature purely technical, but it is to be remembered that the whole subject-matter of the execution and authentication of wills is technical, and nothing else; and it must not be forgotten that the technicalities are those which the lawmaking power has the right to impose, and has imposed, upon the maker of a will.

[1] For opinion on rehearing, see 42 Pac. 1082.

It will be noted in the section of the Code above quoted that the duty enjoined upon the testator is to subscribe the will, while that imposed upon the attesting witnesses is that each must sign his name as a witness. The difference is neither immaterial nor accidental. A testator may be illiterate, or he may, by reason of paralysis, or other disabling cause, be incapacitated from signing his name, and the law has wisely and liberally provided for the due execution of a will by one so situated. It has required of him that he shall subscribe, and, while the word unquestionably has for one of its significations the signing of a name, it is a verb of comprehensive meaning. Any form or kind of underwriting is a subscription, and generally it has been held that any mark or writing by the testator meant by him to be his name, or to take the place of his signature, or to serve for his identification, will answer the requirements of a statute which calls merely for subscription or signing. The same liberality of construction and interpretation has been put by the courts upon statutes which require the witnesses merely to subscribe or to sign. There are thus numerous cases under such statutes which hold, in effect, that any signing by which alone, or by which aided by parol evidence, the identity of the subscriber may be ascertained, substantially complies with the statute. The case of the appellant upon this proposition cannot be more strongly stated than in the following extracts from the learned work of Mr. Jarman, discussing the Victorian wills act: "Examining the requirements common to the statute of frauds and the wills act in their order, the next condition prescribed for the validity of a will is that it should be signed, which suggests the inquiry, what amounts to a 'signing' by the testator? It has been decided that a mark is sufficient, and that notwithstanding the testator is able to write, and though his name does not appear on the face of the will. A mark being sufficient, of course the initials of the testator's name would also suffice. And it would be immaterial that he signed by a wrong or assumed name (since that name would be taken as a mark), or that against the mark was written a wrong name." 1 Jarm. Wills (6th Ed.) *79. "The next statutory requisition, which is common to the old and the present law, is that the will be 'attested and subscribed' by the witnesses. A mark has been decided to be a sufficient subscription. * * * The initials of the witnesses also amount to a sufficient subscription, if placed for their signature as attesting the execution. * * * A witness need not sign his own name if the name actually subscribed be intended to represent his name; or a description (without any name) is sufficient if intended to identify him as a witness. * * * In fact there seems to be no distinction in these respects between the word 'sign' and 'subscribe.' Any act, therefore, which, as before noticed, would be a good signature by a testator, would be a good signature by a witness." Id. *85, *86. An examination of the cases bearing upon the interpretation of the English statute shows that the text of the learned author is fully supported. The reasoning by which the conclusions are reached may be thus summarized: To "subscribe" is to attest or give consent or evidence knowledge by underwriting, usually (but not necessarily) the name of the subscriber. But the place of the writing is immaterial, since a still more general meaning of the word "subscribe" is to attest by writing, in which definition the locality is wholly disregarded. This is the reasoning of the leading English case of Roberts v. Phillips, 4 El. & Bl. 450. To "sign," in the primary sense of the word, is to make any mark. To sign an instrument or document is to make any mark upon it in token of knowledge, approval, acceptance, or obligation. The signature is the sign thus made. And while, by long usage and custom, "signature" has come generally to mean the name of a person written by himself, and thus to be nearly an exact synonym of "autograph," that signification is derivative, and is not inherent in the word itself, any more than it is in "autograph," which strictly conveys no more than the idea of a specimen of an individual's writing. Any "mark" may be a signature, and that species of mark which we call a "cross" (independent of an accompanying name) was early used as a signature of assent, and indeed was designated "signum." While marksmen have become fewer with the spread of education, the mark of the cross is still recognized by statute law as a method of signing. Therefore, as the wills act required only a signing by the testator, and as this requirement of signing only was also found in the statute of frauds, the courts early decided not to be bound by any narow definition of "signing" or "signature" as meaning the writing of one's name, but to give to the word its broadest possible scope and significance, and thus held that any mark or signature made with the intent to bind the maker (in the case of the statute) or to be a sign (in the case of wills) should be deemed sufficient. As the English courts had still further obliterated from the word "subscription" the idea of place or locality, there was left no measurable distinction between the requirement upon the testator to sign and that upon the witness to subscribe.

In the decisions this broad rule is repeatedly asserted. In Goods of Clarke, 27 Law J. Prob. 18, the will of an illiterate person was executed by her mark, against which was written her maiden name instead of that properly borne by her in marriage. Says the court: "There is enough to show that the will is really that of the person whose it proposes to be. Her mark at the foot or end of it is a sufficient execution, and what somebody else wrote against the mark cannot vitiate it." In Goods of Clark, 2 Curt. Ecc. 329, the testator had made his mark, and requested the vicar to sign for him, which he did with his own name, and not that of the deceased. Says the court: "The statute allows a will to be signed for the testator by another person, and does not say that the signature must be in the testator's name. Here this gentleman, at the testator's request, signed the will for him; not in the testator's name, but using his own name. I incline to think this is a sufficient compliance with the act." In Goods of Bryce, Id. 325, the testatrix signed her will by a mark, her name nowhere appearing. Says the court: "Although the name of the testatrix does not appear upon the face of the instrument, the affidavit sufficiently accounts for the manner in which the will was signed. The statute does not say that the name of the testator shall appear at the foot of the will. The paper is identified as being the will of the deceased. * * * I am of opinion that the statute is sufficiently complied with." The foregoing cases deal with the "signing" by the testator. Coming to the subscribing by the witness, it is said in Goods of Eynon, L. R. 3 Prob. & Div. 92: "No particular form of attestation is necessary, but the act done by the witness must be intended by him to evidence his attestation of the will. I must find that I can draw an inference from what occurred that the witness made a mark of some kind, with the intention to evidence his attestation." In Goods of Christian, 2 Rob. Ecc. 110, it is said: "The attesting witnesses to the so-called 'codicil' have affixed their initials only. However, I have no doubt in the matter, although I believe this is the first instance under the act of the witnesses so signing. I am not aware that the witnesses can be required to sign their names. I am of opinion that there is a sufficient subscription on their parts, and therefore I decree probate as prayed." In Goods of Olliver, 2 Spinks, 57, it is said: "The statute says the witnesses 'shall attest and subscribe the will.' It does not say 'shall write their own names,' so that a mark is held to be a good subscription." These cases are quoted that there may be no room for misunderstanding of the English decisions or of the text of the book writers. But, as the matter is wholly statutory, they have no value as authority unless there be an identity in the statutory requirements of this state and England. But there is no such identity. Indeed, our statute seems to have been drawn with the express intent to foreclose and shut out the interpretation given to the English law. Thus the English statute requires subscription. That word had been judicially declared not to have reference to the place of writing. Our statute says that the will shall be subscribed at the end thereof, thus expressly making locality of writing an element of the subscription. The English statute required a signing. As interpreted by the court, this did not necessitate the signing of the name. By express language our statute commands that a witness shall sign his name. In England, therefore, a witness may sign in any one of a multitude of ways; by our law his signing is limited to the expression of his name. The case of Meehan v. Rourke, 2 Bradf. Sur. 385, is in no way opposed to, but rather is in full accord with this view. The statute of New York, from which ours was taken, likewise requires that the witnesses should sign their names. Eliza Green, one of the witnesses to the will under consideration, was unable to write. Her name was correctly written by the doctor, and she then made her mark across it, and acknowledged it to be her mark and signature. The court said that before the Revised Statutes a witness might attest a will by a mark; as in this state it may be done under section 14 of the Civil Code. The opinion declares: "Our statute requires the witness to 'sign his name.' * * * Where another person writes the name of the witness, and then the witness acknowledges the signature,—puts his mark to it, his signum,—he literally signs; and what he signs is his name,—i. e. he signs his name,—while a mark alone [the learned judge significantly adds] would not be sufficient." Yet a mark alone is held sufficient under the English statute.

I conclude, therefore, that as our law has seen fit to prescribe that the testator shall subscribe his will at the end thereof, so it has seen fit to require that attesting witnesses shall sign and shall sign only in one way,— that is to say, by affixing their names. It cannot be said that some other mode of subscription will answer the purpose, or subserve the statutory requirement, when in truth it does not. As well could it be said that the requirement of two attesting witnesses is not mandatory, and that this will, having been duly attested by one witness, should be admitted to probate. That the overthrowing of any will works a hardship upon the devisees and legatees is obvious; but the law is no more tender of their claims than it is of the rights of the natural heirs. In the absence of any will, the law makes a wise, liberal, and beneficent distribution of the dead man's estate; so wise, indeed, that the policy of permitting wills at all is often gravely questioned. When a will is proved, every exertion of the court is directed to giving effect to the wishes of the testator therein expressed, but in the proving of the instrument the sole consideration before the court is whether or not the legislative mandates have been complied with. If not, then the law makes the will, and it is often a better one, embracing a more equitable disposition of his property, than that which the deceased attempted but failed to execute. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; HARRISON, J.; TEMPLE, J.

McFARLAND, J. I dissent. In my opinion there was in this case a sufficient compliance with the formalities prescribed by the Code for the attestation of a will. It is true that the right to make testamentary disposition of property—like most other rights—rests upon the legislative will; but that legislative will has been uniformly exercised in favor of the right in all English-speaking countries, and in nearly all others, from time immemorial, so that the right has come to be a usual, well-established, and most important attribute of ownership. Therefore, in dealing with an attempt to exercise that right, the general rules of construction should be applied; that is, the provisions of the Code "are to be liberally construed with a view to effect its objects." The signature of the witness Warren in this case, as shown beyond question, would be held good if any written instrument or paper known to the law were involved other than a will, and I see no good reason why the same rule should not apply here. To allow a will to be defeated by the careless (or intentional) misspelling of his name by a subscribing witness would lead, I fear, to great abuses. If a man should not have the right to make a will, let the legislature take it away; but, as long as he has it, let it be protected as other rights. I think that the judgment should be reversed.

GAROUTTE, J. I dissent. I do not think a man's testamentary disposition of his property should be defeated for the reasons here given. The argument requires a too technical analysis of terms and statutes in order to arrive at such a result. While the right to dispose of property by will is purely statutory, still it can hardly be said to be a mere matter of legislative grace, for it has become almost an inalienable right, made so by reason of its long practice and approval in all civilized nations. It is conceded that, if the testator, Walker, had made a like mistake, and signed his name "Warren," it would not have defeated the will; but it is now held that, the witness Warren having made the mistake in signing his name "Walker," the will is avoided. I have no idea that the legislature, in formulating the statute as to the character of the signatures, ever intended such results to follow; and I am satisfied it never intended to attach any different meaning to the two phrases, namely, "sign his name as a witness," and "subscribed by the testator," or that the legislature ever intended to bar a man from being a witness to a will who was unable to sign his name, any more than it intended to bar a man from making his will who was likewise so unfortunate. I believe that for the purposes of this statute the person's mark, properly witnessed, is his name; and further, I believe any name that the party should attach to the will as a witness is his name. I do not think it is for a contestant of the will to say to a witness, "That is not your name;" and neither is it for the witness to appear upon the stand and say, "That is not my name." If we are to be so technical in this matter, the statute should have said "true name." The true names of witnesses are often unknown to the testator, and to say that a person could intentionally and corruptly sign a false name to a will as a witness, and thereby defeat it, is to go to great lengths. No case in the books has ever gone that far, to my knowledge. Still that doctrine would seem to be declared by the main opinion of the court in the present case. A name signed by mistake of the witness is no different from one signed in fraud. The knave wrote the name as his name, and for the purposes intended by the testator it was his name. In the present case the attorney, as a witness, unintentionally wrote a name which was not his true name, but he intended the writing to be his name, and he made the writing for his name, and for the purposes intended by the testator; and as to those purposes it should be held to be his name. If, one hour previous to the signing of the will, he had concluded to change his name to C. G. Walker, and had so signed it, or, for the very purpose of concealing his true name, had signed the will "John Brown," to my mind the will would be legally witnessed; and in the present case the same conclusion should be declared.

VAN FLEET, J. I dissent from the conclusion reached by the majority of the court, and agree with what is said by Justices McFARLAND and GAROUTTE. I think by a too close adherence to the mere letter of the statute the court, in the main opinion, loses sight of the evident purpose intended to be subserved by the provision in question. When the witness Warren, intending in perfect good faith, as is conceded, to write his own name, wrote his own initials, but inadvertently added the name of the testator instead of his own, it was, to all essential intents and purposes, a signing of his name within the spirit and intent of the statute, since it met every purpose designed to be subserved thereby. And this view, in my judgment, is sustained by the case of Meehan v. Rourke, 2 Bradf. Sur. 385, cited in the main opinion. There the name of the witness was written by another, and merely viséd by the mark of the witness himself, although the requirement of the statute, like our own, was that the witness should sign his name. But it is said by the surrogate, in addition to the language quoted in the majority opinion: "I think the requisition of the statute sufficiently complied with by the name of the witness being written at the end of the will, and the witness putting his mark thereto. This construction meets the design of the legislature in having the name of the witness, and excluding wills attested only by marks, and does not shut out the attestation of wills by illiterate persons, when a penman can be found to record the transaction. I should come to any other conclusion with regret, as otherwise I should be compelled very frequently to reject wills attested by marksmen, the experience of this office showing the mode of execution to be very common. But, aside from the consequences, I do not think the rule contended for justified by the language of the statute, or consistent with the distinction made between a witness writing his name when he has subscribed the testator's name, and being required in all other cases only to 'sign his name.'" I think the record shows a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the statute, and that the deceased should not, by any such slight lapse as is here disclosed, be deprived of the right of testamentary disposition of his property.

Whatever may be our personal views as to the provisions of the law for the distribution of the property of intestates, whether they meet with our approval or otherwise cannot affect our consideration here. The sole question is whether the testator, in endeavoring to avail himself of the privilege of the law to so dispose of his estate as to meet his own cherished desires, has so far complied with the statute as to make his purpose effectual; and this, I think, he has done, and that the judgment of the lower court should be reversed.

(January 8, 1896.)

The opinion heretofore rendered herein is modified by eliminating from the paragraph preceding the judgment the first and last sentences, so that the same will read: "When a will is proved, every exertion of the court is directed to giving effect to the wishes of the testator therein expressed, but in the proving of the instrument the sole consideration before the court is whether or not the legislative mandates have been complied with." As so amended the petition for a rehearing is denied.

McFARLAND, J., GAROUTTE, J., and VAN FLEET, J., dissent from the order denying the petition for rehearing.

In re BEISEL'S ESTATE. (No. 15,915.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 4, 1895.)

In bank.

On rehearing. Modified.

For original opinion, see 40 Pac. 961.

PER CURIAM. After rehearing of this cause, the opinion of Commissioner VANCLIEF (40 Pac. 961), heretofore filed, is adopted as the opinion of the court down to paragraph 4, in place of which and of the judgment of the department the following is substituted:

4. Errors in the statement and settlement of respondent's account have resulted from the manner in which the debts and credits of the two minors have been mingled with each other and with the account of Emma N. Beisel. She is not formally a party to the proceeding, and the court does not appear to have acquired jurisdiction to make a decree binding upon her. But if she has made herself a party to the settlement, or shall hereafter become a party, her account should be settled upon a different basis from that of the two minors. That is to say, she is not entitled to be credited with one-third of the original $4,007 and interest, for the reason that she has elected to take, and has actually received her third of the proceeds of the sale of the house in which that money was invested.

As to the two minors, the account with each should be stated and settled separately, as follows:

The respondent in each account should be charged with one-third of cash:

Principal		$4,007 00
Interest		1,800 19
From sale of personalty	$ 618 00
From rents of realty	1,987 00
Total	$2,605 00
Half of which belongs to minors		1,302 50
Making a total of		$7,109 69
One-third of which is		$2,369 89

In each account she should be credited with:

One-sixth of the whole expense of property	$ 710 00
One-half of support of minors for 52 months	1,040 00
One-half of family allowance for two years and one month	500 00
And one-half attorney's fee	50 00
	$2,300 00

Besides this, in her account with George D. Beisel she should be credited with $1,218, or whatever other sum or sums she has paid the guardian of his estate on account of proceeds of sale of house and lot or otherwise.

The judgment is reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed.

GRISWOLD v. PIERATT. (No. 15,668.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 3, 1895.)

ACCOUNT STATED — COUNTERCLAIM — SUPERIOR COURT—JURISDICTION.

1. An employer who, after performance of services by an employé under contract, agrees to pay the employé, in "full discharge of the contract and in full settlement thereof," a certain sum for his services, cannot maintain an action against the employé for damages caused by his negligent performance of the services, in the absence of a showing that the settlement was fraudulently procured.

2. An existing contract, superseding one previously made, cannot, in an action on the original contract, be pleaded as a counterclaim, under Code Civ. Proc. § 438, subd. 1, allowing a cause of action "arising out of the transaction" on which plaintiff bases his action, or connected with the subject of the action, to be so pleaded.

3. Const. art. 6, § 5, confers jurisdiction on the superior court in all cases at law in which the demand amounts to $300. Code Civ. Proc. § 438, subd. 2, provides that, in an action on contract, any other contract demand existing when the action is commenced may be set up as a counterclaim. Held, that where the contract demand pleaded in counterclaim or in a cross complaint is for a less sum than $300, and shows that plaintiff's action is unfounded, because the contract on which it is based has been superseded by another contract, defendant is not entitled to judgment on his counterclaim or cross complaint.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county; S. K. Dougherty, Judge.

Action by N. W. Griswold against James S. Pieratt for damages to fruit trees by negligence of defendant in budding them. From an affirmative judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Modified.

E. H. Wakeman and J. A. Barham, for appellant. Rutledge & Pressley, for respondent.

BRITT, C. Plaintiff alleged in his complaint that he employed defendant to bud a quantity of young fruit trees; that defendant agreed to bud the same in a careful and skillful manner, and thereupon entered upon the execution of the contract, and budded the trees, but so negligently performed the work in certain specified particulars that plaintiff suffered damage to the amount of $1,858.50, for which sum he demanded judgment. Defendant admitted in his answer the fact of his employment by plaintiff, and that he budded the trees, but denied the alleged negligence, and averred, in substance, that any damage to the trees of plaintiff arose from the latter's mismanagement in the matter. Then, for a counterclaim, defendant pleaded that plaintiff agreed to pay him for his services in budding the trees as much as such services were reasonably worth; that he (the defendant) completed the work on October 29, 1892, and that his services were reasonably worth the sum of $240; that on November 1, 1892, the parties "had an accounting and settlement of all accounts and differences between them in relation to budding of said trees, and upon said settlement, and in * * * full discharge of the said contract, and in full settlement thereof, the plaintiff agreed to pay to defendant on December 1, 1892, the sum of $100, and to deliver to defendant 1,125 of said budded trees upon demand"; that plaintiff at the same time wrote his acceptance of a draft drawn by defendant on him for said sum of $100, such acceptance by its terms making the draft payable December 1, 1892, and also executed to defendant a written promise to deliver to him said 1,125 trees; that defendant presented said draft at maturity to plaintiff for payment, which was refused; that the cost of protesting the same, paid by him, was $5; that plaintiff delivered 400 of the trees only, and refused to deliver the remainder; and that those undelivered were worth $87.50; wherefore he prayed judgment against plaintiff for $192.50, etc. He also filed a cross complaint, alleging the same facts set out in his counterclaim, and prayed thereon the same relief. After trial, the court found all the issues in favor of the defendant, and awarded him judgment against plaintiff for the amount claimed by him (less the sum of $5, cost of protest of the draft) and costs of the action. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment; and the point made is that the facts pleaded as a counterclaim are insufficient for that purpose, because, as claimed, they do not constitute a cause of action arising out of the transaction set forth in the complaint or connected with the subject of the action (Code Civ. Proc. § 438), and because the amount of defendant's demand against plaintiff is less than $300, and so not within the jurisdiction of the superior court. On similar grounds, apparently, it is also maintained that the cross complaint is ineffectual as such.

Of course, if the matters set up by defendant constitute a cause of action in his favor properly cognizable by the superior court, either as a counterclaim or a cross complaint in this suit, the judgment must be upheld. The transaction between the parties on November 1, 1892, by which the compensation to be rendered defendant was fixed in money and trees, and the time of performance by plaintiff was enlarged, amounted to an agreed statement of the account of defendant for budding the trees (Baird v. Crank, 98 Cal. 293, 297, 33 Pac. 63); and even something further. It was a new contract (Civ. Code, §§ 1531, 1697), for which the original contract, or the performance thereof by defendant, furnished the consideration (Auzerais v. Naglee, 74 Cal. 60, 15 Pac. 371), and became, in the absence of legal impeachment, in itself an agreement, conclusive on both parties, that, as the net result of such performance, the defendant was entitled to receive the compensation then fixed. On such new contract an action would lie in defendant's favor (Green v. Thornton, 96 Cal. 67, 30 Pac. 965), and would be properly brought on the written instruments then executed by plaintiff (Bank v. Stone, 59 Cal. 183). The original contract was suspended, if not extinguished. Civ. Code, §§ 1531, 1682, 1697. The plaintiff, while the new compact between himself and defendant remained in force, could maintain no action for any breach of duty by defendant under the former. His only proper course, if such breach had occurred, was to impeach the settlement by appropriate pleading for fraud, accident, or mistake. Green v. Thornton, 96 Cal. 67, 30 Pac. 965. His complaint here is devoid of any allegation for that purpose. Had defendant brought his action on the written instruments made to him by plaintiff, the latter could not have resisted recovery upon the ground of any defect in defendant's performance of the original contract, unless by showing that the settlement of November 1, 1892, was induced by fraud or mistake. Walker v. Millard, 29 N. Y. 375; Thorpe v. White, 13 Johns. 53. For like reasons, the defendant could maintain no action against plaintiff for compensation under the original contract. Since defendant pleaded facts showing that the original contract was superseded by a new obligation, he showed that neither party has any rights based upon it; and, as there is no cause of action arising therefrom in favor of plaintiff, so there is no right of recoupment arising from it in favor of defendant. It has ceased to be a "transaction" giving rise to reciprocal demands, so as to be the basis for affirmative relief, under subdivision 1, § 438, Code Civ. Proc.[1] Consequently, the facts stated by defendant, although good as a defense, were insufficient as a counterclaim under that subdivision. For similar considerations, such facts were improperly pleaded as a cross complaint by defendant. But they show a cause of action in his favor "arising upon contract"; and it is a different contract from that described in the plaintiff's complaint; and hence is rightly pleaded as a counterclaim under subdivision 2 of said section 438, provided the court had jurisdiction to entertain it.

The constitution of the state allows to the superior court jurisdiction in all "cases at law * * * in which the demand * * * amounts to three hundred dollars." Article 6, § 5. This court has held that "the demand spoken of in the constitution is a demand for judgment evidenced by the prayer of a complaint, and a statement of facts which can uphold the judgment prayed for." Derby v. Stevens, 64 Cal. 288, 30 Pac. 820. Can it make any difference in the construction of this provision that the prayer for judgment and the statement of facts occur in a counterclaim on an independent contract instead of an original complaint? Is the constitution to have one meaning as applied to the demand of a plaintiff, and a diametrically opposite meaning as applied to the demand of a defendant, in such a case? It is incredible that the convention which framed or the people who adopted the instrument intended that the limitation under view should have effect or not according to the relation to the record occupied by the litigant seeking to enforce the demand. See Picquet v. Cormick, Dud. (Ga.) 21. In that case the court, speaking of a statute of the state of Georgia authorizing various defenses in an action, said: "This will allow the plea of set-off where there exist mutual debts; but it will not enlarge the jurisdiction of the court, and enable it to take cognizance of a debt or demand set up by a defendant which it would not entertain for a plaintiff. The limitation must apply alike to each party, and the court can no more take cognizance of a cause for one than for another where the pleadings themselves show the debt or demand not to be within its jurisdiction." Beyond question, if the defendant had commenced an action on the matters exhibited in his set-off, he must have done so in an inferior court; and in such action the plaintiff could not have set up any claim arising on contract in his (plaintiff's) favor, unless below $300 in amount. Code Civ. Proc. § 855; Maxfield v. Johnson, 30 Cal. 545. It scarcely seems probable that the makers of the law designed to provide in such a case that the defendant may have the right of set-off in the superior court merely because he is defendant, when, if he had commenced his action (as he must have done if he had commenced at all) in a court having jurisdiction of demands less than $300, the plaintiff would have been debarred the like privilege.

Of course, what is here said on the subject of jurisdiction has no application to the counterclaims provided for in the first subdivision of section 438, Code Civ. Proc. The amount of the cross demand under that subdivision is of no moment for jurisdictional purposes. Our remarks are to be understood as confined to the unconnected causes of action mentioned in the second subdivision of that section, and limited also to cases presenting the substantial features of the present. If the set-off, less than $300 in amount, exclusive of interest, held by a defendant, is pleaded by him as purely defensive matter in reduction or extingui ment of the claim of the plaintiff in an action triable by the superior court, it may well be that the court can properly entertain the same. Such was the case in Hart v. Cooper, 47 Cal. 77. It is under the statute (Code Civ. Proc. 440), perhaps, as much a matter of defense merely as would be a plea of payment of a like sum. But where a defendant in that court shows by his pleading, as in this instance, that the plaintiff's action, arising on contract, is wholly unfounded, we think it clear that he cannot also set up a cause of action on a different contract as the foundation for an affirmative judgment against the plaintiff, unless his demand, exclusive of interest, amounts to $300. The counterclaim set up in Webster v. Lumber Co., 101 Cal. 326, 35 Pac. 871, seems to have been properly referable to subdivision 1, § 438, Code Civ. Proc.; and the same is probably true of that mentioned in Clark v. Taylor, 91 Cal. 552, 27 Pac. 860. Nothing is decided in either of those cases contrary to the view here stated.

[1] Code Civ. Proc. § 438: "The counterclaim mentioned in the last section must be one existing in favor of a defendant and against a plaintiff, between whom a several judgment might be had in the action, and arising out of one of the following causes of action: (1) A cause of action arising out of the transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action; (2) in an action arising upon contract: any other cause of action also arising upon contract and existing at the commencement of the action."

Our conclusion is reached with less reluctance because the defendant may yet sue and recover in the proper court the sums due to him for breach of the plaintiff's contract, evidenced by the written instruments of November 1, 1892. The judgment should be modified by striking therefrom the recovery of $199.75, and interest thereon, allowed to defendant, and, as so modified, the same should be affirmed.

I concur: BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is modified by striking therefrom the recovery of $199.75, and interest thereon, allowed to defendant, and, as so modified, the same is affirmed.

BAHWELL v. SMITH et al. (Sac. 54.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 9, 1895.)

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; W. A. Gray, Judge.

Action by Bahwell against Smith and others. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. A. Hannah and E. D. Miller, for appellants. Lamberson & Middlecoff, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The propositions of law involved in this appeal are the same as those determined in Daw v. Niles, 104 Cal. 106, 37 Pac. 876, and upon the authority of that case the judgment and order are affirmed.

REDFIELD et al. v. OAKLAND CONSOLIDATED ST. RY. CO. (No. 15,942.)[1]

Death by Wrongful Act—Parties—Damages—Measure — Excessiveness — Instructions — Trolley Company—Negligence—Evidence.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 377, provides that, in an action for the death of an adult by wrongful act, "such damages may be given as under all the circumstances may be just." Held, that in an action by a husband, personally and as guardian of his two minor children, about 12 years old, against a street-car company, for death of his wife, a verdict of $14,000 will not be set aside as excessive where it appears that the expectation of life of the deceased was 31.8, and of the husband 29.62, years, and that the wife was highly educated and competent to instruct the children, and was a devoted mother and wife, and an excellent housekeeper.

2. A requested instruction, submitting a rule on the measure of damages, is properly refused where, under instructions already given, the rule presented may be adopted.

3. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 377, allowing heirs to recover for the death of an adult killed by wrongful act, in an action by minors for the death of their mother, loss of benefits of a pecuniary value, which plaintiffs would probably have received from their mother, had she lived after their arrival at majority, could be considered in determining the damages.

4. The word "heirs," in Code Civ. Proc. § 377, allowing heirs to recover for the death of an adult by wrongful act, includes all those capable of inheriting from the deceased generally, uncontrolled by limitation of statutes relating to the distribution of community property, and hence includes minor children of deceased.

5. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 377, allowing heirs to recover for the death of an adult by wrongful act, a husband, on the death of his wife by wrongful act, may in one action recover personally, and as guardian ad litem of their minor children, for her death.

6. In an action against a street-railway company, for death of a passenger, it appeared that, in passing a switch at the top of an incline, the trolley had to be adjusted from the rear of the car; that there was but one person in charge of the car, whose position was in front, and that he, without stopping the car, went to the rear end, adjusted the trolley, and got off to run ahead to the front end; and that while running he fell, and was unable to overtake the car, which finally jumped the track and killed deceased. Held, that defendant was liable.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; F. W. Henshaw, Judge.

Action by Horace A. Redfield, personally and as guardian of two minor children, against the Oakland Consolidated Street-Railway Company, for the death of his wife through defendant's negligence. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Chickering, Thomas & Gregory, R. M. Fitzgerald, and Carl H. Abbott, for appellant. Hall & Earl, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. The defendant, the Oakland Consolidated Street-Railway Company, operated an electric street-car line between the city of Oakland and Mountain View Cemetery. On May 6, 1893, Adeline B. Redfield and her children, Lowell M. Redfield and Mattie A. Redfield, got upon one of the defendant's cars, at or near Mountain View Cemetery, to return to the city of Oakland. This car was operated by only one man, as was customary upon that line. The car in question had a solid glass partition separating the body of the car, in which the seats were, from the platforms at each end, which were intended for the motorman; and the only way the motorman could pass from one end of the car to the other was along the step on the outside of the car. From the cemetery the track runs towards the city, for some distance, on a practically level grade; then ascends a grade to the summit of a hill, at a switch, which is the highest point of the track. From that point the track descends. On the summit of the hill the track is comparatively straight for about 35 feet. From the switch the track descends at a varying grade for a distance of about one-half a mile to Booth street, and then turns to the right, or west. When the car was going up the hill above mentioned, the motorman, who was then upon the front end of the car, jumped off, and got on again at the rear end of the car, and took hold of the trolley rope to adjust the trolley around a curve over the switch, the car going up the hill slowly. When the switch was reached the motorman had some trouble in putting the trolley on the right wire. In attempting to return to the front platform, he fell to the ground, and when he got up he was unable to catch the car, which by this time was going down the hill. The car ran down the hill to the curve, where it left the track and went across the road on one side, until it struck the gutter, when it righted itself and flew across a field until it stopped. Said Adeline B. Redfield in some way struck her head and fell off the car after it left the track, and received such injuries that she died therefrom on the 29th day of June, 1893. This action is prosecuted by her husband, Horace A. Redfield, and her two minor children, for the recovery of damages. The jury returned a verdict for the sum of $14,000, upon which judgment was entered; and this appeal is from the judgment, and also from an order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial. The points made by appellant will be noticed substantially in the order in which they are presented in its brief.

1. "The damages are excessive. The sum of $14,000 is so large, in view of the law of the case and the instructions of the court, that it conclusively appears to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice." This action is brought under section 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which is as follows: "When the death of a person, not being a minor, is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, his heirs or personal representatives may maintain an action for damages against the person causing the death; or, if such person be employed by another person who is responsible for his conduct, then also against such other person. In every action under this and the preceding section such damages may be given as under all the circumstances of the case may be just." Appellant's contention as to the true mode of ascertaining the amount of damages to be awarded in cases such as this is stated in an instruction requested by appellant to be given to the jury, as follows: "If you find for the plaintiffs, you must find in such amount as shall to you seem just, considering the present worth of the life of the deceased to the plaintiffs; that is to say, you must not find any such sum as would produce a given income for the time fixed, the principal remaining on hand at the end of that time, but the present value of such principal,—that is, what it would be worth to-day. It is shown by the American experience tables of mortality that a person aged 35 years would probably live 31.8 years longer. You must determine the present value of that life, and not find any such sum as would produce a fixed income for the supposed term of life, and leave the principal in the hands of the plaintiffs at the expiration of that time; but you must find the present value of that amount, and render the verdict accordingly." Mrs. Redfield at the time of her death was 35 years of age, and was the wife of the plaintiff Horace A. Redfield, and the mother of plaintiffs Lowell A. Redfield and Mattie A. Redfield. Her expectancy of life was 31.8 years, and the expectancy of life of her husband was 29.62 years. The children were aged 12 and 11 years, respectively. She was an educated lady,—a graduate of Field's Seminary. The testimony shows that she was competent to give lessons and instruct her children upon the piano and in vocal music; was a thorough housekeeper; did all her own work; made all the clothing, including the trimming of hats and bonnets, for her children and herself; took pains in directing the education of her children; cared for them when they were sick; and looked after the comfort of her husband as well. The testimony further shows that she was devoted to her children, was extremely solicitous in regard to their care, and was constantly watchful of their conduct and the training of them morally, as well as otherwise. It is true that in all such cases it is difficult to fix the definite money value of the services of such a wife and mother. Precise accuracy in that regard is not capable of being attained either by a court or jury. In eleven states the amount of damages that can be awarded for the death of a person is limited to $5,000, in one state to $7,000, and in eight states and territories, including the District of Columbia, it is limited to $10,000. In this state there is no statutory restriction or direction, except the general statement that "such damages may be given as under all the circumstances may be just." In those states where the amount of the recovery is limited it may or it may not happen that just compensation is made, inasmuch as circumstances would often occur which would make the maximum amount far less than a just compensation. It is contended by appellant that so many states have determined that it is wise to limit the amount that can be recovered as damages, in cases like the present, that we should look to such limitations, in determining the amount to be recovered, and be governed thereby; but such statutes were in existence long before section 377, Code Civ. Proc., was enacted, and this provision of the Code is a direct determination of our legislature that the policy adopted by other states in that regard should not exist here. So, too, it may be said that, while such sum as would purchase an annuity equal to the money value of the life and services of the deceased would give an exact measure of the damages sustained by the survivor or survivors, the legislature has not seen proper to declare that to be the measure of damages in such cases, but has determined to leave the subject of determining the amount at large, with the single restriction that the damages allowed should be just, under all the circumstances of the case. That, as a general rule, such questions can be better determined by a jury than by the court, is generally conceded, and our statute has limited the power of the court over the verdicts of juries in such cases. Section 657, Code Civ. Proc., provides that the verdict or other decision may be vacated, and a new trial granted, for any of the following causes materially affecting the substantial rights of such party: (5) "Excessive damages appearing to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice." In Morgan v. Southern Pac. Co., 95 Cal. 501, 30 Pac. 601, this court said (page 508, 95 Cal., and page 601, 30 Pac.): "The amount of the verdict is certainly quite large,—larger than we, if sitting as a jury, would have felt it our duty to give. But that consideration alone is not sufficient to warrant us in disturbing the verdict. There is no absolute rule in such a case, and about all that can be safely said on the subject may be found in the opinion of the court in Aldrich v. Palmer, 24 Cal. 513, and the cases there cited. The general conclusion, as nearly as can be formulated, is as there stated, namely, that a verdict will not be disturbed, because excessive, unless the amount of the damages is obviously so disproportionate to the injury proved as to justify the conclusion that the verdict is not the result of the cool and dispassionate discretion of the jury." We are unable to say, after a careful review of the testimony, that the damages awarded by the jury "appear to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice," and such appears to have been the conclusion of the learned trial judge who denied appellant's motion for a new trial. It is not necessary to review the very large number of authorities cited by appellant as to the mode of estimating the value of a life, since, if we were to apply that rule, we would be compelled to place ourselves in the position of jurors, and pursue an independent investigation for the purpose of determining the annual value to the plaintiffs of the life of the deceased, and upon that basis determine the sum required to purchase an annuity which should equal the annual value of the life of the deceased. This we do not feel called upon to do, at least in the absence of a conviction, based upon all the facts of the case, that the jury were influenced by passion or prejudice in fixing the amount of damages awarded the plaintiffs.

2. Appellant further contends that the court erred in refusing to give the instruction requested by appellant, and which is quoted above. The instructions given by the court to the jury are very full, and cover every point upon which an instruction should be given. Some portions of the instructions given will be noticed, in view of the exception taken by appellant to the refusal of the court to give the instruction above referred to. The court said: "You are to award the plaintiffs such damage as will fairly and fully equal the pecuniary value to them of the life of the wife and mother. In fixing the damage to the husband, you have a right to allow for the loss of the services of the wife, suffered by him, if any, from the time of the death of the wife to this date, and also for the value of future services, considering her age and his age, and the probable duration of their lives. In determining the value of the services of the wife to the husband, you are to consider her ability and willingness to perform such services, and the relations existing between her and her husband, as disclosed by the evidence. In other words, you are not limited, in determining the value of a wife, to the estimate of the value of similar services performed by a hired servant, but you are at liberty to consider the value of such services in the light of the character of the wife and companion in which they are performed. And so, in determining the amount of damages to the children, you have a right to consider the value of the nurture and instruction, moral and physical, and intellectual training, if any, which the mother gives to the children. * * * If you find a verdict for plaintiffs, you must award such a lump sum for damages as will fully compensate the plaintiffs, both husband and children, for the pecuniary value to them of the life of the wife and mother. In other words, you may give such damages as under the circumstances of the case may be just. * * * Sympathy and pity must not guide you in your verdict. * * * Neither the desire to help plaintiffs nor to punish the defendants should be exercised. You are at liberty to determine what pecuniary loss the plaintiffs suffered by the death of the deceased, and to find in that amount, and no greater amount. * * * The measure of damages in this case is, as we have seen, the pecuniary loss suffered by the plaintiffs, without allowance for distress of mind, sorrow, or mental anguish. In this connection, therefore, the plaintiffs, the husband and the children of the deceased, if entitled to recover under the evidence, should get what the deceased would have probably contributed by her labor, instruction, training, comfort, society, and protection, to the support of the plaintiffs, taking into consideration her age, ability, and disposition to labor." These instructions fairly presented the case to the jury, and permitted them to adopt the mode suggested by the defendant's request in determining the amount of damages which should be allowed the plaintiffs, and rendered the giving of the special instruction requested unnecessary.

3. It is contended that the court erred in giving the following instruction: "The pecuniary interest of children in the lives of their parents does not necessarily end with their arrival at the age of majority; but you may allow for the probable loss of any benefit, if any, of a pecuniary value, which the child would probably receive from its mother after its arrival at majority." This instruction was given as a part of the general instruction above quoted. We see no error in this instruction. Immediately preceding the instruction last above quoted the jury were instructed as follows: "And so, in determining the amount of damages to the children, you have a right to consider the value of the nurture and instruction, moral and physical, and intellectual training, if any, which the mother gives to the children; and, in determining such value, you are not limited to a case of similar services rendered by a hired servant, but may take into consideration the value of such services when rendered by the mother to her children, having regard to the evidence in this case, if there be any, as to the ability and willingness of the deceased to nurture, care for, train, and educate her children." It is contended, however, that no special or any circumstances were shown which would cause the children to depend upon their mother after they arrived at majority, or that after that time they would suffer loss from her death. It is true that the only evidence which tended to show an injury to the children resulting from the loss of the mother was her care and labor bestowed upon them, her education, her character, her ability to train and guide them, and efforts for their welfare; and in applying such testimony the jury were authorized to draw such conclusions therefrom as their intelligence, experience, and observation should justify. Nor are we prepared to say that her intelligent care and assistance would be less valuable to them at the critical period of their lives when they are about to enter or have entered upon a more or less distinct and separate life, after attaining their majority. Besides, the statute does not limit the right to prosecute the action or to recover damages to minor children or minor heirs.

4. But it is contended by appellant that the minor plaintiffs are not entitled to recover damages at all; that section 377, Code Civ. Proc., gives a right of action in such cases only to the "heirs or personal representatives," and that in this state, where community property is recognized, the husband is the only heir of the wife; and that the damages recoverable are based entirely upon such community relation. This point was not made in the court below. Section 430, Id. specifies as one of the grounds of demurrer "a defect or misjoinder of parties plaintiff or defendant"; and section 434 provides that if no objection be taken, either by demurrer or answer, upon the grounds stated in section 430, the defendant shall be deemed to have waived the same, excepting only the objection to the jurisdiction of the court, and that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Nor was any objection or exception taken to evidence upon the trial tending to prove damages sustained by the children. If the record in any manner presents the question, it is upon a general exception to certain instructions given to the jury, and which exceptions give no hint of the point now made, though possibly broad enough to include it. We think, however, that appellant is mistaken in its construction of section 337, Code Civ. Proc. The damages recoverable are not the product of the community effort or of community accumulations, nor does the word "heirs," as there used, refer to those persons who would succeed to the money so recoverable if it had been in the possession of the community, as community property, at the time of Mrs. Redfield's death; but the word is used in its common-law sense, and denotes those who are capable of inheriting from the deceased person generally, and without the limitation resulting from statutes relating to the distribution of community property. It is true that, under section 1401 of the Civil Code, upon the death of the wife the entire community property, without administration, belongs to the surviving husband (with certain exceptions not affecting this question), but the damages here sought to be recovered arose upon Mrs. Redfield's death, and in consequence thereof, and had no existence prior to her death; and the husband's right to recover them is not based upon the supposition that they were a part of her estate which existed even a moment before her death, but his claim to damages is for an injury personal to himself, and not for injuries inflicted upon the wife, and which passed to him under the statute relating to the succession or inheritance of property. Her personal representative might have maintained the action, but in such case the damages recovered would not have belonged to her estate, nor been liable for her debts; and the same thing would be true if the husband had died from similar injuries, and the recovery had been obtained by his personal representative. The recovery is for the injury inflicted upon the plaintiffs personally, and not for injuries inflicted upon her; and the word "heirs" in the statute is intended to limit the right of recovery to a class of persons who, because of their relation to the deceased, are supposed to be injured by her death. Tell v. Gibson, 66 Cal. 247, 5 Pac. 223, and McFadden v. Railway Co., 87 Cal. 467, 25 Pac. 681, were actions to recover damages for personal injuries to the wife not resulting in death, and have no application to the question before us.

5. It is also contended that the verdict and judgment are against law, in that the judgment cannot run in favor of Horace A. Redfield as an individual, and also as guardian ad litem of the minors. Dias v. Phillips, 59 Cal. 293, cited by appellant, has no application here. That was an action brought by the plaintiff as an individual, and also in his capacity as an executor. There is no authority of law for such joinder. But here the statute authorized the action to be brought by the "heirs," no matter how many there may be. The fact that the minors appeared by a guardian ad litem, as they were compelled to do, does not affect their interest in the judgment, nor vest any part of or interest in it in the guardian ad litem.

6. It is also contended "that the evidence shows that the injury complained of was the result of an unavoidable accident and inevitable casualty," and that, therefore, the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict. The fact that in passing the switch the attention of one man was required at each end of the car, and that one man could not be at both ends at the same time, conclusively shows negligence on the part of the defendant in putting but one man in charge of the car to perform both duties. Or if, on the other hand, the man in charge could have stopped the car by shutting off the power, and changed the trolley to the proper wire, it was negligence for him to leave the motor with the power on, and the car in motion, to go to the other end of the car to adjust the trolley. The fall of the motorman while attempting to return to the front platform was accidental, but it was not accidental that but one man was put in charge of the car when two were required, or that the one man did not stop the car to adjust the trolley, if the adjustment could be made in that way. The fact that for some months one man had operated the car without accident does not show the absence of constant danger, while the circumstances under which the accident occurred show that it might have occurred many times, and that it was a constant and continuing negligence to operate the car with but one man in charge. We find no ground upon which the judgment and order appealed from should be reversed, and advise that they be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLES, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

LEVY v. MAGNOLIA LODGE, NO. 29, I. O. O. F. (S. F. No. 49.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 6, 1895.)

BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES—CONSTITUTION—PROVISIONS FOR EXPULSION FROM MEMBERSHIP—VALIDITY—EXPULSION—SUFFICIENCY OF CHARGES—MANDAMUS FOR RESTORATION—DEFENSE.

1. The fact that one discharged from membership in a voluntary benevolent association has not pursued the remedies for reinstatement provided by laws of the association is a good defense in a civil action against the association for reinstatement.

2. A provision in the constitution of an unincorporated voluntary association requiring the committee for the trial of members accused of violating the laws of the order to report a member who fails, when properly summoned, to appear before it for trial, guilty of contempt, and makes their report conclusive, and the punishment for contempt expulsion, is valid and binding on the members of the association, where the constitution is agreed to as a part of the contract of membership by all persons joining the order.

3. In mandamus for reinstatement to membership in a voluntary association after being expelled for contempt in refusing to appear before a committee of the order for trial on charges of violation of laws of the order, the objection that the charges were insufficient cannot be urged if the charges were sufficiently specific to apprise plaintiff "of the nature thereof, and to enable him to prepare for his defense" (though, possibly, subject to special demurrer in a court of law), where their sufficiency was not objected to in the proceedings before the order.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Application by Max M. Levy against Magnolia Lodge, No. 29, I. O. O. F., for writ of mandamus to compel defendant to reinstate plaintiff as a member. From a judgment awarding the writ, and an order denying it a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Marcus Rosenthal, for appellant. Geo. D. Collins, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. The defendant has appealed from a judgment of the superior court awarding a peremptory writ of mandate commanding defendant to restore the plaintiff to his former status as a member of said lodge, from which he had been expelled, and also from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] Rehearing denied.

The material facts of record are as follow: The defendant is a voluntary, unincorporated, fraternal, and beneficial association, organized in the city of San Francisco, and governed by a written constitution and bylaws signed by all its members. It is subordinate to a higher organization known as the "Grand Lodge of I. O. O. F. of the State of California," which, in its turn, is subordinate to a sovereign grand lodge. The constitution of the defendant lodge (section 7) provides that "the constitution, laws and decisions of the sovereign grand lodge * * * and the constitution, laws, and decisions of the grand lodge * * * of the state of California are laws of this lodge; and all persons, by becoming members of this lodge, consent to and agree to abide by the same." Section 18 of the by-laws of the defendant lodge provides that every member in good standing, who has attained to the third degree, "shall, in case of sickness, infirmity, or bodily accident, rendering him unable to earn a livelihood, receive from the lodge fund a weekly benefit of ten dollars, * * * and in all cases benefits shall only be granted on the recommendation of the noble or vice grand, subject to the restrictions hereinafter provided, and no benefit shall be paid for a part of a week's sickness, nor for any sickness which is only of one week's duration, nor for any sickness caused by intemperance or immoral conduct." Section 21 of the bylaws provides: "A member who, though sick or disabled, but who is able to collect debts, settle accounts, to make contracts, to oversee or superintend any business, shall not be entitled to benefits as a matter of right or legal claim; but such member may be granted relief by a vote of the lodge." Section 6, art. 4, of the constitution of the defendant lodge, is as follows: "Sec. 6. This constitution, and all laws, rules, and regulations providing for the granting of sick, funeral, and other benefits, or of any aid, relief, assistance, allowance, expenses, or money to any member, wife, widow, orphan, or any person whatever, or providing for the payment to the lodge of dues, assessments, and demands by a member, are not intended and shall not be construed to create the relation of debtor and creditor, nor to create legal rights, liabilities, nor responsibilities, nor any legal contractual relation, nor confer any right to enforce the granting or payment of the same by resort to courts of law. On the contrary, all questions, whether of law or fact, relative to the granting, payment, or refusal of the same, relate to moral duties or obligations, and not to legal ones, and appertain to the sole jurisdiction of this lodge and the authorities of this order; and their decisions in the premises shall be binding, conclusive, and final upon all members, wives, widows, orphans, or persons. Every person, by becoming or continuing a member of this lodge, consents to, and agrees to abide by, all the laws and decisions of this lodge and of the authorities of the order."

Plaintiff became a third-degree member of the defendant lodge in November, 1883, and so continued until he was expelled, in April, 1894. In 1893 he claimed to be permanently sick, and unable to earn a livelihood, and was so reported to his lodge; and thereupon the lodge commenced to pay him sick benefits at the rate of $10 a week; but, after having paid such benefits for a number of months (not specified in the record), the lodge declined to pay plaintiff any further benefits, though he still claimed and demanded them. In this state of his case the constitution of defendant (section 5, art. 4) provided for him the following remedies, and no other: "If a lodge refuses or neglects to grant sick benefits to a brother, he may, at any time within four weeks thereafter, demand in writing that the lodge appoint a committee to investigate the matter, whereupon the lodge shall appoint a committee of five to hear the evidence and report the facts and their conclusions to the lodge. Such committee shall, without unnecessary delay, notify the brother of the time and place of their meeting, and investigate the case. They shall keep full minutes of the evidence and of their proceedings, and report the same to the lodge, with their conclusion. * * * Upon the report being made, notice thereof shall forthwith be given by the secretary to the party against whom the verdict is rendered, and he shall have two weeks in which to file his exceptions. If no exceptions are filed within two weeks, the lodge shall proceed to pronounce its judgment and decision. An appeal from the judgment of the lodge may be taken at any time within two weeks thereafter to the grand lodge, on questions of law or fact or both, and, if no such appeal is taken, the judgment of the lodge is final. When a bill of exceptions to the report of the committee is filed as above provided, the lodge may determine upon its merits, and either change, modify, or sustain the report of the committee, or refer the same back to the same or another committee, or order a new investigation. If the lodge shall deem the exceptions not well taken, it shall proceed to pronounce its judgment and decision. Each witness, at the conclusion of his testimony, and before other proceedings in the case are had, shall have his testimony as taken down by the committee read over to him, and shall make such corrections thereof as he may deem proper, and shall thereupon sign each page of said testimony. The brother has the affirmative of the issue; and the committees appointed under this section shall be appointed and governed by the rules applicable to committees upon trials under charges." In accordance with this section the plaintiff demanded, in writing, that the lodge appoint a committee to investigate the question as to whether he was entitled to further benefits; whereupon the lodge appointed such committee, and the committee without delay notified plaintiff of their appointment, and also of a time and place when and where they would meet and investigate the matter; and the committee met at the time and place appointed, but the plaintiff refused to meet the committee at that time and place, or at any other time or place, and soon thereafter commenced an action against the defendant in a justice's court to recover benefits alleged to be due him, and obtained a judgment for the sum of $60 and costs. Thereafter, on March 20, 1894, a member of the defendant lodge made and filed in the lodge charges in writing against the plaintiff, specifying that plaintiff had violated his contract with the lodge, and thereby violated the rules and regulations of the lodge and of the grand lodge, by commencing and prosecuting said action in the justice's court; and also that during the year 1893 the plaintiff "claimed and received sick benefits from said lodge to which he was not entitled, thereby defrauding the said lodge, he having violated section 21 of the by-laws." On the day these charges were made, the lodge, in compliance with its rules, appointed a committee of five members to investigate said charges, and to report the result to the lodge. The committee immediately summoned plaintiff to appear before it on April 3, 1894, at 7 o'clock p. m., to answer said charges, and notified him that, in case he made default, he would be reported to the lodge as being guilty of contempt. This summons was served on plaintiff March 21, 1894, by delivering to him a copy thereof, attached to a copy of said charges against him. On March 31, 1894, the lodge received the following: "Magnolia Lodge, No. 29, I. O. O. F. of Cal.—Gents: Being convinced of a total absence of power in your organization to expel a member upon the 'charges' made against Max Levy, I have advised him that any action that you may take against him in that direction will be a nullity, and I therefore, on his behalf, respectfully suggest that you dismiss the 'charges' and proceedings that have been taken in respect thereto, as the entire matter is beyond the scope of your authority. Yours, respectfully, Geo. D. Collins, Attorney for Max Levy." The lodge took no action on this letter, and the committee met at the hour appointed in the summons, and called the plaintiff, and waited for him three hours, but he failed to appear. (Plaintiff testified that he declined to appear before the committee on the advice of Mr. Collins, his attorney.) Thereupon the committee fully reported to the lodge their action, and that plaintiff failed to appear, and also their conclusion that plaintiff was guilty of contempt of the authority of the lodge. The lodge adopted the report of the committee, and thereupon, without further notice to plaintiff, expelled him from the lodge; but immediately thereafter served on him the following written notice: "Hall of Magnolia Lodge, No. 29, I. O. O. F., Odd Fellows' Hall, Corner Seventh and Market Sts. San Francisco, Cal., April 3, 1894. To Max Levy, City—Dear Sir and Bro.: Please take notice that at the regular meeting of this lodge, held this evening, the committee appointed to try certain charges preferred against you by Bro. E. O. Flanders, P. G., reported you in contempt according to section 5 of article VIII. of the constitution, you having failed to appear before it, after having been duly subpœnaed, and the lodge adopted the report and you was accordingly expelled from membership in the same. Yours in F., L. and T., [Seal.] Samuel Polack, Secretary." The plaintiff did not except to the report of the committee, nor appeal from the order of expulsion, nor seek any other relief from the lodge; but instead thereof commenced this proceeding for a writ of mandate.

Section 5 of article 8, referred to in the above notice to plaintiff of his expulsion, is included in the following extract from that article, embracing sections 2 to 6, inclusive.

"Sec. 2. Any member who shall violate any of the principles of the order, or offend against the constitution, by-laws, or rules of order of this lodge, or the penal laws of the land, shall be fined, reprimanded, suspended, or expelled, as the by-laws may direct or the lodge determine.

"Sec. 3. Every member shall be entitled to a fair trial for any offense involving reprimand, suspension, or expulsion. No member shall be put upon trial unless charges duly specifying the offense, so as fully to apprise him of the nature thereof, and to enable him to prepare for his defense, shall be submitted to the lodge, in writing, and signed by a member of a lodge within this jurisdiction, and a copy thereof, under seal of the lodge, be served upon him.

"Sec. 4. Such charges shall be referred to a committee of five members, who shall, without unnecessary delay, summon the parties, and try the case. They shall keep full minutes of the evidence and of their proceedings, and report the same to the lodge, with their verdict. * * * Upon the report being made, notice thereof shall forthwith be given by the secretary to the party against whom the verdict is rendered, and he shall have two weeks in which to file his exceptions. If no exceptions are filed within two weeks, the lodge shall proceed to pronounce judgment upon the verdict, and affix the penalty. An appeal from the judgment of the lodge may be taken, at any time within two weeks thereafter, to the grand lodge; and, if no such appeal is taken, the judgment of the lodge shall be final. When a bill of exceptions to the report of the committee is filed, as above provided, the lodge may determine upon its merits, and either sustain the report of the committee or refer the same back to the same or another committee, or grant a new trial. If the lodge deems the exceptions not well taken, it shall proceed to pronounce its judgment, and affix the penalty

"Sec. 5. If the accused refuse or neglect to stand trial when duly summoned, the committee shall report him guilty of contempt of the lodge, which report shall be conclusive; and the punishment shall be expulsion.

"Sec. 6. If a specific penalty for an offense be provided in the constitution or by-laws, the noble grand shall enforce it. If none be so provided, the lodge shall decide by paper ballot whether the penalty shall be expulsion, suspension, or reprimand and fine. During the ballot the accused brother shall withdraw from the lodge room. If upon the first ballot it shall appear that two-thirds of the ballots are cast for expulsion, such shall be the penalty. If two-thirds of the ballots are not cast for expulsion, then the lodge shall proceed to ballot for suspension, and if two-thirds of the ballots are cast for suspension, suspension shall be the penalty, and the lodge shall proceed to fix the duration of such suspension, which shall not exceed two years. If neither expulsion nor suspension is determined as the penalty as above provided, then the penalty shall either be reprimand, fine, or both. If fine is determined upon, then the lodge shall fix the amount, not exceeding $10; if reprimand is decided upon, then the accused shall be reprimanded in open lodge by the acting noble grand." No ballot held under this section shall be reconsidered.

Those portions of the constitution and by-laws hereinabove set out are all fully set out in the pleadings, and none of them is denied by either party. The statement on motion for new trial shows that they were all introduced in evidence without objection. Both parties have properly treated them here as facts of record, without objection on the ground that they are not expressly found as facts by the court, and they are so considered in this opinion.

The only express findings purporting to be findings of fact, requiring any consideration, are the following: "(1) That plaintiff did not at any time demand or receive from defendant sick benefits to which he was not entitled. (2) That neither of said charges [which he was summoned to answer before the committee] constitutes any offense against said defendant's constitution or by-laws; nor does either of said charges warrant the expulsion of plaintiff from membership in defendant organization; nor has defendant any power, authority, or jurisdiction to try plaintiff upon said charges, or to expel him from membership therefor. (3) That there is no by-law, rule, or regulation of defendant making or prescribing said charges a ground of expulsion from membership in said defendant lodge."

The first one of these findings is wholly irrelevant to any material issue of fact in this proceeding, it being responsive only to the charges which the plaintiff was cited to answer before the committee, and which he never denied. Those charges are relevant to this proceeding only for the purpose of determining whether they constitute an infraction of the constitution or by-laws of the defendant lodge, for which the plaintiff was liable to be tried in the manner proposed and punished in any way; and they can be considered on this appeal for no other purpose.

The second and third of these findings are mere conclusions of law, involving only a construction of the constitution and by-laws of the association, or those portions thereof set forth in the record. Indeed, the record presents no question of fact. That the charges which plaintiff was summoned to answer before the committee constituted a penal offense against the constitution and by-laws of the defendant lodge, which the lodge had jurisdiction to try in the mode proposed, was made sufficiently manifest by the extracts from the constitution and by-laws above set out, to wit, section 2 of article 8, read in connection with sections 5 and 6 of article 4 of the constitution and section 21 of the by-laws. It was surely a violation of these to demand and receive benefits to which they did not entitle him. The abandonment of his proceeding before the lodge to test his alleged right to benefits, and the commencement of the action in the justice's court, were also a plain violation of valid laws of the lodge, which deprived him of the right to recover such benefits in any court of the state, though they did not deprive such courts of jurisdiction to hear and dispose of his complaint. Yet the fact that the laws of the lodge provided a remedy for the grievance complained of, which he had not pursued and exhausted, would have been a perfect defense to his action in any state court. Robinson v. Society, 67 Cal. 135, 7 Pac. 435; Association v. Benson, 76 Tex. 552, 13 S. W. 379; People v. St. George's Soc., 28 Mich. 261; German Reformed Church v. Com., 3 Pa. St. 282; Olery v. Brown, 51 How. Prac. 92; White v. Brownell, 2 Daly, 329; Robinson v. Yates City Lodge, 86 Ill. 598; Otto v. Benevolent Union, 75 Cal. 308, 17 Pac. 217; Bac. Ben. Soc. (2d Ed.) § 94. On the same principle courts of equity decline to interfere with voluntary benevolent associations so long as the means of relief provided by the society itself have not been availed of and exhausted. Lafond v. Deems, 81 N. Y. 507; Dolan v. Court of Good Samaritan, 128 Mass. 437; Chamberlain v. Lincoln, 129 Mass. 70.

It is objected to those charges against plaintiff (here for the first time) that they are not sufficiently specific. They are sufficiently specific to apprise the plaintiff "of the nature thereof, and to enable him to prepare for his defense," though the first step in such defense may have been in the nature of a well-grounded special demurrer in a court of law. But they would not be subject to a general demurrer on the ground that they state no offense against the constitution or by-laws of the lodge, even in the courts of the state. There was no demurrer, however, nor any motion to have the charges made more specific. The letter of Mr. Collins to the lodge merely denied the power of the lodge to expel plaintiff on those charges, and gave notice that any action taken by the lodge in that direction would be a nullity. It contains no complaint that the charges are not sufficiently specific. Besides, plaintiff testified that on the advice of Mr. Collins he refused to appear before the committee; therefore his default was intentional, and without other excuse than that stated in the letter of his attorney to the lodge. In a case very similar to this (People v. St. George's Soc., 28 Mich. 261), in which mandamus to reinstate a member was denied, the court said: "As these are proceedings under articles agreed to by all the members, it is necessary to consider them without much regard to technicalities, and to follow substantial justice more than form." In that case the defendant was incorporated.

Whether the penalty of either of those charges might have been expulsion, or only a fine of $10, is immaterial, since plaintiff was not tried nor expelled on either of those charges, but was expelled for contempt of the authority of the lodge in refusing to appear before the committee, or to stand trial on those charges. His expulsion was in strict accordance with section 5 of article 8 of the constitution; and whether that section is valid and binding on the defendant seems to be the only remaining debatable question presented for decision. The only objections suggested by counsel to section 5, art. 8, are that it makes the report of the committee conclusive, and affords the party reported to be in contempt no opportunity to except to the report of the committee; and that it provides for no appeal from the order of expulsion in that class of cases. Conceding, without deciding, that both grounds of the objection existed, the question is whether or not the right to except to the report of the committee, or the right to appeal from the order of expulsion, is such that the plaintiff could not have waived it by contract; since there is no question that the plaintiff did all in his power to waive them by signing the constitution and by-laws of the association, which association existed and exercised its functions only by virtue of the contract expressed in its constitution and by-laws, signed by all its members. It is well settled that a person may waive any legal right unless such waiver injuriously affects some other person, or is forbidden by law, or opposed to public policy. A party may, by contract, waive a statutory right (Bowen v. Aubrey, 22 Cal. 566); and where, in a criminal case, a verdict has been returned, the defendant may waive the delay of sentence allowed by statute for his benefit by consenting that judgment on the verdict may be pronounced immediately (People v. Robinson, 46 Cal. 94). He may also, by contract, waive his constitutional right to notice of and opportunity to defend a civil action against him; for example, a motion for judgment against him on an appeal bond signed by him as surety in accordance with section 942 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Meredith v. Association, 60 Cal. 617, and cases there cited; Mowry v. Heney, 86 Cal. 471, 25 Pac. 17), on the theory that said section of the Code enters into and becomes a part of the bond; whereas in the case at bar, the plaintiff, without reference to any statute, expressly contracted that the report of the committee in question should be conclusive.

In answer to the suggestion that section 5, art. 8, of the constitution of the defendant is unreasonable and oppressive, and therefore invalid, it is to be observed: (1) That said section is not a by-law, in the ordinary sense of the word as applied to corporations, it being a part of the written contract (constitution) by which the unincorporated association (the lodge) was created, and bears the same relation to the association as do charters by the legislature to private corporations (Hogan v. Endowment League, 99 Cal. 248, 33 Pac. 924); (2) but, even if the defendant lodge had been incorporated, and section 5 of its present constitution had been enacted as a by-law conceded to be unreasonable, and therefore invalid as a by-law, it would nevertheless be valid as a contract if signed or agreed to by all the members of the corporation. "What is bad as a by-law, as against common right, may, however, be good as a contract, since, as a learned writer (Ang. & Ames) expresses it: 'A man may part with a common right voluntarily, of which it would be impolitic and unjust to deprive him of by a by-law passed without his assent, or perhaps knowledge, by those who would not consult his individual interests." Bac. Ben. Soc. (2d Ed.) § 87, and authorities there cited. See, also, Slee v. Bloom, 19 Johns. 456; Cooper v. Frederick, 9 Ala. 738; Amesbury v. Insurance Co., 6 Gray, 596; Davis v. Proprietors, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 321.

On the facts found and admitted by the pleadings, I think the plaintiff was lawfully expelled from the defendant lodge, and that it was not the duty of the defendant to reinstate him at the time this proceeding was commenced, or at any time since; and, therefore, that the judgment awarding the writ of mandate should be reversed, and the court below instructed to dismiss the proceedings.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment awarding the writ of mandate is reversed, and the court below instructed to dismiss the proceeding.

RYAN v. HOLLIDAY et al. (L. A. 80.)

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE—NONPAYMENT—ALLEGATION—CLAIM AGAINST ESTATE.

1. An allegation in a complaint to foreclose a mortgage that there is now due and owing plaintiff a certain sum, is not equivalent to an averment of nonpayment.

2. Failure to allege nonpayment in a complaint to foreclose a mortgage may be taken advantage of on appeal, though no demurrer was interposed, and judgment went by default.

3. A mortgage existing on land at the time it was purchased by decedent is not within Code Civ. Proc. § 1500, providing that claims against the estate shall be presented to the executor, except that an action may be brought on a mortgage where all recourse against any other property of the estate is waived.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Riverside county; J. S. Noyes, Judge.

Action by George W. Ryan against Clara Holliday and others to foreclose a mortgage. From a judgment of foreclosure, defendant Heber Ingle, administrator, appeals. Reversed.

Trippet & Neale and L. Gill, for appellant. Purington & Adair, for respondents.

VAN FLEET, J. The judgment in this case must be reversed for want of any averment that the note secured by the mortgage sought to be foreclosed has not been paid. The only allegation in this regard is: "That the interest on said note and mortgage has been paid in full up to the 11th day of September, 1894, and there is now due and owing to the plaintiff the sum of twelve hundred dollars ($1,200), with interest thereon at the rate of twelve per cent. per annum from the 11th day of September, 1894." This is not the equivalent of an averment of nonpayment. The language, "there is now due," etc., is but a conclusion of law, and not the averment of a fact. The breach of the contract to pay is of the essence of the cause of action, and must be alleged. Frisch v. Caler, 21 Cal. 71; Scroufe v. Clay, 71 Cal. 123, 11 Pac. 882; Roberts v. Treadwell, 50 Cal. 521; Barney v. Vigoreaux, 92 Cal. 631, 28 Pac. 678. The fact that no demurrer was interposed, and that judgment went by default, makes no essential difference, since the defect goes to the statement of a cause of action (Barney v. Vigoreaux, supra); and that defect is not waived by a failure to demur (Code Civ. Proc. § 434).

While we are reluctant, as suggested in Notman v. Green, 90 Cal. 173, 27 Pac. 157, to reverse a judgment upon such a technicality, and especially in favor of a defendant who has apparently stood by and permitted the court below to overlook an error susceptible of easy correction, and then takes advantage of such error on appeal, and while we would avoid the necessity, if possible, nevertheless, on the other hand, that consideration is largely neutralized by the further one that a party guilty of such an inexcusable breach of good pleading as is here exhibited is not entitled to have it lightly condoned, but should suffer the consequences. The objection that the complaint should have averred either a presentation of a claim against the estate of appellant's intestate or an express waiver of any recourse against the general estate, is not well taken. Section 1500 of the Code of Civil Procedure has no application to the facts of this case. The note and mortgage sued on were not in any sense a claim against the estate of said intestate. The latter was not the maker of the note or mortgage, nor did a demand of any character exist thereunder against the estate. The representative was made a party defendant solely by reason of the fact that subsequently to the making of the mortgage in suit the mortgaged land was purchased by said intestate in his lifetime, and the title thereto rested in his estate at his death, subject to the mortgage lien. It was necessary to make his representative a party for the purpose of foreclosing the rights of the estate in the land,—if such term may be employed under our system,—and for that purpose alone. The estate of said intestate was in no way holden for any deficiency that might arise out of a sale of the property, nor was any such relief asked or taken. There was, therefore, no claim to be presented against said estate. The section referred to applies only to instances where the note and mortgage constitute a claim against the estate of the deceased. There is nothing in the alleged defect in the summons. Bewick v. Muir, 83 Cal. 370, 23 Pac. 389, 390. The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to permit plaintiff to amend his complaint.

BOYER v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (S. F. 275.)

APPEAL BOND—JUSTIFICATION—POWER OF JUDGE.

As Code Civ. Proc. § 948, provides that sureties on appeal bonds "shall justify before a judge of the court or county clerk," the judge has no authority to review the action of the clerk in passing on the sufficiency of the sureties.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; A. A. Sanderson, Judge.

Application for writ of prohibition by J. D. Boyer against the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. Writ issued.

J. D. Boyer, in pro. per. Tobin & Tobin, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. The present petitioner, J. D. Boyer, moved to vacate and set aside a judgment of foreclosure rendered against defendants in the case of Hibernia Savings & Loan Society v. Anna Lewis et al., and the motion was denied. Subsequently the court granted plaintiff's motion for a writ of assistance. Boyer appealed from the orders of the court made upon these motions, and the court fixed the amount of his undertaking to stay proceedings upon appeal from the order granting the writ of assistance in the sum of $1,500. Boyer filed a bond in due form, covering both appeals, and the sufficiency of the sureties was excepted to. Upon due notice to the respondent, and in the presence of its attorneys, the sureties justified before the county clerk. Some days thereafter respondent, upon notice, moved the court for permission to execute its judgment by aid of the writ of assistance, and further asked that an order be made striking the said undertaking from the files of the court. This action was prayed for upon the ground that the evidence taken before the county clerk at the time of justification showed the bond to be insufficient by reason of the poor financial standing of the sureties. Upon the hearing of these motions the court examined the testimony taken upon the justification before the county clerk, and thereupon made an order that said sureties on said undertaking appear before him (the judge) upon the ensuing day, at 10 a. m., to then and there justify, and stated to petitioner, Boyer, that if they did not so appear and justify the writ of assistance would be enforced by a further order. The present proceeding is an application for a writ of prohibition to restrain the threatened action of the trial court.

The petitioner, Boyer, perfected his appeal when he filed the undertaking heretofore referred to, and, the appeal having been perfected, all the proceedings upon the order for a writ of assistance were stayed. Code Civ. Proc. § 946. Still this stay of proceedings is not necessarily permanent and final pending the appeal, for by a failure to comply with the provisions of section 948 of said Code, in reference to the exception and justification of sureties, it becomes nugatory, and of no avail; but, if compliance is had with the demands of that section, the stay continues perfect and complete. By the section referred to, upon an exception to the sufficiency of the sureties, they are required to justify after notice to the respondent, "before a judge of the court or county clerk," and in this case the sureties justified before the county clerk, upon due notice to the other side, and in their presence. This would seem to end the matter, and make the stay bond permanent pending the appeal. In this regard the statute furnishes the measure of the power, and we see no authority in the statute authorizing the action of the trial court in ordering a second and summary justification. The county clerk and a judge of the superior court are vested by the statute with equal authority as to the justification of sureties; and there appears to be no provision of law for a review by the trial court of the action of the county clerk in passing upon the sufficiency of the sureties upon the bond.

It is further suggested that section 954, Code Civ. Proc., as amended by Statutes of 1895, p. 59, confers authority for the action of the court complained of in ordering a second justification; but that amendment is not broad enough to cover the facts of the present case, and this is apparent for many reasons, viz.: (1) It contemplates that a perfect bond had been prepared and filed in the first instance, and that the imperfections thereto subsequently arose. (2) It contemplates appeals from money judgments. (3) It gives the court or judge authority only to order a new bond. (4) It in no way provides for a further or second justification of the sureties upon the original bond.

Counsel for respondent also relies upon the case of Dobbins v. Dollarhide, 15 Cal. 374. The facts of that case are quite meager, indicated by the opinion, but, as we understand them, the sureties upon the bond, at the time set for their justification, were unable to justify upon the stay bond, but did justify upon the appeal bond; and the court said that in such case respondent should move the trial court for the execution of the judgment, and that undoubtedly would be the proper procedure, for the stay had lapsed by reason of the failure of justification.

In conclusion, we do not think the trial court had the power to order the second justification to take place before it or a judge thereof, any more than it had the power to make such an order as to the first justification; and clearly the statute gives the parties the option of going either before a judge of the superior court or the county clerk for that purpose. As to what the remedy is for a respondent where, after justification, he should discover that the sureties perjured themselves at the hearing, it is not necessary to decide. Possibly legislation is needed to meet the case. It is ordered that the writ issue as prayed for.

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 10, 1895.)

CORPORATIONS—VOID RESOLUTION—RATIFICATION.

A resolution of a board of directors fixing the salary of the president, and which was spread upon the records, but was illegal because it required the president's vote to adopt it, could be ratified by a subsequent board, so as to justify the president for having drawn such salary.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; W. E. Greene, Judge.

Action by I. G. Wickersham against James L. Crittenden to compel defendant to account for certain moneys received by him as president of a certain corporation. Defendant had judgment, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Lippitt & Lippitt, for appellant. Crittenden, Foote & Van Wyck and Graves & Graves, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff, as a stockholder in the Bank of San Luis Obispo. brings this action, on behalf of himself and other stockholders, for the benefit of the corporation, to compel the defendant to account for and pay over to the corporation certain moneys received by him, ostensibly for his salary as president, but which the plaintiff alleges were received without right. The facts out of which the cause of action is claimed to arise are stated in the opinion given in Wickersham v. Crittenden, 93 Cal. 17, 28 Pac. 788, and in an action, similar to the present, which was brought May 16, 1892, with reference to the salary received by the defendant prior to that date, and which is reported in 106 Cal. 327, 39 Pac. 602. The present action was brought May 24, 1893, and it is alleged in the complaint that the defendant had received from the moneys of the corporation the sum of $400 per month, from May 16, 1892, until November 1, 1892, and that the only salary that he was authorized to receive was fixed by the directors at $200 per month, in October, 1890. The court found that the defendant had received the salary of $400 a month from May 16, 1892, up to and including the 30th day of June, 1892, but not subsequently, and that his taking of this salary was authorized by the corporation, and gave judgment for the defendant.

In the case reported in 93 Cal. 17, 28 Pac. 788, it was held that the original resolution, adopted at the meeting of the directors December 12, 1890, fixing the salary at $400, was illegal. The resolution was, however, adopted by the board of directors of the corporation, and was spread upon its records, and on its face purported to be an authentic and efficient act of the corporation. Its invalidity arose from the fact that Crittenden, whose vote was essential to its adoption, was personally interested in the subject-matter of the resolution, and, therefore, disqualified from voting thereon. The resolution was, however, within the power of the corporation to adopt, and, though invalid at the time it was adopted, could be subsequently ratified by a competent board of directors, or could be adopted anew, either by reference to it as it was spread upon the records, or by its introduction as an original resolution.

It is not necessary to consider the attempted ratification by the board of directors, which, in the former case (93 Cal. 17, 28 Pac. 788), was held to have been illegally constituted, and as the purported ratification at the annual meeting of the stockholders in October, 1891, was adopted only by counting the vote of Crittenden therefor, that also may be laid out of consideration. At this annual meeting another board of directors was chosen, which, at a meeting held June 17, 1892, passed a resolution by which they "ratified, approved, confirmed, and adopted" the resolution which had been adopted by the board of directors December 12, 1890, and at the same time fixed the salary of the president at $250 per month from and after the 1st day of July, 1892. This resolution had the effect to validate the original resolution, and, for the purpose of justifying the action of the defendant in taking the salary, is to be construed with the same effect as if the original resolution had been properly adopted. The present action by the plaintiff is brought for the account of the corporation, and not for his individual benefit, and whatever would estop the corporation from recovering a judgment against the defendant is equally a defense against the present action of the plaintiff. The judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. WARD. (Cr. 50.)[1]

BRIBERY—INDICTMENT.

Pen. Code, §§ 950, 952, provide that an indictment shall contain a statement of the acts constituting the offense, and must be direct as to the particular circumstances when necessary to constitute a complete offense. Section 7, subd. 6, defines the word "bribe" as anything of value or advantage, present or prospective, or any promise or undertaking to give any, asked, given, or accepted, with a corrupt intent to influence, unlawfully, the person to whom it is given, in his action, vote, or opinion in any public or official capacity. Held, that an indictment which charged that defendant did "give a bribe" to a certain supervisor, with intent to corruptly influence him in a certain matter, was not sufficient.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Ansel Smith, Judge.

Charles W. Ward was convicted of giving a bribe, and appeals. Reversed.

W. M. Gibson and J. G. Swinnerton, for appellant. W. F. Fitzgerald, Atty. Gen., for the People.

McFARLAND, J. The appellant was convicted of the "crime of giving a bribe," and appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. The appellant demurred to the indictment upon the ground that it does not substantially comply with the requirements of sections 950 and 952 of the Penal Code. His demurrer was overruled, and we think that the court erred in overruling it. The indictment charges that the appellant did willfully, feloniously, etc., "give a bribe," to a certain member of the board of supervisors, with intent to corruptly influence him in a certain matter; but it does not contain any averment of any act of appellant which brings his alleged conduct within the legal meaning of bribery. The indictment would be the same if it had merely charged generally that defendant "bribed" a certain person to do a certain thing. This would be the averment of a legal conclusion only, and as bad as a mere general averment that a defendant "murdered" somebody or "stole" something. Section 950 of the Penal Code provides that the indictment shall contain "a statement of the acts constituting the offense in ordinary and concise language"; and section 952 provides that "it must be direct and certain as it regards * * * (3) the particular circumstances of the offense charged when they are necessary to constitute a complete offense." Subdivision 6 of section 7 of the Penal Code provides as follows: "The word 'bribe' signifies anything of value or advantage, present or prospective, or any promise or undertaking to give any, asked, given, or accepted, with a corrupt intent to influence, unlawfully, the person to whom it is given, in his action, vote, or opinion, in any public or official capacity;" and section 165 provides that "every person who gives or offers a bribe" to one of several officers named, with intent, etc., is punishable in a certain manner. And counsel for respondents contend that the indictment is good because, as they say, "it follows the language of the statute." This court has said several times, in general terms, than an indictment is sufficient if it substantially follows the language of the statute. This is true generally, but not universally. It is not true of a case where "the particular circumstances * * * are necessary to constitute a complete offense." The rule especially applies to purely statutory offenses. But what does the rule mean? It means simply this: that when the statute defines or describes the acts which shall constitute a particular offense, it is sufficient, in an indictment, to describe those acts in the language employed in the statute,—applying them, of course, concretely to the person charged. One of the earliest cases on the subject is People v. Parsons, 6 Cal. 487. In that case the indictment was for perjury and left out the word "feloniously"; and it was held good because, in the statutory definition of the crime of perjury, the word "feloniously" was not used. In its opinion the court said: "The indictment in this cause charged the offense in the words of the statute defining it. * * * Time, place and circumstance are stated with certainty, and every information is given to the defendant which is necessary to enable him to answer the charge." There the words of the statute defining the offense were used in the indictment. People v. Shaber, 32 Cal. 36, is another early case. There the court in sustaining the indictment said: "The indictment charges the offense in the very terms used in defining it in the fifty-eighth section of the crimes act." And even in that case Sanderson, J., dissented, saying that it was a familiar principle in all pleadings that "the facts are to be stated, to the exclusion of conclusions of law to be drawn therefrom." And in the cases following these earlier ones it will be found that the rule declared on the subject is simply that an indictment is good if it alleges all the facts or acts necessary to constitute the particular offense charged, in the language used by the legislature in defining it. For instance, the meaning of the rule is fully stated by Paterson, J., in People v. Fowler, 88 Cal. 138, 25 Pac. 1110, as follows: "The information follows the language of the statute, and is sufficient. It alleges all the acts and facts which the legislature has said shall constitute the offense."

[1] Rehearing denied.

The only two cases cited where bribery was involved are People v. Edson, 68 Cal. 549, 10 Pac. 192, and People v. Markham, 64 Cal. 157, 30 Pac. 620. In the Edson Case the language of the indictment is not given, but the opinion refers to the Markham Case as authority; and in the Markham Case the indictment charged that the defendant, at a certain time and place, being a police officer, etc., did "agree to receive a bribe, to wit, fifteen standard dollars, lawful coin of the United States of America." Therefore, assuming the general rule, as above explained, to be that it is sufficient to allege an offense in the language of the statute, the offense charged in the case at bar is not alleged in the language of the statute in the indictment under review. It does not allege "the acts and facts which the legislature has said shall constitute the offense." The material acts or facts constituting the legislative definition of bribery are the giving to a public officer something "of value, or advantage, present, or prospective," or giving "any promise" or entering into any "undertaking" to give something of value or advantage. There is no averment that appellant gave the supervisor anything of value, or of advantage, or that he gave anything at all, or that the thing was of present or prospective advantage, or that it was a promise to do something, or an undertaking of some kind which was, or would be, beneficial to the supervisor. As said by counsel for appellant: "The defendant is not informed whether the people will prove that he gave money, a promise of employment, a promise of political influence, a contract, instruction, entertainment, or any other of the many things which might constitute a bribe." It is true that the rules of the common law with respect to criminal pleading have been greatly relaxed in this state by legislation and judicial decision, and many of the formalities and particularities formerly deemed necessary are not now required; but the fundamental rule that an indictment must state with reasonable certainty what the defendant is charged with, so as "to enable him to answer the charge," has not been abrogated either by legislature or court. People v. Lee (Cal.) 40 Pac. 754. An indictment for bribery should aver that the defendant gave something of value or advantage, present or prospective, or some promise or undertaking, or did some act, described by the statute as constituting the offense. A mere use of the language of section 165, which prescribes the punishment, is not charging the offense "in the words of the statute defining it."

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause is remanded, with instructions to sustain the demurrer to the indictment.

BANCROFT v. BANCROFT. (No. 15,848.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 10, 1895.)

UNDUE INFLUENCE—ACTION FOR DAMAGES.

An action for damages for procuring a sale by undue influence will not lie where plaintiff made no offer to rescind under Civ. Code, § 1566, when freed from the undue influence, and knew at the time of the sale the facts constituting the undue influence. Garoutte and Harrison, JJ., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county; R. F. Crawford, Judge.

Action for damages for procuring a sale by undue influence. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed. For opinion in department, see 40 Pac. 488.

George Pearce and W. F. Russell, for appellant. A. B. Ware, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. A demurrer to the amended complaint was sustained, and, plaintiff declining to further amend, judgment was rendered for defendant, from which plaintiff appeals. The complaint is substantially as follows: Defendant is the uncle of plaintiff, and, ever since the latter's boyhood, plaintiff was under the control and direction of defendant, and in his employ, and a part of the time resided with him. Defendant was accustomed, in a great measure, to guide and direct plaintiff's actions in business and other matters; was tyrannical and overbearing, and impatient of opposition; and thus had and retained great influence over plaintiff, who was accustomed to rely upon and be guided by defendant in matters of business. Defendant owned much more than a majority of the stock of a certain corporation, called the Bancroft Company, and entirely controlled and managed its affairs. Defendant was the president of said corporation, and plaintiff was employed as the manager of its business. In September, 1887, plaintiff became the owner of 1,345 shares of the stock of said corporation, and continued to own the same until the 13th day of February, 1891. In November, 1890, plaintiff borrowed $3,500 from the People's Home Savings Bank, and as security therefor pledged to said bank said 1,345 shares of stock. On February 12, 1891, defendant demanded of plaintiff that plaintiff should transfer and deliver to defendant the said 1,345 shares of stock, and all his interest in the assets and property of said corporation, for the sum of $5,000, and then and there "informed plaintiff that, unless he should forthwith transfer to him [defendant] the said stock and property on the terms aforesaid, he [defendant] would inform the said bank that plaintiff was not the owner of said stock, or any part thereof, and that plaintiff had pledged said stock without right or authority." He also said that he [defendant] would not pay more than $2,000 of said indebtedness of plaintiff to said bank, and would levy assessments on the stock of said corporation to the extent of closing out its business. "Thereupon plaintiff, solely through the influence possessed over him by defendant, and his habitual fear of defendant, and terrified by the threats aforesaid, and fully believing that defendant would carry said threats into execution, and would make to said bank and to others the statements so threatened, and that, by reason of such statements, plaintiff's character and reputation would be blasted and destroyed in the community in which he was residing and doing business, on the 13th day of February, 1891, acceded to said demand." Thereupon defendant directed plaintiff to deliver said stock to the said Bancroft Company, and to give to said company a bill of sale of all his interest in the property of said corporation, which plaintiff did on said day, "solely for the reasons aforesaid." The said company paid said indebtedness to said bank, and paid the balance of the $5,000 to plaintiff. It is averred that "plaintiff's consent to so transfer and deliver said stock to said corporation, and to execute the bill of sale aforesaid, was not freely given, but was obtained solely by the means aforesaid, and in consequence of the menace and the undue influence so exercised by defendant as aforesaid"; also, "that, as plaintiff is informed and believes, the value of said 1,345 shares of stock on the said 13th day of February, 1891, was the sum of fifty thousand dollars, as was then well known to defendant, and plaintiff has been damaged by the wrongful acts of defendant as aforesaid in the sum of forty-five thousand dollars." It is also averred, upon information and belief, that after said transaction defendant so mismanaged the affairs of said corporation that "the said shares of stock became and were at the commencement of this action greatly depreciated, and of little or no value." The prayer is for "judgment against defendant for the sum of forty-five thousand dollars, and for costs of suit." It does not appear when the action was commenced, but the present complaint was filed November 6, 1893, 19 months after the alleged cause of action accrued. No offer to rescind was ever made by appellant.

Waiving all questions as to the sufficiency of the complaint in other respects, we think that the learned judge of the court below was right in holding that it does not show any ground for avoiding the sale through want of the free consent of the appellant, unless that ground be "undue influence," and that in such a case the remedy is rescission. It is admitted that no case can be found in all the books where a general action for damages has been maintained upon the ground of undue influence in procuring a sale or other contract. In Le Caux v. Eden, 2 Doug. 594, the question was whether an action at common law could be maintained for an imprisonment on a capture at sea as prize, and Buller, J., said: "There is no case in which it has ever been holden that such an action would lie; and, if it could be maintained, there are, in every way, such frequent opportunities for it, that it must have happened in every day's practice, or some instances, at least, must have been in the memory of those who have had long experience in Westminster Hall, but there is not the smallest trace of such a determination, or even dictum, in any court in England. A universal silence in Westminster Hall on a subject which so frequently gives occasion for litigation is a strong argument to prove that no such action can be sustained." That case was decided in 1781, and dealt with litigation which could arise only out of the exceptional condition of war. How much stronger, therefore, is the authority of more than another hundred years of "silence," in the courts of both England and America, upon a subject which, both in peace and war, "so frequently gives occasion for litigation." But, in addition to this negative authority, it is clear upon principle that this present action should not be maintained, because to maintain it would be to violate the wholesome and fundamental doctrine that in such a case the party claiming to be aggrieved must promptly rescind, or offer to rescind, so as to put the other party in statu quo. He cannot wait to speculate on future contingencies. The sale from appellant to respondent was not void. It was only voidable upon restoration of the consideration paid. It has been held, it is true, that an action to recover damages for a deceit or fraud will lie, but that is on the ground that the party defrauded had no knowledge of the facts constituting the fraud. Even in that case great wrong is sometimes done when rescission is not required, but the rule should not be extended to other cases to which it has not been applied. The provisions of our Civil Code, all construed together, do not change the law on the subject. If it be said that a case could be imagined where the facts constituting the alleged undue influence were not known to the complaining party, and that there rescission should not be required, it is sufficient to reply that the case at bar is not such case. The judgment is affirmed.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur. "A contract which is not free is nevertheless not absolutely void, but may be rescinded by the parties in the manner prescribed by the chapter on rescission." Civ. Code, § 1566. The contract by which plaintiff parted with his stock was not void, but merely voidable at his option. He had the choice to affirm it or to rescind it, and it appears that he affirmed it, by failing to rescind promptly when freed from the undue influence by which his consent was obtained. Civ. Code, § 1691. Having affirmed the contract, can he recover damages? He claims that he is entitled to recover the full value of the stock, upon the same grounds that sustain an action for deceit in case of a contract induced by fraud. But the analogy does not hold. When a contract induced by fraud is affirmed by the injured party, he affirms it (as he has the right to do) according to the terms upon which he was led to believe he was contracting; and what he recovers in an action for deceit is the value of that which he believed he was getting, and the other party knew he expected to get, but which he did not in fact get, or a value which he did not intend to part with, and the other party knew he did not intend to part with. In other words, he affirms the contract as he was induced by the other party to understand it, and he recovers what, according to such understanding, he ought to have or ought not to have parted with. In case of a contract the terms of which are perfectly understood, but are assented to only because of the exercise of duress, menace, or undue influence, the right of the injured party to rescind or affirm exists, the same as in cases of fraud. But, as in cases of fraud, an affirmance is necessarily of the terms of the contract as they were understood when the consent was given; and if those terms have been fully complied with, as in this case, there is nothing due upon the contract, and no cause of action. If the plaintiff had promptly given notice of his repudiation of the contract, and offered to pay back the $5,000 upon condition that the stock was returned, or, even without such offer, if the defendant had parted with the stock, or its value had depreciated, he might have maintained an action for the stock or its value, based upon the rescission; but he cannot recover, upon an affirmance of the contract, what he never expected to get under the contract.

We concur: TEMPLE, J.; HENSHAW, J.

GAROUTTE, J. I dissent. It is claimed that the conduct of defendant, practiced towards plaintiff, amounts in law to duress, menace, and undue influence. And, as to whether or not these acts are sufficient in law to constitute menace or duress, I will not discuss; for, in sustaining the demurrer to the complaint, the trial court conceded a case of undue influence to have been stated, and respondent, by his argument, substantially concurs in such views of the trial court. This being true, the contract is no better, and occupies no different position, than though menace and duress also entered as elements in its creation. It will be observed that the present action is not one for a rescission of the contract, but is an action at law for compensatory damages, and the trial court held against the sufficiency of the complaint upon the broad ground that an action at law for damages will not lie in a case like the one at bar, but that relief can alone be obtained by rescission in a court of equity; and the soundness of this ruling is the point involved. It may be said that no authority by either side has been cited in point, for or against the proposition of law under consideration, and my own research fails to recall a single precedent. Respondent, as a last resort, is forced to rely upon the case of Le Caux v. Eden, 2 Doug. 602, where Justice Buller made some very general observations, which are cited in the main opinion. But in view of the fact that for such wrongs as these a remedy by rescission has always been recognized, and that it would in almost every case be a much more adequate remedy than an action for damages, as the practicers of these frauds are generally financially irresponsible, we think, in this case, but little weight should be attached to the very general principle declared by the learned English judge. The necessity and advisability of bringing this character of action may seldom arise. But, beyond this, the only question here is the applicability of a certain principle of law to a given state of facts; and, even if the question has arisen for the first time, it is as much the duty of the court to now determine it upon principle and reason as if it had come before the court for the first determination a hundred years ago. There has been a time when there was no precedent for the decision of any case. New precedents are being made at the present, and will continue to be made in the future, and the day is long distant when a precedent may be found for every case arising within the vast domain of the law.

It is not disputed that an action for damages upon a contract secured by fraud will be sustained, and that a resort to a court of equity for relief is not necessary. Such doctrine is elementary, and cases everywhere, and without number, support it. But it is insisted that the rule of law is different as to menace, duress, and undue influence. In substance, the contention is that if A. deceives me by falsehood, and thereby secures from me a contract, to my great loss, I may recover from him in damages, for it is fraud. But if B., with pistol at my head, threatens to kill me, and thereby procures a similar contract, I may not recover from him in damages, because, forsooth, his acts do not constitute fraud, but menace. Or, if C. procures a similar contract from me by taking a grossly oppressive and unfair advantage of my necessities and distress, no action at law for damages will lie against him, for he has not practiced fraud, but has used undue influence. I am wholly unable to comprehend why a different rule of law is applicable to the two classes of cases furnished by the above illustrations. Certainly the fraud of A. is no more iniquitous than the menace of B. or the undue influence of C., and I think it illy becomes either one of these wrongdoers to say: "You have no choice of actions. Your only remedy is rescission. I will not pay the damage you have suffered from my unlawful acts, but demand that I be placed in my original position." I think that neither A., B., nor C. should be allowed to name the action which may be brought against him; and, if the party injured is able to secure adequate relief by damages, the road to that remedy should be open to him. Let us take the case of valuable securities, resting upon a fluctuating market, and before the aggrieved party could get into court for relief by rescission, using the diligence demanded by the law, the securities become valueless. Is there no remedy by damages? If not, the wrongdoer is a lucky rogue, for in the interim he may have realized upon these securities, and still be ready to return the worthless paper to the owner upon demand, or at the end of litigation. It would seem that such result should not be allowed under the guise of law, for it is gross injustice, and a premium upon fraud.

Taking a broad view of the question, we are justified in saying that this contract was procured through fraud. What is undue influence, menace, or duress, but fraud? "Fraud" is certainly a broader word than deceit. By deceit, fraud is accomplished, but it is likewise accomplished by many other practices. Mr. Bigelow, in his work upon Fraud (page 6), declares it may be an infringement of the legal rights of another by circumvention, and without deceit. Mr. Hilliard declares (Torts, 3d Ed., 138): "Fraud properly includes all acts, omissions, and concealments which involve a breach of legal or equitable duty, trust, or confidence reposed, and are injurious to another, or by which an undue, unconscientious advantage is taken of another." And Cooley, in his work upon Torts, says (*page 506), "Duress is a species of fraud, in which compulsion in some form takes the place of deception, in accomplishing the injury." It will thus be seen that deceit is but one of many kinds of fraud, and, while actions for damages arising from contracts procured by deceit alone are of common occurrence, we find no principle declared in those cases which limits the remedy by reason of some inherent quality found in the definition of the word "deceit"; but, rather, deceit is declared to be a fraud, and compensation in the nature of damages for fraud is but justice in its simplest form. Let us assume that contracts procured through menace, duress, or undue influence are made through agencies which may not technically come within the definition of "fraud." What matters it? All the parties stand upon the same plane. The practices in either case are equally forbidden by the law. They are all morally bad. They are violative of the same rights of the party injured. They are violative of the same duties incumbent upon the party doing the wrong. Again, the contract made is no better or worse in the one case than in the other; and I know of no reason why the remedies should not be as many and as full and complete in the one case as in the other. The wrongdoer accomplishes the same wrong in each, and does it with the same bad intent; and, as to the victim's remedy, it would seem to be wholly immaterial whether the means to the end be fraud, undue influence, or duress. The cases, upon principle, are analogous, and the law applicable to the one state of facts must of necessity control the other.

It is claimed that in the case of fraud the party injured does not know the facts, while the contrary conditions exist in a case of duress, menace, or undue influence. Conceding the claim, the principle involved is not changed thereby. In one case the act is induced by a want of knowledge, and in the other by overpowering influences. There is no more consent in the one than in the other, and there is the same wrongful interference with the party's rights in both. Neither does the principle of acquiescence in the contract occupy any different position in the two cases. In a case of fraud nothing is done and no remedy invoked until the fraud is discovered, and when discovered the party seeking relief is in exactly the same position, as to the contract and the facts leading up to it, as though it had been obtained by undue influence or duress. When the fraud is discovered the party is called upon to act, and may either elect to confirm the contract, and sue for damages at law for the detriment, or go into a court of equity for relief upon the rescission of the contract; and, upon analogous reason, a like choice of remedies must be open to him in a case similar to the one at bar.

The Civil Code of this state, in speaking of obligations imposed by law, declares (section 1708), "Every person is bound without contract to abstain from injuring the person or property of another, or infringing upon any of his rights." Section 1428 declares that obligations may arise by operation of law, and further provides, "An obligation arising from operation of law may be enforced in the manner provided by law, or by civil action or proceeding." Section 3281 declares, "Every person who suffers detriment from the unlawful act or omission of another may recover from the person in fault a compensation therefor in money which is called damages." These principles would seem to be but reiterations of elementary law; but, if not, and they take advanced ground, then, beyond question, they blaze a path through virgin forests, plainly leading to a court of law for relief. By unlawful means, defendant induced plaintiff to part with his property for an inadequate consideration. This was a violation of an obligation imposed upon him by law, for it was an infringement upon plaintiff's rights, and he was entitled to damages in an amount which would compensate him for the detriment directly caused thereby. It is contended by defendant that cases involving the principle here discussed form exceptions to the law as declared in section 3281, supra. The section states no exception, but, upon the contrary, is as broad as language can make it. Neither do I find any exception stated elsewhere in the Code. While it is true the Code provides for "specific and preventive relief," still there is nothing to indicate that the remedies there declared should be exclusive. Again, the contention, if sound, would likewise deny any remedy for damages in a case of a contract procured by fraud or deceit; and this, we have seen, is not the law of this state, or any other state. In the case of Wood v. Franks, 56 Cal. 217, the principle of law to which we hold is fairly illustrated and fully supported. In that case, after quoting the sections of the Civil Code to which reference has been made, the court said: "Thus it will be seen that wherever there is an obligation arising from operation of law, and a breach of that obligation, the party injured may by action recover the amount which will compensate him for all the detriment proximately caused by the breach."

To support the conclusion I have arrived at in this case, I do not hold that, in all cases of contract procured by "undue influence," the remedy of damages is open. Rescission is the only remedy in a case of "mistake," for no fraud has been practiced, there has been no wrongdoing, the transaction has been innocent, and the parties must be and should be satisfied to return to their original position. Such should also be the rule in many cases of undue influence, as where the relations of the contracting parties were such that the law, regardless of any question of bad and wicked intention, would declare the contract void. But the rule here declared is limited to those cases possessing the characteristics of torts, where an act has been done intentionally and knowingly for the very purpose of securing the undue advantage which results. There must be bad faith and a sense of wrongdoing, and such was certainly this case, as shown by the allegations of the complaint.

HARRISON, J. I concur in the foregoing opinion of Mr. Justice GAROUTTE.

BUCKLEY v. GRAY. (No. 15,905.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 10, 1895.)

NEGLIGENCE OF ATTORNEY—LIABILITY TO THIRD PERSON.

1. An attorney employed to draw a will is not liable to a person who, through the attorney's negligence and ignorance in the discharge of his professional duties, was deprived of the portion of the estate which testator instructed the attorney should be given such person by the will.

2. Civ. Code, § 1559, providing that a contract made expressly for a third person may be enforced by him, does not authorize a suit for damages against an attorney by a person who, through the attorney's negligence, was deprived of the portion of an estate which a testator, who employed the attorney to draw his will, desired to be given to him.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; F. W. Henshaw, Judge.

Action by Vincent P. Buckley against Giles H. Gray for damages for defendant's negligence in drawing a will and supervising its execution. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Blake, Williams & Harrison, for appellant. Haven & Haven, for respondent.

VAN FLEET, J. Action to recover for negligence of attorney in drafting and executing a will. The court below sustained a demurrer to the complaint, and, plaintiff failing to amend, judgment was entered against him, from which he appeals. The complaint alleges, in substance, that on October 5, 1895, defendant, an attorney at law, was employed by Mrs. C. M. A. Buckley, the mother of plaintiff, to draw her will, which she desired and directed to be so drawn as to leave all the residue of her estate, after certain specific legacies, to her two sons, then living, the plaintiff and one John P. Buckley, to the exclusion of the children of a deceased son of the testatrix; that in pursuance of such employment defendant on said day drew a will for said testatrix, and superintended and directed the execution thereof; that in the preparation of said will, and in directing the execution thereof, the defendant was guilty of gross carelessness and negligence in the performance of his professional duties, in this: that said will was so drawn as not to legally express the desires or direction of the testatrix as to the exclusion of said grandchildren, but in such manner that the latter were permitted under the will to take of her estate; and that in directing the execution of said will this plaintiff, although named in said will as one of the devisees thereunder, was caused by the defendant to become one of the subscribing witnesses thereto, thereby rendering the provisions of said will as to the plaintiff void. It is further alleged that said John P. Buckley died before the testatrix; that thereafter, in May, 1891, said testatrix died without having revoked or altered said will; that the will was admitted to probate, and the estate of said testatrix duly administered; and that under the decree of distribution said grandchildren received one-half of said estate, amounting to $85,000, in which amount plaintiff alleges himself damaged, and for which he asks judgment against defendant.

We think the demurrer was properly sustained. In our judgment the complaint clearly fails to state a cause of action against defendant in favor of the plaintiff. It is to be observed that the action is not by the client, but by a third party, her son. It is a general doctrine, sustained by an overwhelming weight of authority, that an attorney is liable for negligence in the conduct of his professional duties, arising only from ignorance or want of care, to his client alone,—that is, to the one between whom and the attorney the contract of employment and service existed,—and not to third parties. The exceptions to this general rule, if they may be in strictness deemed such, are where the attorney has been guilty of fraud or collusion, or of a malicious or tortious act. Responsibility for a fraudulent act is independent of any contractual relation between the guilty party and the one injured; and one committing a malicious or tortious act, to the injury of another, is liable therefor, without reference to any question of privity between himself and the wronged one. Where, however, neither of these elements enters into the transaction, the rule is universal that for an injury arising from mere negligence, however gross, there must exist between the party inflicting the injury and the one injured some privity, by contract or otherwise, by reason of which the former owes some legal duty to the latter. 2 Shear. & R. Neg. §§ 562, 574; Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195, and cases therein cited; Roddy v. Railway Co., 104 Mo. 234, 15 S. W. 1112, and cases cited. In Bank v. Ward, supra, the general rule above adverted to is exhaustively discussed, and its limitations stated by Mr. Justice Clifford, for the court. That was a case where a third party sought to maintain an action against the attorney for damages resulting to him for relying upon the correctness of a defective certificate of title to a piece of real estate furnished by the attorney to a client, upon the faith of which the plaintiff had loaned money on the property. In holding that the plaintiff could not maintain the action, it is there said: "Beyond all doubt, the general rule is that the obligation of the attorney is to his client, and not to a third party, and, unless there is something in the circumstances of this case to take it out of that general rule, it seems clear that the proposition of the defendant must be sustained. Shear. & R. Neg. § 215. Conclusive support to that rule is found in several cases of high authority. Fish v. Kelly, 17 C. B. (N. S.) 194." And, after commenting upon the case of Fish v. Kelly, and the case of Robertson v. Fleming, 4 Macq. H. L. Cas. 167, 209,—from the latter of which cases Lord Wensleydale is quoted as saying that "he, only, who, by himself or another as his agent, employs the attorney to do the particular act in which the alleged neglect has taken place, can sue him for that neglect, and that that employment must be affirmed in the declaration of the suit in distinct terms,"—the learned justice proceeds: "Analogous cases involving the same principle are quite numerous, a few of which only will be noticed. They show to a demonstration that it is not every one who suffers a loss from the negligence of another that can maintain a suit on such grounds. On the contrary, 'the limit of the doctrine relating to actionable negligence,' says Beasley, C. J., 'is that the person occasioning the loss must owe a duty, arising from contract or otherwise, to the person sustaining such loss. Such a restriction on the right to sue for a want of care in the exercise of employments or the transaction of business is plainly necessary to restrain the remedy from being pushed to an impracticable extreme. There would be no bounds to actions and litigious intricacies if the ill effects of the negligence of men may be followed down the chain of results to the final effect.' Kahl v. Love, 37 N. J. Law, 5, 8. * * * Cases where fraud and collusion are alleged and proved constitute exceptions to that rule, and Parke, B., very properly admits, in the following case, that other exceptions to it exist which are as sound in principle as the judgments which establish the rule. Longmeid v. Holliday, 6 Exch. 761–767. Examples of the kind are given in that case, two of which deserve to be noticed, as they have been urged in argument to disprove the rule; but they cannot have any such effect, for the plain reason that they stand in many respects upon a different footing. 'These cases,' say the court in that opinion, 'occur where there has been a wrong done to the person, for which he would have a right of action, though no such contract had been made;' and the court gives as an illustration the patient injured by improper medicines prepared by an apothecary, or one unskillfully treated by a surgeon, where both would be liable to the injured party, even if the father or friend of the patient contracted with the wrongdoer." In Roddy v. Railway Co., supra, it is said: "The right of a third party to maintain an action for injuries resulting from a breach of contract between two contracting parties has been denied by the overwhelming weight of authority of the state and federal courts of this country and the courts of England. To hold that such actions could be maintained would not only lead to endless complications in following out cause and effect, but would restrict and embarrass the right to make contracts by burdening them with obligations and liabilities to others, which parties would not voluntarily assume;" citing Winterbottom v. Wright, 10 Mees. & W. 109, and a large number of other cases. "The rule is put upon two grounds, either of which is unquestionably sound. One ground is given by the court in the opinion in Winterbottom v. Wright, 10 Mees. & W. 109, as follows: 'If we were to hold that plaintiff could sue in such a case, there is no point at which such actions would stop. The only safe rule is to confine the right to recover to those who enter into the contract. If we go one step beyond that, there is no reason why we should not go fifty.' The other ground is thus stated in the New Jersey case above cited: 'The object of parties in inserting in their contracts specific undertakings, with respect to the work to be done, is to create an obligation inter esse. These engagements and undertakings must necessarily be subject to modifications and waiver by the contracting parties. If third persons can acquire a right in a contract, in the nature of a duty to have it performed as contracted for, the parties will be deprived of control over their own contracts. Plaintiff, not being a party to the contract, cannot maintain this action on account of injuries resulting from any breach of duty defendant owed Pickle, arising purely out of the terms of the contract between them.'"

No authority has been brought to our notice contravening the rule as stated in the foregoing citations. Some, which at first glance might be so taken, will be found upon analysis to fall within one or the other of the exceptions noted, and not to infringe upon the general doctrine. Within such class fall the cases relied upon by plaintiff to support his general right to maintain the action. This case comes strictly within the general doctrine as above stated. No fact is alleged bringing it within any of the exceptions thereto. It is not alleged that defendant did the act charged maliciously, or through any evil intent, or with any fraudulent purpose, or that he did it in any affirmative sense. The complaint proceeds solely upon the theory that it was through negligence arising either from ignorance or carelessness, or both; and this, although it may be conceded that the complaint discloses an instance of the grossest ignorance on the one hand, or unpardonable carelessness on the other, and shows very grievous injury to plaintiff as a result, does not, within the principles above announced, make a case entitling the plaintiff to maintain the action. It is claimed, however, that the action can be maintained under the rule, expressed in section 1559 of our Civil Code, that a contract made by one person with another for the benefit of a third person may be enforced by the latter, the argument being that the employment of defendant by plaintiff's mother to draw her will was clearly for plaintiff's benefit, inasmuch as the latter was one of the objects of her bounty, as expressed in her will; and a number of cases are cited which are supposed to bring the case within that rule. But, in our judgment, that provision has no application to this case. It is intended to apply to instances where the contract is made expressly for the benefit of the third person, not where the third person is or may be merely incidentally or remotely benefited as a result of such contract. Such is the language of the Code, and such will be found to be the application of the doctrine in all the cases cited by counsel, or which have come to our attention. The terms of section 1559 are: "A contract made expressly for the benefit of a third person may be enforced by him at any time before the parties thereto rescind it." This rule, we are told by Mr. Pomeroy (Rem. & Rem. Rights, § 139), was originally adopted prior to the reformed procedure, being based partly upon considerations of convenience and partly upon a liberal construction of the nature of the contract, and the purpose of which was to avoid circuity of action, and to enable the real party in interest to sue. That author proceeds to give us illustrations of its application, and each instance given is a case where the contract was in express terms made for the benefit of the third party, and by reason of which the latter became the real party in interest. No such application of the doctrine as is here contended for is even remotely hinted at. The contract between the plaintiff's mother and the defendant, which was the subject of the breach, cannot be said in any legal sense to have been expressly made for plaintiff's benefit. It was a contract for employment of defendant's services as an attorney, to draft the will of Mrs. Buckley, the immediate purpose of which was for the benefit of the latter, to enable her to make disposition of her estate in accordance with her desire. Remotely, it is true, she intended plaintiff to be benefited as a result of such contract, by providing for him in her will. Such provision, however, could create no vested right in plaintiff until the death of the testatrix. Until that event the will remained purely ambulatory, and the provision for plaintiff could be at any time changed or withdrawn. It therefore created a mere possibility in plaintiff; not a right which made him in law a privy to the contract. To hold that, by reason of the provision for plaintiff in the will, the contract is to be considered one made expressly for his benefit, is to confound the terms of the will with those of the contract. The latter alone was the subject of the breach, and by defendant's negligence in carrying out that contract the testatrix alone suffered legal injury. Although the ultimate consequential injury to plaintiff would appear to have been great, it was, so far as defendant is concerned, damnum absque injuria, against which the courts are powerless to relieve. In this view, it is not material to notice the other objections made to the complaint. The demurrer having been properly sustained, it follows that the judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

RAUER v. FAY. (No. 16,031.)

ACTION ON CONTRACT—EVIDENCE—MECHANIC'S LIEN—ASSIGNMENT.

1. A written contract, reciting an agreement "between D. * * * and certain owners of property * * * fronting on Chestnut,—½ street"; that D. should furnish materials, "and perform the work of constructing in a workmanlike manner in front of the property here represented," and "grade to official line," etc.,—is too indefinite to be admitted in evidence under a complaint which counts on a contract to grade "the south half of Chestnut street."

2. A mere right to assert a mechanic's lien is not assignable.

3. In a suit to foreclose a lien for street work by one to whom the original contract with the property owner had been assigned, a writing, signed by the original contractor, releasing defendant from all claims under the contract, was admissible, though plaintiff was unaware of such release when he took the assignment.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Walter H. Levy, Judge.

Action by J. J. Rauer against David Fay to foreclose a lien for street work. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Wm. H. Chapman, for appellant. Shadburne & Herrin, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an action to foreclose a lien for street work performed under a private contract, and in which a lien was filed pursuant to section 1191 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Plaintiff had judgment, from which and from an order denying his motion for a new trial defendant appeals.

The complaint is in the usual form; pleads a contract between defendant and one J. G. Duffy, the assignment thereof to plaintiff by Duffy, the performance of the work by plaintiff, and the filing of the lien, etc. The contract and the contents of the lien are pleaded according to their legal tenor and effect, and not in hæc verba. The complaint counts upon a contract to grade the south half of Chestnut street, from Jones street to Leavenworth street, San Francisco. The answer, after denying a number of the allegations of the complaint, proceeds to aver that prior to April, 1892, defendant had procured to be graded all the portion of Chestnut street in front of his property by third parties, and had paid therefor; that portions of the street in front of property of other parties remained ungraded; that Duffy desired defendant to sign a contract with him for the grading of the whole of Chestnut street, from Jones to Leavenworth street, for the purpose of enabling him, the said Duffy, to procure a permit from the superintendent of public streets, etc., of said city and county, for doing said unfinished grading; that Duffy thereupon agreed that, if defendant would sign said contract for said purpose, he, the said defendant, should not be held liable for the payment of any portion of the price of such grading; that thereupon defendant signed the contract for said purpose only; and that said Duffy then and there made, executed, and delivered to defendant a full acquittance and discharge from any and all liability on said contract by reason of defendant's signing the same, etc., stating in terms that the grading on the south side of the street in front of defendant's property was already done, and that plaintiff was fully informed of all the above facts before he performed any work upon the street. The answer further alleges that the contract in terms required the grading of the whole of the street, but that prior thereto the entire north half thereof had been graded by third parties. Defendant further alleges that the assignment of the contract by Duffy to plaintiff was as collateral security for a loan, and that the former still has an interest therein; that no work was done under the contract in front of defendant's property, etc. The answer also avers that Duffy commenced the work of the unfinished grading, and finished one-half thereof, before the assignment of the contract to plaintiff. The record in the case bristles with irregularities, uncertainties, and errors, for which the judgment and order appealed from must be reversed.

1. The complaint and notice of lien, as filed, are predicated upon a contract for grading the south one-half of Chestnut street, between Jones and Leavenworth. There was a written contract entered into April 25, 1892, between J. G. Duffy, as a contractor, and the defendant and others, which contract was subsequently assigned to plaintiff. This contract was offered in evidence, and is as follows: "This agreement, made and entered into this 25th day of April, A. D. 1892, by and between J. G. Duffy, of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, party of the first part, and certain owners of property, lots, and land fronting on Chestnut,—½ street, between Jones and Leavenworth streets, in the city and county above mentioned,—whose names are hereunto subscribed, each contracting severally, parties of the second part, witnesseth: That the said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the covenants of the said parties of the second part, hereinafter expressed, promise, covenant, and agree to and with the said parties of the second part that he will furnish all the materials and perform the work of constructing, in a good and workmanlike manner, in front of the property here represented, and to the satisfaction of the superintendent of public streets of said city and county. To grade to official line and grade, for the sum of five dollars ($5) per front foot. And the said parties of the second part, in consideration of the premises, each for himself or herself, and not for the others, promises, covenants, and agrees to and with the said party of the first part that he or she will pay to the said party of the first part, upon the completion of the work aforesaid, his or her pro rata share of the total cost of the above described work, together with the incidental expenses, according to the ratio that his or her frontage bears to the whole frontage here represented, and in accordance with the rule established by the street law. In witness whereof, the said parties to these presents have hereunto set their hands and seals, the day and year aforesaid. J. G. Duffy, [L. S.] Contractor.

"No. feet fronting on each street:

	Feet.	Inches.
Clara Finley, per John Finley...	137	6
Johanna H. Wright, per Selden S. Wright..................	46	0
Daniel Rogers and R. C. Bolton, executors of the last will and testament of James R. Bolton, deceased	49	6
R. G. Welsh....................	100	0"

From the foregoing it will be observed that the only direct allusion to the street is in speaking of the "certain owners of property, lots, and land fronting on Chestnut,—½ street," etc. The only obligation of the contractor is to furnish the material and perform the work of constructing in a good and workmanlike manner in front of the property represented, and to "grade to official line and grade," to the satisfaction of the superintendent of streets. What is to be graded can only be inferred. If it is the street and one-half of it, what half? The contract is silent on this question. Possibly, had the contract been set out in the complaint, with proper averments of the intention and object of the parties, it might upon proof have been so reformed as to be available as a basis for a recovery. As it stands, it is too uncertain and indefinite to entitle it to be admitted in evidence under the allegations of the complaint, and appellant's objection to its admission should have been sustained.

2. It is established by the evidence without contradiction that a portion of the work of grading the south half of the street was performed by the contractor, Duffy, before the assignment to plaintiff. Defendant testifies that one-half of it was done by Duffy. Duffy himself testified that it was much less than half, and plaintiff testified that one-tenth part only was graded; yet his notice and claim of lien was for all the work of grading the south half of the street. This question was, by the pleadings, made an issue in the case; and, under the evidence, there should have been a finding thereon. It was a material issue, for the reason that while Duffy could assign his contract, and thereby entitle the plaintiff to a personal judgment for any amount due him, he could not assign his right to a lien as security for the payment of what might be due him. A perfected lien may be assigned, or rather it passes with an assignment of the demand for which it stands as security. The mere right to take a lien in the present or future is not assignable. Mills v. Land Co., 97 Cal. 254, 32 Pac. 169. If it be urged that the court below found that plaintiff performed all the work under the contract, the answer is that there is not a particle of evidence in support of such a finding, and the evidence is positive that he did not do it all. And as this finding is assailed, as well as the failure of the court to find the share or proportion of the grading performed by Duffy and the proportion by his assignee, the plaintiff, the error is not cured. It is true that, when the court below came to pass upon defendant's application for a new trial, it denied the motion upon condition that plaintiff remit 10 per cent. of the amount of his recovery; and it is said by respondent that this deduction was on account of labor performed by the original contractor. The record is silent as to the cause of the remission; and in the face of the evidence, which showed that a small portion of the work was never completed, it may with equal propriety be inferred that the required remission was on the latter account.

3. At the trial, defendant, after proof of its execution simultaneously with the contract, offered in evidence the following paper, executed by Duffy, the contractor: "San Francisco, April 27, 1892. This is to certify that I have no claim on Mr. Fay for any work performed on Chestnut street by Mr. A. E. Buckman, myself, J. G. Duffy, or assigns, in doing the balance of grading on Chestnut street. J. G. Duffy,"—to the introduction of which plaintiff objected. The objection was sustained, and the ruling is assigned as error. We think that upon its face this document, which may be termed a "release," was admissible. It may have been executed because the street in front of defendant's premises had been graded by Buckman, the individual therein mentioned, and already paid for by defendant, or it may have been because such grading had been done, and that defendant was, as stated in the answer, only a nominal party to the contract, to enable the parties in interest to secure a sufficient number or proportion of the landowners on the block to obtain a permit from the superintendent of streets to make the improvement. This, if done with the knowledge and consent of the other contractors, was in no wise a fraud upon them. If it was a secret or side agreement between the contractor and defendant, made in fraud of the rights of the other contracting parties, that fact was open to investigation; and, upon a full inquiry, the court could have readily determined the question. The mere fact that the plaintiff was not aware of this release at the time he took an assignment of the contract is of no moment. He must be deemed to have taken such contract cum onere, subject only to the duty of defendant to notify him of any conditions not specified in the contract itself, such as its full execution, payment thereunder, etc.

4. The notice of lien as filed complied substantially with the requirements of the statute, and is deemed sufficient.

The judgment and order appealed from should be reversed, and the cause remanded, with leave to plaintiff to amend his complaint if he shall be so advised.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; HAYNES, C.

BARNES v. BARNES. (No. 15,969.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 13, 1895.)

CANCELLATION OF DEED—MARRIAGE AS A CONSIDERATION.

Where the consideration of a deed was that the grantee should marry the grantor, and live with him the rest of their joint lives, and they were married and lived as man and wife for a number of years, the husband is not entitled to a reconveyance because the wife refused to live longer with him, though, before the execution of the deed, the wife falsely represented to the husband that she was a woman of chaste character.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county.

Action by Aaron Barnes, Sr., against Jessie Burk Barnes, to compel a reconveyance of land, and for damages. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

George Pearce and W. F. Russell, for appellant. A. B. Ware, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. A demurrer to the amended complaint was sustained, and, plaintiff declining to further amend, judgment was rendered for defendant. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

The demurrer was properly sustained, and the judgment must be affirmed, because the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. There are two counts in the complaint. In the first it is averred that on July 18, 1885, plaintiff conveyed and transferred to defendant certain real and personal property, in consideration that defendant "should and would marry plaintiff, and live with him during the remainder of their joint lives"; that, in pursuance of said promise, defendant did the next day, July 19th, intermarry with plaintiff, and thenceforward lived with plaintiff as his wife continuously until some time in August, 1892, when she left plaintiff without his consent, and, as he alleges, without just cause, and has since refused to live with him. In the second count, after a restatement of the facts stated in the first count, it is also averred that, at and immediately preceding the time of said marriage, plaintiff was desirous of marrying "some virtuous, worthy, chaste, and moral woman, who would live with him during his life"; that the defendant personally, and by her friends and agents, represented and stated to him that she was such a woman; that relying upon and believing such representations and statements, and in consideration thereof, he made the said conveyance and transfer of said property; that said representations were false, and defendant was "a woman of unchaste, unworthy, and immoral character"; and that he did not discover that said representations were false until within three years next before the commencement of this action. The prayer is for a reconveyance of the property and $20,000 damages.

The consideration for the transfer was the promise of the respondent to marry the plaintiff, which promise she kept. The averment that she promised to live with him during their joint lives is of no consequence. It was included in the marriage contract itself, and its separate averment has no significance. Nor is there any legal value to the averments that respondent represented at the time of the marriage that she was a worthy and chaste woman, and that said representation was not true. Previous unchaste conduct, although concealed, does not invalidate a marriage. "Public policy pronounces otherwise, and opens marriage as the gateway to repentance and virtue." Caveat emptor governs. Schouler, Dom. Rel. § 23, and cases cited. An executed contract of marriage, accompanied by full consummation, differs in many respects from ordinary contracts. It creates a status which society is interested in maintaining. "In that contract of marriage which forms the gateway to the status of marriage, the parties take each other for better, for worse, for richer, for poorer, to cherish each other in sickness and in health. Consequently, a mistake, whether resulting from accident, or in general from fraudulent practices, in respect to character, fortune, health, or the like, does not render void what is done. * * * A man who means to act upon such representations should verify them by his own inquiries. The law presumes that he uses due caution in a matter in which his happiness for life is so materially involved, and it makes no provision for the relief of a blind credulity, however it may have been produced." 1 Bish. Mar. & Div. (6th Ed.) § 167, and cases there cited. It is true that when the woman is, at the time of the marriage, pregnant with child by another man, and the pregnancy is unknown to the husband, the marriage may be avoided; but that is because she is, at the time, incapable of bearing a child to her husband, and therefore unable to perform an important part of the marriage contract. Reynolds v. Reynolds, 3 Allen, 605; Baker v. Baker, 13 Cal. 87. But even that rule has been held not to obtain where the husband knew of the pregnancy, but had the mistaken belief that the woman had not been unchaste with any man other than himself. Foss v. Foss, 12 Allen, 26. Therefore, in the case at bar the marriage was neither void nor voidable, even if all the averments of the complaint are true; and as the marriage, which was the very highest kind of a consideration, was the consideration for the conveyance of the property, there is no ground for setting aside the conveyance, or for any other relief asked. The case put in the argument, of a woman merely going through the marriage ceremony, and then refusing to act further as a wife, has no pertinency to the case at bar. In such a case it might be held, perhaps, that the contract to marry was not actually performed; but here the marriage was fully consummated, and the relation of husband and wife maintained for years. The judgment is affirmed.

Ex parte CLARKE. (Cr. 114½.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 13, 1895.)

CONTEMPT—REFUSAL TO OBEY ORDER—REVIEW ON HABEAS CORPUS PROCEEDINGS.

1. In habeas corpus proceedings by one imprisoned for contempt, the findings of fact recited in the order of commitment cannot be questioned.

2. Under the act requiring an insolvent to file an inventory containing an accurate description of all his estate, the court, if it finds that the insolvent, after the adjudication, sold certain property which he had concealed, and received the proceeds thereof, may order him to turn such sum over to the assignee, and, on disobedience, commit for contempt.

Department 1. Habeas corpus proceedings by Alfred Clarke, imprisoned for contempt. Writ discharged.

Alfred Clarke, in pro. per. Warren Olney, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The petitioner herein was adjudicated an insolvent upon the application of certain of his creditors, and thereafter, under the order of the court, filed a schedule and inventory, as required by the insolvent act. Upon the application of the assignee of the insolvent, and after notice to him, the superior court found that certain personal property belonging to the insolvent's estate had been concealed by him from his assignee, and sold subsequent to his adjudication, and that he had received therefor the sum of $275, which he had appropriated to his own use, and on December 4, 1895, made an order that he pay the said sum of money to the assignee on or before the 6th day of December, 1895. A copy of this order was served upon him on the same day that it was made; and on the 6th day of December, and again on the 7th, a demand in writing was made upon him by the assignee that he pay to him the said sum of money. Upon his failure to make such payment, the assignee served him with written notice that on the 10th day of December he would move the court for an order adjudging him guilty of contempt for not obeying said order. The matter came up for hearing at the time fixed in said notice, the petitioner appearing in person and also by attorney; and, after hearing evidence and argument thereon, the court found that the petitioner herein had willfully and contumaciously refused to obey the order of December 4th, requiring him to pay said sum of money, and adjudged him guilty of contempt by reason of his willful disobedience and violation of said order, and directed that he be committed to the custody of the sheriff, and imprisoned in the county jail until he should pay the said sum of $275 to the assignee; and, being taken into custody by the sheriff, he sued out the present writ.

The findings of fact recited in the order of commitment must be held to have been authorized by the evidence before the court, and are not subject to controversy in this proceeding.

The insolvent act requires the insolvent to file in the court a schedule of his debts and liabilities, and an inventory containing an accurate description of all his estate. The condition upon which the discharge in insolvency is to be granted is that the petitioner has surrendered all his property, and his original petition to be adjudged an insolvent not only imposes the obligation, but also implies an agreement by him that he will make such surrender. There is no distinction in procedure between voluntary and involuntary insolvency after an adjudication has been made. By section 47 (Laws 1880, p. 94), the insolvent is at all times subject to an examination by the court in relation to his property or estate. If, upon such examination, the insolvent shall admit that he has omitted certain property from his inventory, and that he has it in his possession, the court has the same authority to direct him to deliver this property to the assignee as it had to direct him to file the inventory in the first place; and, for the purpose of this proceeding, a finding of the court that the petitioner concealed this property, and received the proceeds of its sale, is to be regarded with the same effect as would an admission of that fact by the insolvent. Ex parte Hollis, 59 Cal. 405, referred to at the argument, differs essentially from the present case, in that in that case Hollis was not the insolvent, but claimed to hold the property adverse to the insolvent and to all the world, by virtue of a title antedating the proceeding in insolvency; and it was held that, as he was not a party to the proceeding in insolvency, the court could not try the issue of his title in a summary proceeding to punish him for contempt for not delivering it up. In the present case, however, there was no claimant of property before the court, other than the insolvent himself; and a court would be powerless, indeed, if it could not compel the insolvent whose proceedings were before it for adjudication to deliver his property to the assignee, or to punish him for contempt for disobedience to its order.

The court was not deprived of authority to punish the petitioner for violating this order by reason of having on December 4th caused him to be imprisoned for contempt for 24 hours. The contempt for which he was then punished is distinct from that for which the present order was made, and was committed prior to that date; whereas the offense for which he is now under punishment is the violation of an order made on that day, and which, by its terms, could not be made the basis of a contempt until after December 6th. The writ is discharged, and the prisoner remanded.

In re CONNORS' ESTATE. (S. F. 4.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—APPOINTMENT.

On a contest between the public administrator and the father of an intestate for letters of administration the public administrator and the wife of the father testified that the father's reputation for providence and sobriety was bad. The father denied that he drank to excess, and a number of witnesses testified that they had known the father for years, and considered him a sober and industrious man. Held, that an order granting letters of administration to the father would not be disturbed on the ground that the evidence showed that the father was "improvident." Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1365, 1369.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; W. G. Lorigan, Judge.

Contest between Philip Connors and J. K. Secord for letters of administration on the estate of James Connors, deceased. From an order granting letters to Connors, Secord appeals. Affirmed.

J. J. O'Toole, for appellant. William A. Bowden, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. James Connors died intestate in the county of Santa Clara, leaving as his heirs at law his father and mother and two sisters. In due time the father, Philip Connors, filed in the superior court of that county his petition, alleging that the estate of the decedent consisted of personal property, and the value of it did not exceed the sum of $1,500, and praying that letters of administration upon the estate be issued to him. Thereafter J. K. Secord, the public administrator of the county, filed his petition, alleging that the father of the decedent, by reason of his improvidence, was incompetent to serve as administrator, and that the mother of the decedent, by reason of the fact that she asserted a claim to all of said estate, was incompetent to serve as administratrix; that by reason of the disqualification of the father and mother of the decedent to administer the estate the petitioner was entitled to act as administrator thereof; and praying that letters of administration be issued to him. The two petitions came on regularly for hearing at the same time, and, "the court having heard the testimony of witnesses duly sworn and examined on the part of both said petitioners," it was ordered that the petition of J. K. Secord be denied, and that the petition of Philip Connors be granted, and that letters of administration be issued to him upon his giving a bond in the sum of $3,000. From this order petitioner Secord appealed.

Two points only are made for a reversal. They are: (1) That the order was not justified by the evidence, because it was shown thereby that Connors was incompetent to execute the trust, by reason of his improvidence; (2) that no findings were filed. Under our statute the father was entitled to be appointed administrator of the estate of his deceased son, unless he was "adjudged by the court incompetent to execute the duties of the trust by reason of drunkenness, improvidence, or want of understanding or integrity." Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1365, 1369. In support of the first point appellant called two witnesses. P. A. Donavan testified: "I know Philip Connors, and have known him for a number of years. His general reputation for providence, industry, and sobriety is bad. I never saw him intoxicated but once. I never heard of his having any trouble except with me. * * * I am not friendly with Philip Connors, and have not been for some time." Mrs. Bridget Connors testified: That she had been married to Philip Connors 25 or 26 years, and had separated from him. That "Connors always squandered nearly all he earned for liquor. At one time I gave him a hundred dollars to pay the funeral expenses of his dead sister. He did not pay them, but squandered the money for liquor. He would work during the day, and at night go out to the saloons, and stay out nearly all night. When he would return home he would be intoxicated. He did most of his drinking and carousing at night. He has contributed nothing to the support of myself and family for the past five years. The general reputation of Philip Connors for providence, industry, and sobriety is bad." On the other hand, the respondent was called as a witness in his own behalf, and testified that he had resided in the city of San José for 20 years; that he bought a lot in that city nearly 20 years ago, and a few years later built a house on it, and that the purchase price was paid entirely by him; that for the past five years he has been engaged in the express business, and had a horse, wagon, and harness, which he purchased and paid for himself; that he resided alone in his house, and kept it in as good condition as he was able; that he always remained at home in the evenings; that he never was intoxicated in his life, and seldom drank intoxicating liquors; that while his wife and family resided with him he always supported them entirely with his earnings; and that "I am entirely out of debt, have paid for my house and lot, and do not owe a cent to anybody." And, on being recalled, he further testified: "I never squandered my money or my earnings in drink or in any other way. I never squandered the money paid for my dead sister's funeral expenses, or at all. I worked during the day, but never went to the saloons and stayed nearly all night, and never returned home intoxicated. I never drank excessively at night, or at all, and never caroused. My earnings were spent at home." Seven other witnesses were called for respondent. One of them testified that respondent purchased from him the lot, which he now owns, some 20 years ago, and that "I know his habits, and consider him a first-rate, industrious man." Four of them testified that they had known respondent for the past five years; that they had never seen him intoxicated; saw him about town on his wagon; had only business dealings with him; and that he seemed to be an honest, sober, and industrious man. And two of them testified that they had known respondent for five years; that he came to their store to buy provisions; that they did not think they had ever seen him intoxicated; that he seemed to be an honest, sober, and industrious man, and that he always paid his bills.

Improvidence is defined to be: "Want of care or foresight in the management of property." 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 321. And in Coope v. Lowerre, 1 Barb. Ch. 45, it is said: "The improvidence which the framers of the Revised Statutes had in contemplation as a ground of exclusion is that want of care or foresight in the management of property which would be likely to render the estate and effects of the intestate unsafe, and liable to be lost or diminished in value by improvidence, in case administration thereof should be committed to such improvident person." Whether the respondent was incompetent to serve as administrator by reason of his improvidence or not was a question of fact to be determined by the court below in view of all the evidence before it, and its determination cannot be disturbed on appeal upon mere technical grounds.

It is claimed for appellant that improvidence is an attribute of character, which can only be proved or disproved by evidence of general reputation; and that all the evidence introduced by respondent to disprove the charge of improvidence was inadmissible, and should be disregarded. We do not think this claim can be sustained. The general rule undoubtedly is, as stated, that "character is a fact, which is proved by another fact,—general reputation. It cannot be shown by evidence of particular and specific facts, but may be proved by negative testimony." 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 114. The evidence of respondent appears to have been offered and received without any objection, and, in our opinion, it was sufficient to meet and overcome that offered by appellant. It was not alone made up of particular and specific facts, but tended directly and strongly to negative the charge made by appellant.

As to the second point, conceding, without deciding, that in a case of this kind findings are necessary, still the appellant was in no way "aggrieved" by the failure of the court to make findings. The rule is that the failure to find on a material issue will not warrant a reversal of the judgment if the findings omitted must have been adverse to the appellant. People v. Center, 66 Cal. 551, 5 Pac. 263, and 6 Pac. 481; Murphy v. Bennett, 68 Cal. 528, 9 Pac. 738; Demartin v. Demartin, 85 Cal 75, 24 Pac. 594. Here it is apparent that the court must have believed the witnesses for respondent, and therefore, if findings had been made, they must have been adverse to appellant. It follows that the order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reason given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

PREY v. STANLEY. (S. F. 40.)[1]

ACTION BY MARRIED WOMAN—SEPARATE PROPERTY—TRUSTS—RESTRAINT ON ALIENATION—ESTOPPEL.

1. As under Civ. Code, § 162, realty acquired as a gift by a married woman remains her separate property, the filing of a declaration of homestead for the benefit of herself and husband, even if it transmuted the title into a joint tenancy, did not preclude the wife from maintaining in her own name an action to quiet title; Code Civ. Proc. § 384, authorizing joint tenants to bring actions severally.

2. An agreement reciting that defendant furnished as a gift the purchase money for land which was conveyed to his mother, and that defendant was to be considered as the manager of said land for the benefit of his mother, did not operate to make defendant a trustee of the title for his mother.

3. An agreement reciting that defendant furnished as a gift the purchase money for land conveyed to his mother, and that his mother agreed that the land should not be conveyed without defendant's consent, is within Civ. Code, § 711, providing that conditions restraining alienation, when repugnant to the interest created, are void.

4. Though said agreement was signed by defendant's sister, she was not thereby estopped to question the validity of said agreement.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Walter H. Levy, Judge.

Action by Sarah Prey against W. H. Stanley to quiet title. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Nagle & Nagle, for appellant. Shadburne & Herrin, for respondent.

BRITT, C. Action to quiet title to a parcel of land in the city and county of San Francisco. Plaintiff is the wife of one Oscar Prey. Defendant is her brother. She claims title through Mary J. Stanley, the mother of herself and defendant, in virtue of a deed of the premises executed to her by said Mary J. Stanley, February 29, 1892, in consideration of love and affection. Judgment was for plaintiff.

1. On November 29, 1892, plaintiff filed in the recorder's office a declaration of homestead on the premises for the joint benefit of herself and her said husband. This action was begun June 15, 1893. It is alleged in the complaint that the land in question is plaintiff's separate property. Appellant maintains that there is a defect of parties, in that said Oscar Prey should have been joined with his wife as a plaintiff. Code Civ. Proc. 370. The ground assigned for this view is that upon the declaration of the homestead the land ceased to be her separate property, and became the joint property of herself and her husband. Conceding, for present purposes only, that the declaration of homestead transmuted the title into a joint tenancy, as claimed by appellant, it is yet not perceived that the result contended for would follow. Whatever interest the wife has in the land was acquired by gift, and is, therefore, her separate property. Civ. Code, § 162. For the enforcement or protection of such right, even if that of a joint tenant only, she is now permitted to sue alone (Code Civ. Proc. 370, 384); and as against one having no interest in the land her right, for the purposes of this action, extends to the whole thereof. The husband was not a necessary party.

2. On January 25, 1892, one Murphy conveyed certain land, including that in suit, to said Mary J. Stanley, in consideration of the sum of $2,500, which was paid by the defendant, W. H. Stanley; the transaction being intended as a gift from the latter to his mother. Thereafter, on February 23, 1892, a contract in writing was executed, naming as the parties thereto said Mary J. Stanley and W. H. Stanley, and reciting such acquisition of the land by her, and that the purchase money for the same was furnished as a gift by said W. H. Stanley. It then set forth a covenant on the part of said Mary J. that no part of such land "shall be sold or conveyed * * * without the consent" of said W. H. Stanley; that he was to be known and considered as the manager and superintendent of the land described for the interest and benefit of said Mary J., to whom was to be paid all the income thereof; and that, in case of her death, the property should be divided between her lawful heirs, "who are now at this time Sarah Prey and W. H. Stanley." This instrument was signed by the plaintiff as well as by Mary J. and W. H. Stanley, though plaintiff was not named a party in the body thereof. Mary J. Stanley made the deed of February 29, 1892, to the plaintiff, without defendant's consent. It is argued that the contract of February 23d operated to make W. H. Stanley a trustee of the title for his mother, but there is nothing in its language to warrant this contention. To say that he should be manager and superintendent for her benefit no more made him a trustee having an interest as such in the land than if he had been named her steward, collector, or attorney. The question, then, is whether the agreement of Mary J. Stanley not to convey the land without her son's consent was valid. If it was, plaintiff has no title; if it was not, her title is clear as against defendant. Conditions in restraint of alienation when repugnant to an interest created in property are void. Civ. Code, § 711. In consonance with this principle it was held in Murray v. Green, 64 Cal. 363, 28 Pac. 118, that a clause in a deed restraining the grantee from conveying without the grantor's consent, the title granted being the fee, was repugnant to the interest created by the deed, and void. In the present case the restriction is not contained as a condition in the instrument by which the estate passed to Mary J. Stanley, but occurs in the form of a covenant on her part in a separate contract, which, as appears from its recitals, was intended to operate as a qualification of the absolute conveyance from Murphy to her. But the rule does not depend upon the mere form in which the restraint is imposed. It avoids as well covenants of the grantee against alienation as conditions of like nature imposed by the grantor. Such covenants, if not within the letter of section 711, Civ. Code, are yet obnoxious to the policy of which that section is a partial expression. Greenh. Pub. Pol. 606, note 2 et seq.; Hunt v. Wright, 47 N. H. 400, and cases cited. The parties to the contract of February 23, 1892, seem to have made the mistake of leaving the absolute title in Mrs. Stanley, and at the same time attempting to destroy an inseparable incident of such title. They could not thus create a mongrel estate unknown to the law, and the attempt was abortive. Murray v. Green, 64 Cal. 367, 28 Pac. 118; Doebler's Appeal, 64 Pa. St. 9; Mandlebaum v. McDonell, 29 Mich. 92.

It follows also that the claim of appellant that plaintiff is estopped by reason of her signature to the contract of February 23, 1892, cannot be sustained. The restraint sought to be imposed on Mary J. Stanley's power of alienation being void as against the policy of the law, the plaintiff's assent thereto could not estop her to allege its invalidity. Greenh. Pub. Pol. 115; 2 Pars. Cont. p. 789, note i. No other points made require special notice. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; HAYNES, C.

VANCE v. RICHARDSON. (No. 16,016.)[1]

JURORS—WAIVER OF CHALLENGE—ASSAULT AND BATTERY—EVIDENCE.

1. In a civil case it appeared that the parties, without objection, alternately exercised their peremptory challenges while the jurors were being examined, and before the panel was filled; that when it was afterwards filled, on being asked by the court if he was satisfied with the jury, plaintiff stated that he waived his right to challenge for the present; and that defendant then waived any challenge. Held, that the court properly refused to afterwards allow plaintiff a peremptory challenge.

2. In a civil action for assault and battery, evidence of the general reputation of defendant for peace and quietness is not admissible.

3. Where a party as a witness testifies at length to conversations with the opposite party, it is not error to sustain an objection when he is asked by his attorney to "state that whole conversation."

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; G. W. Hunter, Judge.

Action by Emma Vance against Charles Richardson for assault and battery. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. Turner, for appellant. Frank McGowan and O. C. Gregor, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. Appeal by defendant from a judgment rendered for plaintiff. The action is to recover damages for an alleged assault and battery committed by appellant upon the person of respondent. The jury gave damages in the sum of $450. The only questions involved relate to certain alleged errors of law.

Appellant contends that the court erred in a ruling concerning his right of peremptorily challenging jurors. It seems that during the examination of the jurors, and before the panel was filled, each party had alternately exercised peremptory challenges. When the panel was completed, it was appellant's turn to challenge, and his attorney said: "I will pass our peremptory for the present." The court asked him if he was satisfied with the jury. Counsel replied that it was his right then to challenge, but that he waived it for the present; that, if plaintiff exercised his right, the panel would be filled again; and that, if plaintiff did not exercise a challenge, then appellant would, nevertheless, have the right to challenge another juror. The court informed him that the court did not understand it that way; and that if he did not then exercise his peremptory challenge, and the plaintiff should express his satisfaction with the jury, appellant would not afterwards be allowed another peremptory challenge. Appellant excepted. The attorney for respondent then said: "I am satisfied with the jury." The attorney for appellant then said: "We now ask the court to permit us to exercise our right of peremptory challenge." And the court said: "I will deny the request." Appellant excepted. That was all that occurred. Appellant did not offer a challenge to any designated juror. Assuming that the above presents a definite ruling that can be reviewed, and not a mere abstraction, we see no error committed by the court, and certainly none of which appellant can justly complain. It has been said several times that it is the proper practice to have 12 jurors in the box before requiring the parties to exercise their peremptory challenges, and then to call another juror whenever a peremptory challenge shall have been exercised. People v. Scoggins, 37 Cal. 679; Taylor v. Railroad Co., 45 Cal. 323; Silcox v. Lang, 78 Cal. 118, 20 Pac. 297. Then the parties must challenge alternately, as provided by section 601, Code Civ. Proc. In the case at bar the parties, without objection by either, adopted the practice of alternately exercising their peremptory challenges while the jurors were being examined, and before the panel was filled. Under this method, when the panel was filled, it was appellant's turn, as he admits, to challenge; and, if he desired to do so, he ought to have exercised his right then. He does not complain that the court forced him to challenge before the panel was full. He could not have made such a complaint, because the panel was full. We do not see, therefore, how he was prejudiced, or that he has any just right to complain. He merely sought an advantage to which he was not entitled. There is nothing in this view inconsistent with any of the authorities cited.

[1] Rehearing denied.

The court did not err in refusing to allow testimony of the general reputation of appellant for peace and quiet. The general rule is that in civil actions evidence of the good character of the defendant is not admissible. Wharton, having stated that good character may be shown in criminal cases where life or liberty is at stake, says: "But whether it be because in a civil case, between two private parties, both parties stand in this respect on the same footing, or whether it be because most civil suits grow out of, or may be supposed to grow out of, honest misconceptions of rights, English and American courts have agreed in holding that, so far as it concerns the proofs in civil issues, the character of either party is, as a rule, irrelevant." 1 Whart. Ev. § 47. The author then notes the few exceptions to the rule, which consist mostly of cases where the character of some person is the very issue involved; as, for instance, the character of the employé where the employer is sued for the former's negligence. Character for chastity in certain actions is admissible. Some courts have held that in a libel suit the plaintiff may prove his good character, and also in actions for certain kinds of fraud; and there are other exceptions to the rule not necessary to be here mentioned. Greenleaf states the rule in this language: "In civil cases such evidence is not admitted, unless the nature of the action involves the general character of the party, or goes directly to affect it." 1 Greenl. Ev. § 54. But an action for assault and battery is not one of the exceptions; and both Wharton (section 47, supra) and Greenleaf (volume 1, § 55) say, affirmatively, that evidence of character is not admissible in such action. The following are a few of the many adjudicated cases in which it has been so held: Elliott v. Russell, 92 Ind. 526; Gebhard v. Burkett, 57 Ind. 378; Porter v. Seiler, 23 Pa. St. 424; Soule v. Bruce, 67 Me. 584; Givens v. Bradley. 3 Bibb, 192. Section 2053, Code Civ. Proc., is merely a concise statement of the rule as it is to be found in the text-books and judicial decisions.

When appellant was on the witness stand, and after he had testified at length to many things, including conversations with respondent, his counsel said to him at a certain point in the examination: "State that whole conversation." And to this an objection by respondent was sustained. Appellant contends that this ruling was error; but the only argument he makes on the point is founded on sections 1854 and 2048, Code Civ. Proc., which sections refer entirely to cross-examinations, and have no relevancy to this point. The conversation might have involved a mass of matter not relevant; and the ruling was not prejudicial, for, if appellant's counsel had anything further to prove that was relevant with respect to any declaration of respondent, he could have called the attention of his witness to it. He continued to testify to further occurrences and conversations between respondent and himself.

There are no other points which need special notice. We do not think that the court erred in any ruling upon instructions asked by the parties, or in the instructions given on its own motion. Other minor points are of no importance. The judgment is affirmed.

CURTISS v. BACHMAN et al. (No. 15,769.)

INJUNCTION—BOND—COUNSEL FEES.

Counsel fees and costs incurred upon an order to show cause why a restraining order should not be continued, and upon a subsequent unsuccessful motion to dissolve the injunction, and for the preparation and defense of the main action, cannot be recovered in an action on a bond conditioned to pay such damages as might be sustained by reason of the injunction, though the action was eventually dismissed. McFarland, J., dissenting.

Action by Gilbert L. Curtiss against one Bachman and others on a bond. Defendants had judgment, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. F. Hanlon, for appellant. W. B. Sharp, for respondents

HARRISON, J. In an action brought in the superior court of San Francisco against the appellant by one Nettie Gilman, a preliminary injunction was issued by the court, and the respondents herein were the sureties in an undertaking given on her behalf upon the issuing of said injunction. The condition of the undertaking is: "In case said injunction shall issue and remain in full force and effect, the said plaintiff will pay to the said parties enjoined such damages, not exceeding the sum of $5,000, as such parties may by reason of the said injunction sustain, if said superior court finally decide that the said plaintiff was not entitled thereto." The present action was brought to recover from the respondents the damage sustained by reason of the issuance of the said injunction. Upon a former appeal in this cause (84 Cal. 216, 24 Pac. 379), a judgment that had been rendered in favor of the plaintiff was reversed, with directions to sustain the defendants' demurrer to the complaint. Upon the going down of the remittitur the plaintiff amended his complaint, and the cause was tried by the court without a jury, who found that the plaintiff had not sustained any damage by reason of the issuance or continuance of the injunction, and rendered judgment for the defendants. The plaintiff moved for a new trial upon the ground that this finding was not sustained by the evidence, and upon the denial of his motion has appealed therefrom, and also from the judgment.

The action of Gilman v. Curtis was for the purpose of determining the ownership of a certain policy of life insurance, and was commenced March 26, 1880. On the next day the court granted a restraining order by which the plaintiff herein was enjoined from collecting the money due upon the policy, and from transferring or delivering the policy or the money due thereon to any other person, and was directed to show cause on a succeeding day why the order should not be continued in full force until the final judgment and decree in the case. An undertaking in the sum of $500 was executed by the respondents herein upon the issuance of the said restraining order. On April 16th this order to show cause came on for hearing, and the court on that day ordered that the said restraining order be continued in full force and effect until the termination of the suit. Subsequently the defendant, appellant herein, moved to dissolve the injunction, and on July 30th his motion was denied. On the same day the court ordered that the plaintiff file a bond in the sum of $5,000, and thereupon the undertaking sued on herein was executed by the sureties to the original undertaking. The cause was tried in April, 1881, and judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff. That judgment was afterwards reversed by this court (66 Cal. 116, 4 Pac. 1094), and upon a new trial a judgment was rendered by the court dismissing the action.

The damages for which the plaintiff seeks to recover herein, and of which he gave evidence at the trial, consisted of moneys which he had paid to his attorneys, the costs incurred in the action of Gilman v. Curtis, and the loss of time and injury to his business necessitated by the suit. We are of the opinion, however, that neither of these elements of damage is within the terms of the obligation of the defendants, and that the plaintiff failed to establish any right of action against them. The liability of the defendants is measured by the terms of their contract, and in the present action is limited to the damages that the plaintiff might sustain "by reason of the said injunction." Whatever expenses he was subjected to by reason of the suit, as distinguished from those sustained by reason of the injunction, are not damages within this contract of the defendants; and, as it rested upon the plaintiff to establish a cause of action against them, it was necessary for him to show, not only that he had sustained damage, but that the damage which he had sustained was caused solely by reason of the injunction.

Counsel fees incurred by a defendant by reason of a preliminary injunction are recognized as a part of the damages for which he has a right to indemnity, and are within the undertaking which the plaintiff is required to give as a condition of procuring the injunction; but only such counsel fees as may be incurred after the injunction has been issued, and prior to the determination of the action, can be considered as within the rule. If the defendant, instead of attempting to remove the temporary injunction, seeks rather to prevent the issuance of a permanent injunction, or directs his efforts to defeating the action of the plaintiff, the expense of counsel fees thus incurred is an incident of the suit, and is not recoverable as damages sustained by reason of the injunction. "The allowance of counsel fees in suits on injunction bonds is exceptional, and should not be carried beyond the point to which former decisions have taken it." Mitchell v. Hawley, 79 Cal. 301, 21 Pac. 833; San Diego Water Co. v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co., 101 Cal. 216, 35 Pac. 651. Counsel fees rendered in resisting a motion for a preliminary injunction are not within the terms of the undertaking, since they are not expenses made necessary "by reason of the injunction" (Sweet v. Mowry, 71 Hun, 381, 25 N. Y. Supp. 32; Whiteside v. Noyac Cottage Association, 84 Hun, 555, 32 N. Y. Supp. 724), but are expenses incurred in the action as much as are counsel fees rendered in attempting to prevent the issuance of a permanent injunction (Thurston v. Haskell, 81 Me. 303, 17 Atl. 73); and an unsuccessful motion to dissolve an injunction does not authorize a recovery for the expense of counsel fees in making the motion (Langdon v. Gray, 22 Hun, 511; Randall v. Carpenter, 88 N. Y. 293). An exception to this rule is recognized when the court itself suspends its decision upon the motion until the hearing of the cause. Andrews v. Woolen Co., 50 N. Y. 282.

The counsel fees of which evidence was offered at the trial herein, other than those rendered in preparation for the trial or in defense of the action, were those rendered for the plaintiff upon the order to show cause why the restraining order should not be continued until the termination of the suit, and those rendered upon a subsequent unsuccessful motion on his part to dissolve the injunction. It is well settled that the services of counsel rendered in the trial of the cause are not a portion of the damage sustained by reason of the injunction. Bustamente v. Stewart, 55 Cal. 115. When the plaintiff at the commencement of the action applied for the injunction, the court deemed it proper that the defendant should be heard before granting the writ, and made an order to that effect. Upon this application the judge was authorized to restrain the defendant "in the meantime." Code Civ. Proc. § 530. The provision in the order restraining the defendant "until the further order of the court" had no other meaning than "in the meantime," or until the decision upon the order to show cause. Sweet v. Mowry, supra. When this order to show cause was made upon the defendant, it was at his option to appear upon the day fixed for the hearing and resist the motion at that time, or to allow an injunction pendente lite to be granted, and seek at the trial to defeat a recovery by the plaintiff, and prevent a permanent injunction. The services of counsel that were employed by him to resist the motion were rendered by virtue of the order to show cause why the injunction should not be granted, and not by reason of the injunction. Sweet v. Mowry, supra. The restraining order made at the commencement of the action would expire by its own terms at the hearing of this motion, and, although it was then continued until the termination of the suit, the order so continuing it was in fact a new and distinct restraint, and itself constituted the preliminary injunction asked by the plaintiff (San Diego Water Co. v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co., supra), and for which the undertaking sued on was given.

It is not shown by the record upon what grounds the subsequent motion to dissolve the injunction was made, or was denied by the court; but as the preliminary injunction was granted upon notice to the defendant, and after hearing thereon, the proper course for the defendant to take was to appeal from the order (Mining Co. v. Parker, 16 Cal. 83), and the court in all probability denied the motion upon the ground that the defendant was not authorized to make it. "Costs and counsel fees on a successful motion to dissolve an injunction are considered the natural consequences of its existence, and are properly damages; but there is no reason why the party obtaining the injunction should pay the expenses of ill-directed experiments to get rid of it. To allow such a charge would be a premium for the employment of unskillful counsel." Childs v. Lyons, 3 Rob. (N. Y.) 704. Especially is this rule applicable if the services were rendered upon a motion unauthorized either in practice or by statute. It does not follow that, because the plaintiff failed to sustain his action at the trial, the preliminary injunction was not properly issued. It is one of the provisional remedies authorized by the Code of Civil Procedure, and the right of a party to such remedy is the same as is the right to a permanent injunction; but, if he is to be mulcted in damages for every unsuccessful attempt to secure its dissolution, the privilege would be a barren one. If the plaintiff obtains an injunction ex parte, and before the hearing of the cause the defendant can secure its dissolution, either by reason of a defect in the original application, or upon a counter showing on his part, he thereby obtains a decision of the court that the plaintiff was not entitled to this provisional remedy, even as a matter of discretion (see Hicks v. Michael, 15 Cal. 107); but if, instead of seeking such decision of the court, he prefers to defeat the plaintiff in the action, he waives his right to recover from the sureties any damages that he may sustain by reason of its issuance.

It does not appear that any portion of the expenses contained in the cost bills offered in evidence was incurred except upon the trial of the action; and the costs incurred upon the appeal and subsequent to the rendition of the judgment in the superior court are not within the terms of the undertaking. Lambert v. Haskell, 80 Cal. 611, 22 Pac. 327. The loss of time and injury to the business of the appellant were clearly outside of the undertaking of the sureties.

Certain exceptions to rulings excluding evidence were taken by the appellant, but, as the evidence offered related only to such damages as were not recoverable from the respondents, the exclusion was proper. The judgment and order are affirmed.

WESTERN GRANITE & MARBLE CO. v. SOUC. (No. 16,002.)

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—POWERS.

Defendant instructed her agent to have a coping constructed around a lot in a cemetery similar to one constructed around another lot. The agent drew specifications for such coping, which called for a different stone than that used on the other coping, to get bids for the work. Defendant subsequently told the agent to proceed with it as he would do for himself. Held, that the agent had authority to authorize the contractor to construct the coping of the same kind of stone used in the other coping, instead of that called for by the specifications.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; John Reynolds, Judge.

Action by the Western Granite & Marble Company against M. F. Souc. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Bull & Cleary (A. W. Crandall, of counsel), for appellant. D. W. Burchard, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to recover $470, the alleged price agreed to be paid by defendant to plaintiff for the construction by the latter of a granite coping around the burial lot of the former. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiff for said amount of money, for which judgment was entered. Defendant appeals.

We do not think it necessary to notice separately the various rulings and instructions of the court, for the errors assigned all turn upon one proposition of appellant, which cannot be maintained, namely, that the scope of the agency of the appellant's agent, Lenzen, extended only to the drawing of plans and specifications for the coping, making a contract in accordance therewith, and seeing that such contract was complied with. The evidence shows that there was coping in the cemetery around a lot of one Cooney which pleased the appellant, and that she authorized Lenzen to have one constructed around her lot similar to and of the same quality of material as the Cooney coping. In order to get bids for the work, Lenzen prepared "a sketch" of some "kind of specifications," upon which the contractors bid. The respondent was the lowest bidder, for $470, of which bid appellant was informed, and with which she was satisfied. That was in May, and she said that she was not in a hurry to have the work done; but two or three months afterwards she told him to have the work done, saying to him: "You go on and do as you would for yourself." The work was done, and the coping was like the Cooney coping, and of the same quality of material; and she saw it just before it was completed, and expressed herself satisfied. Her subsequent refusal to pay for it seems to have been the result of a suggestion of a discharged employé of respondent; and the only objection then made to the sufficiency of the work that needs notice was that the rock used was not what is called "Penryn granite." When Lenzen drew up his sketch of specifications for the convenience of bidders, he erroneously supposed that Penryn granite had been used in the Cooney coping, and he therefore put "Penryn" into that sketch. The contract with the respondent was a verbal contract, by which respondent was to "duplicate the Cooney job." The Cooney coping was made of rock called "Loomis granite"; and respondent informed Lenzen that he would use the Loomis rock, and Lenzen agreed to it. The evidence shows that there is no special difference between the Penryn and the Loomis granite, both being on the same ledge. Moreover, the appellant, as her own witness testifies, was told that the stone used in her coping was not Penryn before it was set up. At all events, even assuming that the sketch of specifications and the bid thereon were a contract, and that the use of the rock called "Loomis" was not a compliance with it, we are satisfied, from the evidence, that Lenzen had full authority from appellant to make or change any contract, provided he kept in view the construction of a coping similar to and of the same quality of material as the said Cooney coping. The judgment and order denying a motion for a new trial are affirmed.

SYMONS et al. v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (No. 15,968.)[1]

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—VACATING STREETS—PROCEEDINGS OF BOARD OF SUPERVISORS—REVIEW BY COURT.

1. Act March 6, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 70), confers on the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco power to open and close streets "whenever the public convenience or interest may require." Held, that the determination by such board whether the public interest or convenience may require certain streets to be opened or closed cannot be reviewed by the courts.

2. Landowners cannot maintain an action to review the action of the board of supervisors of a city and county in vacating certain streets, none of which are adjacent to any of the petitioners' lands, where they do not show that they have sustained any injury special to themselves, or which is different, except in degree, from that sustained by other owners of land in the vicinity of such streets.

and closed. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

J. C. Bates, for appellants. H. T. Creswell, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. The board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, purporting to act under the authority conferred by the act of March 6, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 70), passed an order December 28, 1892, by which certain streets lying between Channel and Fourth streets on the north, and Mariposa street on the south, were "declared to be closed up and vacated." In April, 1894, the plaintiffs herein filed a petition in the superior court of San Francisco, making the city and county and its board of supervisors respondents therein, praying that the proceedings of the board of supervisors be reviewed, and that the order aforesaid be annulled, upon the ground that said order was without and in excess of the jurisdiction of said body to pass. The respondents filed a demurrer to the petition, which was sustained, and from the judgment entered thereon the plaintiffs have appealed.

In support of their right to ask the court to review the action of the board of supervisors, the plaintiffs allege in their petition that they are the owners of seven distinct parcels of land in San Francisco (designating them by boundaries), upon which they have paid taxes, and that, as such taxpayers, they "have a right to use in common all the public streets in that vicinity in said city and county"; and that by the passing of the aforesaid order "there is forever closed up from public use one of the main streets and means of convenient approach from the central part of the city to the Potrero, where your petitioners' said lands are situate, with various other streets and avenues heretofore opened and duly dedicated to public use, and named and laid down on various official maps of said city and county as public streets." It does not appear from the complaint that any of the streets included in the order have been in fact closed to travel, or that there is any obstruction to as free use as was had prior to the passage of the order; the only averment in this respect being that the supervisors in form passed an order "whereby there is forever closed up from public use one of the main streets." If it be assumed, however, that the streets are closed, we are of the opinion that the averments of the petition do not show that the plaintiffs have such an interest in the matter complained of as to entitle them to be heard in a proceeding of this nature. None of the streets which are included in the order are adjacent to any of the lands of the petitioners. Six of the parcels of land which they have set out in their petition as the basis of their right to be heard abut upon Pennsylvania street, and the other upon Iowa street. The order does not purport to affect Pennsylvania street, and that portion of Iowa street included in the order is more than two blocks distant from the land of the plaintiff fronting on that street. The plaintiffs do not show that they have sustained any injury special to themselves, or which is different, except in degree, from that sustained by other owners of land in the vicinity of the streets included in the order. It does not appear that by the closing of these streets they are deprived of access to their lands, and the averment in this respect that "one of the main streets and means of convenient approach from the central part of the city to the Potrero" is closed by reason of the order, implies that there are other means of convenient approach to their lands; and, although they also aver that the effect of the order is to close "various other streets and avenues heretofore opened and duly dedicated to public use," they do not claim that any of these streets are even serviceable to them in approaching their lands. Owners of lands who are only remotely affected by the proceeding, and who sustain no special injury different from that sustained by others in that vicinity, are not authorized to call upon the officers of the city to justify their acts, or to invoke the judgment of the court upon the legality of the steps taken by the municipality in passing the order. Whether the order will have the effect to diminish the value of the plaintiffs' land, or to cause them damage, is not a ground for annulling the act of the board of supervisors, and cannot be considered in this proceeding. If the board of supervisors had the authority to pass the order, and the plaintiffs have sustained any legal damage by reason thereof, they must seek relief in a direct proceeding therefor. Neither is it competent for the plaintiffs in this proceeding to review the decision of the board of supervisors that the public interest and convenience require that the streets be closed. The legislature has, by the statute referred to, conferred upon that body the power to open and close streets, "whenever the public interest or convenience may require," and the determination of this question by that body is not open for review by the courts. The judgment is affirmed.

BAILEY v. MARKET STREET CABLE RY. CO. (No. 16,004.)[1]

STREET-RAILWAY ACCIDENT — NEGLIGENCE — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — EVIDENCE.

1. Where plaintiff was standing between street-railway tracks, awaiting an approaching car, and, without looking, stepped backward upon the other track, within 10 or 15 feet of a car going in the opposite direction, she was guilty of contributory negligence, as a matter of law.

---

[1] Rehearing denied.

2. Plaintiff having been guilty of contributory negligence by stepping upon a street-car track, defendant's servants were not guilty of such willful negligence as entitled plaintiff to recover notwithstanding her own contributory negligence, where an attempt was made in good faith to stop the car, and the car was stopped within one foot of the point of collision with plaintiff.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Sarah A. Bailey against the Market Street Cable Railway Company for personal injuries. From an order granting a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Frank Shay and Geo. W. Baker, for appellant. C. M. Jennings, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an appeal by the defendant from an order of the court granting a new trial. The action is brought to recover damages for personal injuries received by plaintiff by coming in contact with a moving cable car upon the Market street cable road of the defendant. At the trial in the court below the court granted a nonsuit upon motion of the defendant, and the propriety of this action was the question involved in the motion for a new trial.

The plaintiff, a woman at the age of 66 years, in the possession of all her natural faculties, but apparently unfamiliar with cable cars, being at the Russ House, in San Francisco, was invited on the afternoon of July 19, 1892, by her friend Dr. George L. Fitch, to take a ride upon the Castro street cars. Pursuant to this invitation the plaintiff, in company with the doctor, proceeded to Market street, up the northerly side of that street, to or near a crossing which crosses the street at right angles from the northerly entrance of the Palace Hotel. Plaintiff desired to ride upon the outside. A west-bound Castro street cable car of defendant was approaching, and as the seats thereof on the northerly side seemed occupied, while the front seat on the southerly side was vacant, they crossed over the north track, upon which their car was approaching, and stood in the space between the two tracks, to do which there was sufficient room. Plaintiff's escort faced the east, and signaled the Castro street car to stop, which it did. Plaintiff, in the meantime, intent upon the approaching west-bound car, failed to see an east-bound car upon the other or southern track, and unconsciously, and without looking, stepped back upon that track, and was struck by an east-bound street cable car, knocked down, and severely injured.

That plaintiff was guilty of negligence in stepping backward upon the track without noticing an approaching car upon that track, some 10 feet distant, and in plain view, must, we think, be conceded. Whether it was such contributory negligence as in law will preclude a recovery, and whether it warranted a nonsuit, we will consider later. The question arises, was the defendant guilty of such negligence, through the failure of its servants to stop the car which produced the injury, as to render it liable; or, rather, was the evidence of defendant's negligence such that the question ought to have been submitted to the jury for its determination? When plaintiff stepped upon the track of the approaching car, and stood with her back to it, as the evidence shows her to have done, and apparently unconscious of danger, and the servants of defendant in charge of such car saw her, and became aware of her danger, as is shown to have been the case by their warning cries to her, it became and was their duty to exercise all reasonable care to protect her from injury. Defendant's cars on the Market street system are provided with two brakes,—one a wooden shoe, which is pressed upon the track by a foot lever, and the other is operated by a hand lever, and acts upon the wheels of the car. H. Stewart, a witness for plaintiff, was gripman upon the west-bound Castro car, upon which plaintiff was about to take passage. His opportunity for observation seems to have been good. He saw plaintiff step upon the south track, and judged the east-bound car was from 10 to 15 feet away, and not running at over half speed,—"not that, I think; about one-quarter, I should think." In answer to a question by the court, he said: "I cannot measure exactly how far the front of the dummy was from plaintiff when she stepped upon the track. I judge about ten feet, maybe. I cannot say exactly." The maximum speed of the Market street cable cars is eight miles an hour. Hence, if the car was moving at half speed, it moved four miles per hour, and, if at one-quarter speed, at the rate of two miles per hour. The grip and brakes of the car doing the injury were managed by a "student"; that is, by a man who was, and for eight days had been, learning the business. Behind him stood his instructor, an experienced gripman, who directed and aided him when deemed necessary. The brakes were applied and the car was stopped just as it struck the plaintiff. "It did not run much over a foot after it struck her." This witness was of opinion that at that point, and at the given rate of speed of the car, 15 feet was as short a distance as a car could be reasonably stopped in. He added: "They did stop this car, at the speed at which it was going, within one or two feet after it struck plaintiff. I don't know whether they could have stopped it within that space just before it struck her or not, if they had time, and knew that she would step backward on the track. I suppose they could." Another witness for plaintiff, Thomas Moran, a gripman of nine years' experience, seven years of which was spent on the Market street system, thought that a car going east at full speed in front of the Palace Hotel, under favorable circumstances, could be stopped in 4 or 5 feet, and, when at half speed, in about 3 feet. Still another witness, a gripman formerly employed on Market street, testified that on a dry track, and car in perfect order, he had stopped a car going east in front of the Palace Hotel in 6 feet; at other times it takes 10 to 15 feet, depending upon the track. This was when running at full speed. At half speed, could stop in 6 feet. He thought it would take a second or more to let the grip off and put on the brake. The foregoing is believed to contain a fair statement of the substance of the evidence upon the points of negligence. The experts speak either from memory or from their judgment, and do not profess to be mathematically correct. That they are not precisely correct is apparent when we realize that a car, in running 8 miles to the hour, covers $11^{11}/_{25}$ feet per second, and, if it takes one second to throw off the grip and apply the brakes, that distance must be traversed before they act in checking the momentum of the car. The fact probably is that a prudent gripman, upon seeing, say, a vehicle upon his track, while he expects it to leave his course, yet handles his brakes, as a matter of precaution, and almost imperceptibly loosens his grip and slows down. If the obstruction does not vacate the track, forewarned and forearmed, he stops in a brief space, while, if the same obstacle had unexpectedly dropped upon the track a car's length away, a collision would have been probable. The record shows that in granting a nonsuit the court gave the following reasons for its action: "Conceding that the gripman might have stopped the car in six feet, that the plaintiff was standing only ten or fifteen feet away, and that he was only going two miles an hour; assuming all that, still the plaintiff did not exercise ordinary care to prevent it. Therefore the motion for nonsuit is granted." The solution of two questions is essential to a decision of the case: (1) Was the plaintiff guilty of such contributory negligence as in law will defeat her recovery? (2) If the first question be answered in the affirmative, then was the defendant guilty of such willful and wanton negligence as entitled her to recover notwithstanding her own contributory negligence.

Market street is an open public street of the city and county of San Francisco, over which vehicles of great variety, and pedestrians, are accustomed to pass and repass in great numbers and at all times; and the vicinity of the Palace Hotel is one of its most frequented portions. In the earlier cases touching the relative rights of street cars, private vehicles, and foot passengers upon the public streets, a great diversity of opinion was expressed. Sometimes it was held that upon that portion of the streets covered by the tracks their rights were equal, and that drivers of ordinary vehicles might with impunity, and from mere convenience, drive across and along the track at any rate of speed they chose, while in other cases it was held that the right of way of the street car was practically exclusive, and that any use of the tracks, not actually necessary or for the purpose of a crossing, was a trespass, and, in case of a collision, was such negligence on the part of a private driver as would absolve the street-car company from liability for the consequences of a resulting accident, unless it was attributable to malice or sheer recklessness. Out of this medley of decisions the courts, profiting by time and experience, and in some instances aided by legislation, have gradually evolved the theory: (1) That the street car has, and from the necessities of the case must have, a right of way upon that portion of the street upon which alone it can travel, and which it cannot leave, paramount to that of persons and ordinary vehicles. (2) That this superior right is not exclusive, and does not prevent others from driving or passing across or along its tracks at any place or time, when by so doing it will not materially interfere with the progress of its cars. In other words, the better right is not an exclusive right, and can only be enforced against those who needlessly impose obstacles to its free and unrestricted exercise. Shea v. Railroad Co., 44 Cal. 414; Railway Co. v. Ingraham, 131 Ill. 659, 23 N. E. 350; Rend v. Railway Co., 8 Ill. App. 517; Booth, St. Ry. Law, § 303, and cases there cited. In the case of ordinary steam railroads, the companies are usually the exclusive owners of their rights of way, and have, except at crossings, the exclusive right to the use of their tracks at all times and places. He who without permission, express or implied, intrudes thereon, is a trespasser, to whom they owe no duty beyond refraining from doing him a willful injury. Not so with the citizen who enters upon the track of a street railway. These last are used in common by their cars and the traveling public. The mere fact that an individual is upon a street-car track in the heart of a city, where men are wont to come and go, in itself, and divested of all other circumstances, raises no presumption of law, and is not even evidence of negligence. It is the time, place, and surrounding circumstances which afford the evidence of negligence in the case of footmen upon the track. The common use is necessary in cities. True, the railway companies have certain superior rights. Their cars have the right of way, and it is the duty of the citizen, whether on foot or in vehicles, to give unobstructed passage to the cars. This results from two reasons: (1) That the car cannot turn out or leave the track, while the vehicle or passenger can. (2) These companies are chartered, nominally at least, for the convenience of the public. Their duties to that public require them to move with regularity and with all reasonable celerity. Manifestly, this cannot be accomplished if they must pause or give way to every foot passenger or vehicle whose convenience or pleasure may prompt an obstruction of the way. The latter can cross and pass elsewhere. The former cannot. The duties of the car companies and of the public are each enhanced by the peculiar conditions. The former must see to it that their servants are on the alert, not only at street crossings, but everywhere upon the tracks, to see that citizens are not run down and injured. The citizen, if upon the track, must leave it when the car approaches. If about to cross it, he must use his senses of sight and hearing before stepping on the track, to ascertain whether a car is approaching, and, in the absence of some well-known custom or regulation at crossings which renders such a precaution on his part unnecessary, he is guilty of negligence if he fails to look before he passes upon the track; and if all the facts plainly and inevitably point to such negligence, leaving no room for argument or doubt, it is negligence in law. The plaintiff was standing between the tracks, with ample space to insure her safety. With an approaching car upon the other track, in plain view, but 10 to 15 feet away, and without, so far as appears, any circumstances of excitement to render her unjudging, and without looking, as it was her duty to do, she stepped in front of the approaching car, and was injured. This was contributory negligence. If it was not negligence in law, we can conceive no case that is, short of a willful performance of the same or a similar act. Davenport v. Railroad Co., 100 N. Y. 632, 3 N. E. 305; Kelly v. Hendrie, 26 Mich. 255; Scott v. Railroad Co., 59 Hun, 456, 13 N. Y. Supp. 344; Harnett v. Railroad, 49 N. Y. Super. Ct. 185; Fenton v. Railroad Co., 126 N. Y. 625, 26 N. E. 967; Buzby v. Traction Co., 126 Pa. St. 559, 17 Atl. 895. Booth on Street-Railway Law, after discussing the doctrine and the cases touching the duty of persons to look before passing upon or over the tracks of street railways, at section 315, uses the following language: "Although the law on this point awaits further elucidation and development by the courts, the decisions thus far rendered, both in the United States and Canada, tend to establish the rule, at least with reference to electric and cable railways, that the failure to look or listen before attempting to cross, where such precautions would prevent collision, is in law such negligence as will defeat a recovery in an action for damages by the person so injured." That the negligence of plaintiff directly contributed to, and was the proximate cause of, her injury, is too plain to call for discussion.

Upon the proposition as to the defendant's having been guilty of willful negligence, it is only necessary to say that the evidence shows that the servants of defendant tried in good faith to stop the car, and did stop it within one foot of the point of collision with plaintiff. We are of opinion the motion for a nonsuit was properly granted, and as the question presented was one of law, and not one in which the court below was clothed with a discretion which we are called upon to treat with latitude, we think the order granting a new trial was erroneous. It is said that the motion for a new trial was granted upon the authority of Esrey v. Southern Pac. Co., 103 Cal. 541, 37 Pac. 500, and Cross v. Railway Co., 102 Cal. 313, 36 Pac. 673,—cases which were reported subsequently to the nonsuit herein. We fail to recognize in those cases any conflict with the theory upon which the nonsuit was granted. In Esrey v. Southern Pac. Co. the plaintiff was clearly guilty of contributory negligence, in placing herself in a dangerous position between the track of defendant and a platform five feet high. With full knowledge of her perilous situation, defendant's train was backed down in part past her, an additional and wider car attached, and the train signaled to go forward, which it did, crushing her against the platform; and when, thus crushed, she had fallen to the ground, the servant of defendant again signaled the train to go ahead. All the circumstances showed such wanton recklessness on the part of defendant's servants, such an utter disregard of the safety and life of the plaintiff, as to constitute willful and wanton injury, which entitled a party injured to recover notwithstanding his own previous contributory negligence. Cross v. Railway Co., 102 Cal. 313, 36 Pac. 673, was an action to recover damages against a street-railway company. It appeared that plaintiff, a teamster, was engaged in hauling a heavy load of lumber down a steep grade on California street, and had secured his wheel with a lock chain, which broke; and, without fixing it, plaintiff drove on zigzagging down the hill, walking beside the wagon, when defendant's car came down the hill, struck the hind wheel of plaintiff's wagon, swung it around, and squeezed plaintiff between his wagon and the dummy, to his injury. It was insisted by appellant that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, and that a nonsuit should have been granted in the court below, (1) in continuing down the steep grade with a heavy load after his lock chain broke; and (2) that plaintiff had placed himself upon defendant's car track without first looking to see if a car was coming upon him. This court held that the nonsuit was properly denied, and, among other things, said, "It cannot be said it was negligence in law to attempt to descend the hill without a lock chain." The propriety of this conclusion becomes apparent when we reflect that it depended upon the strength of the team, the weight of the load, and the angle of the grade,—factors upon which no court could base a conclusion of law, but which presented a compound question of law and fact, to be presented to the jury under proper instructions. This, again, was supplemented with evidence that the team could and did safely convey the load down the hill, after the collision, without a lock chain. It further appeared that plaintiff could see the track of defendant for 100 feet, and it was unobstructed, etc. The case is not analogous to the one at bar. See Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 452, where, after discussing the rule requiring one who crosses a railroad track to be on his guard, etc., it is said: "But, as the law now stands, the standard is fixed. One must look up and down the track. Anything short of that is negligence." Hager v. Southern Pac. Co., 98 Cal. 310, 33 Pac. 119. We recommend that the order granting a new trial be reversed, and that the court below be directed to enter judgment in favor of defendant upon the order granting a nonsuit.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order granting a new trial is reversed, and the court below directed to enter judgment in favor of defendant upon the order granting a nonsuit.

GILETTI v. SARACCO. (No. 15,950.)

TRIAL—FINDINGS OF COURT—NECESSITY FOR.

A failure to find on some issue a finding on which would invalidate a judgment fully supported by the findings made, is not ground for reversal, unless it is shown that evidence was submitted in relation to such issue.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; James M. Trout, Judge.

Action by Secondo Giletti against Carlo Saracco. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Henry E. Highton, for appellant. Francis A. Rossi, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an appeal by defendant upon the judgment roll alone from a judgment in favor of plaintiff. The action was upon three certain written obligations in the nature of promissory notes for the payment of money, made by appellant to respondent, payable to the latter on demand, and delivered to him by appellant. In the answer the execution by appellant of the said obligations is not denied, but it is averred that as to one of the obligations appellant was, by agreement, not to be obliged to pay the same until he "should be able to pay the same," and that it is not due, although he does not deny that he is able to pay it. As to another of the obligations, it is averred that respondent could have recovered the amount of it from one Vandagna, who signed it jointly with appellant, but that respondent never demanded payment of said Vandagna; that appellant has no knowledge of said obligation; "and that, if defendant's name is signed to said note, he never received any consideration therefor, and denies the same, or any part thereof." As to the third obligation it is averred that it "was given with the understanding that Giovanni Vandagna was the person who had to pay said note," that he was able to pay it, and that respondent had not demanded payment of said Vandagna. There is also a general denial that the obligations were due or payable from appellant to respondent. And the only point made for a reversal is that the court did not find upon these averments in the answer. The court found that each of these obligations—called by court and counsel "promissory notes"—was executed by appellant to respondent, and delivered to him on the respective days alleged in the complaint; that they were executed in consideration of a certain named sum of money, United States gold coin, "loaned by plaintiff to defendant at the respective dates thereof"; and "that no part of the principal or interest due on said promissory notes has ever been paid, but that the whole thereof remains now due, owing and unpaid." Assuming that these matters set up in the answer constitute a defense at all, then, if they were not affirmative matter, but merely denials, as counsel for appellant seems to regard them in his final brief, they are fully covered by the findings. But, under any view of their character, as appellant introduced no evidence to support them, and as the findings are sufficient to support the judgment, no finding in relation to them was necessary; for "a failure to find upon some issue, a finding upon which would merely have the effect of invalidating a judgment fully supported by the findings made, will not be held ground for reversal, unless it is shown by statement or bill of exceptions that evidence was submitted in relation to such issue." Himmelman v. Henry, 84 Cal. 104, 23 Pac. 1098. The judgment is affirmed.

CAVALLARO v. TEXAS & P. RY. CO. (No. 15,992.)

CARRIERS—MISDELIVERY OF FREIGHT—LIABILITY OF CONNECTING LINES—NOTICE TO CONSIGNEE—FOREIGN STATUTES.

1. Where goods consigned on commission are received by a railroad company to be carried beyond its own route, under an agreement between the connecting companies by which each company is entitled to a proportion of the freight, the company which carries the goods to their destination is liable to the consignor for a delivery to a person not authorized to receive them.

2. Civ. Code, § 2120, provides that a carrier may reduct his liability to that of a warehouseman as to goods which have arrived at the place of consignment by giving notice to the consignee of the arrival. Held, that a notice served at the building in which the consignee does business, on a person other than the consignee, does not affect the carrier's liability, though the person who received the notice represented that he was the consignee.

3. It will be presumed that the statutes of another state are the same as those of the former state.

4. An exception to "each, every, and all the instructions given by the court of its own motion" is not sufficiently specific to warrant the review of such instructions.

5. Under St. 1877–78, p. 949, providing that an indorsement of a negotiable warehouse receipt operates as a transfer of the property represented thereby, a carrier whose liability has been reduced to that of a warehouseman, who delivers goods to a person other than the consignee on an unindorsed bill of lading, is liable for the value of the goods.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; W. G. Lorigan, Judge.

Action by L. S. Cavallaro against the Texas & Pacific Railway Company for damages for failure to deliver goods to the consignee. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. V. Morehouse, for appellant. W. P. Veuve, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an appeal from a final judgment in favor of plaintiff for $1,255.96 and costs, and from an order denying a motion of defendant for a new trial. Defendant is a railroad corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the United States, and is a common carrier of freight and passengers from El Paso, in the state of Texas, by the way of Ft. Worth, to New Orleans, in the state of Louisiana. Plaintiff is a citizen and resident of the state of California. On the 24th day of October, 1894, the plaintiff shipped from Oakland, Cal., 40 barrels of white wine, by the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company, and on the 25th day of October he shipped from San José, Cal., by the same company, 41 barrels of red wine, all consigned to "V. Lo Secco, New Orleans, La.," for which two shipments plaintiff received from the said Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company separate duplicate bills of lading, in the usual form. One set of these duplicate bills of lading was forwarded by the plaintiff per registered letters addressed, "V. Lo Secco, 29 Hospital Street, New Orleans"; and United States registered return receipts were in due time returned to him at San José, Cal., signed, "V. Lo Secco, J. Lo Secco." The goods were forwarded, under some regulations among the several companies, over the Southern Pacific Coast line, to Mojave; Atlantic & Pacific, to Albuquerque; thence, by Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé, to Purcel; by Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé, to Ft. Worth; and thence, by the Texas & Pacific, the defendant herein, to New Orleans, La. There was evidence touching the proportion of freight received by each of these connecting companies, and as to their traffic association. The goods were received by the defendant at Ft. Worth, and shipped thence to New Orleans, where the freight was collected by said defendant, and the goods delivered. There is no dispute as to these facts, and the crucial question is, were they delivered to the consignee, and, if not, was the defendant guilty of such negligence as renders it liable in damages for the value of the property?

There was testimony tending to establish the following facts: V. Lo Secco, the consignee, was, and for many years had been, a commission merchant in New Orleans, whose principal business was receiving consignments of oranges and other fruit, which he sold on commission, and usually at public auction. He owned the premises at 29 Hospital street, and had his office in the rear of the building. The front part of the building was occupied by D. Lo Secco, a nephew of V. Lo Secco, as a grocery and saloon. V. Lo Secco was a man of wealth and reputation, say, 60 years of age, 6 feet high, weighing from 200 to 250 pounds, with gray hair. D. Lo Secco was a rather small man; say, 25 to 30 years of age, with black hair, etc. V. Lo Secco could not write, and never ordered the wine or had any communication with plaintiff; but the latter knew the former by reputation, and shipped the goods to him, to be sold on commission for account of plaintiff. One consignment reached New Orleans November 9, 1892, and was delivered November 25, 1892. The other arrived November 4, 1892, and was delivered December 6, 1892. When the first consignment reached its destination, defendant sent its messenger to 29 Hospital street, to notify the consignee; and, in answer to interrogatories, a man whom the messenger describes, and who was doubtless D. Lo Secco, professed to be such consignee, and, in the name of V. Lo Secco, signed an acknowledgment of notice of the arrival of the consignment. The same thing was repeated in the same manner upon the arrival of the second consignment. A man answering to the description of D. Lo Secco, and not answering to the description of V. Lo Secco, called at the office of defendant with one of the bills of lading November 25th, claimed to be the consignee, paid the freight, receipted for the goods in the name of V. Lo Secco, and took them away. The same thing was repeated with the other consignment December 6th, except that the bill of lading was not presented to defendant. There was evidence that the signature "V. Lo Secco" was in the handwriting of D. Lo Secco. D. Lo Secco disappeared from New Orleans soon after this transaction, and has never returned. The consignee, V. Lo Secco, knew nothing whatever of the shipments to him; never received the bills of lading, or any notice of the shipment; and appears to have had no knowledge whatever of the transaction until after the goods disappeared. The witnesses for the defense spoke of knowing one V. Lo Secco in connection with the shipment and delivery of the wine, but in every instance in describing him they gave a description of D. Lo Secco, and not one applying to V. Lo Secco. The evidence is clearly to the effect that D. Lo Secco personated the consignee of the goods, V. Lo Secco; received, receipted for, and paid the freight thereon; and then disappeared. The evidence was amply sufficient on the head indicated to warrant the jury in finding a verdict in favor of plaintiff.

A number of contentions of appellant, without taking them up seriatim, may be answered in this wise: It is established law of England: (1) That, when the carrier accepts for carriage goods directed to a destination beyond its own route, it assumes by the very act of acceptance, in the absence of any express contract on the subject, the obligation to transport them to the place to which they may be directed. This was first decided in what is known as the "Muschamp Case" (Muschamp v. Railway Co., 8 Mees. & W. 421), and has been ever since steadily adhered to. (2) As an apparent corollary of the first proposition, the English courts have also held that in all cases included therein the first carrier becomes exclusively responsible for the carriage and safety of the goods to their destination, and, no matter by whom injured or lost, the first carrier alone can be sued by the aggrieved party, and any attempt to hold the subsequent or connecting carrier liable must, notwithstanding the loss may have occurred through its negligence, fail for want of privity of contract between such carrier and the injured party. Hutch. Carr. §§ 146, 147.

Upon the first of the foregoing propositions the American courts are divided. The majority of them, however, hold against the English doctrine, as unjust to the carrier, and as unnecessary upon grounds of public policy, and assert the true rule to be that in the absence of any contract, except such as is implied from the acceptance of the goods for carriage, the obligation of the carrier extends only to the end of his route, and a proper delivery there to the next succeeding carrier to further or complete the carriage; and, in order to be bound further, a positive agreement, either express or implied, is necessary. And this is called the "American rule." Hutch. Carr. § 149, and cases cited. Upon the second proposition the courts of the United States, both federal and state, are believed to be, with a single exception, a unit in holding that, either with or without a contract under which the first carrier becomes liable for loss or injury to goods until they reach their destination, the owner may seek redress from any intermediate carrier who is in fault. The exception alluded to is the state of Georgia, and in that state the English rule is now mainly abrogated by statute. The theory upon which the connecting carrier is held liable for his own default or misfeasance to the owner is based upon the ground that the receiving carrier is the agent of the owner to forward and deliver to the next succeeding or connecting carrier, who, in turn, becomes the agent of the principal, and not the subagent of the first agent, and hence liable. Whatever may be the basis of the doctrine, it is one of well-nigh universal application in this country; and as is said by Hutchinson, at section 150: "The rule which allows the action against the carrier in fault, as well as against the one who is primarily responsible, certainly commends itself upon grounds of both justice and convenience, and, with the above exception [Georgia], is the universal law of this country."

The complaint in this case avers, among other things, the delivery of the property to defendant as such common carrier, and its receipt upon the agreement aforesaid (that is to say, to carry the same to New Orleans, and there deliver it to V. Lo Secco), and its misdelivery, whereby it was lost to plaintiff. If the defendant, as a common carrier, received property consigned to a person in New Orleans to be carried over its road terminating in that city, it became liable to the owner for negligence or misfeasance in doing so, under its common-law liability, whether there was an express contract or only such agreement as the law implies. In Church v. Railroad Co. (Okl.) 29 Pac. 530, relied upon by appellant, there was no allegation in the complaint that the goods were ever delivered to or received by the defendant. The last duty required of the common carrier is that of delivery. This is a duty imposed upon him by law. As soon as he accepts the goods, and whether so expressed or not, it becomes a part of his contract. He must not only deliver goods intrusted to him to carry, but becomes also responsible for their proper delivery. Hutch. Carr. § 338. The same author, at section 344, says: "No circumstances of fraud, imposition, or mistake will excuse the common carrier from responsibility for a delivery to the wrong person. The law exacts of him absolute certainty that the person to whom the delivery is made is the party rightfully entitled to the goods, and puts upon him the entire risk of mistakes in this respect, no matter from what cause occasioned, however justifiable the delivery may seem to have been, or however satisfactory the circumstances or proof of identity may have been to his mind; and no excuse has ever been allowed for a delivery to a person for whom the goods were not directed or consigned. * * * If, however, the delivery be made to the wrong person, whether by an innocent mistake, or through fraud practiced upon the carrier, such wrongful delivery will be a conversion." Adams v. Blankenstein, 2 Cal. 413.

The contention of appellant that its liability as a common carrier had ceased before the delivery, and that it became and was at the date of such delivery only liable as a warehouseman, cannot be maintained. Under section 2120 of our Civil Code, a common carrier may reduce his liability to that of a warehouseman, as to goods which have arrived at the place of consignment, by giving notice to the consignee of the arrival; and, if the place of residence or business of such consignee is not known, the notice may be given by letter dropped in the nearest postoffice. Appellant sought to serve notice in the present case upon the consignee in person; but by mistake, and through the fraud of D. Lo Secco, the notice was served upon him, and not upon V. Lo Secco, the consignee. This was no notice to the consignee, and did not have the effect of changing the liability of the carrier to that of a warehouseman. Wilson v. Railroad Co., 94 Cal. 166, 29 Pac. 861.

If it be claimed that the determination in this case turns upon the law of the state of Louisiana, and not upon that of California, the answer must be: (1) In the absence of proof to the contrary, the laws of another state will be presumed to be the same as our own, and this presumption extends to statutory as well as to the common law. Hickman v. Alpaugh, 21 Cal. 225; Shumway v. Leakey, 67 Cal. 460, 8 Pac. 12; Marsters v. Lash, 61 Cal. 624; Mortimer v. Marder, 93 Cal. 172, 28 Pac. 814. (2) The rule requiring notice to be given is but a declaration of the law as it existed prior to the statute in a majority of the states and in England. Wilson v. Railroad Co., supra; Hutch. Carr. §§ 373, 374, and notes. This is not a case of the delivery of goods at the residence or place of business of the consignee. The freight was consigned to V. Lo Secco, New Orleans, La., and hence the station or depot of the defendant was the place of delivery; and the fact that D. Lo Secco, to whom the goods were delivered, had procured and presented a duplicate of the bill of lading to defendant, which was not assigned or indorsed by either the consignor or consignee, was no excuse or justification to defendant for delivering the goods to him without further identification. "A carrier is exonerated from liability for freight by delivery thereof, in good faith, to any holder of a bill of lading therefor, properly indorsed, or made in favor of the bearer." Civ. Code, § 2131. This section of the Code has no application to the case in hand, because the bill of lading was not made to bearer, and was not indorsed by the recipient to whom it was issued. Numerous questions arise, and some of them difficult ones, in relation to assignments, mortgages, hypothecation, etc., of bills of lading. None of these questions are involved here, as there is no evidence in the record upon which to predicate them, except the mere fact that D. Lo Secco possessed and presented the defendant an unindorsed bill of lading, which did not and could not, under our law, give him any title to the freight therein described. Civ. Code, § 2127.

The uncontradicted evidence of the witnesses Leland and Sterne, supplemented by the deposition of Toomey and by the bills of lading introduced by consent, and the way bills, was sufficient to authorize the jury to conclude that the through bills of lading were authorized by the defendant.

The court, upon its own motion, instructed the jury at considerable length. The only objection or exception to the instructions thus given is as follows: Counsel for defendant said: "We desire, if your honor please, to save an exception to each, every, and all of the instructions given by the court of its own motion." It is objected on the part of respondent that this exception is not sufficiently specific to warrant this court in scrutinizing the instructions given by the court upon its own motion. The current of authority seems to render it imperative that we sustain the objection of respondent, and decline to examine and pass upon the legality of the court's instructions. The theory of the rulings is that exceptions to the charge of a court to the jury ought to point out specifically the portions excepted to, and be made at the time of trial, in order that the judge may have an opportunity, before the jury retires, to correct any error he may have inadvertently fallen into in drawing up the charge in the hurry and perplexities of the trial. Hicks v. Coleman, 25 Cal. 122; Sill v. Reese, 47 Cal. 294; Rider v. Edgar, 54 Cal. 127; Shea v. Railroad Co., 44 Cal. 414; Brown v. Kentfield, 50 Cal. 129; Robinson v. Railroad Co., 48 Cal. 409; Sukeforth v. Lord, 87 Cal. 399, 25 Pac. 497. The doctrine of these cases and of others of like import has established a rule of practice in this state from which we do not feel at liberty to depart. This rule, of course, has no application to the special instructions asked by the parties, and given or refused by the court, concerning which a general exception has always been held sufficient.

There was no error in the refusal of the court to give the instructions asked on behalf of the defendant, numbered from 1 to 7, both inclusive.

The first of these instructions involved the proposition that if the two shipments of wine reached New Orleans on the 9th and 15th days of November, 1892, respectively, and were not called for or demanded until the 21st day of November and 6th day of December, respectively, then the defendant's liability, if any, was not that of a common carrier, but that of a warehouseman, and that plaintiff could not recover. The answer to this proposition is twofold: (1) The evidence showed clearly that V. Lo Secco, the consignee, had no notice whatever, either in fact or such as is provided by statute, of the arrival of the goods, and, until notice thereof, defendant held the same as a common carrier, and subject to its liability as such. (2) Even as a warehouseman, defendant was not authorized to deliver the goods to a stranger who presented a bill of lading not indorsed, and who was not identified in any way as the consignee, or as having any right to the bill of lading, or the goods of which it was a symbol. Warehouse receipts are negotiable unless they have the word "nonnegotiable" printed in red ink across their face, and, when negotiable, an indorsement of the receipt operates as a valid transfer of the property represented by such receipt. St. 1877–78, p. 949. A transfer of a warehouse receipt in good faith, etc., passes the title to the goods covered by the receipt. Davis v. Russell, 52 Cal. 611. There is no difference between a warehouse receipt and a bill of lading in this respect. Id.; Bishop v. Fulkerth, 68 Cal. 607, 10 Pac. 122; Civ. Code, §§ 2127–2131.

The second instruction is to the effect that the defendant, in the absence of other instructions, had a right to deliver the first shipment of wine to the person who presented the bill of lading and surrendered it; and the third is to the effect that if the same person who delivered the bill of lading presented himself as the true consignee of the second shipment of wine, and in both instances claimed to be the true consignee, and so receipted for the wine, and paid the freightage thereon, and that the bills of lading had been sent by the consignor to V. Lo Secco, and the person who claimed and received the wine lived and carried on business, including the selling of wines, at 29 Hospital street, New Orleans, and that defendant notified him there of its arrival, then the jury should find for the defendant. In the absence of some act or conduct on the part of the consignor whereby he is estopped, of which there is no evidence, these instructions are not an embodiment of the law, unless an unindorsed bill of lading, in the hands of a stranger thereto, is sufficient evidence of ownership to warrant the delivery by a common carrier to the person so holding such bill of lading. We have hereinbefore stated that such a delivery does not excuse the carrier.

The fifth instruction is covered by what has been said of the third and fourth.

The sixth instruction is covered by the instructions given by the court, and it was not necessary to repeat it.

The seventh instruction goes upon the false theory that the goods were consigned to 29 Hospital street, New Orleans, when they were not in fact so consigned, and then seeks to gauge the duty of the defendant on that hypothesis. This was not proper to be done. Different considerations frequently arise in cases where goods are consigned to a given number and street, and are there delivered to a person apparently the person to whom they are consigned, but in this case questions of that character are not properly involved.

We are of opinion that the defendant, whether regarded as a common carrier or as a warehouseman, is liable for the misdelivery of the goods in question, and that the plaintiff, who has counted upon the liability of defendant as a common carrier, may, in every proper case, recover against such carrier as a warehouseman. Hoyt v. Railroad Co., 68 Cal. 644, 10 Pac. 187; Wilson v. Railroad Co., 94 Cal. 166, 29 Pac. 861. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

FORD v. CAUHAPE. (No. 15,900.)

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; W. G. Lorigan, Judge.

Ejectment by Edward Ford against Victor Cauhape. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John H. Yoell, for appellant. W. B. Hardy, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Action of ejection to recover from defendant possession of a small lot of land (40x72 feet) situate in the city of San José. The judgment was in favor of the plaintiff, and defendant appeals from it and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. There is no apparent merit in either of these appeals, and none of the points made by counsel for appellant is sufficiently plausible to require special consideration. The judgment and order are affirmed.

In re PEARSONS' ESTATE. (S. F. 168.)[1]

DESCENT OF PROPERTY—NEXT OF KIN.

Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 6, provides that, if decedent leave neither issue, wife, father, mother, brother, or sister, the estate shall go to the next of kin in equal degrees. Section 1394 provides that kindred of the half blood shall inherit equally with those of the whole blood in the same degree, unless the inheritance came to the intestate by devise of one of his ancestors, in which case all those who are not of the blood of such ancestor must be excluded from such inheritance. Held that, where decedent inherited his estate from his father, the sisters and brothers of his deceased mother shared equally with those of his father.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Proceeding for the distribution of the estate of Hiram Arthur Pearsons, deceased. From an order of partial distribution, Ira Mathewson and others appeal. Reversed.

Isaac N. Thorne and Oliver P. Evans, for appellants. John B. Mhoon and J. D. Sullivan, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This is an appeal by Ira Mathewson, Daniel Mathewson, Henry Mathewson, Rhoda Smith, and Lucy A. Angell from parts of an order of partial distribution of the estate of Hiram Arthur Pearsons, deceased. Although said deceased left a will, the part of his estate here in question is, for reasons not necessary to be stated, to be distributed as though he had died intestate. His next of kin of equal degree are aunts and uncles, and are the appellants, who are sisters and brothers of the decedent's mother, Ann Charity Pearsons, and Clarissa P. Wheeler and Lucy A. Valentine, who are sisters of the decedent's father, Hiram Pearsons. Lucy A. Valentine being now dead, her estate and interests are represented by her administrator, Joseph W. Reay. The greater part of the estate to be distributed came to the deceased, Hiram Arthur Pearsons, by gift and devise of his father, Hiram Pearsons, deceased; while a lesser part came to him from his mother, Ann Charity Pearsons. The probate court held that all of said estate which came from the father should be distributed to said Clarissa P. Wheeler and the administrator of said Lucy A. Valentine, and that the appellants should share only in that part of the estate which came to the deceased from his mother. Appellants contend that the whole of the estate of the deceased should be distributed equally to all the aunts and uncles. This contention presents the only question to be determined on this appeal, and it appears to us quite clear that it must be sustained. The rule which governs here is the one declared in subdivision 6 of section 1386 of the Civil Code, and is as follows: "If the decedent leave neither issue, husband, wife, father, mother, brother nor sister, the estate must go to the next of kin in equal degree." In the case at bar "the next of kin" were the seven aunts and uncles of the decedent, and they were "in equal degree"; therefore, the estate goes to them in seven equal parts. Next of kin means, of course, next of kin of the decedent. Our Code has no allusion to "the blood of the first purchaser," and makes no attempt at any distinction founded upon the sources from which the estate of a decedent may have been derived, except in the single instance of kindred of the "half blood." But no question of the rights of kindred of the half blood arises in this case, for all the aunts and uncles were the decedent's kindred of the whole blood, of equal degree.

Respondents' whole contention rests upon the theory that section 1394 changes the rule of section 1386 above quoted. But to see the mistake of that theory it is only necessary to observe that section 1394 deals entirely with the case of kindred of "the half blood," not with kindred of the whole blood, whose rights had already been fixed by section 1386. Section 1394 is as follows: "Kindred of the half blood inherit equally with those of the whole blood in the same degree, unless the inheritance came to the intestate by descent, devise, or gift of some one of his ancestors, in which case all those who are not of the blood of such ancestor must be excluded from such inheritance." Here the words "all those" clearly refer to their antecedents in the sentence "kindred of the half blood." "Kindred of the half blood" being the subject of the main proposition of the section, is necessarily the subject of the exception which follows the word "unless." The section simply means that kindred of the half blood shall inherit equally with those of the whole blood, except in a certain case, and in that case kindred of the half blood shall not inherit. And who are kindred of the half blood? Why, of course, kindred of the half blood of the decedent. There were none such in the case at bar. If the next of kin of equal degree of the intestate be some of the whole blood and some of the half blood of the intestate, the half bloods shall not inherit if they are not of the blood of the person from whom the intestate inherited the property to be distributed; but, if all be kin of the whole blood of the intestate, or if the half bloods be of the blood of the ancestor, then all share alike. Kindred of the whole blood, if next of kin, share in all of the estate of the decedent, no matter from what source it came.

Respondents present no case arising under a statute like ours which at all conflicts with the foregoing views. On the other hand, they are clearly stated in Estate of Kirkendall, 43 Wis. 167, which respondents cite. In that case the intestate, Mary Jane Kirkendall, had inherited her estate from her mother. She left no kin except uncles, who were brothers of her mother, and a paternal grandmother. The grandmother was the next of kin, but it was contended that she did not inherit, because she was not of the blood of the intestate's mother, and that the estate should go to the uncles who were of that blood. But it was held otherwise in the lower court, and the decree was affirmed in the appellate court. The clause of the statute there invoked was exactly like ours. The whole section (section 4) was as follows: "The degrees of kindred shall be computed according to the rules of the civil law; and kindred of the half blood shall inherit equally with those of the whole blood in the same degree, unless the inheritance came to the intestate by descent, devise, or gift of some one of his ancestors, in which case all those who are not of the blood of such ancestor shall be excluded from such inheritance." The discussion of the subject by Lyon, J., who delivered the main opinion, and by Ryan, C. J., who delivered a concurring opinion, is very full and interesting; but we have space to give only a few sentences of their opinions. Lyon, J., said: "Mary Jane Kirkendall, and not her mother, is the person from whom the succession to the estate in controversy is to be traced." Having stated that it was not the principle of the statute "to confine the descent of an ancestral estate to those who are of the blood of the ancestor from whom the estate descended," he proceeds to discuss the clause in question, as follows: "The first clause of the section, which contains the rule for computing the degrees of kindred, does not aid the construction of the balance of the section. For that purpose it might as well have constituted a section by itself. The remainder of the section treats only of kindred of the half blood. Their rights, and theirs alone, are therein defined and limited; and we find nothing in the language of the section which authorizes us to say that any other class of kindred is within its purview. We think the plain grammatical construction of the clauses under consideration is that the kindred of the intestate of the half blood shall inherit equally with those of the whole blood, except that, if the estate is ancestral, only such kindred of the half blood as are of the blood of the ancestor from whom the estate came shall inherit. We find here no limitation of the rule of subdivision 6, § 1, that, 'if the intestate shall leave no issue, nor widow, and no father, mother, brother or sister, his estate shall descend to his next of kin in equal degree.'" From the able opinion of Ryan, C. J., we will quote only the following: "I think that, by all rules of construction, this clause is confined to the provision which it limits, and cannot otherwise affect the general rule of inheritance. It can have no application except in cases of next of kin of the half blood and the whole blood in equal degree, when it operates to exclude, in the particular case, the general right extended to the half blood. 'Unless' is equivalent to 'except,' and is here used to introduce an exception to the right of the half blood. All that follows it in the section is dependent on it, and qualified by it, and goes to define the exception which it declares. In the particular case 'all persons' are not excluded, but 'all those'; the relative pronoun relating back, and clearly signifying all those of the half blood." See, also, Rowley v. Stray, 32 Mich. 70; Ryan v. Andrews, 21 Mich. 229; Robertson v. Burrell, 40 Ind. 328. Speer v. Miller, 37 N. J. Eq. 492, cited by respondents, was under a statute which expressly provides that ancestral estates shall go only to those who are of the blood of the ancestor from whom the estate came.

(It is said incidentally in the brief of appellants that, perhaps, the administrator of Mrs. Valentine should not share in that part of the estate which came from the decedent's mother; but we do not understand that the record presents that point.)

The parts of the order of distribution appealed from are reversed, and the cause is remanded, with directions to the probate court to make distribution of all the estate of said Hiram Pearsons, deceased, now ready for distribution, in equal shares to the said seven aunts and uncles of said deceased.

BAILEY LOAN CO. v. HALL et al. (L. A. 64.)

JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT.

Where three persons are sued as partners, and judgment is asked "against said defendants," and two of them suffer default, and the other answers denying that he was a member of the firm, judgment may be entered against those in default, though it is rendered in favor of the other, under Code Civ. Proc. § 578, providing that judgment may be given for or against one or more of several defendants.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Action by the Bailey Loan Company against Henry G. Hall and others on promissory notes. Judgment for plaintiff, and Henry G. Hall and another appeal. Affirmed.

J. S. Chapman, for appellants. Finlayson & Finlayson, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The complaint in this action sets forth certain promissory notes, purporting to have been made to the plaintiff by "H. G. Hall & Sons," and the plaintiff brought the action against three defendants, who are alleged by it to have constituted a partnership by that name, and to have executed the notes to it. Two of the defendants, appellants herein, suffered default, and the other defendant answered the complaint, denying that he was a member of the firm at the time the notes were executed. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and a judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and against the appellants, and in favor of the defendant who had answered the complaint. The defendants against whom judgment was rendered have appealed, upon the ground that, as the action was brought upon a partnership obligation against three defendants, the court was not authorized to enter a judgment by default against two only. The record is presented here upon the judgment roll alone.

Section 578, Code Civ. Proc., provides: "Judgment may be given for or against one or more of several plaintiffs, and for or against one or more of several defendants." In Lewis v. Clarkin, 18 Cal. 399, it was held that by this section the rule at common law, that in an action upon a joint contract the plaintiff must recover against all or none, was abrogated, and that in such action the plaintiff was entitled to a judgment against those defendants merely who were shown to be liable upon the obligation. See, also, People v. Frisbie, 18 Cal. 402; Shain v. Forbes, 82 Cal. 583, 23 Pac. 198; Harrington v. Higham, 15 Barb. 524; McIntosh v. Ensign, 28 N. Y. 169. The terms of this section do not limit the rule to actions in which the defendants have appeared and answered, but include as well those in which some of the defendants have made default, the only limitation in such case being that found in section 580, that the relief shall not exceed that which the plaintiff shall have demanded in his complaint. In Randall v. Hunter, 69 Cal. 80, 10 Pac. 130, an action was brought against the defendants as partners upon a promissory note, signed "Gill & Hunter." Gill suffered default, and Hunter defended upon the ground that the note was an individual obligation of Gill. Upon the trial this defense was not sustained, and judgment was entered against both. Hunter appealed, and a motion by the plaintiff to dismiss the appeal for failure of Hunter to serve his codefendant was denied upon the ground that Gill would not be affected by a reversal of the judgment; and to the argument that another trial might result in a several judgment against Gill, whereas he was then interested in preserving the joint judgment and preventing a several judgment, the court said: "His default admits that he is bound severally as well as jointly. If on the trial which has taken place the verdict had passed in Hunter's favor, a judgment by default might have been entered against Gill severally."

The appellants herein made default to the plaintiff's complaint, and thereby admitted the truth of its allegations, and consented to a judgment giving to the plaintiff all the relief it had prayed for. They admitted that they were members of the partnership of "H. G. Hall & Sons," and that the notes set out in the complaint had been executed to the plaintiff by that partnership. These facts, whether admitted by their default or established by evidence at the trial, entitled the plaintiff to a judgment against them. It is immaterial to them that their codefendant was able to show at the trial that he was not a member of the partnership, and thus to defeat the plaintiff's right of recovery. It was not necessary that the judgment should run against the appellants as copartners. The notes upon which the action is brought are several as well as joint, and the prayer of the complaint is for a judgment "against said defendants" for the amount of said notes. The court was thus authorized to enter a several judgment against the appellants, and the judgment entered is in accordance with the prayer of the complaint. The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE ex rel. MENZIES v. GUNST.

(S. F. 56.)[1]

REMOVAL OF POLICE COMMISSIONERS—AUTHORITY OF GOVERNOR.

Act April 1, 1878, provides that certain district judges shall appoint police commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco, but fixes no term of office, and gives the judges no authority, after making the appointments, except to fill vacancies. By Const. 1879 the judges of the district courts were superseded, but the powers given them regarding the commissioners were not vested in any person. Held, that the governor has no power to remove a commissioner and appoint another person in his place. People v. Hammond, 6 Pac. 741, 66 Cal. 655, followed.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; A. A. Sanderson, Judge.

Quo warranto on the relation of Menzies against M. A. Gunst to test relator's title to the office of police commissioner of the city and county of San Francisco. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Clement, Cannon, Kline & Stradley, for appellant. Rothchild & Ach, E. W. McKinstry, and E. R. Garber, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is an action in quo warranto to test relator's title to the office of police commissioner of the city and county of San Francisco against the claims of defendant thereto. Judgment passed for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

The facts about which there is no controversy are that R. P. Hammond was a member of the original board of police commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco, appointed under the provisions of the act of the legislature approved April 1, 1878, and commonly known as the "McCoppin Act."[1] Hammond continued in office until his death, which occurred in the year 1891. At and after the time of his death H. H. Markham was the governor of the state, and he appointed D. M. Burns to fill the vacancy thus arising. Burns qualified, became and acted as a member of the board until January 5, 1895. Upon that day a vacancy occurred in the office by the resignation of said Burns. The governor, H. H. Markham, upon said last-named day appointed defendant, Gunst, to fill this vacant office. Upon the 7th day of January Gunst qualified, and entered upon the discharge of his duties. Thereafter, on said day, the said Markham was succeeded as governor of the state by James H. Budd. Upon January 13, 1895, Gov. Budd gave notice in writing to the said police commission, and to the individual members thereof, including the defendant herein, that he had removed said defendant from office, and he likewise caused formal declaration of removal to be filed in the office of secretary of state. Upon January 21, 1895, Gov. Budd appointed relator herein police commissioner of the city and county of San Francisco, "vice M. A. Gunst, removed." Menzies duly qualified, and, upon Gunst's refusal to surrender the office, this proceeding was instituted.

There is no distinction in principle between the contention of appellant in this case and that made in People v. Hammond, 66 Cal. 655, 6 Pac. 741, and there is likewise no important distinction in fact. The main difference is that in the Hammond Case Hinton was appointed to succeed Hammond, while here Menzies was appointed after the declared removal of Gunst. But, as "the mere appointment of a successor would per se be a removal of the prior incumbent" (Ex parte Heenan, 13 Pet. 261; Blake v. U. S., 103 U. S. 237), the distinction becomes immaterial. But, while the present case cannot be distinguished in principle from that of Hammond, it is earnestly insisted that the court erred in that decision, and in others in which the interpretation of the Hammond Case is adopted and followed. The claim made is that the governor has the power to remove and appoint the police commissioners at pleasure, and it is insisted that this claim finds support in sections 4 and 16 of article 20 of the constitution, together with section 875 of the Political Code. By the Hammond Case it was decided that no term of office of police commissioner was fixed by the McCoppin act; that no authority was given to the appointing power after making the original appointments, except to fill vacancies; and that the governor could not appoint in the absence of a vacancy, or create and fill a vacancy by appointing some one to succeed an incumbent. It cannot be assumed that the constitutional and code provisions upon which appellant relies were overlooked by the court in deciding that and kindred cases. An examination of their records discloses not only that they were cited in the briefs of counsel and in the petition for rehearing, but that the claim of the power of the governor to appoint at pleasure was strongly pressed upon the attention of the court.

[1] Act April 1, 1878, provides that certain district judges shall appoint police commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco, but fixes no term of office, and gives the judges no authority, after making the appointments, except to fill vacancies.

But, as has been intimated, People v. Hammond is not a solitary case among the decisions of this court. It has formed the basis of other judicial determinations, and its principles, both in department and bank, have been repeatedly affirmed. In People v. Pond, 89 Cal. 140, 26 Pac. 648, sections 4 and 16 of article 20 of the constitution were cited to the court in bank, and it is said: "The questions argued by counsel for petitioners are not new. They may not have been presented so forcibly or with as great perspicuity before, but they have been determined adversely to the contentions of the petitioners after careful consideration of the constitutional and statutory provisions germane to the subject, and we feel constrained to adhere to the construction heretofore adopted. The contention of petitioners who claim to have been elected as members of the first board of supervisors has been settled adversely to them by the decisions in Desmond v. Dunn, 55 Cal. 248, 249, and People v. Board of Election Commissioners (Cal.) 3 Pac. 412; and the claim of the others by the decisions in Staude v. Board, 61 Cal. 313; Heinlen v. Sullivan, 64 Cal. 378, 1 Pac. 158; and People v. Hammond, 66 Cal. 655, 6 Pac. 741. The effect which a decision overruling those cases would have upon municipal proceedings for over 10 years past is so apparent that it is unnecessary for us to point out the reason why we should adhere to the decisions referred to,—at least so far as the board of supervisors is concerned,—even though we should believe that they were based upon an erroneous construction of the provisions involved. And, although the rule applies with less force to the case of the police commissioners, no good reason has been shown why the decisions heretofore rendered should be departed from. If the principle is wrong, or the system works unsatisfactorily, the remedy remains with the people." In People v. Edwards, 93 Cal. 153, 28 Pac. 831, the power of the governor to appoint a fire commissioner was under consideration. The circumstances were substantially the same as in the Hammond Case, the present constitution there, as in the Hammond Case, having abolished the original appointing power. The court said: "Questions involving the same principles as those under discussion were decided in People v. Hammond, 66 Cal. 654, 6 Pac. 741. Under the act of April 1, 1878, the respondent in that case and two others were appointed by certain district court judges, named in the act, police commissioners for the city and county of San Francisco. By the constitution of 1879 the judges of the court named were superseded, but the powers given to them by the act referred to were not vested in any other person or tribunal. It was claimed by the relator in that case, as it is by the relator here, that under section 8, art. 5, and section 16, art. 20, of the constitution, the office became vacant at the expiration of four years from the date of the defendant's appointment, and that the governor had the power to fill such vacancy. These contentions did not receive the sanction of the court. It was held that there was no vacancy which the governor was authorized to fill. Unless that case is to be overthrown, it is an authoritative adjudication against the claim of the relator herein, and entitles the defendant to hold the office until his successor has been appointed or elected, and has qualified, or until the office has been abolished by the power which created it. It would be sufficient to rest the decision herein upon a reference to that and other cases involving similar questions. * * * It is claimed that section 16 of article 20 of the constitution makes it unlawful to occupy an office created by the legislature for a longer period than four years. The section provides 'when the term of any officer or commissioner is not provided for in this constitution, the term of such officer or commissioner may be declared by law; * * * but in no case shall such term exceed four years.' This question also was passed upon in People v. Hammond, 66 Cal. 654, 6 Pac. 741, and requires no further notice." In People v. Newman, 96 Cal. 605, 31 Pac. 564, the Hammond Case being again cited and discussed, it is said: "This contention was fully presented by eminent counsel in People v. Hammond, 66 Cal. 654, 6 Pac. 741, and a petition for rehearing was filed and denied. After such consideration and determination by the court, we think the point should be treated as finally settled."

It is thus apparent that the principle of the Hammond Case has not only been reaffirmed, but has formed the basis of judicial determinations involving the existence and mode of filling other offices. As was said in People v. Pond, supra: "The effect which a decision overruling these cases would have upon municipal proceedings for over ten years past is so apparent that it is unnecessary for us to point out the reasons why we should adhere to the decision referred to." And, to quote People v. Freese, 83 Cal. 453, 23 Pac. 378: "We see no good reason why the rule of stare decisis should not govern this case; and looking ahead, we see good reason why it should. It is not a matter of much importance who should temporarily have the office struggled for here. But it is a matter of considerable importance, in order to avoid uncertainty and disorder in the future, that those exercising power in the premises may have a settled rule to go by." The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

RICHARDSON v. CITY OF EUREKA.

(S. F. 75.)

FORMER DECISION—ISSUES INVOLVED—OBSTRUCTION OF WATER COURSE—INJUNCTION—EQUITY—INSTRUCTIONS—WAIVER OF FINDINGS.

1. Where a landowner recovered damages from a city in an action wherein the complaint alleged that defendant created a nuisance by obstructing a natural water course which ran across plaintiff's lot, on which there was a building, and the answer denied the existence of the water course, the creating of a nuisance, and that plaintiff was damaged, and thereafter plaintiff again sued for damages to the same property from a continuance of the same obstruction, which caused the building on plaintiff's lot to settle and the walls to crack, and rendered it untenantable, defendant was not precluded by the judgment in the former suit from showing that the injuries complained of in the latter were due to defects in the construction of plaintiff's building, or to its situation on marshy ground, and not to the obstruction of the water course.

2. In an action by a lot owner to restrain a city from maintaining street improvements which obstructed a stream, and set water back on his land, where it appeared that plaintiff refused defendant's offer to flow the water from his premises by connecting with a sewer, injunction was properly denied.

3. A judgment in equity will not be reversed because of erroneous instructions to the jury.

4. In an equitable action, a motion by plaintiff to disregard the verdict and render findings and decision for him is not a request for express findings, and hence does not show that express findings were not waived.

5. A judgment in equity will not be reversed because the court failed to make express findings, where it does not affirmatively appear that such findings were not waived.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; G. W. Hunter, Judge.

Action by Charles Richardson against the city of Eureka for damages resulting from the maintenance of a nuisance, and for an injunction. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. Turner, for appellant. J. N. Gillett and A. J. Monroe, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action, begun January 6, 1894, is a sequel of the case between the same parties reported in 96 Cal. 443, 31 Pac. 458. In that case Richardson obtained a judgment, which was affirmed in this court, for damages accruing to him by reason of a nuisance consisting in the obstruction of a natural water course on his land, and caused by certain street improvements made under the direction of defendant. In this action plaintiff seeks to recover for damage caused by the alleged continued maintenance of the same nuisance, and an injunction to restrain the further continuance thereof. We are informed by the present record that in the said former action it was alleged by plaintiff, among other things, that he was the owner of a lot of land situated at the corner of Fourth and E streets, in the city of Eureka, and of certain buildings thereon; that a natural waterway ran across said lot, by which a great quantity of surface water was collected, and that such water escaped through a culvert crossing said Fourth street in front of plaintiff's property; that in grading said streets adjacent to plaintiff's lot the defendant moved said culvert, and negligently failed to replace the same with any means for the escape of such water. The record here discloses further that the answer in that case denied the existence of said natural waterway, "denied the creating of any nuisance, and denied any damage resulting therefrom," and that judgment on the verdict of a jury was entered for plaintiff therein, August 28, 1890, for $1,000 damages. Nothing more appears of the material issues made and determined there. The complaint in the present action repeated substantially the allegations above mentioned of the former complaint; stated also that as a consequence of said nuisance the water was, for two years next before the commencement of this suit, confined upon plaintiff's land, and under the buildings thereon, rendering the same uninhabitable, and causing various injuries thereto, such as the settling of the foundations, the cracking of the walls, etc., as well as preventing any income to plaintiff from the rents thereof; that the nuisance was continuing, threatening irreparable injury, etc. Issue was joined upon these averments. The case was tried by a jury, and the judgment roll in the first action was placed in evidence by plaintiff, together with the testimony of several witnesses concerning the alleged injuries. Such testimony related almost entirely to a large building on the lowest part of plaintiff's lot, at the corner of said streets, and there was no dispute that water stood under such building to the depth of 16 inches and more. On the part of defendant there was evidence tending to prove that the building was constructed on marshy and boggy land, and would have settled of its own weight; that, by reason of embankments and drains made in said natural water course, no water has descended therein to plaintiff's property since the time of the trial of the first action, August 28, 1890, except such as collected from the half block including his lot; that the foundation of his building is so constructed as to form a water-tight bulkhead, rendering the escape of water therefrom impossible without cutting an orifice through such foundation; that in December, 1892, the city constructed a sewer in said Fourth street for the purpose of draining plaintiff's lot, and that, upon inquiry being made to him as to where connection should be made with his premises, he said "he wouldn't recognize that sewer at all, and didn't want to connect"; that about a year later the city attempted to connect such sewer with the pond under plaintiff's building by making an aperture through the foundation, when he forbade the work, and said he would not have the foundation cut into, and that such sewer, if so connected, would drain his lot dry. Plaintiff's alleged reason for refusing a connection with the new sewer was that the same was not as low as the former culvert. There was no evidence that any substantial injury to his property could result from such connection. No special issues were submitted to the jury, and a general verdict was returned for the defendant. Plaintiff then moved the court to "make and render its findings and decision in favor of the plaintiff; the verdict of the jury being contrary to the evidence, and contrary to the instructions of the court." The motion was denied, and judgment was entered that plaintiff take nothing.

1. The former judgment establishes that a natural water course existed on plaintiff's premises, and that defendant obstructed the same to the nuisance of plaintiff; but, so far as can be discerned from the record here, it was not then determined that any injury was or would be caused thereby to plaintiff's buildings, or the rental value of his premises, and it is only by inference that we can conclude from that judgment that the water was dammed on his land at all. For anything appearing, the injury there may have arisen from giving the flowing water a new direction,—cutting away plaintiff's land, or carrying off his buildings. Application of the doctrine of res judicata cannot be made by inference or surmise upon the effect of a judgment. Code Civ. Proc. § 1911; Lillis v. Ditch Co., 95 Cal. 553, 30 Pac. 1108. Suppose plaintiff had sued the city for damage arising from the destruction of his building; it would be preposterous to say that the defendant could not prove that it was destroyed by fire, if such was the fact, merely because he had established in a former action the creation by the city of a nuisance which might have destroyed the building by the agency of water. So we think it was open to defendant to show that the injuries complained of in this case were the result of defects in the construction of the building, or of its situation, uninfluenced by the nuisance created by defendant, and the decision founded on evidence tending to prove those facts cannot be disturbed as being in conflict with the prior adjudication.

2. It is claimed, however, that the nuisance found by the verdict of August 28, 1890, being shown yet to exist, the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction against its continuance. But admitting that the water course was still obstructed, by reason of defendant's acts and omissions, yet the evidence tended strongly to show that the city had endeavored in a proper manner to redress the injury, and that its efforts were thwarted by the conduct of plaintiff. Injunctions issue to prevent wrongs otherwise irremediable. Here the remedy seems to have been plain, speedy, adequate, and proffered to plaintiff, and no sufficient reason appears why he did not accept it. Under such circumstances an injunction is rightly refused.

3. The case was in equity. Sullivan v. Royer, 72 Cal. 248, 13 Pac. 655. The verdict of the jury was merely advisory to the court, and if the instructions given to the jury were erroneous in any particular, as appellant insists they were, such error is not ground for reversing the judgment. The correctness of the decision of the court, and not the propositions of law it laid down for the guidance of the jury, is the question for determination in such instances. Schneider v. Brown, 86 Cal. 205, 24 Pac. 715; Sullivan v. Royer, supra; Sweetser v. Dobbins, 65 Cal. 529, 4 Pac. 540. Compare Lamb v. Harbaugh, 105 Cal. 692, 39 Pac. 56.

4. Express findings by the court, however, were necessary, unless they were waived. Brandt v. Wheaton, 52 Cal. 430; McLaughlin v. Del Re, 64 Cal. 472, 2 Pac. 244. But absence of such findings in the record is not a fatal defect, unless it affirmatively appears that they were not waived. Campbell v. Coburn, 77 Cal. 36, 18 Pac. 860. We think there is no such affirmative showing here. The plaintiff moved the court to disregard the verdict, and render its findings and decision in favor of the plaintiff. This was not a request for findings generally, but for findings of specified import, viz. in favor of plaintiff, and was not such a motion as counsel was authorized to make. Edgar v. Stevenson, 70 Cal. 286, 11 Pac. 704, and cases cited. Non constat that there was not a waiver of findings differing from those asked for. The judgment and order are affirmed.

MEHERIN v. SAUNDERS, Constable, et al.

CONSTABLE—LIABILITY FOR PROCEEDS OF PROPERTY SOLD.

Where a constable sells property under execution, issues his certificate of purchase, and fails to collect a portion of the price, he and his sureties are liable for the entire amount for which the property was sold.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; W. B. Cope, Judge.

Action by Mark Meherin, assignee in insolvency of the California Steamship Company, against J. N. Saunders, constable, and W. H. Schuyler and F. G. Fisk, sureties on his official bond. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. I. Nichols, for appellants. Grant Jackson and Mich. Mullany, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action by the assignee of the California Steamship Company, an insolvent corporation, against defendant Saunders, as constable of judicial township No. 5, of Santa Barbara county, and the sureties upon his official bond. Defendants appealed from a judgment rendered against them, and also from an order denying their motion for a new trial. Saunders, as constable, held certain executions running against the California Steamship Company, prior to insolvency proceedings. One of these executions he levied upon its real estate, and proceeded to sell the same. At the sale one Ambrose bid $10,000 for the property, and it was knocked down to him as the highest bidder. Thereupon, in payment of the purchase price, he gave the constable $855 in money and his personal check for the balance, amounting to $9,145. Ambrose was well known to the officer, and of sound financial standing. The constable issued to him a certificate of sale in proper form, and satisfied the executions, including accruing costs, with the money received. At this stage of the proceedings Ambrose stopped payment upon the check, and the money therefor has never come into the hands of the constable. This action is brought to recover from the constable the amount of the check, as money in his hands received at the sale.

There are a great many matters set out in the answer which are purely surplusage, and no defense to the allegations of the complaint. The only statement found therein which would seem to possess the semblance of a defense to the action is the allegation that the defendant constable executed the certificate of purchase set out in the complaint "without consideration, and through misapprehension, mistake, surprise, and excusable neglect"; but we find nothing in the evidence to support this allegation, conceding such an issue to be a material one. Under the evidence, we are bound to hold that the entire $10,000 was received by Saunders, the constable. It is settled law that a sheriff cannot impeach his return as to the amount of money received by him at execution sale, and, certainly, this could not be done as to the judgment debtor. Harvey v. Foster, 64 Cal. 296, 30 Pac. 849. But, conceding that the certificate of purchase here issued is not the equivalent of the sheriff's return, and that there is no paper in this record such equivalent, still the evidence as to the character of the transaction is indisputable, and by the constable's own words his liability is fixed. He says: "I did collect in coin from Ambrose $855. The reason I did not collect the balance of that $10,000 from him was because Mr. Ambrose didn't have the money with him, and I supposed the check was good. Knowing he was good, I took it in lieu of that much money, and gave him the certificate of sale for that $10,000, and acknowledged receipt of the $10,000 in that certificate of sale. I never tried to collect that money from Donahoe, Kelly & Co. I have not, up to this time, demanded of Ambrose to pay that check in money. I gave him the certificate of sale because I supposed that I had received the money, counting the check. I suppose—well, I knew he was good for it, and I put it in as that much money, supposing it would be paid." This principle of law, as to the conclusiveness of the sheriff's return as against him, equally applies where he attempts to show that he received notes or other property in lieu of money in satisfaction of the judgment or execution. Harper v. Fox, 7 Watts & S. 142; Fitch's Appeal, 10 Pa. St. 461. Reduced to its simplest form, the case is this: The constable sold the property for a certain sum, issued his certificate of purchase, and failed to collect a portion of the purchase price. Upon such a state of facts, he is clearly liable for the entire amount. He cannot be allowed to say, "I never collected the money from the purchaser, or I took his check for the purchase price, thinking it was as good as the money, or he beguiled me into giving a certificate of purchase, and then refused to pay the amount he owed me upon the purchase, and, consequently, I am not liable." While the purchaser, Ambrose, was upon the witness stand, in answer to a question of counsel as to why he did not pay the balance of the purchase price of the property, he said, in effect, that, as between him and the California Steamship Company, it was never intended to be paid; that he was acting for the corporation in making the bid, and only intended to advance sufficient money to pay off the executions held by the constable. This evidence came in under objection that it was outside of the issues made, and such is probably the fact; but, if defendants in the first instance, by their answer, had made an issue in line with such evidence, or had asked the court for the privilege of amending their answer when the evidence was given, and had been refused such privilege, it would seem the result of this litigation might have been entirely different. For such an agreement between Ambrose and the corporation, under proper pleadings, would have formed a material as well as interesting branch of the case.

We perceive no error in the action of the court in correcting the unsubstantial defects in the constable's bond. The case appears to be one of hardship upon the defendant constable, but we find no path marked out in the law by which he may escape the serious results to him following his own negligence. Probably he has his remedy over against Ambrose for the balance of the purchase price, for by the record Ambrose appears to be financially responsible. For the foregoing reasons the judgment and order are affirmed.

MAHONEY et al. v. SAN FRANCISCO & S. M. RY. CO. (No. 15,944.)[1]

STREET RAILROAD COMPANIES—INJURIES TO PERSONS ON TRACK—NEGLIGENCE AND CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTIONS FOR JURY—ACTION FOR WRONGFUL DEATH—EVIDENCE—DISCHARGE OF JUROR DURING TRIAL—WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Where an electric street car runs against a vehicle moving in the same direction, down hill, on a road bordered by a gulch, on a foggy night, the question of contributory negligence is for the jury, though there was sufficient space to enable the persons in the vehicle to keep clear of the track, and they took no pains to do so.

2. In an action by widow and children for death of their husband and father, it is error to allow plaintiffs to prove that the children are without means.

3. In an action against a street-railroad company for death by wrongful act, after much evidence was taken, a juror stated to the judge, in the presence of counsel, that he was familiar with the country in which the accident occurred, and did not believe the statements of three of plaintiffs' witnesses in regard to its description. Held, that it was error to discharge the juror on account thereof.

4. After much evidence was taken, a juror was improperly, and against defendant's objection, discharged by the court, because he stated that he did not believe the statements of certain witnesses, and defendant afterwards consented to proceed with the remaining 11 jurors, instead of commencing the trial anew. Held, that defendant did not thereby waive his objection to the discharge of the juror.

5. The jury in a personal injury suit having returned into court without agreement, the court, after learning that they stood eight to three, stated that, in case of disagreement, all the expense would fall on plaintiffs, who, he said, were not well off; asked if he should not re-read the charge to the three who could not agree; and stated that plaintiffs required but nine jurors; and finally sent them out "to agree." Twenty minutes later, a verdict for plaintiffs for $10,000 was returned. Held, that the instruction was erroneous, as insisting that one of the three should yield to the eight.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Mary Mahoney and others against the San Francisco & San Mateo Railway Company to recover for the death of the husband and father of plaintiffs. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Henley & Costello, for appellant. Thornton & Merzbach and Garber, Boalt & Bishop, and T. F. Riley, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. This action was brought by the widow and six children of Florence Mahoney, deceased, to recover damages for his death, which they allege was caused by the negligence of the defendant. A verdict of $10,000 was rendered, and this appeal is taken by the defendant from the judgment, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The defendant was engaged in operating a street railway on which cars were propelled by electricity, by the overhead or trolley system. The accident occurred on the Old Mission road (a public highway), within the city and county of San Francisco, at about 10 o'clock, upon a dark and foggy night. Deceased and three companions were driving along on the highway, and took no pains to keep clear of the track, although there was sufficient space to enable them to do so. The driver testified at the trial: "The road was plenty wide there. There was plenty of room to keep away from the track. I kept closer to the track than the gulch, to be sure. I could not tell when I would strike a bowlder in the road. I did not drive far enough from the track to clear the car. My intent was to clear the ditch on the right-hand side, without reference to the track. I did not aim to keep clear of the track at all. I depended upon the lights coming along, so we could see it or hear something, and then turn out of the way. I intended to rely upon hearing or seeing. I did not stop at any time to look or listen, for the reason I had people behind, and depended upon them. The noise of the vehicle and of the wind might to some extent interfere with my hearing an approaching car, but still we did not stop." The road at that point was descending at the rate of about 290 feet to the mile in the direction in which the party was traveling. Defendant's car coming up behind was proceeding by gravitation down the grade at a rate variously estimated as from 10 to 20 miles per hour. It struck the wagon in which deceased and his companions were, killed the deceased, and very seriously wounded two others.

Appellant contends that the judgment should be reversed, because it was not shown that the deceased was without fault, and because it is so clear from the evidence that there was contributory negligence that no other rational conclusion can be drawn from it. This contention cannot be maintained. The defendant had no exclusive use of any portion of the highway. Its right was to a use in common with the public, being peculiar only so far as its inability to move from its track made it so. Travelers upon the highway had a right to presume that it would use its franchise in view of the rights of others. If the light of the car was liable to go out because the trolley frequently jumps the wire, other lights should have been employed; and, if an obstruction cannot be seen by its light in time to stop the car, it should move at less velocity. Other travelers should use reasonable diligence to avoid obstructing the track, and it may be that, under some circumstances, a jury would be justified in finding it negligent for one to travel along the track; but it certainly is not negligence per se, and I see nothing in this case which would justify our reversing the verdict; on the contrary, I do not see how the jury could have found otherwise. The law applicable to the matter is correctly stated in Shea v. Railroad Co., 44 Cal. 414.

[1] Rehearing denied and modified. See 110 Cal. 471, 43 Pac. 518.

There was no error in giving or refusing instructions to the prejudice of appellant.

Appellant claims a great many errors of law committed by the court at the trial. Most of them seem to be trivial. It was, however, in my opinion, clear error to allow plaintiffs to prove that the children of the deceased (plaintiffs here) had no means of their own. Such testimony could have been offered for no other purpose than to create prejudice, and should have been excluded.

I think the court also erred in discharging the juror Cooper from the panel. The jury had been passed upon, sworn, and much evidence had been taken. A juror then stated to the judge, in the presence of counsel, that he was familiar with the country in which the accident occurred, and did not believe the statements of three of plaintiff's witnesses in regard to their description of the country. If the juror had personal knowledge of facts material to the case, it was proper for him to announce the fact. He should then have been sworn as a witness, and subjected to cross-examination, and then the court could have exercised its discretion, under section 1883, Code Civ. Proc., in regard to discharging the jury. The statement that he did not believe plaintiff's witnesses was no ground for discharging him from the panel. Perhaps all the jurors had already made up their minds that they did or did not believe the witnesses. They ought not to do this until they have heard both sides. But to do so does not justify the court in discharging the jury. If a juror improperly expresses his opinion, it may constitute such misconduct as will necessitate a new trial. But it must be considered in a formal motion for a new trial. If a juror could be discharged upon such a statement, he could have been put off the panel upon proof that he had such knowledge or had made statements. This practice would open the door to great abuses, as each party might conclude, as the trial progressed, that a juror was unfavorable. The fitness of jurors should be determined before the trial begins.

Defendant's counsel objected to the discharge of the juror, and took their exception. The record then discloses that under the ruling of the court, and after argument, counsel consented to proceed with the remaining 11. It is contended that this was a waiver of the objection. It does not seem so to me. Counsel did not consent to the discharge of Cooper. They insisted upon their right to have him serve as a juror. But after he had been discharged, and when the question was whether they should proceed with the remaining 11 or commence anew, they consented to proceed. The question was not then whether Cooper should be excused or not, for that had already been done. The ruling wrongfully forced upon them the alternative of proceeding with the 11 or of commencing the trial anew. Which course they elected to pursue had no bearing upon the wrong done. In neither case could they regain their rights, and in either case they would retain their exception. There was therefore no speculating on the result of the trial, for, if a new panel had been taken, they could still insist upon their exception.

I think, too, the judgment must be reversed for irregularity on the part of the court. As appears from affidavits filed on the motion for a new trial, after the jury had been out for about 4½ hours, they were brought into court, when the following occurred: "The Foreman: I think it is impossible for the jury to agree. One juror seems to be a little doubtful about some points of law. The Court: If there is anything that I can give you, instructions as to any question of law, to help you to arrive at a verdict, I will be pleased to give them. If the juror who desires to ask a question will ask it, I will endeavor to answer it. A Juror: For my part I do not require any more or further information in regard to the law, because the others do not seem to agree with me. The Court: If it is about the testimony of any witness, it can be read to you. A Juror: No, sir. The Court: Is there any difference in your understanding of the instructions? A Juror: That is it. The Court: If there is, I will give it to you over again. A Juror: It don't make any difference about the instructions. That would not alter the case. The Court (to the foreman): Mr. Bent, without telling me in whose favor you stand, whether for plaintiff or defendant, how do you stand numerically, six to six, or four to eight, or how? A Juror: We stand eight to three, and it has been so since we went into the room. The Court: This trial is a very expensive one, indeed, for both parties, particularly to the plaintiff, who is not well off, I believe; and, if you disagree, all of the time we have spent is absolutely lost, and the plaintiff has to pay all of the fees of this trial and expenses, and go at it again. If the jurors who cannot agree upon a verdict differ in their notions of what witness has testified to, I will be most pleased to help you out. I do not want to try the case again, and counsel do not want to try it again, and the parties do not care to provide expenses again. If you differ as to what you regard as the result of the evidence, as to what you consider the proofs, then I cannot give you any instruction on the subject. I want to ask you if that is the difference between you. A Juror: It is not a matter of instructions. We understand it. The Court: It is a matter of what conclusions you reach from the evidence? A Juror: Yes, sir. The Court: O. Three of your number believe a certain state of facts, and the other eight believe another state of facts? A Juror: Yes, sir. If you were to have your charge re-read, or rather your instructions. The Court: I will do that, or if you will tell me the particular point of law troubling you— A Juror: We do not understand what this gentleman wants to get at. He wanted to have your charge re-read. The Court: What do the other two say about it? A Juror: The other two perfectly understand the evidence, I think. The Court: The plaintiff requires nine men, the same as if he had twelve on the panel. If it is possible for one of these three to arrive at a conclusion, anything I can do I will cheerfully do. There were delays in this case which make the expenses quite heavy. They will be paid to you the same whether you give a verdict or not. If any of these gentlemen who entertain these views desire to hear me give any portion of that charge and any instructions, and will indicate about what they want, I will be pleased to do it. I do not want to read them all unless you want to hear them all. They are very long, but if you will let me know upon what point— Do you understand the last instruction, which just before dinner you asked me to have read to you? Jurors: Yes, sir; we understood that. A Juror: I think this gentleman wanted to know whether they had any right upon that track or not. I think he is doubtful about that. The Court: I have told you that the street is a public highway, and that persons have the right to be upon the street, and to use the street either as pedestrians or riding. They had a right to be upon the highway, in law. Mr. Thornton: Can I request an instruction upon that point? The Court: Not at present. Mr. Costello: I think that it is a point for the jury to decide. The Court: As a matter of law, they had a lawful right to be upon that highway. The deceased and parties in the wagon had a lawful right to be upon that highway. The fact that they may have been actually driving upon the railroad track would not make them trespassers unless they did it in view of imminent danger, because the public as well as the railroad company have an equal right to the use of that public highway. It is admitted here that it is a public highway, which means a street or place open to the public for use either as pedestrian in walking or vehicles driving. If that is the question of law you want to ask, I will say that they did have the right to be there driving. Is there any other question of law that you would like to ask me? Because I am going to send you out once more, and give you a chance to try to agree. I think that, when you appreciate the circumstances and situation of the parties, you will make one more effort to do it. A Juror: Does the law compel transportation companies to maintain a permanent light at night? The Court: In my opinion, it is the duty of a corporation using a public street or highway at night to provide lights sufficient to apprise people lawfully upon the highway of the coming or approach of a car. As a matter of law, I will state to you that a street-railway car company using the public highway, and using it by night, it is their duty to provide lights sufficient to apprise people upon that highway—traveling upon that highway—of their approach. And if, without any fault upon the part of the persons thus traveling, without fault upon their part directly contributing to the injury, they are injured in consequence of the failure of the company to provide light, then I say that such a party is entitled to recover. Do you understand that? Jurors: Yes, sir. Mr. Costello: We except to that portion of your honor's charge. The jury then again retired, and, after further deliberation, returned into court with a verdict for the plaintiff and against the defendant, assessing the damages at $10,000."

It will be seen that, after finding out that the jury stood eight to three, the court called attention to the fact that all the expense would fall on the plaintiff, who was not well off. The judge then said: "If the jurors who cannot agree upon a verdict differ," etc. Who were these jurors? For, evidently, certain jurors were meant, and not all. But the judge made this matter evident, for when a juror said: "We do not understand what this gentleman wants to get at. He wanted to have your charge re-read,"—the court asked: "What do the other two say about it?" Why did he not say "the other nine," for they were as much failing to agree as the two? Evidently, it must have appeared to the jury that the court was insisting that the three, or one of them, should yield to the eight, for he proceeds to say that plaintiff requires nine jurors. He only had eight, it seems; for why did he say plaintiff requires nine? Why not the defendant, or why specify either party? He finally said: "I am going to send you out once more, and give you a chance to try to agree. I think that, when you appreciate the circumstances and situation of the parties, you will make one more effort to do it." The affidavit shows that the jury then returned a verdict of $10,000 for plaintiff in from 10 to 20 minutes.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded.

In re RAMAZZINA et al. (L. A. 87.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 18, 1895.)

INSOLVENCY—PETITION—ALLEGATION OF PARTNERSHIP.

1. It is enough that a petition in insolvency fairly shows that petitioners are partners; a direct allegation thereof is not necessary to give jurisdiction.

2. One is an insolvent, though his assets in value exceed the amount of his liabilities, when he is unable to pay his debts as they become due from his own means.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; W. B. Cope, Judge.

In re Sam. Ramazzina and another, individually and as copartners under the firm name and style of Ramazzina Bros., as insolvent debtors. From a decree declaring such parties insolvent, a creditor appeals. Affirmed.

W. I. Nichols and C. A. Storke, for appellant. Slade & Armstrong, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an appeal by a creditor from an order of the superior court adjudicating the above-named parties insolvent debtors. It is claimed that the court had no jurisdiction to make the order, by reason of fatal defects appearing upon the face of the petition. It is first insisted that the petition does not show that petitioners are partners, but we think that fact sufficiently appears when the entire petition is considered. While a direct allegation to that effect would have been good pleading, yet its absence is not jurisdictional, if the fact fairly appears, taking the petition as a whole. Further complaint is made that the petition is ambiguous, indefinite, and unintelligible. While it may well be said to be somewhat crude in many respects, still crudities are not fatal to jurisdiction, and bad grammar used by a pleader does not vitiate a pleading. It is also insisted that the copartnership of Ramazzina Bros. was not insolvent at the time of the filing of said petition, as shown by a comparison of its assets and liabilities appearing therein. While it does appear therefrom that the valuation of the partnership assets exceeds considerably the liabilities of the partnership, yet the petition further discloses that the partners individually are hopelessly insolvent. The petitioners further allege, directly, that they are insolvent, and the mere fact that the assets in value exceed their liabilities does not prove solvency. Such fact might exist, and often does exist, and still a debtor be entirely insolvent within the purview of the insolvent act. A debtor, when he is unable to pay his debts from his own means as they became due, is insolvent. Washburn v. Huntington, 78 Cal. 573, 21 Pac. 305; Sacry v. Lobree, 84 Cal. 41, 23 Pac. 1088. The order appealed from is affirmed.

In re CLOS' ESTATE. (L. A. 32.)

ACCOUNTING BY EXECUTRIX—EXPENSE OF REPAIRS—ALLOWANCE OF CLAIM—CONDITION PRECEDENT.

1. An executrix of an estate, part of the buildings on which had been used for years as stables, on complaint as to their unsafe condition, consulted architects in regard to repairing the same, but was informed that, since the buildings were within the fire limits of a city, an ordinance required fireproof roofs and walls. It appeared that the premises were practically untenantable, because of the condition of the stables. Held, that the erection of new buildings at a reasonable cost on the site of the old for the same purposes, and in compliance with the ordinance, were "repairs," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1452, requiring executors to "keep in good, tenantable repair all houses, buildings, and fixtures" on the estate, so that the executrix was entitled to credit for the expense thereof on her accounting.

2. The right of an executrix to credits for expenses incurred in administering the trust should be determined on equitable principles.

3. An executrix need not show, as a condition precedent to the allowance of a claim for the expense of repairs on the estate, that the repairs were ordered by the probate court, where the expense was reasonable, and for the benefit of the estate.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. H. Clark, Judge.

Accounting by Mrs. Escallier, as executrix of the estate of Pierre Clos, deceased. From an order disallowing a claim for repairing buildings on the estate, the executrix appeals. Reversed.

McKeeby & Appel and J. Brousseau, for appellant. Geo. D. Blake, for respondents.

VAN FLEET, J. Among the items of the account filed by the executrix of the estate were these:

By payment to Frank J. Capitan for architectural services, general contract, brickwork, plumbing, etc., for repairing and rebuilding stables at No. 24 Aliso street.......	$2,611 74
By services of said Capitan for preparing plans for said building....	130 53

Upon the settlement of the account the court below rejected and disallowed these items, upon the ground, as stated in the bill of exceptions, "that the said items were not a proper charge of the said executrix against the said estate"; and the only question involved in the appeal which is taken by the executrix is the propriety of the action of the court in that regard. The evidence in support of the rejected items was wholly uncontroverted, and was, in substance, this:

The executrix testified: "The estate is the owner of an undivided one-half of certain premises, situate at Nos. 24 and 26 Aliso street. I am the owner of the other undivided one-half in my own right. At the time of the death of Pierre Clos, and long prior thereto, on a part of the premises, to wit, the yard immediately back of the front of the said building, which front part is used as a lodging house and saloon and restaurant, there were some structures used as stables, which had been built a great many years before the death of Pierre Clos, my husband; and the structures were old and decayed, and had been repaired from time to time. The stalls for horses and the sheds for carriages had no flooring. The roofs were of poor material. There were no brick walls inclosing the stable, and there was an adobe wall on the east side, which had been built there for years, and had been broken down, and was nearly tumbling over. The stables were inclosed by an adobe wall, and partly by a picket fence. The picket fence was old and rotten, and the adobe wall had been partly torn down by the water which had accumulated in the yard, and forced itself into the premises of the occupants of the surrounding property. There was no sewerage on the premises, and when it rained the water accumulated there and rendered the place very muddy, and almost unfit for the occupation of the premises as a stable. The roofs over the stalls were in such condition that whenever it rained the horses would get wet, and the stalls rendered unfit for occupation. From time to time there were a great many complaints made to me by the neighbors, and the authorities of the city of Los Angeles also made complaint to me that the premises were a nuisance, and that they had to be repaired, or the stables abandoned and removed. The stench was of such character that it made all the neighbors complain, and was almost unbearable. I had been paying considerable money for repairing the premises from time to time, but every year they had to be repaired over and over again, and my tenants who occupied the lodging house and the saloon immediately above and in front of the stables threatened to leave the place unless I repaired it in such a way that the water would have an outlet, and the stables were fixed in such a condition that they would keep perfectly free and clean from unbearable smells or odors. Mr. Valdez, who was then occupying the premises for stables, complained to me from time to time, and finally, in 1890, during the rainy season, he notified me that he would leave the premises unless I repaired them. I consulted a number of architects and builders, who gave me estimates in reference to the cost and expense of repairing the stables, and Mr. Capitan gave me the lowest bid. I wanted simply to repair the stables with lumber, and to put on shingle roofs; but that part of the city where the stables are situated was included within the exterior limits fixed by the fire ordinance of the city of Los Angeles, and by that ordinance I could not put up a frame building or frame structure, or any repairs built of lumber, without the permission of the city authorities, and they absolutely refused to allow me to make the repairs in any other manner than as I repaired them. I was required to build fire walls, and to put on fireproof roofs over the stables. The stalls had to be built over again, as well as flooring put into them, so that they could be kept clean and free from odors or bad smells, The carriage repository had also to be rebuilt, and that was built of metal and iron, as well as the hay barn. The whole work was done well and skillfully, and was cheap at the price I paid. The two items, to wit, the sums of $2,611.74 and of $130.53, appearing in my account as having been paid to Mr. Capitan, were paid for one-half the work done in repairing and constructing the stables; the total sum being $5,484.54; the other half being paid by me. The work I considered absolutely necessary so as to keep up the premises as a stable. The front part of the lot is only about thirty-eight feet, and this space is taken up with an entrance to the back yard of the lot, which is used as a stable, and a small portion as an entrance to the saloon, which is built running into the lot from the front of the building, so that the lot is very wide at the rear, with a very narrow frontage, and could not have been kept for any purpose except a stable. The premises had been occupied as a stable for years back, as far as I can remember, and it was a well-known stand as a stable, and could not have been rented for any other purpose. If I had not repaired the stable, and had left the old sheds and old, rotten lumber upon the premises, the saloon, restaurant, and lodging house could not have been kept rented, by reason of the bad condition of the premises. Since I repaired the stables they have been constantly rented, and have produced good rents. So has the saloon and the lodging house. The insurance on the premises has been reduced considerably; and the property is of far greater value by reason of the building of the stables as they are now than it was before. I could not have received any rent from the premises, except by doing the work that I did do."

The architect testified: "I was the architect, and supervised the building of the stables at No. 24 Aliso street for the executrix. I saw the stables as they stood there before I did the work. They were totally unfit to be occupied as a stable, both from a sanitary point of view, and from a financial point of view. I do not believe the stables, as they stood there before my work was done, should have been kept for stable purposes. The stalls were old and rotten. The roofs were tumbling down and were decayed. The floors were all of mud, and were in such a condition that a person could not retain his health and work on the premises. When it came to figuring how the stable should be rebuilt, we were confronted by the city ordinance of the city of Los Angeles, which would compel us to put on fireproof roofs and fireproof walls, and extend them up on three sides, to conform to the requirements of the city ordinance. I figured on the work, and put it down as low as possible. The work had to be done, or else the stables had to be abandoned. I consider the expenditure an absolutely necessary one, and very reasonable. The work is fully worth the money. The stable could not be built in any other manner than as we built it. I have heard the statement by the executrix here in court, and I consider it a fair, full, and true statement of the circumstances under which these stables were built. The work renders the place a pure, healthy, clean business place, and I consider that the value of the premises has been greatly added to by the work. The work was the erection and construction of an absolutely new building or structure, and not in any sense the repair of an old one."

Mr. Valdez testified: "I was occupying the premises for a number of years. I was there when the repairs were made. I considered that the stables could not have been repaired in any other manner than they were repaired. The work was absolutely necessary, and the price paid for repairing the stables is reasonable. I never saw the premises kept for any other purpose than for stable, saloon, lodging house, and restaurant. The front part of the lot is narrow, and the back part is very wide. Aliso street is not fit for anything else than stables, lodging houses, saloons, and restaurants. It is in that part of the city which is next to wholesale houses, and is not a residence portion of the city. The lodging houses are occupied by workingmen generally. Aliso street is a thoroughfare for people residing east of the city, out in the country, and these premises were occupied as a stable for a great many years. Before the repairs were made the property was absolutely in a totally unfit condition for use. The roofs were old and decayed, were tumbling down, and it was dangerous to leave horses at night in the stables whenever it was rainy, or when it was windy, for fear they would be killed. There was no place to keep carriages, for fear the water would pour on them and damage them. The floors were in a muddy condition, and a person would have to wade through the mud and water to get to the stalls and carriages, and carriages and horses could not be kept clean. I made several complaints to Mrs. Escallier that the premises had to be repaired, or I should move. The neighbors were complaining of the bad odors and smells arising from the premises. I was threatened with suits for maintaining nuisances. The stables were repaired from time to time, until in 1890 I made up my mind to leave the premises, or have them repaired. So I notified Mrs. Escallier."

Mr. Sabichi, the agent of the executrix for the buildings, testified: "I know the premises in question. I know when the repairs were made. I was her agent at the time. I consulted with a number of architects and builders as to the proper manner of repairing the stables. The repairs were absolutely needed, and, after consulting with them all, I thought that the bid put in by Mr. Capitan was the lowest and most reasonable. I have examined the work done, and I consider it very good, and the value of the property greatly added to by the work done."

It does not clearly appear from the record upon what ground the learned judge of the court below based his action in the premises, as no specific findings were made, and the only reason stated is the general one found in the order settling the account,—that the rejected items were not proper charges against the estate. From expressions in the brief of respondent, however, we infer that the items were disallowed because the court adopted the view now taken by the respondent, that the alterations made in the building in question were deemed to be more in the nature of the erection of a new building than the repair or improvement of an old one, and that such expenditure was not, for that reason, the subject-matter of a proper charge against the estate. It is perfectly true, as a general proposition, that executors and administrators are not required nor permitted to make permanent improvements upon the property of the estate in their charge, in the way of erecting new buildings or structures, and that expenditures made for such purposes will not be allowed; and the only question is whether that rule, in its strictness, should be applied to the facts of this case. We are constrained to think that it should not. If the case were one where the executrix had proceeded to erect buildings or other permanent improvements upon a vacant lot or unoccupied piece of land of the estate, it would, no doubt, fall strictly within the rule contended for. But such is not this case. Here the intention and purpose of the executrix were to improve and put in repair premises for many years devoted to a particular use, and from which the estate was deriving an income, for the purpose of keeping those premises from being abandoned, and the income being lost to the estate. The statute made it her duty to "keep in good, tenantable repair all houses, buildings and fixtures" upon the real estate belonging to the estate. Code Civ. Proc. § 1452. The repairs in this instance, it is true, involved practically a rebuilding of the structure, rather than a repair thereof, in its strict sense, and perhaps in a purely legal sense, and for other purposes, would be so considered. But the extensive character of the work done would seem to have been largely rendered necessary by the requirements of the city ordinance,—a matter over which the executrix had no control. No question is made of her perfect good faith in the premises, and it appears that by the repairs and improvements made the property has been largely enhanced in value, and has been bringing in a steady income since the completion of the alterations made, of all which the estate has had the benefit. The work appears to have been done only after taking the advice of competent builders as to the best method to pursue in making the repairs rendered necessary; and that the work was well done, and the cost a reasonable one for the character of such work, no question is made. Under these circumstances, and it appearing that the estate has received the full benefit of the expenditure, we think it would be very inequitable indeed to hold the executrix not entitled to a reimbursement. And it is according to the rules and principles of equity that the acts of an executor had in the administration of his trust are to be adjudged. In re Moore, 96 Cal. 528, 31 Pac. 584. In that case, quoting from In re Niles, 113 N. Y. 536, 21 N. E. 687, the court say: "This matter of the administration of assets of the estate is peculiarly within the cognizance of equity, and the surrogate's court, in adjusting the accounts of executors and administrators, is governed by principles of equity as well as law. Upson v. Badeau, 3 Brad. 15. In the exercise of the statutory powers conferred upon him to direct and control the conduct and settle the accounts of administrators and executors, the surrogate is not fettered, nor is he prevented by any rule of law from doing exact justice to the parties. He is supposed to administer justice in each case within his jurisdiction according as the equities of the case demand, within the confines only of statutory provisions." Judged by these principles, we think the work done in this instance should be held to be a repairing of the premises, within the requirements of the statute, the expenditure for which appellant should have been allowed in her account. It would have been better, perhaps, as it would in any case, had the executrix first procured the permission of the probate court to make the contemplated improvement, before proceeding thereto; but this is not an indispensable condition to the allowance of the demand in her account, where it appears that the expenditures were just and reasonable, and have been made in the interests of the estate. Estate of Moore, 88 Cal. 1, 25 Pac. 915. It follows that the order should be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to modify its order by allowing the rejected items. It is so ordered.

WILLIAMS v. SOUTHERN PAC. R. CO.

(No. 15,986.)

PARTNERSHIP DEMAND—ACTION BY PARTNER INDIVIDUALLY—DEFECT OF PARTIES—WAIVER—NONSUIT—OBJECTIONS WAIVED—HARMLESS ERROR—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 382, requires parties in interest to be joined as plaintiffs or defendants. Section 434 provides that defect of parties plaintiff, not apparent on the face of the complaint, is waived if not taken by answer, as required by section 433. Held, that when the objection of absence of partners as parties plaintiff, not apparent on the face of the complaint, in an action by a partner individually on a partnership demand, is waived by failure to make it by answer, a motion for nonsuit, on the ground that he could not maintain the action individually, is properly denied.

2. Failure to except to instructions, on the ground that they contradict an instruction already given, is a waiver of the objection.

3. To instruct on a point not in issue is error.

4. The objection that instructions contradict a previous instruction is not reversible error, where it appears that such previous instruction was erroneous, and in favor of appellant.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by C. B. Williams against the Southern Pacific Railroad Company for labor performed under contract. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Maxwell, Dorsey & Soto and Maxwell McEnerney, for appellant. J. C. Bates, for respondent.

BRITT, C. Action to recover compensation for certain paving and other street work which plaintiff alleges was done by him at defendant's request. The answer consisted of denials of the material averments of the complaint. The trial was before a jury, and the verdict and judgment were in plaintiff's favor for the amount of the alleged value of the work.

1. It was disclosed in the course of the evidence for plaintiff at the trial that the contract for the work was made orally between one Haley, the agent of defendant, and the plaintiff, Williams; the latter acting, however, as was known to defendant, on behalf of a copartnership composed of Williams and two others, having no firm name, but carrying on business together, and sharing its profits. The work in question was done by the firm at the joint expense. Thereupon defendant moved the court for judgment of nonsuit, on the ground that plaintiff could not individually maintain the action upon a contract made with and performed by the partnership, which motion was denied.

There is no doubt that at common law all the members of a partnership, except dormant or merely nominal partners, must be joined as plaintiffs in an action of this character, and that, before the Code, a motion for nonsuit made as in this instance would have been sustained. Cushing v. Marston, 12 Cush. 431; Colly. Partn. §§ 649, 667; Story, Partn. § 241; Wilson v. Wallace, 8 Serg. & R. 53. In the case last cited, decided more than 70 years ago, the supreme court of Pennsylvania, while sustaining the precise objection made by defendant here, yet ventured this reflection: "Perhaps, weighing the conveniences and inconveniences, it would be more convenient that the parties should, after issue joined, proceed on the merits, than that the defendant should be allowed to nonsuit the plaintiff on a mere matter of form." There may be some room for debate whether the objection is matter of form only; but our legislation provides that, of the parties to an action, those who are united in interest must be joined as plaintiffs or defendants (Code Civ. Proc. § 382); that the defendant may demur to a complaint for defect of parties plaintiff (Id. § 430); that, if the defect does not appear on the face of the complaint, the objection may be taken by answer (Id. § 433); and that, if objection on that ground be not taken by demurrer or answer, the defendant is deemed to have waived the same (Id. § 434). These provisions are substantially the same as the statutes of New York pertaining to the same subject; and under them it seems to be settled there that in actions upon contract, as well as in tort, one partner may recover the whole amount due his firm, unless the defendant plead the nonjoinder. Among the reasons assigned is that the interest of a single partner extends to the entire demand; that, as payment to him would discharge defendant's liability to the firm, a recovery of the whole in the action by him has the like effect. Zabriskie v. Smith, 13 N. Y. 322; Patchin v. Peck, 38 N. Y. 39; Dickinson v. Vanderpoel, 2 Hun, 626. See, also, Sullivan v. Cement Co., 119 N. Y. 348, 23 N. E. 820; Chapin v. Clemitson, 1 Barb. 311. In the view of the Minnesota court, the change in this behalf introduced by the Code accords with the suggestion above quoted from 8 Serg. & R.; and it held that the ground here taken by appellant is untenable, unless the objection is specially pleaded. Choteau v. Davis, 32 Minn. 548, 21 N. W. 748. To similar effect is Dunn v. Railroad Co., 68 Mo. 268. And in England, since the judicature acts of 1873–75, and the orders promulgated under them, the failure to join all the partners as plaintiffs is no longer fatal to an action. "If all the members of a firm sue when one only ought to do so, or one only sues when all ought to do so, and the defendant can show that he is thereby prejudiced, he can apply to have the improper parties struck out, or the proper parties joined, as the case may be." Lindl. Partn. 278.

The question being not wholly clear on the cases in this state, it has seemed proper to refer thus briefly to the practice prevailing in other jurisdictions. In Andrews v. Hill Co., 7 Cal. 330, the plaintiff sued for his proportion of a joint debt, alleging that the residue had been paid to his co-contractor. The defendant pleaded in its answer that the debt sued on was due, if at all, to plaintiff and such other as partners, and denied the right of plaintiff to recover any portion thereof as his separate demand. The court held on a rehearing (affirming the judgment for plaintiff) that the objection, if any, appeared on the face of the plaintiff's complaint, and that, by failing to demur, the defendant had, in virtue of the statute, waived the point. There are, however, some later cases from which may be argued, as appellant has done, with considerable plausibility, that proof of a partnership claim only, under the issues here, presents an instance of failure of proof. McCord v. Seale, 56 Cal. 262; Weinreich v. Johnston, 78 Cal. 254, 20 Pac. 556; Webb v. Trescony, 76 Cal. 621, 18 Pac. 796. See, also, Baxter v. Hart, 104 Cal. 344, 37 Pac. 941.

But the question now raised was not involved in any of these cases; and, on the other hand, it has been often decided that defect of parties having a joint interest with plaintiff in the contract or other subject of the action must be pleaded. Trenor v. Railroad Co., 50 Cal. 222; Wendt v. Ross, 33 Cal. 650; Dunn v. Tozer, 10 Cal. 167. Thus, in Foley v. Bullard, 99 Cal. 516, 33 Pac. 1081, a judgment in favor of plaintiff enforcing the lien of a street assessment, he being one of two owners of the demand in suit, was sustained; the court saying that, if the defendants would rely upon the defect of parties plaintiff, the objection should have been presented in their answer. In Rutenberg v. Main, 47 Cal. 221, the court said that the statutory provision (of the same class as that we are considering) requiring an objection for misjoinder of defendants to be pleaded "to the extent necessary to give it effect controls the principle that the proofs and allegations must correspond." The object of the statute is to bring the parties to speedy issue on the merits; and we are of opinion, following the incontestable trend of authority, that the absence as parties of some of the partners from a complaint by one or more of them on a partnership demand does not, speaking strictly, affect the merits, and, in order to be considered, must be pleaded by the defendant. The motion for nonsuit was therefore properly denied.

2. At the close of the evidence, the court instructed the jury on the request of the defendant, that if they found that plaintiff made the alleged contract on behalf of his firm, and that the firm did the work at the expense of the partnership, pursuant to such contract, and none other, then they should find for defendant. The court then, of its own motion, gave the jury other instructions, which, defendant contends, were contradictory of that above stated, and nullified its effect. We agree with this contention, but defendant took no objection or exception to such additional instructions, and must be deemed to have consented to the presentation of the case to the jury in this manner. Wilkinson v. Parrott, 32 Cal. 102. Moreover, the first instruction, being upon a point not in issue, was erroneous; and, being in favor of appellant, the conflict with other instructions is no ground for reversal. Dennison v. Chapman, 105 Cal. 448, 39 Pac. 61. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; HAYNES, C.

BAKER et al. v. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA RY. CO. (L. A. 61.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 17, 1895.)

SUPREME COURT—JURISDICTION.

The supreme court, having appellate jurisdiction "in all cases * * * which involve the title or possession of real estate," has jurisdiction of defendant's appeal in an action under Civ. Code, § 485, declaring a railroad company, in case it does not fence its right of way, liable for cattle killed by its train on its road, which passed through or along the property of the owner thereof,—plaintiff having to show ownership, or at least possession, of the adjoining land, and issue thereon being raised by the pleadings; and it is immaterial that defendant, by his appeal, raises no question as to such ownership or possession.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; George Puterbaugh, Judge.

Action by Amelia B. Baker and others against the Southern California Railway Company. Plaintiffs had judgment, and defendant appealed. Plaintiffs move to dismiss appeal. Denied.

Wm. J. Hunsaker, for appellant. Withington & Carter, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. This is a motion to dismiss an appeal upon the ground of lack of jurisdiction in this court to entertain it. Section 485 of the Civil Code provides: "Railroad corporations must make and maintain a good and sufficient fence on either or both sides of their track and property. In case they do not make and maintain such fence, if their engine or cars shall kill or maim any cattle or other domestic animals upon their line of road which passes through or along the property of the owner thereof, they must pay to the owner of such cattle or other domestic animals a fair market price for the same." Plaintiff brought an action in the justice's court, under the provisions of this section of the Civil Code, to recover for the value of two certain domestic animals killed by the cars and engine of defendant, said animals being of the value of $130. It will be noticed that by this section it is contemplated that the plaintiff must be the owner of the land through which the line of road passes, and an allegation of ownership was made in the complaint in the present case. Defendant filed a verified answer, and, among other things, put in direct issue the allegation of the complaint as to the ownership of the land, and demanded that the case be certified to the superior court for trial, as one involving the title to real estate. The case was thereupon certified to the superior court, where judgment went for plaintiffs, and the appeal was taken which we now have under consideration.

We think the appeal will lie. This court has appellate jurisdiction "in all cases at law which involve the title or possession of real estate" (Code Civ. Proc. § 52, subd. 2); and in this case the title, or at least the possession, of a certain tract of land was involved. It was a material fact in the case, and the establishment of that fact was a condition precedent to a recovery. In cases like the present one, jurisdiction of the court is determined by the nature of the evidence necessary to support the national allegations of the complaint. And the fact that defendant, by his appeal to this court from the judgment, or from the order denying a motion for a new trial, has raised no question as to those matters which give jurisdiction to this court, is not material as shedding light upon the disposition of the motion we are now considering. We indorse the views of the learned commissioner, as expressed in the case of Hart v. Carnall-Hopkins Co., 103 Cal. 132, 37 Pac. 196; and in consonance with the principle there declared, we conclude the motion to dismiss the appeal must be denied, and it is so ordered.

RANDOL v. SCOTT et al. (No. 15,910.)[1]

FORFEITURE OF LEASE—ASSIGNMENT OF LESSEE'S HALF INTEREST—BREACH OF COVENANT.

1. A covenant by two lessees not to assign the lease, or permit an assignment thereof to be made, by bankruptcy or otherwise, for breach of which the lessor retained the right of reentry, was not broken by an assignment of the undivided half interest of one of said lessees to his assignee in insolvency.

2. Though the lessees of a fruit orchard covenanted to keep the demised premises free from undergrowth, except that they might raise squash and pumpkins between the trees, the lease will not be forfeited because the lessees planted corn and beans and nursery trees over a small portion of the land, particularly as the lessor, having the right to view the land, made no objection to the manner in which it was planted.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; John Reynolds, Judge.

Action by Christiana T. Randol against Eugene B. Scott and others, to recover possession of leased land. There was a judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Pringle & Boyd, for appellant. Archer & Bowden and W. C. Kennedy, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. A demurrer to the amended complaint was sustained, plaintiff declined to further amend, and judgment was rendered for defendants. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment. The action is to recover possession of land leased by the plaintiff, upon the ground that certain covenants of the lessees have not been kept,—substantially a bill to declare the forfeiture of a lease. The provision for the forfeiture is that "if default shall be made in any of the covenants herein contained, then it shall be lawful for the lessor to re-enter the said premises." The term of the lease was 10 years from the 1st day of October, 1890. The lessees were Eugene B. Scott and W. W. Cozzens. The land leased was 419 acres of uncultivated land. By the terms of the lease the lessees were to lay out and divide 400 acres of this land into 8 convenient parts, as nearly equal as may be, "having regard to separate facility of access, and, subject to the approval of the lessor," they were to "thoroughly prepare" this 400 acres for planting, and to plant the whole thereof with trees of French prunes and peaches of certain specified varieties, and to complete the planting in the winter of the year 1890. They were to properly tend, cultivate, prune, and care for these trees during the whole term of the lease, and to protect them from disease and insects by the most improved methods; and they were to gather the fruit (of course, after the trees should have commenced to bear) each year in boxes and deliver one-third thereof, as rent, to plaintiff at a place in San José to be selected by her agent. There are other covenants by the lessees not necessary to be here noticed, because the complaint admits that all the covenants were fully complied with except the two hereinafter mentioned. One of the covenants alleged to have been broken is as follows: "And the said lessees do hereby covenant * * * not to assign this lease, or permit any assignment thereof to be made, by bankruptcy or otherwise, without the written consent of the lessor." And the alleged breach of this covenant is based upon the alleged facts that in September, 1891, said Cozzens filed his petition in insolvency in the proper court, and included in the schedule of his property "an undivided one-half interest" in said lease; that he was subsequently adjudged by said court to be an insolvent debtor; that in October, 1891, one Burkholder duly became his assignee; that in due course all of said Cozzens' property was assigned to said assignee; that in March, 1892, said assignee was empowered by said court to sell all the property of said insolvent; that he threatens to sell the same, including the said half interest in said lease; and that said Scott and said Burkholder are in possession of said demised premises, and withheld the same from plaintiff.

[1] Rehearing denied.

These averments do not show an assignment of the lease by the lessees within the meaning of said covenant; waiving other points made by respondents in support of the judgment,—as, for instance, that, under the strict construction applicable to forfeitures, "bankruptcy" does not include insolvency; that the assignment to the assignee in insolvency was by operation of law, and was not the act of Cozzens; that Scott did not "permit" the bankruptcy; and that the covenant is against public policy, and in express contravention of the insolvent law. Scott and Cozzens were tenants in common of the land leased. This is admitted and declared by appellant. Neither could, therefore, dispose of the interest of the other, nor could either prevent the other from disposing of his interest; and appellant must be considered as having dealt with the lessees as tenants in common, and with knowledge of their rights, powers, and disabilities as such tenants. When, therefore, under these circumstances, it was covenanted merely that the "lessees" should not assign "the lease,"—the lease, as an entirety,—the meaning of the parties is presumed to be that the lease should not be assigned in the only way in which it could have been assigned, namely, by the joint act of the lessees. The lease, therefore, was not assigned within the meaning of the contract. If the proceedings in insolvency worked a valid assignment of anything, it was only an interest in the lease; and that Scott could not have prevented. The covenant does not provide that the lease should be forfeited upon the assignment by one of the tenants in common of his interest. The understanding of the parties as to the covenant in question is illustrated by another clause, which provides that the lessor may cancel the lease "in case of the death of the lessees,"—not of one of the lessees. A forfeiture can be enforced only when there is "such a breach shown as it was the clear and manifest intention of the parties to provide for." Tayl. Landl. & Ten. (8th Ed.) § 489, and cases cited. In all the cases cited by appellant the covenant was by a single lessee, holding in severalty. In Varley v. Coppard, L. R. 7 C. P. 505, the original lessee had assigned to copartners. Of course, it is unnecessary to cite authorities to the points that covenants in restraint of alienation are barely tolerated, and that contracts looking to penalties and forfeitures must be strictly construed; but a few instances of particular expressions used in statements of the rule, and cases to which it has been applied, may not be unprofitable. Our own Code provides that "a condition involving a forfeiture must be strictly interpreted against the party for whose benefit it is created." Civ. Code, § 1442. As to the power of re-entry for the forfeiture of a lease, it was said by Justice Miller: "It has always been considered that it was necessary to restrain it to the most technical limits of the terms and conditions upon which the right is to be exercised." Elevator Case, 17 Fed. 201. "Covenants of this description are construed by courts of law with the utmost jealousy to prevent the restraint from going beyond the express stipulation." Tayl. Landl. & Ten. § 403. In Hasbrook v. Paddock, 1 Barb, 635, it was held that a lease of a lot of state land (under a statute) which provided for a forfeiture if the lot should be used for purposes other than the manufacture of salt was not forfeited by the use of a part of the lot for other purposes; and the court after referring to the rule of strict construction against penalties and forfeitures, said: "Until the legislature has explicitly declared their intention to forfeit parts of lots, it is no part of the duty of courts, in the construction of a penal statute, to extend the meaning of words and phrases which the law makers have chosen to employ." In Jackson v. Silvernail, 15 Johns. 278, the covenant of the lessees was not "to sell and dispose of, or assign their estate in the demised premises," and the lessees "demised, leased, and to farm let" a part of the premises for 20 years —being less than the full term; and the court held that this did not give a right of re-entry, saying that "the plaintiff's right is stricti juris, and to enable him to recover on the ground of forfeiture he must bring his case within the penalty on the most literal and rigid interpretation of the covenant," and that the covenant meant an assigning of the whole estate and not a mere subletting. It has been held, also, that a covenant "not to let or underlet the whole or any part" of the demised premises does not preclude an assignment of the whole interest. Lynde v. Hough, 27 Barb. 415. These instances (extreme perhaps) are noticed merely to show the tenacity with which courts hold to the rule that forfeitures of estates and restraints upon alienations should not be enforced, except when the terms of the conditions are so plain as to be beyond the province of construction. And an application of these principles to the case at bar clearly precludes the forfeiture here attempted. It is difficult to imagine a case where the enforcement of a forfeiture would be more unjust. This action was not commenced until the fourth year after the execution of the lease, and three years after the insolvency of Cozzens; and it is quite apparent that the lessees had then performed the burdensome part of their contract without having received any substantial remuneration. They created a valuable property for appellant, by preparing the soil and planting and taking care of the trees, until they were about in a condition to bear fruit, and return something to them for their outlay; and now the appellant proposes to take possession of the land thus improved, and appropriate, without consideration, the results of their money and labor.

2. A mere statement of the second ground for a forfeiture is sufficient to show its insufficiency. The covenant for the violation of which the forfeiture is sought in the second count of the complaint is as follows: "The land to be continuously cultivated in a good and husbandlike manner, and kept clear of other growth, except that the lessees may raise squash or pumpkins between the peach trees during the first two years of their growth, and between the prune trees during the first three years of their growth." And the averment upon which forfeiture is sought is that the cultivation was not in a good and husbandlike manner, "in this: that the defendants have planted and now maintain 4 rows of corn between every 2 rows of the said fruit trees over a space of about 12 acres, and 4 rows of beans between every 2 rows of the said fruit trees over a space of about 20 acres, and a nursery of young trees between the rows of the fruit trees in the said land described over a space of 2 acres." Whatever other remedies appellant may have had, the planting of corn, beans, and nursery trees over a very small part of the 400 acres, instead of squash and pumpkins over the whole of it, is entirely too trivial a matter, under the principles above stated, to warrant a forfeiture, particularly as the lessor had the right, under the terms of the lease, to "at any and all times enter upon and inspect the demised premises, in order to be informed of the condition of the land and trees, and of the faithful performance by the lessees of their covenants aforesaid," and made no objection to the corn and beans. The judgment is affirmed.

FREESE v. PENNIE. (No. 15,990.)

ACCOUNTING OF ADMINISTRATOR—ATTORNEY'S FEES —ALLOWANCE—REVIEW.

On suit by an administrator against the executor of a former administrator for an accounting, an allowance of $80,000 as a credit on the account for money paid to an attorney for his services in the administration will not be revised, where it appears that all the attorneys summoned as expert witnesses placed their value above that sum, and the only heir, by her counsel, in open court, consented to the allowance of a sum not greater than that amount.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Walter H. Levy, Judge.

Action by A. C. Freese, administrator, against James C. Pennie, Jr., executor, for an accounting of his testator's administration of the estate of plaintiff's intestate. From an order allowing a credit of $80,000 for attorney's fees paid out by defendant's testator for plaintiff's intestate during his administration, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. H. Hart and J. D. Sullivan, for appellant. Horace G. Platt and Naphtaly, Freidenrich & Ackerman, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. James C. Pennie, having acted as administrator de bonis non of the estate of Thomas H. Blythe, deceased, from May, 1889, until his death, in December, 1893, his executor, James C. Pennie, Jr., the defendant herein, was cited in this proceeding to account for his testator's administration of the estate of Blythe. In answer to this citation, he rendered an account of such administration, in which he claimed a credit for his testator for fees paid and to be paid to Messrs. Naphtaly, Freidenrich & Ackerman, for legal services rendered in the matter of the estate of Blythe during the term of his testator's administration thereof. The only question as to the credit claimed related to the amount thereof, and that question was submitted to the court, on evidence of the services rendered by said legal firm, including expert testimony as to the value of such services. The court allowed and ordered paid from the estate of Blythe the sum of $80,000, and this appeal is from that order.

There was no conflict of evidence, either as to the amount of the services or the value thereof. The disinterested expert witnesses as to the value of the services were all eminent attorneys at law, practicing in the city of San Francisco. The average of their estimates of the value of the services rendered by the aforesaid legal firm was about $90,000, and the estimate of each of them was above $80,000. At the close of defendant's evidence on this issue, Mr. W. H. H. Hart, attorney for Florence Blythe Hinckley, sole heir of Thomas H. Blythe, and Mr. Horace G. Platt, attorney for defendant, addressed the court as follows: "Mr. Hart: I have had a conversation with Messrs. Naphtaly, Freidenrich & Ackerman with reference to the matter of their compensation, and they have stated to me that they will not make a claim for more than $80,000. Out of that sum they are to pay Mr. John A. Wright for services rendered by him during the Pennie administration, and also deduct from said sum the amount they have already received on account, and with that understanding, viz. that they are not to make any greater claim than $80,000 in the aggregate, we do not care to submit any testimony contrary thereto." Mr. Horace G. Platt, attorney for defendant, stated: "That will be satisfactory to us." Mr. J. D. Sullivan, attorney for the plaintiff, was present at the time these statements were made, but it does not appear that he said anything relating to the subject of them, or that he objected to Mr. Hart's proposal.

In their brief, counsel for appellant say: "If expert testimony is binding upon this court in cases of this character, then we are compelled to admit that the allowance of $80,000 to said attorneys for their services is not excessive." But plaintiff's counsel oppose the soundness of that principle, and upon their view and construction of the opinion of the court in the case of In re Dorland, 63 Cal. 281, contend that this court, regardless of the finding of the trial court, should review the evidence as to the value of the services rendered, and then compare its own judgment of their value with that of the expert witnesses, and thereupon make such allowance as may be considered just. We think that case does not go to the lengths here insisted upon, and the principle there declared does not apply to this court as an appellate court. The true rule is the one there announced, and that is, the trial court is not bound to fix the amount of the fee in accordance with the opinion of expert gentlemen, learned in the law. While such evidence is proper, and always admissible by way of assisting the court in arriving at a conclusion, it is not at all conclusive upon the trial court; and it is for that court to say, upon a consideration of all the evidence, taken in connection with its own best judgment, what would be a fair and just allowance for the services rendered. Attorneys are inclined to place a very high estimate upon the value of their services when rendered in important litigation, and also inclined to look with kindly eyes and sympathetic feelings upon the efforts of brother attorneys when engaged in establishing before the court the value of services performed in large estates, fortunate enough to possess well-filled coffers. Under these conditions, when upon the witness stand as experts, they entertain most liberal views as to what should be the amount of a brother attorney's allowance, and hold large ideas as to the importance of the litigation in which he has been engaged. It is well, and it is the law, that the court should temper this kind of evidence with its own calm judgment, based upon the amount and kind of labor performed, and to thereupon make its decree. When a court has done this, this court, as an appellate court, only has the right to interfere with its judgment when a plain and palpable abuse of its discretion (for it has a large discretion in such matters) has occurred.

While the fee allowed in the present case is a very large one, still we think the judgment must stand. It appears that the allowance made is less than the estimate of any witness who testified, and such fact indicates that the trial court did not consider itself absolutely bound by the expert testimony presented. Under these circumstances, we cannot say that the allowance is clearly and palpably too great. In addition, it appears that the sole heir to the estate, by her counsel, in open court, at the trial, consented to an allowance of this amount. Practically and substantially, she is the only party interested in this litigation, for the amount of the fee must come from her estate. The administrator is here as an appellant, testing the validity of this decree, presumptively for his own security as a disbursing agent only.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

I concur: VAN FLEET, J.

TEMPLE, J. I concur in the judgment on the ground last discussed by Mr. Justice GAROUTTE. I do not think the learned judge of the probate court could have used his own judgment as to the sum to be allowed; for there is nothing in the record which would justify, as a matter of discretion, the allowance of so large a sum. The court properly allowed the sum agreed to by the party who must pay it. Courts have no right to be liberal with the money of other people, and should be careful that fees allowed for trust estates are no larger than would be paid for like services by those who are competent to contract for themselves.

McKUNE et al. v. SANTA CLARA VALLEY MILL & LUMBER CO. (No. 15,964.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 17, 1895.)

OBSTRUCTING STREET—INJURY TO TEAM—NONCOMPLIANCE WITH ORDINANCE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—PRESUMPTIONS—MISJOINDER OF ACTIONS—WAIVER.

1. One maintaining lumber piles on a street without authority is liable to one injured because thereof without fault of his own.

2. Lumber piles projecting into a street prevented a team advancing on the proper side of the street, and shut out the view of anything beyond it. Considerable noise was also made by a neighboring sawmill. The team being driven around the pile was brought close to a railroad track, and then an approaching train was seen. The team could not cross the track in safety, and was prevented by lumber piles from moving in any other direction. The horses became frightened and backed into the train. Held, that the court could not say, as matter of law, that the driver was guilty of contributory negligence, and properly left it to the jury.

3. Possession and ownership of lumber piled in a street being shown, it will not be presumed that its location was without the knowledge or contrary to the wishes of the owner.

4. Where the piling of lumber by defendant in a street is alleged to have been the cause of plaintiff's injury, it is not error to charge that failure to comply with an ordinance is negligence, and that if defendant was obstructing the street in the manner alleged, in violation of an ordinance, it was negligence.

5. Joinder of action for injury to a wife, to which the wife is a necessary party, with action for consequential damages to husband, to which the wife is not even a proper party, is waived by failure to demur.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; W. G. Lorigan, Judge.

Action by B. F. McKune, administrator, and Elizabeth Jones, against the Santa Clara Valley Mill & Lumber Company. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frs. E. Spencer and D. W. Burchard, for appellant. S. G. Tompkins, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Appeals from the judgment, and from the order denying defendant a new trial. Samuel Jones and Elizabeth Jones, his wife, prosecuted this action, alleging that defendant piled and maintained lumber upon a public street of the city of San José, contrary to and in direct and continual violation of an ordinance of the city of San José, and in willful neglect and disregard of the rights, safety, and convenience of persons traveling along the highway. On May 23d, while these piles of lumber were so maintained, plaintiff Elizabeth Jones was being conveyed in a buggy driven by one Aurelia Jones along said street. Reaching the first pile of lumber, the driver was compelled to turn around it, and was thus brought close to a railroad track, and then, for the first time, became aware of the approach of a train. Being unable to turn out, or to move away, by reason of the lumber piles, the horse became frightened, and backed the buggy into the passing cars, throwing out plaintiff Elizabeth Jones, and seriously injuring her, to the damage of plaintiffs in the sum of $15,000. "Plaintiffs [the complaint proceeds] have been compelled to expend the further sum of $600 for medical attendance upon plaintiff Elizabeth Jones' said injuries, and the further sum of $300 for the attendance of a nurse." Defendant's motion for a nonsuit was denied, and the cause submitted to the jury for decision upon the evidence of plaintiffs alone.

The motion for nonsuit was properly denied. It is true that when the evidence is unconflicting the question of contributory negligence is often one of law for the court rather than one of fact for the jury. But if the court is not satisfied that the evidence, as matter of law, establishes the contributory negligence of the plaintiff, or if it believes that, under the evidence touching the conduct of plaintiff, reasonable minds might differ upon the question whether or not he was negligent, then the question at once returns to the domain of fact, and the duty of the court is to allow the jury to solve it as a fact. The evidence disclosed that the occupants of the buggy were driving upon the proper side of the roadway. They saw a pile of lumber in front of them which projected into the street. They could have driven, and did drive, with safety around this first pile, but there was a succession of piles beyond, of which they were in ignorance. The pile shut out their view. The mill made considerable noise. Only upon driving around the first pile did they see the other piles, and for the first time noticed the approaching train. The engineer then, too, first observed them. They were thus caught in a position where they could neither advance nor retreat, nor cross the track with safety, and where they could not move to the roadside away from the approaching train, because of the obstructing lumber. They tried to get into a passage or driveway between the lumber piles, but could not succeed. As the engineer testified, they were shut in a box. Under these facts, which are no more strongly stated than the evidence warrants, the question of contributory negligence was properly left to the jury.

2. That the defendant was guilty of negligence admits of no doubt. One who maintains any unauthorized obstruction upon a highway by means of which another, through no fault of his own, is injured in person or property, is responsible in damages therefor. It is claimed, however, that the evidence did not show that the defendant owned or maintained the lumber piles. But it did show that defendant operated a planing mill, and that the lumber was piled upon its premises projecting into the street. "It was from the front of the mill north along the outside of the sidewalk." It was in evidence, also, that defendant owned this lumber, and immediately after the accident commenced to remove it. This, in the absence of any counter showing, was clearly sufficient. For, the possession and ownership of the property being thus established, it will not be presumed that its location was without the knowledge or contrary to the wishes of the owner. For these reasons the instructions bearing upon this proposition were properly refused.

3. An ordinance of the city of San José was introduced, declaring it a misdemeanor for any person to place, erect, or maintain an obstruction upon any of the streets of the city. The court instructed the jury as follows: "The failure to comply with a municipal ordinance, or to perform a duty which is imposed by a municipal ordinance, is negligence in itself. Therefore, if you find that the defendant, at the time of the alleged accident, was obstructing the said Fourth street in the manner alleged, in violation of an ordinance of the city of San José, that in itself establishes negligence upon the part of the defendant, and it is not necessary that the plaintiffs make any further showing of negligence in defendant in order to recover." Appellant criticises this instruction, using the language of the supreme court of Oregon: "To say that the mere fact of the violation of the ordinance is conclusive evidence of negligence, is negligence per se, without regard to the conduct of the plaintiff, or the duty imposed upon him under the circumstances, would be to relieve him of the consequences of his acts, when they contribute to the injury, and result in an unjust liability upon the defendant." Beck v. Railway Co., 34 Pac. 755. That the failure of any person to perform a duty imposed upon him by statute or legal authority is sufficient evidence of negligence has been repeatedly declared by this court. Siemers v. Eisen, 54 Cal. 418; Driscoll v. Railway Co., 97 Cal. 553, 32 Pac. 591. But the principle has this very obvious limitation: The act or omission must have contributed directly to the injury, or, however improper or illegal it may have been in the abstract, no action for damages can be founded upon it. The failure of a locomotive engineer to sound his bell or whistle before crossing a highway would be essentially negligent, but a totally deaf traveler upon the highway could in no way have suffered from the omission, and as to him it would not be negligence. So, too, the requirement of a night light to warn the public of a temporary obstruction upon a street would not advantage a man absolutely blind, and the failure to maintain it would not, as to him, be negligence. But with an exceptional case, such as the foregoing, the court was not dealing, and, under the facts presented, we do not think the objection that the instruction eliminated from consideration the "conduct of the plaintiff, or the duty imposed upon him," or, in other words, the question of his contributory negligence, is well taken. For, in the first place, the instruction declares the defendant to be negligent only if obstructing the street "in the manner alleged," which manner, as alleged, directly contributed to the accident. In the second place, the instruction, which is one of a series, cannot fairly be torn from its context for criticism, and the instructions, as a whole, show that the jury was fully instructed upon the doctrine of contributory negligence; the court saying, among other things: "An obstruction cannot be complained of by a party who fails to exercise ordinary care and prudence in avoiding it."

4. The court admitted evidence, over defendant's objection, of the husband's necessary disbursements for physicians and nurses in attending his wife, and, likewise, instructed the jury upon the subject. This, it is claimed, was error. The action was, primarily, one for the recovery of damages for injuries done to the wife; and though the right of action and the damages recovered are community property, this form of action is an exception to the rule that the husband has control of the community property, and may sue or be sued alone where it is concerned. The wife is a necessary party. Tell v. Gibson, 66 Cal. 247, 5 Pac 223; McFadden v. Railway Co., 87 Cal. 464, 25 Pac. 681. The husband has a separate action for consequential damages to him for his wife's injuries, in which are included loss of service and expenses incurred looking to her recovery. In this action the wife is neither a necessary nor a proper party. The two causes of action cannot, with us, be joined in one suit, though the practice is elsewhere permissible. Add. Torts, 952. The complaint was, therefore, open to demurrer for improper joinder of causes of action. Code Civ. Proc. § 430, subd. 5. The defendant failed to avail himself of his right to demur, and made no objection to the complaint until evidence was sought to be introduced in support of these averments. His objection, then for the first time made, came too late. Having failed to demur, he is conclusively deemed to have waived the objection. Id. § 434. The instructions, the refusal to give which is complained of, were either properly refused or were covered by those given of the court's own motion. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

In re DELANEY'S ESTATE. (S. F. 147.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—SETTLEMENT OF ACCOUNT—COMMISSIONS—APPELLATE COURTS—JURISDICTION—APPEAL—NOTICE—PARTIES—DECISION.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1618, providing for allowance to executors of commissions on the amount of the estate "accounted for," an executor should not be allowed commissions for the care of land in the possession of decedent at his death, but for the recovery of which a judgment has been rendered in favor of a third person, though at the time of the settlement of the executor's account an appeal is pending from such judgment.

2. Under the constitution, giving the supreme court appellate jurisdiction on all such probate matters as may be provided by law, and the Code of Civil Procedure, authorizing appeals from an order "settling the account of an executor," such order is appealable, irrespective of the amount involved.

3. Though the order of distribution and the order settling the account of the executor are included in the same instrument, under one signature of the judge, yet each order is appealable, and therefore, on appeal by an heir from the order settling the account, service of notice on a distributee is unnecessary.

4. On reversal of the order settling the account of an administrator, an order of distribution must also be reversed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Appeal, in the matter of the estate of Mary Delaney, from an order of distribution and from an order settling the account of the executrix. Reversed.

F. J. Castlehun, for appellant. Sawyer & Burnett and Nicholas Bowden, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The executor of the last will of Mary Delaney, deceased, presented his final account to the court for settlement and allowance, and at the same time petitioned for the distribution of the estate. In his account he included a claim for commissions upon two parcels of land which had been included in the inventory of the estate, but which were at that time involved in litigation wherein a judgment was subsequently rendered adverse to the estate. One of the heirs contested this item of the account, but her objections were overruled, and the court settled the account, allowing the executor commissions upon this land, and thereupon made a decree of final distribution. This appeal is taken by her from the order settling the account, and also from the decree of distribution. These two parcels of land form a portion of Lafayette Square, in the city and county of San Francisco, and were in the possession of the deceased at the time of her death, and were afterwards taken into possession by the executor, and cared for by him during his administration of the estate. He was allowed for all the expense incurred in thus caring for the property, and was also allowed commissions upon the income received therefrom. It was shown at the hearing that the land was a portion of that included in the action of City and County of San Francisco v. Mooney, for the recovery of Lafayette Square, and that at the time the court made the order appealed from judgment had been rendered therein in favor of the city and county, and that an appeal therefrom was then pending. This judgment was subsequently affirmed by this court. 106 Cal. 586, 39 Pac. 852. This land had been originally appraised at $39,200, and when the account came up for settlement, and the appellant objected to any allowance of commissions upon its valuation, the court ordered a reappraisement, and upon such reappraisement the land was valued at $109,200, "upon condition that the estate has title to the same." The record does not show at what time this reappraisement was made, or that any further proceedings were had upon the final account until after the filing of the supplemental account. The final account was filed March 30, 1892, and the objections thereto were filed in April, 1892. The supplemental account was filed in November, 1894, and when these accounts were again brought on for settlement the appellant renewed her objections to the allowance of commissions upon this amount, but her objections were overruled.

We are of the opinion that the court erred in allowing the executor commissions upon the value of these two parcels of land. They were a portion of a public square in the city and county of San Francisco, and delineated as such upon the official maps of said city and county, and presumptively were not susceptible of private ownership. The litigation over this square was a matter of public notoriety, and at the time the order appealed from was made it had been judicially determined that the city was entitled to its possession. It is not shown by the record upon what basis the allowance of commissions upon this land was fixed by the court, the order settling the account in this respect being: "Said executor should be allowed the sum of $1,487.50, as commissions on the estate accounted for by him in said final account, and as compensation for the care of the property belonging to and claimed by said estate." The commission which the statute authorizes to be allowed an executor is the compensation fixed by law for his care of the property belonging to the estate, and the court is not authorized to make any additional allowance, unless he shall have petitioned for an allowance therefor, and shown that he has rendered some extraordinary service. In re Moore's Estate, 96 Cal. 522, 31 Pac. 584. As there is no claim by the executor in the present case that he had rendered any extraordinary service, the order of the court, in awarding him the above amount of commissions, must be construed to be as his compensation for caring for the property belonging to the estate; and, to the extent that it is in excess of the statutory percentage upon the estate that he has accounted for, it is erroneous. The executor is to be allowed commissions upon the amount of the estate "accounted for" by him (Code Civ. Proc. § 1618), and in Re Ricaud's Estate, 70 Cal. 69, 11 Pac. 471, this phrase was construed as entitling him to commissions upon only such property as belonged to the estate, and for which he would be chargeable in his account. In that case the executors took possession of certain real estate which was held by the testator at the time of his death, and defended an action which was then pending for its recovery, and, when judgment had been rendered against them for its possession, surrendered the same. To their claim for commissions upon the appraised value of the land the court said: "The land itself did not belong to the estate. It was, therefore, no part of its assets, and its value did not form any part of the value of the estate in the possession of the executors for which they were chargeable. Therefore, as it was not legally included in the value of the estate taken into their possession and for which they had to account, they were not entitled to commissions upon it." The reasoning of the court in that case is fully applicable to the present. The only interest of the estate in the land was that of possession, and the judgment of the superior court that the title to the land was in the city and county should have been recognized by the court as a reason for disallowing any commissions thereon. The effect of the judgment was to determine that the estate had no title to the land, and, consequently, it did not constitute a portion of the estate to be accounted for by the executor. Although the judgment had been appealed from, there was no presumption that it would be reversed, and, if it should be affirmed, it could be enforced at any time. It was immaterial that the executor had not surrendered possession of the land. If he had surrendered it upon the entry of judgment, it would not be contended that he should have been allowed commissions upon its value, and, whether he surrenders it before or after the settlement of his account, it is equally evident that it does not constitute a portion of the estate accounted for by him. The fact that the property was in litigation might have been a reason for the court, in the exercise of its discretion, to delay a settlement of the account until the litigation should be determined, but, if the executor would have his account settled at that time and under those circumstances, the court was not authorized to allow him commissions upon the valuation of property which had been determined not to belong to the estate.

The respondent urges that, inasmuch as the appellant's share of these commissions, if they had been disallowed, is less than $300, the appeal cannot be entertained. The constitution, however, gives to this court appellate jurisdiction "in all such probate matters as may be provided by law," and the legislature has authorized an appeal from an order "settling an account of an executor," irrespective of the amount involved. Code Civ. Proc. § 963.

A motion was made by the respondent to dismiss the appeal for failure to serve the notice of appeal upon one of the distributees named in the decree of distribution. This appeal is, however, taken from the order settling the account, as well as from the decree of distribution. Each of these orders is appealable, and, although both were made at the same time, and are included in the same paper, under one signature of the judge, the right of appeal from either is not affected thereby. Upon an appeal from an order settling an account, the executor is the only adverse party upon whom it is necessary to serve the notice of appeal. As the reversal of the order settling the account necessarily vacates the decree of distribution, it is unnecessary to determine whether the appeal from that decree has been properly taken. The orders appealed from are reversed.

HOWLAND et al. v. OAKLAND CONSOL. ST. RY. CO. et al. (No. 15,978.)

STREET RAILROADS—ACTION FOR INJURY TO PASSENGER—EVIDENCE—EXPERT TESTIMONY—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES—NEW TRIAL—NEWLY-DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

1. In an action against two street-railway companies for injuries due to a collision between their cars, where there was direct evidence of negligence on the part of the company against which judgment was rendered, it was proper to deny a motion for new trial based on newly-discovered evidence bearing on the relative negligence of the two companies.

2. Where an expert has described the personal injuries received by plaintiff, and given his opinion as to the cause, a question subsequently put to another expert, who examined plaintiff and heard the testimony of the first expert, as to his opinion of the cause of the conditions he observed, "assuming the statement" made by the first expert to be true, was not objectionable as asking one expert to base his opinion on the opinion of another expert.

3. An objection to a question put to an expert, that it was irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, was too general to allow consideration of whether the question was not objectionable as asking one expert to base his opinion on the opinion of another expert.

4. An objection that a question to an expert was not a proper hypothetical question would not permit the consideration of whether it was proper in framing the question to refer witness, as a basis for his opinion, generally, to facts testified to by another expert immediately before.

5. Whether an expert has qualified himself to answer a hypothetical question is within the discretion of the trial court.

6. In an action for injuries due to a collision of electric street cars, the manner of running the cars, their speed, and the facility with which they can be stopped, are proper subjects of expert testimony.

7. In an action against two street-railroad companies for injuries to a passenger on the car of one, received in a collision at a crossing, evidence of a custom between street-railroad companies of giving the older company the right of way at crossings was admissible to show which defendant was guilty of the greater negligence.

8. In an action by a passenger of a street-railway company for injuries, where it appeared that plaintiff was pregnant at the time of the accident, and that a miscarriage resulted, and that her eyesight and the action of her heart were impaired, a verdict of $10,000 was not excessive.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; F. B. Ogden, Judge.

Action by Clara Howland and another against the Oakland Consolidated Street-Railway Company and the Consolidated Piedmont Cable Company for personal injuries. From a judgment against the defendant Oakland Consolidated Street-Railway Company, and an order denying a new trial, it appeals. Affirmed.

Chickering, Thomas & Gregory and R. M. Fitzgerald, for appellant. Coogan & Foote and F. E. Whitney, for respondents.

VAN FLEET, J. Action for damages resulting from personal injuries. The action was against both defendants, the injuries having resulted from a collision of the cars of defendants at a point where their roads crossed. Verdict and judgment were in favor of plaintiff against the defendant Oakland Consolidated Street-Railway Company alone and the latter appeals from the judgment and an order denying it a new trial.

1. The first point urged for a reversal is that the court below erred in not granting appellant a new trial upon the ground of newly-discovered evidence. The evidence at the trial upon the question as to which one of the two defendants was guilty of the greater degree of negligence in bringing about the accident was conflicting, but that there was evidence tending directly to show negligence on the part of appellant there is no question. The newly-discovered evidence, if it may be so regarded, bears only upon the question of the relative degree of negligence of the two defendants, and in no way tends to rebut or defeat plaintiff's right to recover from one or both of the defendants. While it may not be purely cumulative, it is largely of the same general character and to the same point as much of the evidence adduced at the trial, and in any event is not such as, in our judgment, would be likely to render a different result upon a new trial reasonably probable. Under these circumstances, the court below was not only justified in denying the motion, but we think its ruling in that regard was clearly correct.

2. The evidence showed that, about three months after the receipt of the injuries complained of, plaintiff, who was pregnant at the time of the accident, suffered a miscarriage, and the evidence tended to show that such miscarriage was a result of those injuries. Dr. Huntington, who treated plaintiff for the injuries, and subsequently attended her at the time of the miscarriage, was a witness in her behalf, and described to the jury the character of the injuries inflicted upon her, and testified in effect that, in view of her condition and the character of injuries which he described, it was his judgment that the miscarriage was produced thereby. Another physician, Dr. Stratton, who was present and heard the testimony given by Dr. Huntington, was then called as a witness for plaintiff, and testified that he had been called in consultation with Dr. Huntington at plaintiff's bedside, shortly before the miscarriage, but too late to note personally the immediate character of her injuries. After describing plaintiff's condition at the time he was so called, he was asked by plaintiff this question: "Assuming the statement made by Dr. Huntington to be true, and the character of the injuries he has described to have been inflicted by a collision of two street cars, what, in your judgment, was the cause of the condition that you observed? Was it the accident, or any other cause?" The appellant objected to the question "as irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent," which was overruled, and the witness answered that in his opinion the condition was due to the accident. The question was then repeated in a slightly modified form, thus: "Now, assuming again that Dr. Huntington's statement was true as to the character of the injuries which were inflicted, as I have stated, what, in your judgment, was the cause of the miscarriage, if there was a miscarriage?" To which appellant made the same objection as before, and, further, that it was not a proper hypothetical question. The objection was again overruled, and the question received a like answer. These rulings are now assigned as error. It is said that the "statement" of Dr. Huntington to which the attention of Dr. Stratton is directed by the question, and upon which he is requested to base his opinion, necessarily included, not only the facts testified to by Dr. Huntington, but also the opinion of the latter based thereon, and that the question, therefore, called for the opinion of one expert based upon that of another, which, it is claimed, was improper. We do not think appellant's construction of the question a fair one, or that the language used would so strike the apprehension of the jury. The question may not be as free from ambiguity as it could have been made, but we think it sufficiently appears therefrom, and would be so understood, that what the witness was asked to base his opinion on was the facts stated by Dr. Huntington as to the injuries to plaintiff. This was made, indeed, quite clear by the question as put in its modified form. The construction contended for by appellant would seem to lead to an absurdity. He says it was equivalent to asking the witness: "Assuming that Dr. Huntington is correct when he states that the injuries caused the miscarriage, what, in your opinion, was the cause of the condition that you observed?" If such were to be taken as the sense of the question, we think it quite obvious that it could have done appellant no harm, since the answer would have been practically meaningless. But such is not its ordinary import. The witness had listened to the testimony of Dr. Huntington as to the injuries produced upon plaintiff's person, and he was asked, assuming the injuries to have been as described, to give his opinion thereon as to the inducing cause of the condition in which he found the patient at the time he was called in.

If, however, we were to assume that the question is open to the criticism now urged, we do not think the objection could avail defendant here, for the reason, as claimed by respondent, that it was not taken in the court below. The objection there was that the question was "irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, and not a proper hypothetical question." This form of objection was entirely too general to call the court's attention to the particular vice now pointed out, and it is well settled that a party will not be permitted to avail himself in this court of a more specific objection than that made in the court below. Appellant should have pointed out the particular defect which rendered the question either incompetent, irrelevant, or immaterial, or wherein it was not a proper hypothetical question, that the objection could have been intelligently ruled upon, and, if necessary or proper, obviated. Water Co. v. Swartz, 99 Cal. 284, 33 Pac. 878; Crocker v. Carpenter, 98 Cal. 421, 33 Pac. 271; People v. Frigerio, 107 Cal. 151, 40 Pac. 107. The reason of this obviously just rule is well stated in the case of Crocker v. Carpenter, above cited. There the objection in the trial court to certain offered evidence was the general one that it was irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial. In this court the appelant sought to point out specific reasons why that objection was good, but it is said: "We think there was no error in overruling the general objection thus made. If the defendants desired to object to the offered evidence upon the ground that the proper foundation for its admission had not been laid, because it had not been shown that the facts stated in such answers were inserted with the knowledge of defendants, the objection should have been specifically pointed out, and called to the attention of the court and the opposing counsel. If this specific objection had been made, it is possible that it could have been removed by further evidence upon the part of plaintiffs showing such knowledge, but the general objection that the offered evidence was incompetent was not sufficient. When such a general objection is overruled by a trial court, the party against whom the ruling is made cannot be permitted for the first time to urge in the appellate court the particular objection which, if it had been openly urged in the trial court at the time of the ruling complained of, might have been easily cured. This is not laying down a merely technical rule. It is one which has its foundation in the proper consideration of what is due to the court and adverse counsel in the trial of a case." And the court refer to Rush v. French, 1 Ariz. 124, 25 Pac. 816, where it is said: "The object of requiring the grounds of objection to be stated, which may seem to be a technical rule, is really to avoid technicalities, and prevent delay in the administration of justice. When evidence is offered to which there is some objection, substantial justice requires that the objection be specified, so that the party offering the evidence can remove it, if possible, and let the case be tried on its merits." For like reasons, the general objection made did not sufficiently point the further specific objection now urged, that it was improper, in framing the hypothetical question, to refer the witness generally to the facts testified to by Dr. Huntington, as a basis for his opinion, but that the question itself should have contained a statement of such facts. Obviously, the general and sweeping suggestion, "not a proper hypothetical question," would not be calculated to direct the court's or opposite counsel's attention to what the objection was aimed at. It might refer to one of a dozen supposed reasons why the question was deemed improper. If, however, the objection were sufficient to raise the point, we are not prepared to hold that in an instance such as this, where the witness has heard a statement of facts by another, it is not sufficient, in putting the question, to direct his attention to such statement as the basis upon which his opinion is desired.

3. We cannot say the court abused its discretion in holding that the witness McCarthy had shown himself sufficiently qualified to answer the hypothetical question tending to elicit his opinion as to whether the car of appellant could with proper care and attention have been stopped in time to avoid the collision. This is a question largely for the determination of the trial judge, and his ruling will not be disturbed, except error clearly appears. In this case it does not so appear. We think the witness disclosed sufficient knowledge of the subject to entitle his opinion to go to the jury. It is true, he was not as familiar with the condition of the car as might have been desired, but this objection goes more to the weight of the evidence than its admissibility. Nor is there any question but that the subject was one upon which the opinion of the witness was admissible. The manner of running electric cars, their rate of speed, and the facility with which they can be stopped or handled, is not a matter of such common knowledge that the jury could judge as intelligently as one skilled in their use. It was therefore proper to resort to expert evidence.

4. There was no error in admitting evidence on behalf of appellant's codefendant as to the custom between street-railroad companies of giving the older company the right of way at crossings. The codefendant had been jointly sued with appellant for the alleged injury, and it had a right, if such custom existed, to establish the fact, as tending to show to the jury which defendant was guilty of the more culpable negligence, and thus save itself, if possible, from being mulct in damages.

5. The jury gave a verdict for $10,000, and it is claimed that this amount is excessive. While we might not, had the question rested with us, have awarded damages in so large an amount, yet we are unable, under all the circumstances, to say that the amount is so far excessive as to imply that it was awarded under the influence of passion or prejudice. The evidence as to the extent of plaintiff's injuries and suffering therefrom, and the resulting condition of her physical system, as exhibited at the time of the trial, was not controverted by appellant, and consequently stands without conflict for whatever it tends to establish. While that evidence does not show that the immediate result of the accident was the infliction of any very great external injury, it does show resulting injury, flowing proximately therefrom, of a very serious character. According to the testimony of the medical witnesses, owing to plaintiff's condition of pregnancy at the time, the result of the shock was such as to cause the death of the fœtus, and induce a miscarriage, and cause plaintiff a long and painful period of suffering, through a number of months, which has left her constitution and nervous system much shattered and broken, greatly impaired the action of her heart, and weakened her eyesight,—a condition regarded by her physicians as permanent. "In actions for negligence, the law does not attempt to fix any precise rules for ascertaining what is a just compensation, but, from the necessity of the case, leaves the assessment of the damages to the good sense and judgment of the jury, whose province it is to make the assessment; and their verdict, though subject to review, will not be disturbed merely upon the ground that the damages are excessive, nor because the opinion of the court differs from that of the jury, unless it appears that the excess was given under the influence of passion or prejudice." Lee v. Railroad Co., 101 Cal. 118, 35 Pac. 572. Before the appellate court can interfere on the ground of excessive damages, the verdict must be so plainly and outrageously excessive as to suggest, at the first blush, passion or prejudice or corruption on the part of the jury. Aldrich v. Palmer, 24 Cal. 513; Wheaton v. Railroad Co., 36 Cal. 590. Applying these principles, we do not feel that we would be justified in disturbing the verdict upon the ground that it is excessive.

6. The other questions discussed do not require special notice. The objection that the evidence does not sustain the verdict is clearly untenable, and in our judgment the verdict sufficiently finds upon the issues submitted. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

WARREN et al. v. HOPKINS et al. (No. 15,943.)[1]

APPEAL—TRANSCRIPT—PRESUMPTIONS—MECHANICS' LIENS—APPORTIONMENT.

1. Under rule 15 of the supreme court, providing that, when notice has been given to appellant of any objection to the transcript affecting his right to be heard, it shall be his duty to file at the hearing of the cause an additional record to remove the objection, where a motion was made to dismiss an appeal on the ground that the transcript was not authenticated, and failed to show that notice of appeal had been served, the omissions were cured by appellant's filing, on the hearing of the cause, a transcript properly authenticated, and a copy of an affidavit showing service of the notice of appeal, with a certificate of the clerk of the trial court that the original affidavit was on file in his office.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 1188, requiring a claimant who files a lien against two or more improvements to designate the specific amount for which he claims a lien on each, does not apply where claimant made a contract to grade two blocks of land, under which the earth from one was to be used in filling the other, and compensation was fixed at so much per cubic yard for filling.

3. The word "lot," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1191, giving one who grades a lot a lien thereon, means whatever territory an owner causes to be graded under a single contract.

4. Where a contractor sued to enforce liens for grading blocks and the streets in front thereof, under separate contracts, and appellant claimed priority of his mortgage lien over the lien for street grading because the contract for street grading was made after the mortgage was recorded, and the court found the amount due under the contracts, but failed to find that any portion was due for street grading, it will be presumed on appeal, in support of the judgment, in the absence of objection to the finding in the trial court, that the amount found due was on the contract for grading the blocks.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Two actions, by one Warren and others against Hopkins and others, to foreclose liens for grading. The actions were consolidated and judgment was rendered for plaintiffs, and, from the judgment and an order denying a new trial, defendant Leopold Loupe appeals. Affirmed.

John J. Roche and Page & Eells, for appellant. J. C. Bates, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiffs brought an action upon a contract made by them with the defendant Hopkins for grading outside land blocks 664 and 665 in San Francisco, and to enforce a lien upon the land for such grading, and subsequently brought another action upon a contract made by them with the defendants Hopkins and Bowie for grading the streets in front of said blocks, and to enforce a lien therefor upon the same land. The appellant, Loupe, held a mortgage upon block 664, executed to him by the defendant Hopkins, subsequent to the date of the contract for grading the blocks, and for that reason was made a defendant in the actions, and filed answers therein, setting up his mortgage lien, and in the latter action filed a cross complaint against the plaintiffs and Hopkins and Bowie for the foreclosure of his mortgage, claiming that the lien thereby created was superior to the lien of the plaintiffs. To this cross complaint the plaintiffs filed an answer denying this priority of lien, and alleging that their claim for grading constituted a lien prior to that of the mortgage. Before the actions came on for hearing, judgments of dismissal were entered by consent of all parties as to block 665; and thereafter, upon an order of the court, made by consent of all the parties, the actions were consolidated and tried together. Prior to the trial, Hopkins and Bowie stipulated with the plaintiffs as to the amount due and unpaid upon their contracts with them, and that judgment therefor might be taken. The cause was thereafter tried between the plaintiffs and the appellant, upon the issue as to the priority of lien; and findings of fact were made and filed, and judgment entered declaring the lien of the plaintiffs superior to that of the appellant. The appellant moved for a new trial, upon the ground that the evidence was insufficient to sustain certain findings of fact. His motion was denied, and from this order, and also from the judgment, he has appealed.

[1] Rehearing denied.

1. A motion was made on behalf of Bowie and Hopkins to dismiss the appeal, upon the ground that the transcript filed herein was not authenticated, either by the attorneys or by the clerk of the superior court, and that it failed to show that the notice of appeal had been served upon them. Rule 15 of this court provides that, when notice has been given to the appellant of any objection to the transcript affecting the right of the appellant to be heard, "it shall be the duty of the appellant to present and file at the hearing of the cause such additional record, if such there be, to remove or answer the objection or exception so taken." In compliance with this rule, the appellant, at the hearing of the cause, produced and filed a transcript properly authenticated by the clerk of the superior court, and has therefore obviated this objection of the respondents. Estate of Medbury, 48 Cal. 83; In re Wierbitszky, 88 Cal. 333, 26 Pac. 174; Woodside v. Hewel, 107 Cal. 141, 42 Pac. 152. The fact that it appears from the certified transcript that there were certain typographical and clerical errors in the one originally filed is immaterial. All that was essential to a review of the action of the superior court was contained therein, and, when served upon the respondent, was received by him without objection. The object of rule 15 is to enable the appellant to remedy any defect or omission of the transcript for the purpose of enabling him to present his appeal upon the merits, and is to be liberally construed for that purpose.

The appellant is required to furnish this court with a copy of the notice of appeal, and, although the statute requires that a copy of this notice shall be served upon the adverse party, there is no provision in the statute or in the rules of this court prescribing the mode in which such service shall be authenticated. The better practice is to have the proof of such service made a part of the record in the court from which the appeal is taken, in order that there may be evidence in that court that the judgment has been removed therefrom. In such cases that record, when properly certified to this court, becomes conclusive of the facts therein stated, and no extrinsic evidence will be received to contradict it. Boston v. Haynes, 31 Cal. 107; Boyd v. Burrell, 60 Cal. 280. If, however, the record, as certified to this court, is silent upon the fact of such service, that fact itself will not authorize a dismissal of the appeal. The jurisdiction of this court to hear an appeal depends upon the fact that the notice of appeal has been properly served, and not upon the proof of that fact being contained in the transcript; and, when an objection is made that the transcript does not contain evidence of the service, the appellant will be allowed to make proof thereof. For this purpose he may file in this court either original proof of such service or a certificate of the clerk below that such proof has been made and filed in that court. Knowlton v. Mackenzie (Cal.) 42 Pac. 580. In conformity with this rule of procedure, the appellant presented at the hearing, and filed as a part of the record of the cause in the superior court, a copy of an affidavit showing that the notice of appeal herein had been duly served upon the defendants Hopkins and Bowie, and a certificate of the clerk of that court that the original of said affidavit was on file in his office.

2. It is contended by the appellant that the notice of lien filed in behalf of the plaintiffs is defective, for the reason that the contract for grading embraces two blocks of land, and that under section 1188, Code Civ. Proc., the claim of lien should have specified the amount due to them upon each block. The lien which is claimed by the plaintiffs is, however, authorized by section 1191, Code Civ. Proc., and not that which is authorized by section 1183. Section 1191 gives to the contractor a lien upon the "lot" for his work done, while section 1183 gives him a lien upon the "building or other improvement." And in Davis v. McDonough (Cal.) 42 Pac. 450, the "improvement" upon which a lien is authorized by section 1183 is held to refer to the objects enumerated in that section upon which the labor was performed, or for which the materials were furnished. "The buildings, mining claim or other improvements" named in section 1188 have the same significance as in section 1183; and the clause in section 1191 giving to the contractor a lien upon the "lot" which he grades or fills, or "otherwise improves," refers to some improvement of the "lot" upon which the lien is given, rather than to the "improvements" upon the lot referred to in section 1188. While section 1188 requires the claimant who files a lien against two or more buildings, or other improvements, to designate the specific amount for which he claims a lien upon each of such improvements, it does not require him to make such designation unless there is in fact a specific "amount due to him" on each of such improvements; and it might frequently happen that a contractor would construct several buildings under one contract, and there would not be any specific amount due to him on each of such buildings. In the present case the plaintiffs made a single contract for the grading of the two blocks at a fixed price, and, as it appears that the character of the two blocks was such that the earth taken from one was to be used in filling up the other, and that the compensation for the entire work was fixed at "ten cents per cubic yard for filling," it is evident that there could be no separate amount chargeable against either block; and that, while the grading had the effect to improve the land, it did not constitute such "improvements" to the different blocks as are contemplated in section 1188, or for which separate liens were authorized. We are of the opinion, moreover, that the lot upon which a lien is authorized by section 1191 is not limited to any artificial subdivision upon the surface of the earth, or to any official designation upon a map, but that its meaning includes whatever territory is owned by a person which he may cause to be graded under a single contract. It sufficiently appears that, at the time of entering into the contract for the grading, Hopkins was the owner of all the land for which he employed the plaintiffs.

The appellant, however, contends that, as the contract for grading the streets in front of the blocks was made subsequent to the recordation of his mortgage, the lien therefor is subordinate to the lien of his mortgage, and that the court should have directed that the mortgage debt be paid prior to allowing the plaintiffs any compensation for grading the streets. As a proposition of law this contention is correct, but the record fails to authorize its application. The court finds the amount that was unpaid under the contracts for grading the blocks and the streets surrounding the same, but does not find that any portion of this unpaid sum was for grading the streets; and, as any uncertainty in the findings is to be construed so as to support the judgment rather than to defeat it (Breeze v. Brooks, 97 Cal. 72, 31 Pac. 742), this finding must be read as a finding that the entire amount was due upon the contract for grading the blocks. If the appellant would question the correctness of the judgment in this respect, it was incumbent upon him to make his objection in the court below when that court made its finding of the amount unpaid upon the plaintiffs' contracts. In his motion for a new trial, the appellant has not assigned any error in this finding; and it must be not only assumed as authorized by the evidence, but of such a character as to sustain the judgment. By the dismissal from the controversy of all the land except the block covered by the appellant's mortgage, any evidence upon the amount due to the plaintiffs upon the other block was irrelevant to the issues before the court, and it cannot be assumed that the court has considered such evidence in making its finding.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

REDFIELD et al. v. OAKLAND CONSOL. ST. RY. CO. (No. 15,942.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 4, 1896.)

DEATH BY WRONGFUL ACT—DAMAGES.

In an action for the death of a wife and mother it is proper to refuse to instruct the jury to award such a sum as damages as invested in an annuity would be a fair equivalent to the husband and children of the monetary value of the life of the dead wife and mother, where the instruction fails to set forth the life expectancy of either the husband or children, as to the latter of which there is no evidence.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; F. W. Henshaw, Judge.

Action by Horace A. Redfield, personally and as guardian, against the Oakland Consolidated Street-Railway Company, for the death of his wife. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. From a commissioners' decision (42 Pac. 822) affirming the judgment, defendant again appeals. Affirmed.

Chickering, Thomas & Gregory, R. M. Fitzgerald, and Carl H. Abbott, for appellant. Hall & Earl, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The opinion heretofore filed in the above-entitled cause is modified by striking therefrom all of subdivision 2, and substituting therefor the following:

2. The refusal to give defendant's proposed instruction above quoted was not error. The contention of appellant as to the measure and amount of damage is that the jury should have awarded such a sum as, invested in an annuity, would have yielded to the husband and to the children an income which would be the fair equivalent to them of the monetary value of the life of the dead wife and mother. Conceding, for the purposes of this discussion only, and not deciding, that this is a correct rule, it is at once apparent that the elements of which such a measure would be composed are the expectancies of life—First, of the wife; second, of the husband; and, third, of each of the children. In other words, the annuity in no event should continue longer than the life expectancy of the wife. If the husband's expectancy was less than her's, then, as to him, it should continue only during that expectancy; and so as to the annuity of the children. In addition, the value of the mother's life to the children becomes less in law upon their obtaining majority. Each of these considerations, therefore, becomes essential to a proper determination under appellant's rule. Yet a reading of the instruction discloses that it fails to set them forth. The expectancy of life of the husband and children is not brought into the calculation, nor the time when the minority of the children would cease. Moreover, the record discloses no evidence given of the life expectancy of the minors. The proposed instruction, therefore, was radically defective, even under appellant's theory, and was therefore properly refused.

Let the opinion heretofore rendered stand as thus amended, and the petition for hearing in bank denied.

SCHLICKER v. HEMENWAY et al. (No. 15,819.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1895.)

EXECUTOR'S SALE—INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY OF EXECUTOR—LIABILITY OF THE ESTATE.

1. A complaint, against one individually and as executor, to recover back money paid on the purchase price of land of the estate, at a sale which was afterwards vacated, is bad for misjoinder of parties defendant, misjoinder of causes, and ambiguity, it not appearing whether it was sought to charge the defendant personally or in his representative capacity.

2. A complaint to recover back money paid at a private sale of land of an estate, on the ground that the executor was directed to make public sale thereof, does not state a cause of action against the executor individually.

3. Where an executor sold land privately, though he was directed to make sale at public auction, he is not liable in his representative capacity in an action by the purchaser to recover back money paid on the purchase price, it not appearing that said money was made a part of the assets of the estate.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county; R. F. Crawford, Judge.

Action by Frederick Schlicker against D. D. Hemenway, individually, and as executor of the estate of Greenbury Hinkston, to recover back money paid on the purchase price of land. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

J. P. Rodgers, for appellants. Haskell & Meyer and Lippitt & Lippitt, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This is an appeal taken from a judgment rendered because defendants declined to answer after their demurrer was overruled. The action is brought against defendant, individually, and as executor of the estate of Greenbury Hinkston, deceased, to recover $750, received by Hemenway under the following circumstances, as set out in the complaint: An order of sale was made in the estate, authorizing and directing the executor to sell certain real estate at public auction. The executor negotiated a private sale to plaintiff, and reported it to the court as a private sale. In the probate court, when the matter of the confirmation came up, plaintiff increased his bid from $6,000 to $6,800. The sale was then confirmed to him. At the time of making his bid he put up, as required, $750. Plaintiff refused to complete his purchase, and therefore the order of confirmation was vacated, and the property resold. The complaint does not show whether it brought more or less than the offer of plaintiff. Plaintiff demanded the return to him of the $750, and, as the defendant declined, he brought this action.

The complaint was demurred to on various grounds, and, among others, on the ground that there is a misjoinder of parties defendant in that Hemenway, as an individual, is joined with the representative of the estate of Hinkston, when the complaint not only fails to show a joint or joint and several liability, but shows that both cannot be liable. Also, that there is a misjoinder of causes of action, with specifications very nearly as above. Also, that the complaint is ambiguous, because it cannot be ascertained therefrom whether it is sought to charge Hemenway or the estate. Also, uncertain for the same reason. The demurrer should have been sustained on all these grounds.

The complaint is also specially demurred to on the ground that it does not state a cause of action against Hemenway, and, separately, that it does not state a cause of action against the representative of the estate. The cause of action is based, generally, upon the proposition that, because the return of the sale made by the executor shows that the land was sold at private sale, and not at public sale as directed in the order of sale, the court had no jurisdiction to confirm it, or, at least, that the sale was void on the face of the record. I think this must be conceded.

Then, did the executor receive the money in his representative capacity? If he had taken the money to make good a bid which he had a right to receive, it might have been contended with some plausibility that he received it in his representative capacity. But, inasmuch as he had no right to demand or to receive the money, because the sale in that mode was void, I think the estate is not liable, unless it be further shown that it has been actually made a part of the assets of the estate, through being accounted for to the estate, or actually used for its benefit. Suppose, for instance, the executor had been required to give no bonds, and was irresponsible, and had embezzled the money, could the plaintiff have sued his successor in office, and compelled the estate to pay it? If so, why? The bid was not authorized by the order of sale. As executor he had no right to receive the money, and it was not received in the discharge of any official duty. I do not concede that, even had the executor received the money in his official character, the estate would be liable for it; but, waiving that question, I think it evident that here the estate cannot be held.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded, with direction to sustain the demurrer.

KIRSCHNER v. DIETRICH. (No. 15,975.)

DIVORCE—DEATH OF PARTY—RIGHTS OF SURVIVOR

1. As an action for divorce does not survive upon the death of either party, Code Civ. Proc. § 473, providing that, in case of service of summons by publication, defendant may, by leave of court, answer to the merits of the original action within a year after the rendition of a judgment therein, cannot be invoked on the death of plaintiff after the entry of a judgment of divorce having no reference to the subject of property.

2. In the absence of any reference to the subject of property in the judgment for divorce, the parties become tenants in common of the community property; and, upon the death of plaintiff after the entry of judgment, the rights of defendant therein are not impaired.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action for divorce by Filomen Dietrich against Joseph F. Dietrich. After the judgment was rendered the plaintiff in the action died, and Conrad Kirschner, administrator of deceased, was substituted as plaintiff in the action. From an order denying a motion to vacate the judgment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

T. Z. Blakeman and Benj. Healey, for appellant. Otto Tum Suden, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. In an action for divorce against the appellant, brought by his wife, Filomen Dietrich, service of the summons was made by publication, and judgment of divorce was entered July 13, 1893. The plaintiff in the action died February 22, 1894, and on June 8, 1894, upon an ex parte motion in behalf of the defendant, the court ordered that the administrator of the plaintiff be substituted as plaintiff in place of the deceased, and directed that the action be continued in his name. Thereafter the defendant, upon notice to the administrator, moved the court to vacate the judgment, and that he be allowed to answer the complaint, upon the grounds that the summons had not been personally served upon him, that the judgment was void, and that it had been procured by false testimony. The court denied his motion, and the present appeal is from that order.

It is difficult to understand upon what principle the court made the order substituting the administrator of the plaintiff in the place of his intestate, or directed a continuance of the action in his name after the death of the original plaintiff. But, as the respondent does not appear to have objected thereto, we are not required to determine the correctness of the order. The court, however, properly denied the defendant's motion to vacate the judgment and allow him to answer the complaint. The action was solely for the purpose of procuring a judgment of divorce between the parties,—a purely personal action, which would not survive the death of either party, and which, upon the death of the plaintiff, could not be further prosecuted or defended, whether her death was before or after judgment. If she had died prior to the entry of judgment, there could have been no judgment in the case, and her death subsequent to the entry of judgment deprived the court of all power to review its action and determine her right to a divorce. The action having been brought to change the personal status of the plaintiff in her relations towards the defendant, it is evident that upon the termination of her life there was no personal status which a judgment could change.

The provision of section 473, Code Civ. Proc., under which the appellant made the present motion, authorizing the court to allow a defendant, in case he has not been personally served with the summons, to answer to the merits of the original action within a year after the rendition of judgment therein, implies that at the time of his application there shall be an action still pending (Code Civ. Proc. § 1049), to the merits of which there can be an answer. The section has no application to a case in which, by the death of the plaintiff, the action has abated, and all opportunity of controverting its merits has been removed.

The effect of the plaintiff's death upon the action is not changed by reason of the question of property which is suggested by the appellant. The complaint, as well as the judgment, is silent upon the subject of property; and, although there is an allegation in reference thereto in the answer which the appellant proposed to file, this did not prevent the abatement of the action, nor is it stated in his notice of motion as one of the grounds upon which he would make it. The primary and substantive subject of litigation in a suit for divorce is the personal relation of the parties, and their right to the community property is but incidental thereto. If, before a decision upon that question is made, one of the parties dies, the action cannot be continued for the purpose of determining the rights of property; and, if there was originally no issue upon this subject, it cannot be revived, in case of death after judgment, for the purpose of having this question adjudicated. In the absence of any reference thereto in the decree, the parties to the suit became tenants in common of the community property, and the death of the plaintiff after the entry of judgment did not impair the appellant's right thereto; but this right must be enforced in an independent action (Godey v. Godey, 39 Cal. 157), in which all who may have any interest therein should be made parties. The order is affirmed.

SCHWIESAU v. MAHON et al. (No. 16,024.)

ASSESSMENT LIEN—COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE.

A contract reciting that plaintiff would construct curbing and gutter ways in accordance with the specifications thereto annexed, but to which no such specifications were annexed, is not a sufficient compliance with the statute requiring all contracts to be in writing and signed by the contractor; and under it no lien can be fixed, in invitum, against abutting property.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Marin county; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by E. Schwiesau against T. J. Mahon and others to foreclose the lien of a street assessment. There was judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

D. H. Whittemore, for appellant. E. B. Mahon, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. By this action it was sought to foreclose the lien of a street assessment. The court held that there was no valid contract for the work, and therefore no lien. Defendant put in evidence, at the trial, the contract entered into by the plaintiff. By it plaintiff agreed to do all the work necessary to be done to grade Fifth street, in the town of San Rafael, and to construct curbing and rock gutter ways along both sides of said Fifth street, between certain points named, "all in strict accordance with the specifications hereto annexed and made a part of this contract, and also that he will furnish, at his own cost and expense, all necessary material required for the execution and completion of said work, and in full accordance with said specifications, and to the satisfaction of the said superintendent of streets." No specifications were attached to the contract, and it was shown by the evidence of the street superintendent that none had ever been attached thereto. Plaintiff contends that inasmuch as bids were received to do the work in accordance with the specifications, which, in the advertisement for bids, was specifically referred to, and as the superintendent of streets was not authorized to reduce to writing any other contract than that made by the board, there could be no mistake as to the specifications, and, as the work has been done strictly in accordance with them, the objection cannot now be made. If the contract were one entered into by the taxpayer individually, there would be no answer to this position. But this is a proceeding to fix upon property a lien in invitum, and it has been held that in such case every requirement that could be of benefit to the person to be charged must be complied with. It cannot be said that there is no possible benefit to the owner in having a written contract signed by the contractor. In this case the contractor was required to give a bond with sureties for the faithful performance of the contract. This bond, to be valid, must be conditioned that the contractor will perform the contract entered into by him. Sureties are bound only by, and may insist upon, the very letter of their contract. In this case, would there be any contract by which they would be bound? The statute requires the contract to be in writing and signed by the contractor. The contract signed does not define the work to be done, nor does it refer to any specifications in which it is described. It not only does not refer to specifications filed, but negatives such reference by express reference to those attached. It is said that the owner might have had this corrected by appeal to the board. But an appeal to the board could not have provided the security by a written contract, and sureties for its performance, without which there was no binding contract. If the assessment had been vacated and the work rejected, it would not then have been in the power of the board to supply this defect. Manning v. Den, 90 Cal. 614, 27 Pac. 435. In that case Dougherty v. Hitchcock, 35 Cal. 524, was expressly affirmed; and if Chambers v. Satterlee, 40 Cal. 497, contains anything contrary to this doctrine, it was, so far, overruled in Manning v. Den. The case seems a hardship, but it must be remembered that it is a proceeding to charge one with the cost of improvements for which he has not contracted. The liability depends upon a strict compliance with the law, and not upon the equities of the claimant. The judgment and order are affirmed.

CALIFORNIA STATE BANK v. WEBBER. (No. 15,912.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 20, 1895.)

RENEWAL OF NOTE—AGREEMENT TO PAY TAXES ON MORTGAGE.

1. Where a note, appearing on its face to be overdue, recited that, if it was not paid at maturity, it was thereby renewed from year to year, at the option of the holder, to maintain the defense that the note was not due, defendant must affirmatively show that the holder had renewed the note.

2. An agreement that, if the mortgagor should pay the taxes assessed against the mortgage, then he would be credited with a certain per cent. of the interest due upon the mortgage note, is not within Const. art. 13, § 5, providing that every contract by which a debtor is obligated to pay any tax on any mortgage shall, as to any interest specified therein, and as to such tax, be void.

3. Where the mortgagor testified to an oral agreement whereby he was to pay the taxes upon the mortgage, and be credited with a certain per cent. of the interest due upon the note, and there was evidence that the mortgagee wrote with a pencil, on the margin of the note, a less rate of interest than that fixed by the note, there was no sufficient proof that such agreement was in writing, and in violation of Const. art. 13, § 5.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; John Reynolds, Judge.

Action to foreclose a mortgage by California State Bank, a corporation, against Charles F. Webber. There was a judgment of foreclosure, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. B. Hotchkiss, for appellant. Johnson & Johnson, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. Action to foreclose a mortgage to secure payment of a promissory note of which the following is a copy: "$2,500.00. Sacramento, Cal., May 27, 1889. Two years after date, for value received, I promise to pay to the California State Bank, a corporation, or order, the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars in gold coin of the present standard of value, with interest thereon from date until paid at the rate of eight and one-half per cent. per annum, in like coin, payable annually, and, if not so paid, the interest may be added to the principal, and bear like interest, or the whole may, at the option of the holder, without notice to the maker thereof, be treated as due and collectible. If this note is not paid at maturity, it is hereby renewed from year to year, at the option of the holder, until paid; and during such year the maker shall not have the right to pay the same. Both principal and interest to be paid at the California State Bank in Sacramento, California. Chas. F. Webber." The mortgage, bearing the same date as the note, contained the following provision: "And in case default be made in the payment of said note, or any installment thereof, or of any interest thereon, then the mortgagee may, at their option, and without notice to the mortgagor, at once proceed to foreclose this mortgage." This action was commenced August 26, 1893, without previous notice to defendant of any exercise of plaintiff's option mentioned in the note or in the mortgage. It was alleged in the complaint, among other things, that no part of said note has been paid, either principal or interest, and the whole thereof, amounting to $3,518.44, is due, owing, and unpaid. The defendant's demurrer to the complaint on the ground that it does not state a cause of action was overruled. Thereupon the defendant answered, denying that the debt evidenced by the note was due at the time of the commencement of the action, and denying that no part thereof had been paid, and alleging certain payments of interest and of taxes on the mortgage; and, as a separate defense to the demand for any interest whatever, alleged as follows: "That at the time and place the said note and mortgage were made, executed, and delivered, as alleged in the complaint, it was then and there agreed by and between plaintiff and defendant, C. F. Webber, and as a part of the same contract and of the same transaction with the making of the said note and mortgage, that the said Webber, defendant herein, should and would pay and discharge all taxes and assessments which might be assessed or levied upon said money so loaned by plaintiff to said defendant, and on the said mortgage, or on either the said money or mortgage, anything in the said promissory note or mortgage or either to the contrary notwithstanding. It was also agreed that the real rate of interest to be paid by defendant for the use of said money was to be seven per cent. per annum; but, for the purpose of covering said taxes and assessments on said money and mortgage, the rate of interest was inserted in said note as eight and one-half per cent.; and it was agreed between the said parties that if this defendant should pay said taxes and assessments on said money or mortgage, and the interest on said note annually, at seven per cent. per year, together with the principal sum, the same should be in full payment of said note and interest, notwithstanding the rate in said note was nominally eight and one-half per cent. That said agreement and arrangement was knowingly made and omitted from the terms of said note and mortgage, with the intent to evade the provisions of section 5 of article 13 of the constitution of this state; and on that ground defendant denies that any interest is due or owing or unpaid from defendant to plaintiff." The court found that the defendant had paid the interest according to the terms of the note for the first three years,—that is, until May 27, 1892,—and had also paid the taxes on the mortgage for the same period, amounting to $39.11, but had failed to pay the interest for the fourth year, ending May 27, 1893, or any part of the principal; and further found that the principal and interest, minus said payments, was overdue at the time the action was commenced. As to the alleged agreement that the mortgagor should pay the taxes on the mortgage, the court found as follows: "That prior to the execution of the said note and mortgage it was verbally agreed between the defendant, Webber, and A. Abbott, who then was the cashier of the plaintiff, that if the defendant, Webber, should pay the state and county taxes each year assessed against the mortgage of the plaintiff, then said defendant would be credited upon the interest due upon said promissory note with one and a half per cent. thereof, and the amount of interest that said defendant should pay to plaintiff in case he paid such taxes should be seven per cent. per annum; that said defendant did pay said taxes for the year 1890, 1891, and 1892, and paid interest on said note as aforesaid found at the rate of $175 per year, being seven per cent. per annum, up to May 27, 1892, and such payments of interest were accepted by plaintiff in full payment of the interest due for said period; that since May 27, 1892, the defendant has paid no interest whatsoever, and has paid no taxes assessed upon said mortgage for any other year than said 1890, 1891, and 1892." As matter of law the court found that plaintiff was entitled to a decree of foreclosure for the full amount of principal and interest, according to the terms of the note, less the amount of said payments of interest and taxes, and so decreed.

1. It is contended by appellant that, according to the terms of the note and mortgage, the defendant was not in default, nor the note due, at the time the action was commenced; but to maintain this point it devolved upon the defendant to show affirmatively that the plaintiff, in the exercise of the option given him, renewed the note, and thereby extended the time of payment to a day later than that on which the action was commenced; yet he neither alleged nor attempted to prove such renewal of the note. In the absence of evidence tending to prove it, such renewal of the note cannot be presumed. If there was no renewal of the note, nor extension of the time of payment, both principal and interest became due on May 27, 1891. If there had been a renewal of the note whereby the time of payment was extended to a later day than that on which the action was commenced, such renewal would have been relevant only as an affirmative defense, which must have been pleaded and proved by the defendant.

2. The alleged agreement that the mortgagor should pay the taxes on the mortgage as found by the court, is not a violation of the constitution of the state, and does not release defendant from his contract to pay the conventional interest specified in the note, even though that agreement had been found to be in writing (Hewitt v. Dean, 91 Cal. 10, 27 Pac. 423); and the only exception to that finding is that the agreement was found to have been merely verbal, whereas the court should have found that it was in writing. Neither is the agreement as pleaded by defendant any defense to the demand for interest, unless it was in writing. Daw v. Niles, 104 Cal. 106, 37 Pac. 876; Harrelson v. Tomich, 107 Cal. 627, 40 Pac. 1032. The only evidence that the agreement was in writing was the testimony of defendant that plaintiff wrote with a lead pencil on the margin of the note "seven per cent.," which, it is claimed, had been erased. But he further testified that the agreement that he should pay the taxes on the mortgage was not written, for the reason that the officer of the bank with whom he made the agreement said such an agreement would not be lawful; and this corresponds with the averment in his answer that the agreement "was omitted from the terms of said note and mortgage." It is, therefore, clearly apparent that the finding that the agreement was verbal was justified by the evidence. I think the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; BELCHER, C.

MUTTER v. I. X. L. LIME CO. (No. 15,891.)

EVIDENCE IN REBUTTAL—DECLARATION OF AGENT.

1. Where the defense in an action for cutting wood was that plaintiff agreed to pile it for measurement, but failed to do so, and defendant's foreman testified that the wood was not in condition to be measured, it was error to permit a witness called in rebuttal to testify that he had a conversation with said foreman after the suit had commenced, and that said foreman told the witness that the wood could be easily measured, as, if said testimony was intended to impeach said foreman's testimony, it was improper, because no foundation had been laid.

2. If intended to prove that the wood was in condition to be measured, it was improper, because the declaration of an agent under such circumstances cannot bind his principal.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county; J. H. Logan, Judge.

Action by Clement Mutter against the I. X. L. Lime Company, a corporation, to recover for work and labor performed. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Lucas F. Smith and Chas. B. Younger, for appellant. Z. N. Goldsby, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. Plaintiff brought this action to recover from the defendant the sum of $1,599, with interest thereon from June 1, 1892. The complaint contains three counts. In the first count it is alleged that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $434 for cutting, at its special instance and request, 250 cords of pine wood at $1 per cord, and 230 cords of redwood at 80 cents per cord. In the second count it is alleged that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $1,165, balance due for cutting and delivering, at its special instance and request, 1,204¾ cords of wood at $2.15 per cord, and for cutting 22½ cords of heading bolts at $1.10 per cord, and that the cutting and delivering of said wood and the cutting of said bolts were reasonably worth the prices named. The third count is the same as the second, except that it alleges that defendant promised and agreed to pay plaintiff, at the rates aforesaid, upon the 1st day of each and every month, for all wood cut and delivered and all bolts cut by plaintiff during the previous month. The answer denies most of the averments of the complaint, and alleges that, before the commencement of the action, defendant had paid plaintiff the sum of $1,449.96, in full satisfaction of all wood cut and delivered by him to it. The case was tried by the court without a jury, and the findings were that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff, upon the causes of action set up, in the sum of $1,456.99, for which sum and costs judgment was entered. The defendant moved for a new trial, which was denied, and has appealed from the order.

It is claimed for appellant that several errors were committed by the court in its rulings upon the admission of evidence, and that the findings were not justified by the evidence, and hence that the order should be reversed. It is not necessary to notice all of the rulings complained of, as most of them were, in our opinion, correct, but one of them, we think, was clearly erroneous. The plaintiff was a witness in his own behalf, and testified: That he made an agreement with Mr. Blum, the superintendent of the defendant company, to do the work for which he sought to recover under the first count of his complaint, and that in pursuance of the agreement he commenced cutting the wood in November, 1891, and finished the cutting in March, 1892. That he could not tell exactly how much wood he cut, but it was about 400 cords. That "Mr. Blum agreed to measure the 400 cords in January, and he didn't come. The 400 cords were to be paid for as soon as it was put up in the woods where I cut it. He agreed to pay when it was done, and he didn't come up to measure it. * * * By March 4th it was all cut. It was to be all paid for by the 4th of March. * * * Mr. Blum said he would come in January, and pay for what they had cut, but he didn't come, but come in March, and he didn't measure, or do nothing. * * * It was agreed between Mr. Blum and myself that, when the wood was cut and put up, it should be measured and paid for. * * * This 400-cord lot of wood was in a condition last spring—April, May, and along at that time —to be measured, so as to ascertain the amount there was there." Joseph Krater was also a witness for plaintiff, and testified that he was present when Mutter agreed with Blum to cut that wood. "Blum promised to measure it in January, and pay for it then. Mutter finished cutting that lot of wood in the month of March, 1892. I do not know how much there was of that wood. The four hundred cords were to be measured on the ground where it was chopped." I. Blum was a witness for defendant, and testified that he was the superintendent of the defendant company, and that he made a contract with the plaintiff for the so-called 400-cord lot of wood mentioned in the plaintiff's first cause of action. "The agreement was that Mutter was to cut this wood, and pile it properly for measurement. He was to notify the company when it was ready for measurement. The 400-cord lot had not been measured or hauled to the limekiln up to the 17th day of June, 1892 [the day when the complaint was filed]. Plaintiff did not notify the defendant that the wood was ready for measurement. * * * There was no specified number of cords mentioned to be cut. I told him the place where to cut the wood. I was to pay him one dollar for pine, and eighty cents for redwood. He was to cut all the wood in that locality, and pile it in merchantable order, so it could be measured. The time of payment was after the wood was measured and hauled in, then the amount hauled was to be paid for the succeeding month on the company's regular pay day. It was agreed that, when we wanted the wood, we would measure it and haul it, and then pay for it the succeeding month, at the company's regular pay day. We were to make arrangements to haul the wood as soon as it was measured and as soon as it could be hauled. We were not to haul anything except what was measured up to that time. The company's pay day was on the fifteenth of each month." M. Hickey was a witness for defendant, and testified that he was foreman of the defendant company, and that he "heard Mutter state what his contract with Blum was in reference to the 400-cord lot; he told me he was to put up 400 cords of wood,—so much pine, so much redwood,—and after he got it out the company was to measure it, and it was to be paid for when it was delivered at the kilns. I went up there and looked at the wood, and it was not piled so it could be measured. This was in April, 1892. It was piled in all kinds of shapes. I could not explain it, really, but it was crossways and lengthways. It was not compact. It was piled too loosely. Some of it was not piled at all. I could not measure it. About the 31st of August, 1892, I went with Cerf, Mutter, and Spellman to measure this wood. At that time it was in a little better condition, because they had repiled some of it, and Mutter agreed to take our measurement, which he had refused to do before that time. I have reference to what you call the 400-cord lot. I saw this lot of wood in April, 1892. It could not then be measured. No man living could measure it accurately. Up to the bringing of this suit, the wood was in such condition that it could not be measured accurately. The plaintiff never demanded of the defendant payment for this 400 cords of wood, or any part thereof, up to the bringing of this suit. It had not been measured or hauled at that time. The plaintiff told me that it was to be paid for when it was measured and hauled to the limekilns."

George Ley was called by plaintiff as a witness in rebuttal, and stated: "I had a conversation with Hickey about the 400 cords. He was the foreman of the lime company." He was then asked, "What did he tell you?" The question was objected to on the ground that it was incompetent, immaterial, irrelevant, not in rebuttal, and hearsay. The objection was overruled, and an exception reserved. The witness answered: "He was talking about the 400-cord lot. He said that wood could be measured easy enough, if they only wanted to measure it; that he had measured lots of worse wood than that was,—worse put up than that was." The witness further said that this statement was made to him since the suit was brought, and that no one but Hickey and himself was present. The objection to the question should have been sustained. Whether the wood was in condition to be measured before the suit was brought was a material issue in the case, and was sharply contested; there being evidence upon the question, other than that above referred to, introduced upon both sides. If the purpose of the evidence sought to be elicited was to impeach the witness Hickey, it was clearly inadmissible, because the proper foundation for it had not been laid. Code Civ. Proc. § 2052. And if the purpose was to prove that the wood was in fact in condition to be measured, and should have been measured, before the suit was brought, it was inadmissible, because the declarations of an agent do not bind the principal unless they are made during the continuance of the agency, and are a part of the res gestæ. To be admissible, they must be in the nature of original, and not of hearsay, evidence; and must be made, not only during the continuance of the agency, but in regard to a transaction depending at the very time. Clunie v. Lumber Co., 67 Cal. 313, 7 Pac. 708; Beasley v. Packing Co., 92 Cal. 388, 28 Pac. 485; Birch v. Hale, 99 Cal. 299, 33 Pac. 1088. For the error above noted, the order should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

WHITE et al. v. ADLER. (No. 18,357.)

VENUE—JOINDER OF PERSONAL AND LOCAL ACTIONS.

An action upon a contract whereby defendant was to pay a certain sum for land in case the title thereto was satisfactorily cleared, or to reconvey the land if the title was not so cleared, the complaint, praying for relief in the alternative, is not within Code Civ. Proc. § 392, providing that actions for the recovery of real property must be tried in the county where the land is situated, but is within section 395, providing that in all other cases the action must be tried in the county in which the defendants reside.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county; W. H. Grant, Judge.

Action by W. C. White and others against Moses Adler upon a contract to pay the purchase price of land, or reconvey the same to plaintiffs. From an order denying his motion to change the place of trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Reinstein & Eisner, for appellant. Frank H. Smith, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This action was commenced in the superior court of Yolo county, and was based upon a written contract executed by the plaintiffs, as parties of the second part, and by the defendant, as party of the first part. The contract was dated May 28, 1892, and the material parts of it read as follows: "Whereas, a conveyance has this day been made by said parties of the second part to said party of the first part of certain lands [describing eighty acres of land situate in Yolo county], the title of which eighty acres is defective, and the payment for which has not been made by said party of the first part: Now, it is mutually understood and agreed that said parties of the second part will clear the title to said land, satisfactorily to said party of the first part, within twelve (12) months from this date; and should said title, within said time, be made satisfactory to said party of the first part, he will pay to said parties of the second part the sum of two thousand two hundred ($2,200) dollars in U. S. gold coin; and, should said title not be so as aforesaid made satisfactory to said party of the first part, then said party of the first part will reconvey said land to said parties of the second part, at the expiration of said twelve (12) months, free of cost to said second party." The complaint alleges "that, within twelve months from the date of said agreement, these plaintiffs took steps to, and endeavored to, clear the title to said land satisfactorily to said Adler, and to make the title to said land satisfactory to said Adler, and plaintiffs are informed and believe, and therefore allege, that plaintiffs did clear the title to said land, and quiet the same in said Adler; that plaintiffs have furnished defendant with a complete abstract of all the steps taken by them affecting said title, which said abstract contains an abstract of everything of record affecting the title to the said tracts of land upon the records and files of said Yolo county; that defendant has refused to state, and still refuses to state, whether or not the title to said land is now satisfactory to him or not; that said defendant, although demand has been made upon him by plaintiffs, has refused, and still refuses, to either pay to plaintiffs the said sum of $2,200, or to reconvey to said plaintiffs the said land." And the prayer of the complaint is for the judgment and decree of the court "that defendant specifically perform his said contract, and, according to the terms thereof, either pay said sum of $2,200, or, in case said title is not satisfactorily cleared and quieted according to the true intent and meaning of said contract, reconvey said land to plaintiffs, and for such other and further, or other or further, relief as may be proper." In due time the defendant, upon proper notice, demand, and affidavit, moved the court that the place of trial of the action be changed from the county of Yolo to the city and county of San Francisco, upon the ground that at the time the action was commenced he was, and ever since has been, a bona fide resident of said city and county. The court denied the motion, and, from the order made, defendant appeals.

Section 392 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "Actions for the following causes must be tried in the county in which the subject of the action, or some part thereof, is situated, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial, as provided in this Code: (1) For the recovery of real property, or of an estate or interest therein, or for the determination, in any form, of such right or interest, and for injuries to real property." And section 395 of the same Code provides: "In all other cases the action must be tried in the county in which the defendants, or some of them, reside at the commencement of the action." The meaning and import of these sections were under consideration in the case of Smith v. Smith, 88 Cal. 572, 26 Pac. 356, and it was there said: "The general spirit and policy of the statute is to give to the defendant the right of having all personal actions against him tried in the county of his residence. Provision is made for the trial of actions affecting real estate in the county where the land is situated, and for the trial of certain other designated actions in the county where the cause of action arose; but the general rule for the place of trial is prescribed by section 395, by the declaration that 'in all other cases' the action must be tried in the county in which the defendant resides at the commencement of the action. * * * The plaintiff cannot, by uniting in his complaint matters which form the subject of a personal action with matters which form the subject of a local action, compel the defendant to have both those matters tried in a county other than that in which he resides. It is only when real estate alone is the subject-matter of the action that the provisions of section 392 can be invoked against a defendant who resides in a county different from that in which the land is situated. If, in his complaint, the plaintiff join with such a cause of action another which is not embraced in its provisions, or if he also seeks a remedy against the defendant upon matters which are not embraced within the provisions of this section, his action becomes one of those 'other cases' provided for in section 395, which the defendant is entitled to have tried in the county of his residence." If it be conceded that the subject-matter of this action is the land, still it is evident from an inspection of the complaint that the primary object of the action is to recover $2,200, the purchase price thereof, and not to obtain a reconveyance. The plaintiffs might have sued for the money alone, without asking for any alternative relief. They were, however, not satisfied with such an action, but chose to join with it a cause of action for a reconveyance. By so doing they united in the complaint "matters which form the subject of a personal action with matters which form the subject of a local action," but the defendant was not thereby deprived of the right to have the action tried in the county of his residence. Upon the authority of Smith v. Smith, supra, the order appealed from is reversed, and the court below is directed to make an order changing the place of trial from the county of Yolo to the city and county of San Francisco.

WARD, Sheriff, v. HEALY et al.

(Sac. 89.)

APPEAL — TRANSCRIPT — FILING — MOTION TO DISMISS.

1. Sup. Ct. Rule 12, authorizes the filing of a written transcript when accompanied by funds to pay for printing it, and requires the clerk to have it printed. Held, that an agreement by the clerk to let appellant himself procure and pay for the printing of the transcript and forward a printed copy for filing is unauthorized, and is in no sense a compliance with the rule.

2. Under Sup. Ct. Rule 5, providing that filing a transcript shall defeat a motion to dismiss for failure to file it, only when filed before the notice to dismiss is served, the filing of a transcript on the same day, but after notice to dismiss is served, will not defeat the motion.

3. A transcript, placed in the hands of an express company to be forwarded to the clerk for filing, is not filed, within Sup. Ct. Rule 5, providing that the filing of a transcript before motion to dismiss for failure to file is served will defeat the motion.

4. The clerk of the supreme court authorized appellant, on filing a written transcript, to have it printed himself, instead of depositing the money to pay for its being printed under his own direction, as required by Sup. Ct. Rule 12. Appellant, 48 days later, filed the printed transcript, and on the same day, but prior to such filing, a motion to dismiss for failure to file was served on him. No unnecessary delay on appellant's part in having it printed was shown. Held, that the motion to dismiss must be denied.

In bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen county.

Action by F. G. Ward, sheriff, against Matt Healy. M. Asher, assignee, intervened. From a judgment against him, defendant appealed. On motion to dismiss appeal. Denied.

Spencer & Raker and F. E. Spencer, for appellant. Shinn & Shinn, for respondent. Goodwin & Goodwin, for intervenor.

GAROUTTE, J. This is a motion to dismiss an appeal upon the ground of failure to file the printed transcript within the time provided by law. Rule 12 of this court provides that a written transcript in civil cases may be filed with the clerk of this court, if, when presented for filing, it be accompanied with sufficient funds to pay the expenses of printing the same, and that the clerk, upon receipt thereof, shall cause the transcript to be printed, and to the printed copy shall annex his certificate, etc. Appellant, in line with the foregoing rule of the court, transmitted to the clerk the written transcript, with a request that it be filed, but failed to accompany it with the funds to pay for printing the same. In lieu thereof, he asked the clerk to allow him the privilege of having the transcript printed at his home printing office at his own expense, and the clerk granted such request. The printing of the transcript was proceeded with, and some 48 days thereafter the printed copy was served, and also filed, as provided by the rule. The motion to dismiss the appeal was served upon appellant prior to the time when the printed transcript was actually filed in the office of the clerk of this court.

Appellants seldom invoke the provisions of the rule of court heretofore referred to, and, as a consequence, the true construction thereof has never been a question presented for decision. But they are often desirous of delay in the decisions of questions pending upon their appeals, and it is plainly apparent that, if we should indorse the practice here adopted as one justified by the rule, grave abuses would inevitably result, and the delays in litigation be more aggravated. We think the rule should be strictly enforced, that it should be obeyed as written, and, when it says that the funds necessary to pay for the printing of the transcript should accompany it when transmitted to the clerk of this court, the provision should be upheld, and a compliance therewith demanded. With funds in hand, the clerk has the means and also the opportunity to have the work done promptly and well, and work which the appellant's attorneys were in this case more than 40 days in having done the clerk could probably have done in 10. We conclude that no understanding or agreement between the clerk of this court and appellant's attorney could dispense with a compliance with the provisions of the rule of the court here involved, and that appellant had no right, in law, to rely upon any such understanding.

While the motion to dismiss the appeal and the printed transcript were filed upon the same day, none of appellant's rights were saved thereby, for by rule 5 of this court the filing of the transcript can only defeat the motion when it is filed before the notice to dismiss is served, and such was not the fact in this case. Carter v. Paige, 77 Cal. 64, 19 Pac. 2; Chapman v. Bank, 88 Cal. 419, 26 Pac. 608. Again, it is contended that the printed transcript was in the office of Wells, Fargo & Co., in transit to the clerk of this court for filing, when the motion to dismiss was served, and for that reason the motion should be denied. Placing the document in the office of Wells, Fargo & Co. was not the equivalent of filing, and it cannot be considered as filed when so placed. The principle declared in Hanson v. McCue, 43 Cal. 178, does not go to such lengths.

It thus appears that appellant has no legal ground upon which to stand in combating this motion of respondent, and, therefore, the only question to be determined is, are the facts shown in the affidavit on behalf of the appellant sufficient to excuse his failure to file the printed transcript? Upon consideration we have arrived at the conclusion that they are sufficient. When we consider the understanding had between the clerk of this court and appellant's attorney as to how and when the transcript should be printed, and that the attorney proceeded under such understanding and had the transcript printed without unnecessary delay, as far as any direct showing to the contrary is concerned; when we consider that the clerk, although without any authority to do so, in effect waived the payment of the funds provided for by the rule, and that the rule has never heretofore been construed, and that the construction placed upon it by appellant's attorney is neither arbitrary nor unreasonable, —we conclude that to dismiss the appeal would be a hardship upon appellant too heavy to find justification in the foregoing facts. For the foregoing reasons the motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; VAN FLEET, J.; HARRISON, J.; TEMPLE, J.; HENSHAW, J.

STIMSON MILL CO. v. RILEY et al.

(L. A. 3.)[1]

MECHANICS' LIENS — BUILDING CONTRACT — PAYMENTS—BOND—VALIDITY—APPEAL—REVIEW —ALLOWANCE OF ATTORNEY'S FEES.

1. The fact that the building contract, in providing for the payments, retains, until 35 days after the completion of the work, slightly less than the 25 per cent. of the contract price required by statute, does not render the owner personally liable for all labor and materials furnished, especially when more than 25 per cent. was in fact actually retained.

2. When the building contract provides for payments as the work progresses, payments made when the work has been substantially finished to the required stages cannot be considered premature, so as to subject the owner to liability to material men to the additional extent of the payments so made.

3. Where a bond is in form joint and several, the failure of all the parties named in the instrument as obligors to sign the bond does not render it void.

4. An allowance of attorney's fees in an action to enforce mechanics' liens will not be set aside as insufficient unless clearly unreasonable.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Actions by the Stimson Mill Company, a corporation, and by one Duncan, against Spurgeon V. Riley and others. The cases were consolidated, and from the judgment plaintiff the Stimson Mill Company appeals. Affirmed.

H. A. Barclay, for appellant. D. K. Trask and E. C. Bower, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. This action was instituted to foreclose 12 liens for labor and materials furnished and used in the construction of a house for the defendant Riley, the several claims, including costs of recording, aggregating in amount the sum of $1,728.86. One of the said liens was for materials furnished by the plaintiff, and the others were duly assigned to the plaintiff. One Duncan also commenced an action to foreclose a lien for labor done by him on the building, of the value of $25, and the two actions were consolidated and tried together. The contract, under which the building was constructed, was executed by Riley, as owner, and J. H. Cummins, as contractor, on October 10, 1893, and was duly recorded. It provided that Cummins should do all the work and furnish all the materials necessary to complete the building according to the plans and specifications made by Charles W. Davis, architect, for the sum of $2,180. It further provides that the payments, so far as need be stated here, should be made as follows: (4) When ready for plastering, $250; (5) when first coat of plastering is finished, $250; (6) when white coat of plastering is finished, $250; (7) when whole work completed and accepted by architect, $300; balance, $530, usual 35 days; "provided, that in each of the said cases a certificate be obtained and signed by the said Chas. W. Davis that he has done his work so far as done to his satisfaction, and also a statement of the value of the work so done by him." Accompanying the contract was a bond, as required by section 1203, Code Civ. Proc., which was signed by S. C. Dodge, one of plaintiff's assignors, and R. A. Buchanan, but not by Cummins. It reads: "Know all men by these presents, that we, the undersigned, * * * do hereby jointly and severally guaranty the faithful performance of the above contract, and the delivery of the said building to Spurgeon Riley, Esq., free from all liens that may be filed against the contractor on the above contract, not exceeding the sum of five hundred and forty-five dollars, that may accrue against him by reason of the nonfulfillment of the said contract by the said J. H. Cummins, the contractor aforesaid. We further agree that he will pay all his subcontractors, laborers, and material men all of the moneys that may become due them by reason of labor or materials under this contract. We hereby guaranty to them the payment in full of all their claims, and hold ourselves responsible to them in the sum of five hundred and forty-five dollars, or so much as may be necessary of the said sum to pay them in full of all labor and materials furnished for said building, exclusive of the contract price of the same." It is alleged in the complaint, among other things, that at least 25 per cent. of the whole contract price was not, by the terms of the contract, made payable at least 35 days after the final completion of the contract; that the first, fourth, fifth, and sixth payments were made by Riley to Cummins before they became due according to the terms of the contract; and that $750 is a reasonable sum to be allowed plaintiff as attorney's fees in the action. Wherefore plaintiff prayed judgment against the defendant Cummins for the several sums specified, aggregating $1,728.86; that it be allowed an attorney's fee in the sum of $750; and that the said several sums be adjudged and decreed to be liens upon the land and building described, and that the same be sold, and the proceeds applied, etc. Cummins suffered his default to be entered. Riley appeared and answered. The answer set out the contract and accompanying bond and the work done thereunder. It denied that any payment was made before it became due, and alleged that each and every payment was made upon the certificate of the architect as provided by the contract. It also denied the right of the plaintiff to recover on the lien of S. C. Dodge, for the reason that Dodge was estopped from claiming or maintaining any lien against said building by the covenants of the said bond, whereby he obligated himself that the contractor would complete his contract according to its terms, and deliver the house to defendant free of liens and charges. It also admitted that there was still in defendant's hands money due and unpaid under the contract amounting to the sum of $870; and it asked that an order be made permitting the defendant to deposit the said sum in court, subject to the further direction of the court. The case was tried, and the court found, in effect, that the said contract was a valid and binding contract between the parties; that the first payment of $150 was made before the same became due; that the fourth, fifth, and sixth payments were not made before the same became due; that plaintiff was not entitled to recover anything upon the cause of action assigned to it by S. C. Dodge, except as against the defendant Cummins; that $25 was a reasonable sum to be allowed Duncan as an attorney's fee, and $75 was a reasonable sum to be allowed plaintiff as an attorney's fee; that Duncan and the plaintiff were each entitled to recover of the defendant Cummins the amount of their respective liens, together with their costs and attorneys' fees as aforesaid, and interest as prayed for, and were entitled to recover of the defendant Riley the sum of $1,020, being the $870 which was deposited in court and the $150 which was prematurely paid, and also the cost of verifying and recording their liens and their attorneys' fees and costs of suit, which said several sums were declared to be liens on the land and building described. In accordance with the findings a judgment and decree of foreclosure was entered, from which, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial, the plaintiff Stimson Mill Company appeals.

[1] Rehearing denied.

The principal points made for a reversal are: (1) That the court erred in deciding that the contract was valid and binding, when, by its terms, 25 per cent. of the whole contract price was not made payable at least 35 days after the final completion of the contract. (2) That the court erred in deciding that the fourth, fifth, and sixth payments were not made before they became due. (3) That the court erred in deciding that the plaintiff was not entitled to enforce the lien for the claim of S. C. Dodge. (4) That the court erred in allowing plaintiff only $75 as an attorney's fee.

As to the first point. It appears that the sum reserved for the last payment was $15 less than 25 per cent. of the whole contract price. The statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1184) provides that the contract price shall be made payable in installments, or on the completion of the work, "provided, that at least twenty-five per cent. of the whole contract price shall be made payable at least thirty-five days after the final completion of the contract"; and that, "in case such contracts and alterations thereof do not conform substantially to the provisions of this section, the labor done and materials furnished by all persons except the contractor shall be deemed to have been done and furnished at the personal instance and request of the person who contracted with the contractor, and they shall have a lien for the value thereof." It will be observed that this section does not declare the contract void in case it fails to conform substantially to its provisions, but only imposes a penalty upon the owner by making him personally liable, and his improved property subject to liens, for the labor and materials done and furnished; and it was so held in Lumber Co. v. Wooldredge, 90 Cal. 574, 27 Pac. 431. In that case the contract made the last payment due 30 days after the final completion of the contract, and not 35 days, as required; and it was held that the plaintiff was not injured by the nonconformity, and the penalty had not been incurred; the court saying that in such cases "every reasonable intendment is indulged to avoid a penalty." So in Yancy v. Morton, 94 Cal. 558, 29 Pac. 1111, the contract provided that 35 days after the completion of the building 25 per cent. of the contract price should be paid, "provided that payment may be made at any time between the date of completion and the said thirty-five days, in case said contractors show receipts and give special bonds that all bills will be paid, and that no liens or other claims exist against said premises; such payment to be optional with the owner." It was held that this was in substantial conformity with the requirement of the Code, and was sufficient. In this case it would seem that the parties to the contract intended to have 25 per cent. of the whole contract price reserved for 35 days after the completion of the building, and that the failure to do so arose unintentionally from some mistake of figures in apportioning the amounts of the several installments to be paid earlier. This is shown by the contract, which expressly provides that the money is to be paid "in the manner following, that is to say: seventy-five per cent. of said sum of two thousand one hundred and eighty dollars as said work progresses, and in sums proportionate to the value of the work done from time to time by said second party in sums as follows." The court below was of the opinion that the contract was in substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute, and that the deficiency of $15 was so trivial that, in view of the whole amount of the last payment, and the consequences to the owner if it is held not to be a substantial compliance, the maxim, "De minimis non curat lex," should be applied. It is a settled rule that courts of equity are always reluctant to enforce penalties, and every reasonable intendment is indulged to avoid them. Here it clearly appears that the appellant was in no way injured by the small deficiency in the amount reserved for the last payment, since much more than 25 per cent. of the contract price was in fact reserved and paid into court for the use and benefit of the lien claimants. Under these circumstances we think the decision of the court below upon this point was right, and that it should be upheld.

As to the second point. The house constructed under the contract had a bath room, which was 7 by 12 feet in size and 12 feet in height. It was wainscoted up 5 feet from the floor, and had a window and door and transom over the door. At the times when the three payments complained of were made the bath room was not entirely lathed or plastered, but it was partially lathed when the fourth payment was made, and partially plastered when the fifth and sixth payments were made. It was proved that it would take one man five or six hours to complete the lathing and plastering. Mr. Davis, the architect, testified: "I issued an architect's certificate for each payment that was made on this building before the payment was made, upon my own authority, as the architect of the building. At the time of issuing each certificate I personally examined the building, and know that the building was at each time completed to the stage authorizing the payment to be made." There is no pretense that the certificates were obtained by fraud or collusion, but it is claimed that, because the bath room was not fully lathed and plastered when the payments were made, the owner should be subjected to the penalty of paying the money—$750—a second time. Here, again, it appears that the defect relied on was trivial, and that to sustain appellant's claim would work out an injustice and wrong, which should be avoided, if possible. In section 1187, Code Civ. Proc., it is provided that every person save the original contractor, claiming the benefit of the chapter in regard to liens, must file his claim of lien within 30 days after the completion of any building, improvement, or structure, or after the completion of the alteration, addition to, or repair thereof, and that "any trivial imperfection in the said work, or in the construction of any building, improvement or structure, or the alteration, addition to or repair thereof, shall not be deemed such a lack of completion as to prevent the filing of any lien." The rule thus declared as to the filing of liens should, we think, in reason and equity, be applied to the payment of the installments of the contract money. All that the law requires is a substantial compliance with the terms of the contract and good faith on the part of the owner. It must follow, therefore, that the court properly found that the fourth, fifth, and sixth payments were not prematurely made.

As to the third point. It is claimed for appellant that the bond executed by Davis was void, because not signed by Cummins, and in support of this position Sacramento v. Dunlap, 14 Cal. 421, and People v. Hartley, 21 Cal. 585, are cited. The cases cited are not in point. In each of those cases the bond sued upon was in form the joint bond of the principal and sureties, and not joint and several, and was signed only by the sureties. It was held that under such circumstances no recovery could be had on the bond. And see Weir v. Mead, 101 Cal. 125, 35 Pac. 567, where the authorities upon the subject are reviewed. Here the bond in question was in form joint and several, and in Kurtz v. Forquer, 94 Cal. 91, 29 Pac. 413, a similar bond, which was executed for a like purpose, was held valid and binding. Whether the execution of the bond by Dodge should be held to operate as an estoppel against him and his assignee from enforcing his claim against Riley, it is unnecessary to determine. The claim was assigned to and was owned by the plaintiff, and judgment against Cummins was entered in favor of plaintiff for the aggregate of all its claims. And, without including the Dodge lien, liens were foreclosed for sums more than sufficient to exhaust all the money remaining unpaid and due from Riley. If, therefore, the court erred in refusing to foreclose the Dodge lien, the error was harmless, and the plaintiff was in no way aggrieved thereby.

As to the fourth point. The Code provides that the court must allow a reasonable attorney's fee to the lien claimant. What is a reasonable fee is a matter to be determined by the trial court, and its action will not be disturbed on appeal unless it appears that the sum allowed is clearly unreasonable. The record only shows that the trial of the case occupied a portion of four days, but how much of each day does not appear. While the sum allowed seems rather small, we cannot say that the court abused its discretion in determining that $75 was a reasonable fee.

Certain rulings of the court upon the admission of evidence are specified in the statement as erroneous, but they are simply referred to in appellant's brief without argument. On examination of the record we fail to discover any material error in any of the rulings referred to, and therefore pass them by without special notice. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; HAYNES, C.

WARDLAW v. CALIFORNIA RY. CO.

(No. 15,880.)

CARRIERS—INJURY TO PASSENGER—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

1. Where a passenger goes on the side of a platform car opposite the platform, and not at the place arranged to receive passengers, and attempts to climb on the train from between the cars, and in so doing places his foot on the bumper, where it was injured by the engine moving up to couple the train, he is guilty of contributory negligence, and cannot recover.

2. Where the facts are undisputed, and the inference of negligence is irresistible, the question is one of law for the court.

Action by James J. Wardlaw, by James Wardlaw, his guardian ad litem, against the California Railway Company. Judgment of nonsuit, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Cross, Hall, Ford & Kelly, for appellant. Chickering, Thomas & Gregory, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This action is brought to recover damages from the defendant, a corporation, and a carrier of passengers by railroad, for personal injuries sustained by the infant plaintiff, while boarding defendant's car, at Fruitvale, in the county of Alameda. At the trial, and upon the close of the evidence on the part of plaintiff, counsel for defendant moved for a nonsuit, upon the ground that the evidence of the plaintiff showed that he, the said plaintiff, was guilty of contributory negligence. The motion was granted by the court, and judgment entered in favor of defendant for costs. Plaintiff excepted in due form, and prosecutes this appeal from the judgment of nonsuit, and assigns the granting of the motion for nonsuit as error.

It was admitted at the trial that plaintiff was, at the date of the accident, of the age of about 18 years, and that James Wardlaw had been duly appointed his guardian. Also, that the defendant corporation owned and operated a steam railroad in the county of Alameda, together with engines, cars, etc., running between the villages of Fruitvale and Laundry Farm in said county, and was a common carrier of passengers for hire over said railroad. The testimony of plaintiff was to the effect that on Sunday, May 21, 1893, he purchased a ticket in San Francisco for Laundry Farm, and in company with a party of young friends rode on the Southern Pacific cars to Fruitvale, at which point the road of defendant begins. The cars of defendant were what plaintiff terms picnic cars, and were platform cars, with a railing around them and seats extending across. The parties were going to a private picnic and approached the rear end of the train, as we must infer from the fact that the engine was at the other end, but probably not attached to the train. Upon approaching the train, which stood in front of defendant's depot, plaintiff passed forward upon the right-hand side of the cars, looking forward, and, seeing no steps, he attempted to climb on a car at the end where it was attached to another car, by putting his foot upon a brakebeam, his hands on the platform, and swinging himself up, so that he placed his other foot upon the bumper just in time to have it caught between the bumpers and crushed as the engine started the cars back and pressed them together, probably in coupling onto the train.

Plaintiff heard no bell, whistle, or other signal from the engine. After his injury, plaintiff saw that, on the other or left-hand side of the car (on the depot side), there was an opening in the railing of the car, and steps by which to ascend to it. On cross-examination plaintiff said, among other things: "I cannot handle myself as well as a boy who has the full use of his limbs. I never have been able to. I have to be careful. I cannot get around as easily as other boys, and know that perfectly well. This is only on account of being fleshy. Am not injured in any other way." There were several other witnesses on the part of the plaintiff, from whose testimony it is to be inferred that the Laundry Farm train came in about the time plaintiff and his party of about 30 persons arrived at the station. The train came down the track with the engine in advance, which engine was switched to a side track and run back to be attached to the other end of the train, at which time plaintiff and some three others of the party attempted to board the car on the right-hand side, and between the ends of two cars. The witnesses concur in stating: (1) That they heard no signal from the engine as it backed down and coupled on the train. (2) That the depot was on the left-hand side, and that there were steps and facilities for boarding the cars on that side, and none on the other, and that ample time was given for passengers to board the train. (3) The cars were ordinary platform freight cars, with a railing constructed around them, except with an opening on the left-hand side, and steps for the entry and exit of passengers, and a cover over the top. (4) There is no evidence tending to show that defendant knew or was aware of the position of plaintiff when it attached its engine to the train. (5) At the moment of plaintiff's injury it is to be inferred the cars were simply crowded together by the shock of attaching the engine. John Noriega, a witness, at folio 44 of the transcript, says: "I felt the shock of the car just as though the engine had been hitched on, and then heard the scream."

The sole question in the case is this: Was there such evidence of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff as to preclude a recovery, conceding the defendant to have been negligent? Negligence, though variously defined, may be said to be "the failure to do what a reasonable and prudent person would ordinarily do under the circumstances of the situation, or doing what such a person under the existing circumstances would not have done." Railroad Co. v. Jones, 95 U. S. 439. "Contributory negligence, in its legal signification, is such an act or omission on the part of a plaintiff, amounting to a want of ordinary care, as, concurring or cooperating with the negligent act of the defendant, is a proximate cause or occasion of the injury complained of." Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 7. It is the duty of a railway company, as a common carrier of passengers, to keep its stations and the approaches thereto in such a condition that those having occasion to use them for the purposes for which they are designed may do so with safety. So, too, the duty devolves upon it of preparing all proper means of ingress and egress to and from its cars devoted to the carriage of passengers. This duty performed by the railway company, the reciprocal duty devolves upon one who would take passage by the cars to use his natural faculties in selecting such means and place of access thereto as have been provided for that purpose, and as promise immunity from danger. Not to do so is evidence of negligence on the part of the passenger, and where, as in the present case, the plaintiff went upon the side of the car opposite the platform, and presumably not the place arranged to receive passengers, and, finding no place of access, attempted to climb upon the train from between the cars, with the barrier of a railing before him to be scaled when he reached the level of the car floor, and in so doing placed his foot upon the bumper, where it was caught by the connecting car, pressed back by the engine moving up to couple on the train, but one inference can be drawn from the facts, and that is that he was guilty of such negligence as is denominated negligence in law.

As a general proposition, cases of negligence (to which those of contributory negligence form no exception) present a mixed question of law and fact, in which it devolves upon the court to say, as matter of law, what is or amounts to negligence, and upon the jury to determine, as matter of fact, whether or not, in the particular case, the facts in proof warrant the imputation of negligence. Where, however, the facts are undisputed, and the inference of negligence is irresistible and not open to debate, doubt, or rational difference of opinion, the question becomes one of law to be passed upon by the court. Dufour v. Railroad Co., 67 Cal. 319, 7 Pac. 769; Long v. Railroad Co., 96 Cal. 269, 31 Pac. 170; Jamison v. Railroad Co., 55 Cal. 593; Van Praag v. Gale, 107 Cal. 438, 40 Pac. 555; Maumus v. Champion, 40 Cal. 121; Davis v. Button, 78 Cal. 247, 18 Pac. 133, and 20 Pac. 545; Meeks v. Railroad Co., 52 Cal. 602; Glascock v. Railroad Co., 73 Cal. 137, 14 Pac. 518; Holmes v. Railway Co., 97 Cal. 161, 31 Pac. 834. That plaintiff's negligence was the proximate cause of his injury needs no argument, and there is no evidence of wanton or willful negligence to bring it within the purview of that class of cases of which Esrey v. Pacific Co., 103 Cal. 541, 37 Pac. 500, is a fair sample. The gist of that case is involved in a single paragraph, as follows:

> "The party who last has a clear opportunity of avoiding the accident, notwithstanding the negligence of his opponent, is considered responsible."

In the present case there is nothing to indicate that defendant had any knowledge of the perilous position of plaintiff. Its negligence consisted in backing its engine against the train without a warning signal, and for this negligence plaintiff is not entitled to recover because of his own negligence, without which no harm would have come to him. The judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

RICHTER v. BLASINGAME. (No. 18,419.)

Corporations — Stockholders' Liability — Distilling Corporations—Contribution—Limitation of Actions—Trial—Findings.

1. Rev. St. U. S. § 3251, making "every person in any manner interested in the use" of any still jointly and severally liable for the taxes imposed on the liquors distilled therefrom, renders the stockholders of a distilling corporation liable for such taxes.

2. A stockholder of such a corporation paying more than his share of such taxes is entitled to contribution from the others.

3. A right of action for contribution from persons jointly and severally liable for a debt accrues only on the payment of more than one's share, and limitation does not begin to run against an action therefor until then.

4. The failure to directly find on the issue of limitation is not ground for reversal where the facts found show that a finding would have necessarily been adverse to appellant.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; J. R. Webb, Judge.

Action by Charles Richter against A. Henningsan, L. A. Blasingame, and others. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Blasingame appeals. Affirmed.

Sayle & Coldwell and W. P. Thompson, for appellant. G. B. Graham and F. H. Short, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an action to enforce contribution by defendants as stockholders in the Fruitvale Wine & Fruit Company, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California, on account of money paid by the assignor of plaintiff upon a judgment against the stockholders in said corporation, and in favor of the United States, for $1,827.40, due to the United States as a balance on a tax of 90 cents per gallon upon the distillation of 5,586 gallons of brandy and spirits by said corporation, between August 1, 1887, and September 22, 1887, which judgment is averred to have been paid February 2, 1892, by the First National Bank of Fresno, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of California, a stockholder in the corporation first named, and one of the defendants and judgment debtors in said judgment in favor of the United States. Plaintiff, as the assignee of said First National Bank of Fresno, had judgment in the court below against sundry of the defendants herein, and against the defendant L. A. Blasingame, for $213, from which judgment said Blasingame alone appeals. The cause comes up on the judgment roll, without a statement or bill of exceptions.

Appellant contends that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against him, and that the findings of the court are not sufficient to support the judgment. So much of the complaint as is necessary to illustrate the point made by appellant may be epitomized as follows: (1) The Fruitvale Wine & Fruit Company was a California corporation. (2) Defendant (appellant here) was a stockholder in said corporation, and the owner and holder of 10 shares of its corporate stock, out of 141 shares issued. (3) The corporation distilled 5,586 gallons of brandy and spirits, upon which it was liable to pay to the government of the United States a tax of 90 cents per gallon, and which amounted in the aggregate to $5,027.40. (4) In 1890 the United States of America brought an action in the circuit court of the United States, Ninth circuit, Southern district of California, against the First National Bank of Fresno, and certain others, all stockholders in said corporation, to recover from them said tax. (5) The corporation was insolvent, and had no property. (6) The United States recovered judgment for $2,163.02. (7) On January 2, 1892, an execution issued on said judgment, and was about to be levied upon the property of said bank (defendant), when it paid the judgment, and assigned its claim or right to contribution by the other stockholders to the plaintiff and respondent herein. (8) It does not affirmatively appear that appellant was a defendant in said action by the United States.

The question is, does the foregoing statement show a liability for his proportion of the tax upon the part of the appellant, either under the laws of the United States, or under the constitution and laws of the state of California? So much of the act of congress of 1872 as bears upon the subject is to be found in the latter part of section 3251 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and is as follows: "Every proprietor or possessor of and every person in any manner interested in the use of any still, distillery, or distilling apparatus, shall be jointly and severally liable for the taxes imposed by law on the distilled spirits produced therefrom," etc. A stockholder in a private corporation for profit is not in any proper sense the owner of the property of the corporation as such. He has, however, a direct interest in the corporation. In Plimpton v. Bigelow, 93 N. Y. 592, it was said: "The right which a shareholder in a corporation has, by reason of his ownership of shares, is a right to participate according to the amount of his stock in the surplus profits of the corporation on a division, and ultimately on its dissolution, in the assets remaining after payment of its debts." Gibbons v. Mahon, 136 U. S. 549, 10 Sup. Ct. 1057, and Kohl v. Lilienthal, 81 Cal. 378, 20 Pac. 401, and 22 Pac. 689, are to like effect. A stockholder has an insurable interest in the property of the corporation. Riggs v. Insurance Co., 125 N. Y. 7, 25 N. E. 1058; Warren v. Insurance Co., 31 Iowa, 464. At common law, a stockholder in a corporation, on account of his interest, was not a competent witness for the corporation in an action against it, or to serve as a judge or juror where the corporation was a party. We must not confound the liability of a stockholder in a corporation, under the law of its creation, with that imposed upon him by the act of congress. His liability under the latter is quite independent of the former, and is just what the act of congress has imposed upon him. That liability under the law applies not only to every proprietor and possessor of a still, but also to "every person in any manner interested in the use of any still, distillery," etc., and makes them all jointly and severally liable for the tax. So far as we know this particular provision of the act has not received an interpretation by the supreme court of the United States. In 1876 the acting secretary of the treasury addressed to the attorney general of the United States this precise question, in the following language: "Is a stockholder in a distilling corporation, not otherwise liable for the debts of the corporation beyond the amount of his stock therein, made individually liable therefor by the provisions of section 3251 of the Revised Statutes, and can his individual property, in no way connected with the business of such corporation, be seized and distrained for taxes due on spirits produced by it?" The answer was: "I am of the opinion that the section cited does include stockholders of private corporations engaged in distilling for gain," etc. The opinion proceeds to argue that stockholders are included in the expression "every person in any manner interested," and are therefore jointly and severally liable for the tax. 15 Op. Attys. Gen. p. 559. A similar opinion may be found in volume 16, at page 10, where it was held that being jointly and severally liable under the provisions of section 3251, Rev. St., for the taxes imposed upon the spirits manufactured by the corporation, stockholders therein could not be accepted as sureties upon a bond required of the corporation by another section. These opinions, while not conclusive, are valuable as serving to show the interpretation given to the section of the Revised Statutes under consideration by the department of justice of the federal government. Like considerations apply to the ruling of the circuit court, in holding the stockholders liable for the tax due from the corporation in the case which serves as a predicate for this action. We are of opinion that the stockholders in the corporation had such an interest in the use of the distillery as rendered them jointly and severally liable for the tax upon the spirits distilled therein, within the purview of section 3251 of the Revised Statutes, and hence that the allegations of the complaint stated facts sufficient in that respect to constitute a cause of action against them, and that the facts as found by the court which affirm these allegations were sufficient in that respect to support the judgment.

In the absence of any statement or bill of exceptions, we must infer, in favor of the judgment, that there was evidence in support of every material fact found by the trial court; and hence we cannot assume that the judgment in the circuit court against the bank and others was accepted by such trial court as conclusive evidence that defendants in this action, who were not parties to the original suit in the circuit court, were bound by the judgment therein; but, on the contrary, we must presume that the evidence established their liability precisely as charged in the complaint and found by the court, which, as we have before observed, was sufficient to establish the liability of the defendant here.

The cause of action against these defendants is not based upon the judgment against the bank and others, but upon the fact that the Fruitvale Wine & Fruit Company, a corporation, owned, possessed, and operated a distillery, and manufactured distilled spirits upon which there was a tax due to the government of the United States, and that these defendants, as stockholders in said corporation, were interested therein, and hence liable under the statute. These facts, being charged and found, establish their liability. Being jointly and severally liable, defendants are liable to contribute their proportion to their co-obligors, who have paid the demand for which all were liable.

The appellant, in his answer, pleaded the statute of limitations, and in his brief urges that "the findings do not support the judgment, for the reason that there are no findings upon defendants' plea of the statute of limitations." In the findings as originally prepared, and upon which the judgment was entered, there was no finding upon the statute of limitations, but several weeks after the entry of the judgment, the court, by an ex parte order, and upon the ground that it had inadvertently omitted them, made and caused to be filed findings upon this plea. This practice was unauthorized, and it may be conceded was erroneous, but it does not follow that the judgment should be reversed on that ground. The judgment does not depend upon these findings, but finds its support in the findings which were originally filed. The appeal is brought here upon the judgment roll alone, without any bill of exceptions. and the facts found by the court show of themselves that the action is not barred by limitation, and any finding that the court would have made upon this plea must have been adverse to the defendant. A formal finding to that effect, in the absence of all the evidence upon which the facts found are based, would be but a conclusion of law, and, whether given or omitted, would not constitute reversible error. The findings show that the demand of the United States was paid by the First National Bank of Fresno, the assignor of plaintiff, on the 3d day of February, 1892. The present action was brought August 18, 1892, less than two years thereafter. "A party acquires a right to contribution as soon as he pays more than his share, but not until then, and consequently the statute of limitations does not begin to run until then." 2 Pars. Cont. (8th Ed.) p. 37, and cases there cited; Sherwood v. Dunbar, 6 Cal. 53. The liability of a co-obligor to contribution, where not founded upon an instrument in writing, is governed by the first subdivision of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and is barred in two years.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

NORTHEY v. BANKERS' LIFE ASS'N.

(No. 15,983.)[1]

INSURANCE CERTIFICATE — FAILURE TO PAY ASSESSMENT.

An insurance certificate provided that on failure to make payments at maturity in January, April, July, or October, the membership should be forfeited. The insured was mortally wounded April 28th, and died May 1st. The last day of April fell on Sunday, and the April assessment was not paid. Code Civ. Proc. § 13, provides that, when any contract is to be performed on a holiday, it may be performed upon the next business day. Held, that the last day to pay the assessment was May 1st, and, the insured having died on that day, the membership was in force.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Charlotte Northey sued the Bankers' Life Association, a corporation, on an insurance certificate. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Van Ness & Redman, for appellant. Sheldon G. Kellogg, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. On July 29, 1892, a certificate of membership in the defendant corporation was issued to Frank T. Northey, providing that, in the event of his death during his membership, his wife, Charlotte Northey, who was named in the certificate as beneficiary, should receive the sum of $2,000, and the return of a portion of the guaranty fund, amounting to $31. The certificate also provided that "upon the failure of the above-named member to make any payment due from him to the association at its maturity in January, April, July, or October of each year, his guaranty deposit shall be forfeited, and his membership shall thereupon cease." Certain payments became due from Northey to the association in the months of July and October, 1892, and January, 1893, and were made at their respective dates of maturity in said months. Upon or about April 1, 1893, Northey received from the defendant a written notice that an assessment of $3.10 had been levied against him, and that the said sum must be paid during the month of April, 1893. Upon April 28th, Northey was shot and mortally wounded, and upon May 1st he died. The last day of April fell upon a holiday (Sunday), and this last assessment was never paid. Subsequent to the death of Northey, the plaintiff, who was the payee named in the certificate, furnished the defendant due notice and proof of his death, and otherwise performed all the conditions of the certificate required of her; but the defendant refused to pay to her the said sum of $2,031, or any part thereof. Thereafter the plaintiff commenced this action, and, in an amended complaint, set forth the facts as above stated, and demanded judgment against the defendant for the sum of $2,031, with interest and costs. The defendant demurred to the complaint upon the ground that it appeared therefrom that the assessment maturing and payable during the month of April, 1893, was not paid during said month, or at all, and that the nonpayment of the same at its maturity caused the membership of Northey in the association to cease before his death. The court sustained the demurrer, and gave judgment for the defendant, from which the plaintiff appeals.

It will be observed that the only provision in the certificate as to the forfeiture of membership is that upon the failure of the assured "to make any payment due from him to the association at its maturity in January, April, July, or October of each year," his membership shall cease. This in no way fixes the day or date of maturity. It might be the last or any other day of the month. And as against the insurer, in the absence of anything more definite, it would be presumed to be the last day of the month, the general rule being that, "where the language of a policy may be understood in more senses than one, it is to be construed most strongly against the insurer, because he frames it, and is supposed to make it as potent as possible in his own favor." Rankin v. Insurance Co., 89 Cal. 209, 26 Pac. 872; Thompson v. Insurance Co., 136 U. S. 287, 10 Sup. Ct. 1019; Civ. Code, § 1654. It will also be observed that the notice of the assessment of $3.10 which was not paid was only that the said sum must be paid during the month of April, 1893. This was, in effect, a notice that the insured would have to and including the last day of April to make the payment.

Our Codes provide: "Whenever any act of a secular nature, other than a work of necessity or mercy, is appointed by law or contract to be performed upon a particular day, which day falls upon a holiday, such act may be performed upon the next business day with the same effect as if it had been performed upon the day appointed." Code Civ. Proc. § 13; Civ. Code, § 11. In Blackwood v. Packing Co., 71 Cal. 461, 12 Pac. 493, the time for the defendant to answer was extended by stipulation "to, and to include, February 17, 1884." On the 18th of February, no answer being filed, the default of the defendant was entered and judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff. In due time the defendant moved to set aside the default and judgment upon the ground that the default was entered and the judgment rendered before the time to answer had expired. The 17th day of February fell upon Sunday, a holiday; and, on appeal from the order of the trial court denying the motion, it was held that under the stipulation, and the provisions of the Codes, the defendant was entitled to answer at any time during the succeeding Monday. In Campbell v. Society, 4 Bosw. 298, the assured held a policy which provided that it would not be in force "if the premiums remain unpaid beyond thirty days after becoming due." A premium became due on the 29th of May, and the policy holder was notified that, unless the same should be paid "on or before thirty days from that date, the policy will become void." The last day of the 30 days was Sunday, and the question was, could the tender of the premium be made on the Monday following? It was held that it could, and that the policy was not forfeited because payment was not made within the 30 days. In Hammond v. Insurance Co., 10 Gray, 306, the assured held a policy which provided that the premiums should be paid quarterly, in advance, "on or before the day, at noon, on which the same shall become due and payable." A premium became due on October 1st, which was Sunday, and it was held that a tender on the day following was in time. The court said: "The day of payment was on this occasion the first day of October. That day, as it appears, fell on Sunday; and, this being so, he was entitled to the ordinary privilege of discharging his obligation on the Monday following. The quarter-yearly payment, it is true, in terms, became payable on Sunday noon; but that day was not a day for secular business, and therefore, legally speaking, Sunday was not the day 'at which the same became payable'; and so, by the very provisions of the policy, properly construed, the quarterly premium was seasonably tendered on Monday." In Bliss on Life Insurance (2d Ed., p. 317) it is said: "If the last day for the payment of the premium, as fixed in the policy, occurs upon Sunday, at noon, the premium is not payable till the following Monday, and the company is liable if the assured dies Sunday afternoon." In Sands v. Lyon, 18 Conn. 18, the father of the defendant devised to him certain real property "on condition that he do pay, in one year next after my decease, to each of my daughters, * * * one hundred dollars." The last day of the year, next after the death of the testator, fell on Sunday, and the court held that payment might be made on the following Monday, saying: "We think that the defendant had, by the terms of the devise, a full year allowed him for paying the money, and, therefore, that he was not bound to pay it on the Saturday preceding the day on which the year expired." And in Weeks v. Hull, 19 Conn. 376, the court, referring to Sands v. Lyon, supra, said that that case recognized a conservative principle, which ought to govern all other cases to which it is applicable, namely, "that the computation of time should be so made as to protect a right and prevent a forfeiture, if this can be done without violating a clear intention or a positive provision."

[1] Rehearing denied.

Without following the adjudicated cases further, it is enough, in our opinion, to say that, as Northey had to and including the last day of April to pay the assessment against him, and as that day was Sunday, he was, under the law, as declared by the Codes and the cases cited, entitled to make the payment at any time during the ensuing Monday. It follows, therefore, that his certificate of membership was still in force at the time of his death, and that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the complaint. The judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to overrule the demurrer.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

ARBIOS v. SAN BERNARDINO COUNTY.

(L. A. 34.)

COUNTIES—ALLOWANCE OF CLAIMS—ACTIONS AGAINST COUNTY.

The county government act (section 43) provides for an allowance by the supervisors of a portion of a claim presented, and, if a claimant is unwilling to receive the amount, for the reconsideration thereof. Section 44 provides that a claimant, if dissatisfied after final action of the board, may sue the county. Held that, where a claim is allowed in part, claimant cannot sue on the entire claim without first notifying the supervisors of his unwillingness to accept the allowance.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; George E. Otis, Judge.

Action by one Arbios against the county of San Bernardino. From the judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Henry W. Nisbet, for appellant. Frank B. Daley, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff is constable of one of the townships in the county of San Bernardino, and on the 5th day of May, 1894, filed with the clerk of the board of supervisors of that county and presented his claim for $383.40, properly itemized and verified, for services rendered by him as such constable. The board of supervisors, at its meeting on the 7th of August, allowed the claim for $198.99. Thereupon the plaintiff commenced the present action to recover the full amount of his claim. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained by the court, and from the judgment entered thereon this appeal is taken.

The controverted question on this appeal is whether the plaintiff was authorized to bring an action upon the claim before the supervisors had acted thereon, after being informed of his unwillingness to accept the amount allowed. Section 43 of the county government act (St. 1893, p. 364), after providing that the board of supervisors may allow a portion of a claim presented, provides: "If the claimant is unwilling to receive such amount in full payment, the claim may again be considered at the next regular succeeding session of the board, but not afterwards;" and section 44 provides: "A claimant dissatisfied with the rejection of his claim or demand, or with the amount allowed him on his account, may sue the county therefor at any time within six months after the final action of the board, but not afterwards." This provision in section 44, limiting his right to sue the county to six months after its "final action" upon his claim, implies that the board is to act more than once thereon, and its "final action" is that which in the concluding portion of section 43 is directed to be taken when it has again considered the claim, after learning that the claimant is dissatisfied with its prior action. The supervisors would not know whether the claimant would be willing to accept the amount allowed, unless he should in some way indicate his disposition, and until they were informed of his unwillingness there would be no occasion for them to again consider the claim. Statutes requiring the presentation of claims against a county are framed with the purpose of avoiding useless expense in litigation, and to give to the county ample opportunity to avoid such expense; and we hold, therefore, that under a proper construction of the concluding portion of section 43 the plaintiff was required to indicate to the supervisors his unwillingness to accept the amount which they had allowed, and give them an opportunity to again consider his claim, in order that the county might have an opportunity to avoid incurring the costs of litigation which by section 44 would be imposed upon it if he should recover a judgment for more than the amount for which the claim was allowed. He was not authorized to bring a suit upon his claim until after they had again taken action thereon. The judgment is affirmed.

CONLAN v. SULLIVAN et al. (Sac. 49.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER — FRAUD OF PURCHASER — RESCISSION—IMPROVEMENTS—SUFFICIENCY OF FINDINGS.

1. Where, by a mistake of fact, a vendor believed the lot conveyed to be mortgaged for $500, instead of another lot owned by him, and offered to sell it for $700,—$200 to be paid in cash, balance to be paid on the mortgage,—and the purchaser, after telephoning the recorder, and learning the vendor's mistake, bought the lot on said terms, intending to defraud the vendor of the $500, the vendor could, on discovering his mistake, and on the refusal of the grantee to pay the $500 to him or the mortgagee, and on tendering the $200 received, maintain an action for rescission.

2. A finding, in an action to rescind a sale of land, that defendants expended a certain sum on the property, would not entitle defendants to be reimbursed for that amount, in the absence of a finding that the value of the property was increased by that amount.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Butte county; John C. Gray, Judge.

Action by William Conlan against John Sullivan and another for the rescission of a sale of land. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Reardan & White, for appellants. John Gale and J. M. McGee, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an action of rescission. The findings of the court were in accord with the allegations of the complaint, and judgment went for plaintiff. The appeal is from the judgment, and the merits of the case will be determined by a consideration of the sufficiency of the complaint in stating a cause of action. It appears substantially from the complaint that plaintiff owned a lot worth $700. By reason of a mistake of fact, he fully believed that it was mortgaged for $500, when it was another and different lot that was so mortgaged. He offered to sell the lot to appellants for $700, —$200 to be paid in cash, the balance, $500, to be paid on the mortgage. The appellants, through their attorney, telephoned to the recorder, and learned that respondent was mistaken, and that the lot was not incumbered at all. Then they agreed to buy the lot, and pay therefor $700, to be paid as above stated. They did not intend to keep this agreement, but did intend to take advantage of respondent's mistake, to obtain the property for $200, and to defraud him of the balance of the purchase price, $500. The $200 was paid, and the transfer made. Subsequently the plaintiff ascertained his mistake, and demanded that the $500 be paid to him, or to his mortgagee, in satisfaction of the mortgage upon the other lot. Defendants refused so to do. Plaintiff thereupon tendered the $200 received, with interest, and demanded a reconveyance, which tender and demand were also refused. We think the foregoing statement of facts sufficient to justify relief by a court of equity, and that the contract should be set aside.

The court made a finding to the effect that defendants had expended $282 upon the property, but made no finding as to the increased value of the property by reason of this expenditure of money. The mere expenditure of money upon the property by defendants is not sufficient to justify a reimbursement of the amount expended. Perchance, such expenditure did not add a dollar to the actual value of the realty. In addition, there is no allegation that such expenditure had increased to any degree the value of the realty. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 9, 1896.)

On motion for rehearing. Denied.

For former opinion, see 42 Pac. 815.

PER CURIAM. The opinion heretofore rendered herein is modified by eliminating from the paragraph preceding the judgment the first and last sentences, so that the same will read: "When a will is proved, every exertion of the court is directed to giving effect to the wishes of the testator therein expressed, but in the proving of the instrument the sole consideration before the court is whether or not the legislative mandates have been complied with." As so amended, the petition for a rehearing is denied.

In re RYER'S ESTATE. (S. F. 113.)

ORDER DENYING NEW TRIAL—APPEAL—DISMISSAL—AUTHENTICATION OF TRANSCRIPT—PROBATE PROCEEDINGS—NECESSARY PARTIES.

1. Failure to serve the adverse party with notice of motion for a new trial, or with a statement of the case, cannot be urged as ground for dismissal of an appeal from an order denying the motion, on the ground that the supreme court has no jurisdiction.

2. A motion to dismiss an appeal for improper authentication of the transcript must be denied, where a properly authenticated transcript has been filed before the hearing of the motion.

3. Beneficiaries under a will, who have not, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1660, appeared and resisted the petition in probate proceedings of one claiming as heir, for his distributive share of the estate, authorized by section 1658, when notice of the petition has been given, as required by section 1659, "to all persons interested in the estate," are not necessary parties to an appeal from an order denying the petitioner a new trial.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Walter H. Levy, Judge.

Petition by Christopher B. Ryer against the estate of W. M. Ryer, as heir, for his share of the estate. There was a judgment denying the petition, and from an order denying him a new trial plaintiff appealed. On motion to dismiss the appeal. Denied.

L. J. Maddux, Reddy, Campbell & Metson, Pillsbury, Blanding & Hayne, James H. Budd, and L. W. Fulkerth, for appellant. E. N. Deuprey, F. E. Spencer, Garber, Boalt & Bishop, Charles F. Hanlon, Joseph Hutchinson, E. B. Holladay, Jos. P. Kelly, and Stanly, Hayes & Bradley, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Motions to dismiss the appeal. The last will and testament of Washington M. Ryer, deceased, was admitted to probate, and letters testamentary issued thereon, July 13, 1892; and after the expiration of four months therefrom the appellant herein, claiming to be an heir of the deceased, presented his petition to the superior court for the share of the estate to which he claimed to be entitled. To this petition the executors and certain of the heirs and legatees of the deceased filed their answers, and the issues thus presented were tried by the court, and judgment rendered denying the petition. The petitioner then moved for a new trial, which was denied, and he has appealed from the order denying this motion. A motion is now made by the executors, and also by certain corporations claiming to be beneficiaries under the will of the deceased, to dismiss the appeal, upon the grounds that the notice of intention to move for a new trial, as well as the appellant's draft of his statement of the case, were not served upon these corporations; that the transcript on appeal, which was filed herein, was not properly authenticated, by reason of not having been certified on behalf of these corporations; that the notice of appeal was not served upon either of these corporations; and that, as they are adverse parties to the appellant, this court has no jurisdiction of the appeal unless they have been properly brought before it.

1. A failure to serve the adverse party with notice of the intention to move for a new trial, or with the draft of a statement of the case, may be a reason for denying the motion for a new trial, or for refusing to settle the statement, and may upon an appeal, if such service was necessary, be a ground for affirming or reversing the order appealed from; but it does not deprive this court of jurisdiction to hear the appeal, or constitute a reason for its dismissal upon the ground that the court has not acquired jurisdiction to hear it. Barnhart v. Fulkerth, 92 Cal. 155, 28 Pac. 221. Matters occurring prior to the judgment or order appealed from cannot be considered on a motion to dismiss an appeal upon the ground that the appeal has not been perfected. Ditch Co. v. Bachtold, 41 Pac. 813.

2. Prior to the hearing of this motion the appellant had filed with the clerk of this court a transcript properly authenticated by the clerk of the superior court, and has thus removed this ground of the motion. Estate of Medbury, 48 Cal. 83; Woodside v. Hewel, 107 Cal. 141, 40 Pac. 103; Warner v. Hopkins, 41 Pac. 868.

3. Upon an appeal from an order denying a new trial, the parties to the motion in the court below are the only proper parties to the appeal. Watson v. Sutro, 77 Cal. 609, 20 Pac. 88. And the appellant is not required to give notice of appeal to others than those to whom the original motion was directed. The "adverse party" upon whom a notice of appeal is to be served is the party who appears by the record to be adverse. Harper v. Hildreth, 99 Cal. 265, 33 Pac. 1103. And the record which is to be considered for that purpose is the record of the proceedings in which the appeal is taken. The rule that the notice of appeal must be served upon all parties that would be affected by a reversal of the order and judgment appealed from is to be construed with the other rule that only the record can be examined for the purpose of determining who are such adverse parties. The fact that the judgment or order may be used as evidence in some collateral action or proceeding, or that its reversal may have a remote or consequential effect to the prejudice of one who is not a party thereto, does not entitle such person to be made a party to the appeal. If it is necessary to resort to evidence extrinsic to the record upon the appeal, in order to show that the reversal will have such effect, the appeal will not be dismissed. The record to be used on an appeal from an order granting or refusing a new trial consists of the judgment roll and the bill of exceptions or statement used on the hearing of the motion, with a copy of the order appealed from. Code Civ. Proc., § 661. There is no "judgment roll," strictly speaking, in proceedings in probate; but, whenever proceedings in probate are so akin to a civil action as to necessitate the "papers" which are declared by section 670 to constitute the judgment roll in a civil action, they may be held to constitute the judgment roll referred to in section 661. In Estate of Bauquier, 88 Cal. 302, 26 Pac. 178, 532, it was held that a motion for a new trial is appropriate in proceedings in probate "whenever the action of the court which is invoked is dependent upon the existence of certain extrinsic facts which are presented to it for determination in the form of pleadings, and are to be decided by it in conformity with the preponderance of the evidence offered thereon," and that an appeal will lie from the order made upon the motion for a new trial. The proceeding instituted in the superior court by the appellant herein is in the nature of a collateral inquiry or episode interjected into the proceedings for the administration of the estate, in which there are pleadings, process, trial, findings, and a judgment,—thus presenting all the elements of a civil action instituted in an independent suit for the purpose of determining the right of the appellant to a share of the estate,—and, in matters of procedure upon an appeal, should receive the same consideration as upon an appeal in a civil action. The proceedings were taken by virtue of sections 1658–1660, Code Civ. Proc. Section 1659 provides, "Notice of the application must be given to the executor or administrator personally, and to all persons interested in the estate, in the same manner that notice is required to be given of the settlement of the account of an executor or administrator." The manner in which notice of the settlement of the account of an executor or administrator is to be given is prescribed in section 1633, which requires the clerk to "appoint a day for the settlement thereof, and thereupon give notice thereof by causing notices to be posted in at least three public places in the county, setting forth the name of the estate, the executor or administrator, and the day appointed for the settlement of the account." In the present case, personal notice of the application was served upon the executors, and the clerk caused to be posted for five days, in three public places in the city and county of San Francisco, a notice "to all persons interested in the estate" to appear and show cause why the said petition should not be granted. The court thus acquired jurisdiction over all parties interested in the estate, to hear the application. Section 1660 provides, "The executor or administrator, or any person interested in the estate, may appear at the time named and resist the application;" and, accordingly, the executors and certain others, claiming to be interested in the estate, resisted the application, and filed answers thereto. The only parties to the record are those who appeared and resisted the application, and they are the only parties who will be affected by a reversal of the order appealed from. The corporations herein referred to, who have not been served with the notice of appeal, did not resist the application, or in any way place themselves upon the record, or make themselves parties to the proceeding; and it is only by resorting to evidence outside of the record that it can be determined whether they are interested in the proceeding, or whether they will be in any way affected if a different result shall be reached upon a new trial. The only issues of fact to be tried in the court below were those presented by the parties who had filed answers to the application, and, as upon the original trial of those issues only the parties thereto could claim the right to be heard, so only the parties to those issues are necessary parties to the hearing of an appeal from the order of the court refusing to re-examine the issues. The motions are denied.

KROUSE v. WOODWARD et al. (No. 15,972.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1895.)

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE — TRANSFER OF STOCK — SALE OF PLEDGED STOCK.

1. Specific performance lies to compel a transfer of stock where it appears that the stock has no market value, that plaintiff purchased it with a view to increase in value, and that he cannot purchase other shares because no holder will sell any.

2. Where a bailee unlawfully sold pledged stock, he may be compelled to convey to the bailor similar stock owned by himself in the same corporation.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; W. G. Lorigan, Judge.

Action by Charles Krouse against John A. Woodward and others to recover certain shares of stock. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant Woodward appeals. Affirmed.

W. C. Kennedy and Wilcox & Patton, for appellant. Jackson Hatch, E. M. Rosenthal, and S. F. Leib, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This action was brought to recover from appellant 20 shares of stock in the defendant corporation. Plaintiff avers ownership of the stock on the 25th day of August, 1893, represented by certificate No. 7, then issued to him, and that he still owns the same; that the stock is of uncertain value; that the stock of said company has no known or fixed market value; and that plaintiff purchased said stock with a view of retaining the same for purposes of profit, investment, and speculation; that he became indebted to Woodward in the sum of $400, for which sum Woodward held his promissory note; that he delivered to said Woodward said certificate as a pledge to secure the payment of said note; that afterwards, on January 9, 1894, the note being due, he tendered to Woodward the amount due on said note and demanded the return of the stock and of said note, both of which demands Woodward refused to comply with; that, seven days afterwards, Woodward pretended to sell said stock to defendant Alexander; said pretended sale was without consideration, and was made to deprive plaintiff of his stock; that Alexander had full knowledge of plaintiff's rights; and that the certificate was held by Woodward as a pledge. It was also charged that Woodward now owns and holds more than 20 shares of the capital stock of the corporate defendant; that said Woodward threatens to sell all of his stock, and, unless enjoined, will do so. The tender of the money to Woodward was kept good, and plaintiff asked that plaintiff be declared the owner of certificate No. 7, and of said stock, and that said certificate be delivered to him, or, in case this cannot be done, that he recover 20 shares of the same stock now owned by Woodward. Answers were put in by the defendants, in which practically all the allegations of the complaint were denied. The court found the allegations of the complaint stated above to be true, except that the court found that Alexander purchased the stock from Woodward in good faith, and for a valuable consideration, to wit, for $450, then paid by him. The court also found that Woodward, although not owning the certificate of stock, was by the act of the plaintiff clothed with the apparent ownership, and, inasmuch as Alexander purchased without knowledge of the infirmity of Woodward's title, he acquired a good title. The court, by its decree, required Woodward to convey to plaintiff 20 shares of the stock which he owned and held in the same corporation, in lieu of plaintiff's stock which he had wrongfully sold to defendant Alexander. From this judgment the defendant Woodward brings this appeal, upon the judgment roll alone.

1. Appellant's first contention is that plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law, and is therefore not entitled to equitable relief. It appears somewhat singular that upon this proposition the peculiar language of our Code has never been noticed. As originally enacted, section 3384, Civ. Code, read as follows: "Except as otherwise provided in this article, the specific performance of an obligation may be compelled (1) when the act to be done is in the performance, wholly or partly, of an express trust; (2) when the act to be done is such that pecuniary compensation for its non-performance would not afford adequate relief; (3) when it would be extremely difficult to ascertain the actual damage caused by the non-performance of the act to be done; or (4) when it has been expressly agreed, in writing, between the parties to the contract, that specific performance thereof may be required by either party, or that damages shall not be considered adequate relief." In 1874 this section was amended by striking out all the subdivisions. This apparently establishes the rule that all obligations may be specifically enforced, unless it is otherwise provided in that title, and not that certain specified obligations may be specifically enforced. At the same time, section 3385, which provides that where one party was entitled to specific performance the other was also entitled to the remedy, although not within the rule as then established in section 3384, was repealed. Then follow quite a number of cases in which it is expressly provided that specific performance cannot be enforced. It would seem that it was intended to reverse the usual test as to the jurisdiction of a court of equity to enforce specific performance of a contract, and to place the burden upon the party resisting such action to show that the case in hand is within some exception. The subdivisions of 3384 stricken out contain a concise statement of the jurisdiction of courts of equity as stated in the textbooks. This amendment was made in 1874, and there are numerous cases since in which it has been assumed that the rule was as established by the decisions of courts of equity. It is not necessary here to determine whether the jurisdiction of courts of equity have been enlarged by this change in the law. Appellant claims that such jurisdiction has been narrowed by the Code, because section 3366 limits the relief to the cases specified in title 3. But section 3384 is a later section, and reverses the rule stated in section 3366; or it may be regarded as itself a specification, under section 3366. At all events, there is no ground to claim that the power of the court to enforce specific performance has been narrowed by the Civil Code. Without appealing to the Code to show a change in the rules of equity upon the subject of specific performance, there can be no doubt of the right of the plaintiff. The specific circumstances which authorize the court to give this relief are (1) that the stock has no market or ascertainable value; and (2) plaintiff purchased the stock for an investment,—in other words, with a view to anticipated increase in value; and (3) that he cannot purchase other shares in the corporation, because no holder will sell any. In Senter v. Davis, 38 Cal. 450, the matter was discussed, and the reasoning found there fully sustains this view. In that case, however, relief was denied, because it did not appear that the property had no market value. The matter is elaborately considered in Cushman v. Jewelry Co., 76 N. Y. 365, where numerous authorities are cited. See, also, Johnson v. Brooks, 93 N. Y. 342; Adams v. Messinger, 147 Mass. 185, 17 N. E. 491.

2. It is further contended that the court could not compel Woodward to convey his own stock in lieu of the certificate which he received from plaintiff. The property assigned to Woodward was 20 shares of stock. There was no difference in the shares. In Atkins v. Gamble, 42 Cal. 86, it was held that, under precisely the same circumstances, the only right which the bailor had was to recover the precise number of shares. He cannot insist upon a return of the identical stock, for it is a matter of no consequence. There can be no pretium affectionis for the certificate. The same rule must prevail here. Appellant has no cause to complain. The propriety of the action of the court is, however, fully sustained by authority. Cushman v. Jewelry Co., supra; 1 Mor. Priv. Corp. § 219; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 164; Johnson v. Brooks, 93 N. Y. 342.

I see nothing in the point that plaintiff made no investment because he borrowed from appellant, upon a pledge of this identical stock, the money with which he paid the subscription. He gave his note, and was personally bound for its payment.

The judgment is affirmed.

TEMPLE, J. This is the same case in which two other appeals have been taken, which have now been passed upon. 42 Pac. 1084. Alexander filed a cross complaint, in which he averred his ownership of the 20 shares of stock purchased from Woodward; also, that he purchased the same, after an investigation of the affairs of the corporation, as an investment, and for purposes of speculation, and that the stock has no market or fixed value. The court also found that no shares of the stock could be purchased. Judgment was given in favor of Alexander, and against the corporate defendant, requiring it to enter the transfer of the stock in its stock books, and to issue to Alexander a certificate for the same. For the reasons given in the appeal of Woodward (42 Pac. 1084), this judgment is affirmed.

KROUSE v. WOODWARD et al. (No. 15,972.)

Corporate Stock—Purchase from Bailee.

One who purchases stock from a bailee who, by the indorsed assignment, is made the apparent owner thereof, will be protected as against the bailor, though the stock stood on the corporation books in the latter's name.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; W. G. Lorigan, Judge. Action by Charles Krouse against John A. Woodward and others to recover certain shares of stock. From the judgment entered, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. C. Kennedy and Wilcox & Patton, for appellant. Jackson Hatch, E. M. Rosenthal, and S. F. Leib, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. This is the same case as that already decided on the appeal of Woodward (42 Pac. 1084). The plaintiff has also appealed from that part of the judgment which denies him relief against Alexander and against the defendant corporation. The judgment is clearly right. By the indorsed assignment, he made Woodward the apparent owner of the stock; and, when the court found that Alexander was a purchaser in good faith and for value, plaintiff had lost his case against Alexander. It did not matter that the stock stood on the books in plaintiff's name. These indorsed certificates do pass from hand to hand, and such is a usual mode of selling stock. The judgment in favor of Alexander is affirmed.

ROBERTSON et al. v. BURRELL. (No. 16,027.)

PARTNERSHIP — SURVIVING PARTNER — CONCEALMENT OF PARTNERSHIP — ACCOUNTING — RIGHT TO DEMAND IN PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE — LACHES.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 1585, gives a surviving partner possession of the partnership property, and requires him to settle the affairs without delay, and to account to the personal representative of his deceased partner. Held, that the right to demand such accounting of the administratrix of a surviving partner is in the personal representative of a deceased partner alone.

2. Where a widow, knowing that her husband was in partnership, had not, during the 7 years she survived him, and her heirs have not for 24 years after her death, required an accounting by the surviving partner, the right of the heirs to an accounting is a stale demand.

3. A demurrer is properly sustained to a petition against the personal representative of a surviving partner for a partnership accounting, brought more than 20 years after the right accrued, which alleges concealment by the surviving partner of the existence of the partnership, and that its existence was first discovered after his death, without alleging the nature of the concealment, what or of whom any inquiries were made, or why they were not made sooner, and that diligence would not have led to discovery before his death.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; W. G. Lorigan, Judge.

Action by George P. Robertson and others, as heirs, against A. H. Burrell, administratrix of the surviving partner of plaintiff's intestate, for a partnership accounting. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

J. A. Hannah and Horace L. Smith, for appellants. E. O. Larkins and S. F. Lieb, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Appeal from a judgment entered after demurrer sustained. Plaintiffs are the surviving heirs of their father, Eldridge G. Robertson, who died in the year 1864, and of their mother, who died in the year 1871. No administration was ever had upon the estate of either. They allege that in the year 1862 their father formed a partnership with one Cuthbert Burrell, each partner contributing thereto property of the value of $5,000. The agreement was that, as partners, the two should engage and cooperate in the business of raising, buying, and selling stock, transacting a general farming business, and dealing in real estate and other property, in the state of California, as full and equal partners. The business of the partnership was carried on for about two years, when their father died. At the time of his death the assets of the partnership had swelled in value to the sum of $100,000. Cuthbert Burrell continued in control and management of this property until his death, in 1893, at which date the assets amounted to $1,000,000. All of the property possessed by Cuthbert Burrell at the time of his death was property of the partnership. Soon after the death of their father, Burrell moved plaintiffs (then minors) and their mother to Oakland, Cal., where the children, excepting one, were placed in an asylum, and so grew to majority. "Cuthbert Burrell concealed from their mother the fact that her husband, the father of plaintiffs, was a partner with Burrell, and that she and her children were entitled to one-half of the property which belonged to said partnership, or that she or her children were entitled to receive and demand of him one-half of the sum of one hundred and three thousand dollars, for which he sold a part of the cattle belonging to said partnership." "The plaintiffs, at the time of the death of their father, were of tender years, and the said Cuthbert Burrell, during his lifetime, concealed from them the fact that a partnership existed between him and their father, or that he held any money or property in trust for them; and they have only discovered the fact of the existence of the said partnership since the death of the said Cuthbert Burrell, viz. on or about February 6, 1894. That statements made by Cuthbert Burrell to Esther E. Phelps in his lifetime, and a short time before his death, caused her to make inquiry concerning the property her father had in his lifetime, and such inquiry led to the discovery of the said partnership which existed between their father and Cuthbert Burrell, and facts hereinbefore set out." The foregoing quotations contain all of the averments of the complaint as to concealment, diligence, and discovery of the alleged fraud. Burrell never accounted during his lifetime, and after his death demand for an accounting was made upon defendant, his administratrix, and refused. The action is brought to compel an accounting. In the interim it is asked that a receiver be appointed to take charge of all of the dead man's estate, as being partnership property.

The demurrer was properly sustained. Plaintiffs are not the proper parties to maintain this action, and they have not legal capacity to do so. While, in a sense, they are beneficiaries of the trust which resulted by the death of their father, the fulfillment of which was imposed upon the surviving partner, yet there were certain intermediate steps and processes necessary to be taken and followed before their beneficial interests could be reduced to possession. And it is these necessary processes which the action under consideration entirely ignores; for there was another trust intervening in time and right, and duties between the close of the surviving partner's trust and their enjoyment of its fruits. It is true that, as heirs of their father, the title to his property, real and personal, vested in them, but their title did not carry with it the right of immediate enjoyment. The rights and duties of the administrator of their father's estate interposed and intervened. The administrator, also, is a trustee, with well-defined duties, among the first of which is that of collecting the assets of the estate, and paying its just debts, after due notice to creditors. The heirs' title is subject to the performance by the administrator of all his trusts, and they finally come into the possession and enjoyment of only such portion of the estate as may remain after the execution of them by the administrator. Section 1585 of the Code of Civil Procedure gives to the surviving partner the right to continue in possession of the partnership property, and imposes upon him the duty of settling its affairs without delay. He is required to account, not with the heirs, but with the executor or administrator. This duty of the surviving partner is the correlative of the right of the personal representative, and fixes the person in whom the right of action exists. If he is to account with the administrator, the administrator it must be who has the right to call him to account. Sections 369, 1581, and 1582 of the Code of Civil Procedure broadly define the powers of administrators in matters of litigation. They may sue without joining the heirs or beneficiaries. Section 1452 of the same Code permits the heirs, in designated kinds of actions, affecting the title to real estate, to sue without joining the personal representative. This section was construed and held to apply in the case of Janes v. Throckmorton, 57 Cal. 368–387. There the action was brought to enforce a trust, and as the court, with emphasis, points out, to compel a conveyance of the legal title to real estate. But here the trust sought to be established is a trust growing out of a partnership relation exclusively. Whether the partnership assets consist of real or personal property, or both, is quite immaterial, since in every case it is made the duty of the surviving partner to account with the personal representative. Nor is Ord v. De la Guerra, 18 Cal. 67, in point for appellants. There, upon the death of his wife, the husband, as was proper, continued in management and control of the community property, though a distinct interest in the property vested in the heirs of the wife under the Mexican law. Upon the husband's death without an accounting to her heirs, they sued his representatives to recover their share of the property. The court's decision was largely based upon the opinion expressed,—that there was no necessity for taking out administration upon the wife's estate under the old system of the Mexican law. "We see no difficulty in giving to the right of the heir, whether arising out of a past system or the present, the same remedy which we would apply in the case of a representative at common law of a surviving partner in a commercial partnership, distribution of partnership effects left after settlement of the firm debts in the hands of such survivor." Bettis v. Townsend, 61 Cal. 333, involved no question of partnership, nor rights of representatives. "It was a trust relating to personal property, and could be taken advantage of by the beneficiaries, the present plaintiffs. Civ. Code, § 2251." In Little v. Caldwell, 101 Cal. 553, 36 Pac. 107, the widow of deceased sued her husband's surviving partner, but the foundation of her claim was an alleged contract between herself and the defendant entered into after her husband's death. The action did not involve any claim for a general accounting. Upon the other hand, though the heir succeeds to the ownership of the property, real or personal, he is not thereby given full dominion and control over it. In Smith v. Walker, 38 Cal. 385, the administrator prosecuted his action for an accounting against the surviving partner, and the court said: "He represents the entire estate. * * * Till then [distribution], the administrator is entitled to the possession and control of the entire estate. Till he recovers the whole estate, the amount to be distributed cannot be known." In Bell v. Hudson, 73 Cal. 285, 14 Pac. 791, the action, in nature identical with this, was properly brought by the administrator. Nor can the heir, by any act of his own, strip the representative of any of his rights, nor relieve him from the performance of any of his duties. The heir may sell his interest, but the administrator still has control of the property sold for the payment of debts, and the general purposes of administration. The heir cannot bring an action to enforce payments or collect debts. Harwood v. Mayre, 8 Cal. 580; Grattan v. Wiggins, 23 Cal. 29. And, even when he attempts to do so by suing in his individual capacity and as executor, the right of action not being in both, but in the executor alone, a demurrer will be sustained. Dias v. Phillips, 59 Cal. 293. So much has been said upon the law of our own Code provisions, and the cases interpreting them. But it may be added that elsewhere the authorities are uniform that the personal representative alone has the right to maintain such an action, saving in those exceptional cases—of which this is not one—where the personal representative, by fraud or otherwise, is disqualified. T. Pars. Partn. § 344, and note; Story, Partn. §§ 342–347; Lindl. Partn. *pp. 494, 611; Bates, Partn. § 924; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1277.

In contemplation of further litigation, it may be well to consider briefly certain other objections urged to this bill upon demurrer. They are, generally, that the bill is a stale demand, and shows no equity. The attack is directed to the insufficiency of the portions of the bill above quoted. It appears from the pleading that the men engaged in a partnership, to which they gave their personal care and attention. Each contributed to it property of the value of $5,000. At the time of Robertson's death, he was still actually engaged in its business, and the value of his interest had increased to $50,000. Yet after his death no administration is taken out upon his estate, and no demand made upon Burrell for a partnership accounting by any one. It is not averred that the widow, mother of the plaintiffs, did not know of the partnership, and this must be construed as an admission that she did know (Hecht v. Slaney, 72 Cal. 363, 14 Pac. 88); and, indeed, it would be surprising if she did not. Where the right of action is joint, knowledge which would bar it as to one would bar it as to all, either in law or equity. Freem. Coten. § 375; Wait, Act. & Def. p. 279; Jordan v. M'Kenzie, 30 Miss. 32; Hardeman v. Sims, 3 Ala. 747. And, where a right of action is barred to the ancestor, it is barred to his heirs. Shortridge v. Allen (Tex. Civ. App.) 21 S. W. 419. The widow's long silence and inaction under these circumstances, taken with the fact that no claim was ever made upon the surviving partner, would render the demand stale. Bell v. Hudson, 73 Cal. 285, 14 Pac. 791.

Moreover, after the lapse of so much time, and after the death of all the original parties, equity, for the peace of society, scrutinizes with great particularity bills such as this, and is not satisfied to retain one unless the fullest possible credible showing is made by the applicants for relief. Bills v. Mining Co., 106 Cal. 9, 39 Pac. 43; Chapman v. Bank, 97 Cal. 155, 31 Pac. 896; Felix v. Patrick, 145 U. S., at page 333, 12 Sup. Ct. 862; Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U. S. 135, at page 143. It is not sufficient, therefore, to allege ignorance at one time, and discovery at another. The facts and circumstances must themselves be pleaded, in order that the court may determine whether the sources of knowledge at last availed of were not at all times open to plaintiffs, whether they were negligently overlooked, whether other circumstances should not earlier have put plaintiffs upon discovery, what was the nature of the concealment practiced, whether it consisted in mere silence, or was accompanied by active misrepresentation and fraudulent deception. In this bill, upon all these pertinent matters of pleading, where there is not an absolute absence of averment (as of the ignorance of the widow), there is but a fleshless skeleton of allegation. Plaintiffs only discovered the fact of the existence of the partnership after the death of Burrell. The matter leading to the discovery was statements made by Burrell, a short time before his death, to one of the heirs, which led her to make inquiry. What the statements were; how long before his death they were made; whether or not due diligence after their making would not have resulted in discovery during Burrell's lifetime; why, if Burrell's policy was concealment, he should at last have made to one of the heirs declarations so pregnant with meaning that they led to discovery; what were the inquiries which the heir made, and which resulted in discovery; of whom were they made, and why were they not made years before,—are all questions which upon the demand of the demurrer should be answered by the bill, in order that the chancellor, to whose conscience, in the first instance, the equity of the bill is addressed, should satisfy himself that plaintiffs have not neglected or slept upon their rights.

It is claimed that the defects could be cured by amendment, and that an amendment should have been permitted. Leave to amend, while addressed to the discretion of the court, should be liberally granted, to subserve the ends of justice. And in any ordinary case of absence of averment, or of insufficient averment, we should hold it to be an abuse of discretion to refuse leave to amend. But here not only plaintiffs could not file a sufficient bill, for the reason first above discussed, but they did not ask leave to amend, and error will not be presumed. Smith v. Taylor, 82 Cal. 541, 23 Pac. 217; Buckley v. Howe, 86 Cal. 605, 25 Pac. 132. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

In re WELCH'S ESTATE. (S. F. 146.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 27, 1895.)

Removal of Administrator — Declarations of Deceased—Failure to Account—Evidence.

1. Declarations of deceased that his estate was of a certain value, and that he had a large sum of money in his house, is not competent in an action to remove his administrator for failing to account for moneys received.

2. A finding that deceased was a member of a partnership, his interest standing in the name of his administrator, and that the administrator failed to account therefor in his inventory, is not sustained by proof that deceased, before his death, and in the presence of the administrator, assigned his interest to his wife.

3. The fact that an administrator improperly paid an attorney's fee is no ground for removal.

4. The probate judge has no authority to direct an administrator where and how he shall keep the assets of the estate.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Henry Welch, deceased. John Purcell appeals from an order removing him as administrator of deceased's estate. Reversed.

John T. Greany, for appellant. Chas. A. Sumner, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This is the second appeal in this matter. 86 Cal. 179, 24 Pac. 943. After the remittitur was filed, the petition for the removal of the administrator was amended, and the matter retried. The court found as before, and also three additional facts, and again removed the administrator. The order is expressly based solely upon the new facts found on the retrial. They are: (1) That deceased had at the time of his death ten or twenty thousand dollars in money, which came into the possession of the administrator, or of which he had knowledge. That he failed to include it in his inventory, or to inform the court thereof. (2) That said Purcell collected for Henry Welch, before Welch's death. some $1,200, which he has not accounted for or charged himself with. And (3) that Welch was a partner in the firm of McKenna & Purcell, his interest standing in the name of said Purcell, who was only nominally a partner; and that he has not shown that interest in the inventory, or given any information in regard thereto to the court.

In regard to the first finding, which, no doubt, is most relied upon, if the evidence produced were competent, it does raise a grave suspicion that some assets were concealed either by the widow or her father, who is the administrator, or both. It is not necessary to discuss the question as to whether this finding was supported by the evidence. Errors were committed on the trial in the admission of testimony which will necessitate a new trial. The evidence was almost all hearsay, consisting largely of declarations, made by the deceased, to the effect that his estate was of the value of fifty, sixty, or seventy thousand dollars, and that he had a large sum of money in his house. This testimony was not admissible against appellant. There is no analogy between such statements and declarations made by a person in possession of property characterizing his possession. In the last case the claim made by the possessor is of itself a material matter, or in the instances where it is not so the declarations are against interest. Such was not the case here. The declarations were material only as showing the fact asserted, to wit, the ownership and possession of property, the very existence of which was sought to be proven by the declarations. The conversation between Mrs. Welch, Michael Purcell, a brother of appellant, and a witness for petitioner, was irrelevant.

I do not think the evidence sustains the second finding. It seems to show that Purcell did not own the machine, but it also shows that he paid the money to Welch. We may be at liberty to believe that Purcell testified falsely when he said he gave the money to Welch for safe-keeping; perhaps also to suspect that the claim he presented against the estate was simulated. He sold the machine two years and a half before Welch died, and, as he gave the money to Welch, the presumption would be, if Welch owned the machine, it was a payment.

As to the third finding, the only real evidence tending to show that Welch owned the interest in the partnership was the fact that a few days before his death he assigned his interest in it to Mrs. Welch in the presence of John Purcell. There may be grounds for attacking this transfer, but none are shown. Under such circumstances it would not justify the removal of appellant.

If the other matters found were immaterial to the issue they should not have been found. The fact that appellant paid an attorney's fee improperly would constitute no ground for his removal. I know of no law which authorizes a probate judge to direct an administrator where and how he shall keep the assets of an estate, and surely there ought to be no such law. The administrator is liable for their safety on his bond. If the court could lawfully take charge of them, it would deprive interested parties of this security. If goods are lost, it may be a question whether they have been properly cared for. If they have been placed where the judge has directed, and then lost, he will have prejudged the case before the trial. Administrators cannot be deprived of the actual custody of the assets of the estate by such an order. The order is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

PEOPLE v. KAMAUNU. (Cr. 21.)

HOMICIDE — CONFESSION — FOUNDATION—VENUE—PROOF—MISCONDUCT OF DISTRICT ATTORNEY —PUNISHMENT—DISCRETION OF JURY.

1. One who lived with defendant testified for the state that on the night of the murder defendant, on coming home, told witness that he killed deceased, and warned witness to keep silence. Held, that error in admitting the confession without foundation having been laid therefor was harmless, since it appeared by the testimony that the confession was voluntary.

2. It was proper to refuse to instruct the jury as to how they should exercise the discretion given them in regard to the punishment in case they found defendant guilty.

3. It was no ground for new trial that the district attorney referred to evidence offered in the presence of the jury, and ruled out, where the court immediately instructed the jury that they had nothing to do with such evidence, and again in its general charge stated that the case should be determined entirely from testimony received.

4. Where it was testified that deceased resided in the county, and that the body was found at the gate, and carried into the house, and from the testimony regarding the house it was plainly to be implied that the house was deceased's residence, and the place where she was killed, the venue was sufficiently proved.

In bank. Appeal from superior court of El Dorado county; M. P. Bennett, Judge.

Paulo Kamaunu was convicted of murder in the first degree, and from the judgment of conviction, and an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. A. Swisler and Abe Darlington, for appellant. W. F. Fitzgerald, Atty. Gen., for the People.

TEMPLE, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to be hanged. He was charged jointly with one Liloi. During the trial the charge against Liloi was dismissed under section 1099, Pen. Code, and Liloi was called as a witness against Kamaunu. Witness and Kamaunu were natives of the Sandwich Islands, and spoke English very imperfectly. They had been employed in cutting wood, and lived together. They had finished their contract, and had just been paid off. There was evidence tending to show that one of them, on the day before the homicide, had purchased a chicken from the deceased. She was an old lady, who lived by herself. On the morning after the purchase of the chicken she was found at her gate, dead, and some circumstance pointed to defendant and Liloi as the murderers. When sworn, Liloi stated that Kamaunu had purchased the chicken from deceased, and told him that he believed she had money in the house, because she promptly produced change for a gold coin with which he paid for the chicken. He states that during the day they drank wine together, and that at night defendant was absent from their cabin, and witness went to bed. That during the night he heard knocking, and opened the door, when Kamaunu entered. It was between 11 and 12 o'clock. Witness asked, "Where have you been?" Here defendant's counsel objected to evidence of confessions, because the proper foundation had not been laid. The objection was overruled and exception taken. The witness proceeded: "Him, he say he been take a walk that night; that is what he say. After that he talka with me he been down that old woman's; he kill that old woman; he lose pistol—revolver; that is what he say; he talka lose revolver very bad." This is the substance of the confession, although, on being questioned, some further remarks to the same effect were elicited. This was a confession, and the rule is, as contended for by counsel for the defense, that the court ought, on a preliminary inquiry, first to determine whether the confession was voluntary. But, if the circumstances already show that it must have been voluntary, there would be no necessity for further inquiry. And if it be admitted that there was error, the question then would be, did the error affect the substantial rights of the defendant? If we cannot determine whether there was injury or not, then, since the defendant has not been tried as the law of the land directs, we must presume injury; for to be so tried is his right. But if we can see that he has not been injured, the judgment will be allowed to stand.

It is apparent from the testimony—if true—that Liloi did not know of the homicide until Kamaunu informed him of the fact in the confession. It was impossible, therefore, that there should have been an inducement offered by Liloi to make the confession. And the testimony further shows a motive which moved defendant to make the confession, and that the motive was suggested by no one. He knew that when Liloi would hear of the tragedy he would at once suspect him. His purpose was to enforce silence by a threat, which immediately followed the confession. But what inducement could Liloi have offered, even if he had known? How could he make it better for him to confess, or worse for him if he did not? There was no threat except from defendant towards Liloi. It is difficult to see how such a person as the witness could have induced a confession otherwise than by threats. I think we can see that defendant was not injured by the ruling, conceding it to have been erroneous. There was no error in refusing to instruct the jury as to how they should use the discretion given them in regard to the punishment in case they found the defendant guilty. This discretion is given to the jury, and the court cannot direct or advise them upon the subject further than to inform them of their function.

The district attorney deserved severe rebuke from the court for the remark set out in the bill of exceptions. He stated no fact, however, not already known to the jury. It was merely a reference to evidence offered and ruled out. The court immediately instructed the jury that they had nothing to do with such evidence, and, again, in its general instructions, stated that the case must be determined entirely from the testimony received, without reference to other things they may have heard.

The venue was sufficiently proven. It was testified that she resided in the county, and that the body was found at the gate. The body was carried into the house. The condition of the house, of the bed, and the doors is shown. The witnesses do not expressly state that this house was her residence, but that it was both the house where she resided and where she was killed is plainly implied.

The rulings in regard to the introduction of testimony seem to be as to unimportant matters or were evidently correct. A particular discussion of them would be of no moment. There was no doubt as to the admissibility of the conversation in the jail at the time, although it does not seem to possess much importance. Besides, the statements of Liloi were afterwards by the judge stricken out when the charge was dismissed against him. If defendant desired more explicit instructions upon that subject, he should have asked for them. The judgment and order are affirmed.

DIXON v. SCHERMEIER. (No. 14,808.)

EASEMENT IN WATER DITCH — DISCLAIMER BY MORTGAGEE—EXTINGUISHMENT OF LIEN.

Where the owner of two adjoining mining claims, across one of which a water ditch extended to and upon the other, mortgaged the claim over which the ditch extended, and, in an action to foreclose the mortgage, subsequent mortgagees of the other claim were made parties defendant, and, instead of asserting their lien on the right to use the ditch in the former claim, disclaimed all interest in that claim, the judgment rendered against them on such disclaimer extinguished their lien on the easement.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; G. G. Clough, Judge.

Action by A. Dixon against H. Schermeier to quiet title. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

F. P. Tuttle, for appellant. E. L. Craig, for respondent.

BRITT, C. In the year 1873 the United States issued to one F. Hoffman a patent for certain mining ground, 160.77 acres in area, called by the parties here the "Hoffman Placer Claim." On the easterly and lower side of this, though not quite contiguous to it, lay another parcel of mining ground, containing some 58 acres, and called the "Smith Placer Claim." At the date of said patent there was, and is yet, a water ditch heading about half a mile above the Hoffman claim, and extending through the same to a reservoir a few rods within the eastern boundary thereof, and thence on to the Smith claim, a total distance of about three miles, half of which entire length is included in the Hoffman tract or claim. Mining on both the Hoffman and Smith claims, and to some extent elsewhere, has been carried on by means of water drawn through this ditch, though the ditch was originally constructed—as early as 1855—and has been mainly used to work the Smith claim. Said Hoffman became the owner of the ditch in 1875. It does not appear that he could, or ever did, make use of the same, except in connection with said two placer claims. Plaintiff's action is for the purpose of quieting his alleged title to the ditch. He founds his right on (1) a mortgage executed by said Hoffman, November 13, 1883, to plaintiff and one Tillotson, upon said Smith mining claim and said water ditch,—Hoffman, it seems, having become the owner of the Smith claim; (2) judgment in an action begun December 5, 1887, by Dixon & Tillotson, for the foreclosure of such mortgage, which judgment was rendered February 6, 1888, and directed the sale of the mortgaged property; (3) sheriff's deed dated February 8, 1889, made to plaintiff, Dixon, as purchaser of the property at the sale under such judgment. But on September 15, 1880, several years before the mortgage to which plaintiff traces his title, Hoffman mortgaged to one Elsen and others the land described in said patent to him,—the Hoffman placer claim,—and all the appurtenances thereto, to secure certain indebtedness to fall due May 1, 1881. In 1885 the mortgagees in this instrument instituted an action for the foreclosure thereof, and Dixon and Tillotson were made parties defendant. They filed an answer in which they denied "that they have or claim to have any interest whatsoever, either by mortgage or otherwise, in the land described in the mortgage sought to be foreclosed in this action." Such action resulted in a judgment of foreclosure in favor of Elsen and his comortgagees, under which the property mortgaged to them was sold on September 4, 1886, to Schermeier, the present defendant. No redemption being effected, Schermeier received, April 28, 1888, a deed of the property so purchased by him, and thereunder claims to be the owner of the ditch within the limits of the Hoffman claim, and above to the head of the ditch. He has had possession of the same since the date of sale, September 4, 1886.

It may be, as contended by plaintiff, that prior to the acquisition of title to the ditch by Hoffman, in 1875, it constituted an independent property, dissociated from the land over which it passed,—an easement in gross. See Coonradt v. Hill, 79 Cal. 590, 21 Pac. 1099. Yet as such it was a servitude upon the land. Smith v. Hawkins (filed Nov. 19, 1895) 42 Pac. 453; Ware v. Walker, 70 Cal. 595, 12 Pac. 475; Civ. Code, § 802, subd. 5. And when Hoffman became the owner of both ditch and lands the servitude was, for the time such unity of title might continue, extinguished. Civ. Code, §§ 805, 811; Gould, Waters, § 318. Assuming, as we may (and this is probably the view more favorable to appellant), that Hoffman was the owner of the Smith claim in 1880, when he mortgaged the Hoffman claim, then the ditch—an artificial water course apparently necessary to the working of both claims—was an appurtenance to each of them. Civ. Code, § 662; Crooker v. Benton, 93 Cal. 365, 28 Pac. 953; Standart v. Water Co., 77 Cal. 399, 19 Pac. 689; Fitzell v. Leaky, 72 Cal. 477, 14 Pac. 198; Farmer v. Water Co., 56 Cal. 11. The title of a purchaser at a sale made under foreclosure of a mortgage has relation to the date of the mortgage. Horn v. Jones, 28 Cal. 194. Hence, by the execution of the mortgage of 1880, Hoffman created, potentially, a severance of the tenements to which the ditch was appurtenant,—and it follows that although this mortgage was a lien on the Hoffman claim, and upon the ditch, as an appurtenance thereto, yet an easement of way for the ditch over the Hoffman claim was reserved from that mortgage, by implication of law, in favor of the Smith claim. Such easement was included in the mortgage of 1883. Quinlan v. Noble, 75 Cal. 250, 17 Pac. 69, and cases cited; Oakley v. Stanley, 5 Wend. 523; Huttemeier v. Albro, 18 N. Y. 48; Gould, Waters, §§ 313, 314, 354. Accordingly, when Dixon and Tillotson were made defendants in the suit to foreclose the mortgage of 1880, they could have asserted their lien, in virtue of the mortgage of 1883, on such easement in the Hoffman claim, and have litigated with the mortgagees in that case substantially the same issue Dixon is now waging with defendant here. Tolman v. Smith, 85 Cal. 280, 24 Pac. 743. But they expressly disclaimed any interest in the land which was the subject of that suit; and the judgment there, founded on such disclaimer, and the sale and deed to Schermeier, extinguished the lien they had on every part of the Hoffman claim, including the section of the ditch lying above the mining claim, which, as an appurtenance thereof, was included in the disclaimer. It results that Dixon, as purchaser at the sale under the judgment obtained by himself and Tillotson, acquired no interest in the ditch above the easterly line of the Hoffman claim. Reynolds v. Hosmer, 51 Cal. 205. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; BELCHER, C.

WHEELER v. DONNELL. (L. A. 91.)[1]

COURT—APPELLATE JURISDICTION — PROCEEDINGS FOR REMOVAL OF PUBLIC OFFICER.

A proceeding under Pen. Code, § 772, providing for the removal of a public officer for misconduct, on accusation presented to the superior court, in which proceeding, in case the accusation is sustained, a judgment for $500 is also to be rendered for the informer, is not appealable to the supreme court, as a "case at law" involving a demand in excess of $300. Beatty, C. J., and Temple, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Accusation filed by one Wheeler against J. A. Donnell. From the judgment dismissing the accusation on a demurrer being sustained, Wheeler appeals. Dismissed.

R. H. Chapman and W. T. Kendrick, for appellant. Allen & Flint and Garrison & Goodrich, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is a proceeding brought against J. A. Donnell, district attorney of Los Angeles county, by accusation under the provisions of section 772 of the Penal Code, alleging misdemeanors in office. The accusation was tried upon the complaint and answer, and judgment was rendered upon the merits exonerating the accused and dismissing the complaint. This is an appeal by the accuser, Wheeler, from said judgment. Respondent has moved to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that no appellate jurisdiction in such cases is vested in this court, and this is the only point here involved. In Re Curtis (decision filed Sept. 4, 1895) 41 Pac. 793, the question here involved was directly presented, and this court dismissed the appeal for lack of jurisdiction to entertain it. The reasoning upon which the conclusion was there arrived at is entirely satisfactory to us, and it would hardly seem that further consideration of the subject is necessary. That decision is based upon the broad proposition that the proceeding is a criminal one, not prosecuted by information or indictment, and therefore without the appellate jurisdiction of this court. That this proceeding is a criminal one, and in its nature a prosecution for crime, is evident by every section of the Penal Code found in the chapter where this accusation is authorized. In addition to this, section 15 of the Penal Code declares: "A crime or public offense is an act committed or omitted in violation of the law forbidding or commanding it, and to which is annexed upon conviction either of the following punishments: * * * (4) Removal from office." In a case like the present one, if the charges are substantiated, the court must enter a decree that the party accused be deprived of his office, and also enter a judgment in favor of the informer for the sum of $500. It is now sought to avoid the effect of the rule declared in the Curtis Case by claiming the present proceeding to be a case at law in which the demand, exclusive of interest, amounts to $300. Conceding a demand is here involved amounting to $300, such fact of itself is not sufficient to vest this court with jurisdiction. A demand in that amount must be in a "case at law," and here we have no such case. There are many misdemeanors punishable by imprisonment and fine of $500, and it might, upon similar lines of reasoning, be urged that there was a money demand of $500 involved in such cases, and appellate jurisdiction for that reason be vested in this court; but in People v. Johnson, 30 Cal. 98, this court, in construing the provision of the constitution as to its appellate jurisdiction, said: "In view of this clear and precise division of the subject-matter, aside from the ordinary import of the words 'cases at law,' it is clear that those words only refer to civil, as distinguished from criminal, cases. Equity cases are first provided for, then civil cases at law, then probate cases, and lastly criminal cases." This accusation charges a misfeasance in office, and fixes the penalty at removal from such office and fine. As a matter of policy, the law declares that this sum of $500, which is nothing more nor less than a fine, shall go to the informer; and that this money goes to the informer, rather than into the county treasury, is wholly immaterial. Again, the main purpose of the act is to secure the removal of the officer guilty of unlawful conduct, and the money judgment provided for is purely incidental to that purpose. Smith v. Ling, 68 Cal. 324, 9 Pac. 171. This is even more fully apparent when we consider that an accusation presented by the grand jury is not followed by any money judgment in case a conviction results, and also from the further fact that the entire sum goes into the pockets of the informer. In Woods v. Varnum, 85 Cal. 639, 24 Pac. 843, it is held that the accused is not entitled to a jury trial. If the case was one at law, involving more than $300, such a judgment could not stand. Aside from the money judgment provided by the section, the proceeding has no single element of a "case at law." It is in no sense a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto, as was held to be the nature of the action in People v. Perry, 79 Cal. 105, 21 Pac. 423. The subject of litigation in that case was title to the office. In all essentials, that was a case at law. A question of conflicting claims to an office was there presented, and usurpation was charged. There title was denied. Here title is admitted. It was not held in that case that, by reason of a $5,000 fine being authorized by the statute, therefore this court had appellate jurisdiction; but it was held that a money demand exceeding $300 being involved, and the action being substantially a quo warranto proceeding, and in its nature a case at law, therefore appellate jurisdiction was vested in this court. For the foregoing reasons, the appeal is dismissed.

PEOPLE v. SHAUGHNESSY. (Cr. 40.)

BUNCO GAME—LARCENY

1. One who obtains possession of another's money by inducing him to put it up on a lottery operated in a bunco game, and with the assurance that the money would be returned after a certain number of drawings, the owner not intending to part with his title, is punishable for larceny.

2. Though, on a trial for grand larceny committed in the execution of a bunco game, the court read to the jury section 332 of the Penal Code, which has reference to fraudulently obtaining money by device, trick, etc., the error was cured by following charges to the effect that the person obtaining money from another by fraud or artifice, with the intention of stealing it,—the owner not intending to part with his title,—is guilty of larceny.

John Shaughnessy was convicted of larceny, and appeals. Affirmed.

A. B. Treadwell, for appellant. W. F. Fitzgerald, Atty. Gen., for the People.

SEARLS, C. An information was lodged against John Shaughnessy, the defendant and appellant here, by the district attorney of the city and county of San Francisco, charging him with the crime of grand larceny, alleged to have been committed at said city and county on the 1st day of September, 1894, by the felonious stealing, taking, and carrying away $2,080, etc., the personal property of one Charles Anderson. He was arraigned, tried, convicted, and sentenced to serve a term of four years in the state prison at Folsom, Cal. From this judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, the defendant prosecutes this appeal.

A general outline of the case, as made by the prosecuting witness, Charles R. Anderson, may be stated thus: In July, 1894, said Anderson made the acquaintance of the defendant, Shaughnessy, who professed to be familiar with games and gaming, and who was without money, while Anderson had, or professed to have, some $4,000. The prosecuting witness had a wheel of fortune manufactured, and there were negotiations between the parties looking to a trip to South America for gambling purposes; Anderson to furnish the capital, and defendant the skill, the profits to be divided. About the last of August a third man, a stranger named Sampson, appeared on the scene, made the acquaintance of the parties, and professed to come from South Africa, where he had made money. Defendant professed to have seen Sampson's funds, and to know that he had large means. Thereupon the three agreed to form a copartnership, to go to South Africa, open a saloon, and engage in gambling. An agreement was prepared, and on September 1st the parties started down town to execute this agreement. On Grant avenue they stopped at a saloon, at the request of Sampson, to take a drink, where said Sampson was informed he had drawn a prize in a lottery. The parties then went to the lottery office, Anderson objecting, but is induced by the others to go upstairs, and to the room where the lottery is carried on. They there find a man in charge, who informs Sampson he has drawn $112, of which sum he pays him $110, and, after some discussion, gives him lottery tickets for the $2, with which he draws a prize of some $20, receives more tickets which he divides with Anderson, and they proceed to another drawing, whereupon Anderson is informed he has drawn an "approximate prize" of $500, but that to make it absolute some five other drawings were necessary, and in the meantime, and as the drawings progressed, the lottery company had a right to demand that cer tain assessments be put up, as evidence of good faith, all of which assessments were to be returned to the player at the end of the drawings, together with the prizes won, if any. Special drawings were then had, during which the banker called upon Anderson for deposits. He seems to have been in doubt, but was assured by defendant and Sampson that they understood the game, and that it was "square and fair," and was assured by defendant that "it is all right. You won that $500, and you better stick to it." Again he was assured that the money he put up was to be returned in any event, and "that he need not have any fears on that score," etc., whereupon, after going out repeatedly for more money, he placed in all upon the table some $2,080, only to be told that at the sixth and last drawing, with but a single chance against him, he had lost. The lottery man refused to return his money, and, upon his attempt to regain it, he was seized by defendant and Sampson, and held while the banker secured it, they giving as a reason for so doing that they had seen one man killed in such an attempt, and did not wish to witness another such tragedy. We have not attempted a description of the modus operandi of the game, but refer to the description as given by an expert in People v. Rose, 85 Cal. 378, 24 Pac. 817, as conveying a fairly accurate delineation of the method pursued in the case at bar. We need not pursue the subject by showing the devices used by defendant and Sampson to prevent Anderson from calling in the police, and to lull him into silence until Sampson and the so-called banker left the city. It is sufficient to say there was evidence sufficient, if credited by the jury, to show a conspiracy on the part of defendant, Sampson, and the manager of the lottery, to cheat and defraud the prosecuting witness of his money by what is familiarly known as the "bunco game."

The contention of counsel for appellant is that defendant is informed against for larceny, under section 484 of the Penal Code, and that the evidence, if it shows the defendant to be guilty of any crime (which is not admitted), proves it to be that of fraudulently obtaining money by device, trick, etc., by the use of cards, as defined by section 332 of the Penal Code, and, while it is "punished as in case of larceny of property of like value," is not made larceny by the Code, and that a conviction of larceny cannot be had for a violation of said section. The question is not whether defendant could have been indicted or informed against under section 332, and convicted upon the evidence presented, but whether, under an information charging grand larceny in the usual form, he was properly convicted. There is a class of cases in which a party may properly be charged and convicted of either larceny, or under section 332 of the Penal Code. People v. Frigerio, 107 Cal. 152, 153, 40 Pac. 107. As was said by the court in People v. Tomlinson, 102 Cal., at page 23, 36 Pac. 506: "Where one honestly receives the possession of goods upon a trust, and, after receiving them, fraudulently converts them to his own use, it is a case of embezzlement. If the possession has been obtained by fraud, trick, or device, and the owner of it intends to part with his title when he gives up the possession, the offense, if any, is obtaining money by false pretenses. But where the possession has been obtained through a trick or device, with the intent at the time the party receives it to convert the same to his own use, and the owner of the property parts merely with the possession, and not with the title, the offense is larceny;" citing People v. Raschke, 73 Cal. 378, 15 Pac. 13; People v. Johnson, 91 Cal. 265, 27 Pac. 663; People v. Laurence, 137 N. Y. 517, 33 N. E. 547; Com. v. Lannan, 153 Mass. 287, 26 N. E. 858. This rule in reference to larceny prevails alike in England and the United States. In Reg. v. Russett, 2 Q. B. 312, decided in 1892, Coleridge, C. J., said: "If the possession of the money or goods said to have been stolen has been parted with, but the owner did not intend to part with the property in them, so that that part of the transaction is incomplete, and the parting with the possession has been obtained by fraud, this is larceny." People v. Smallman, 55 Cal. 185, and People v. Rae, 66 Cal. 425, 6 Pac. 1, are to like effect. The evidence in the case at bar fully sustains the position that the prosecuting witness did not intend to part with his property in the money, and that it was obtained by the rankest kind of fraud. We repeat the testimony of Anderson: "All the money we would be called upon to put up during these drawings, at the end of the drawing, would be returned to us in full, in addition to any prizes we might win in the mean time,—would be paid over to us; but, if we failed to put up the money that the lottery company called for, that the company would not be called upon to pay, as that was all the percentage he had." At the end of the game, the witness says, "I saw that I was swindled, and jumped up and tried to grab for my money. Shaughnessy [defendant] and Sampson grabbed me by the arms, and pulled me back from the table, while the lottery man pocketed the coin." This testimony is without conflict, except that defendant testified that his motive was to prevent a difficulty.

Counsel also assigns as error the reading by the court below to the jury of the 332d section of the Penal Code. The court stated to the jury as follows: "The contention on the part of the people, as I understand it, is that this money, if taken at all from the prosecuting witness, was taken by fraud, trick, and device. The provision of our statute is as follows." The court then quoted section 332, Pen. Code. Had it stopped here, it would have been error, for the reason that the fraudulent obtaining of money by the methods specified in that section is not necessarily larceny; but we must read the instructions of the court together, and as a whole, and the court further instructed as follows: "The law is that when, by means of fraud or artifice, or any other kind of contrivance, the possession of property is fraudulently obtained from another, and the party obtaining this possession acquires it by means of this fraud and artifice, with the intention feloniously of stealing it when he gets possession of it, then the crime is larceny, provided the owner of the property, who has thus deposited and loses its possession, still remains the owner of the property, and has not parted with his title. One of the questions, therefore, for the jury to consider in this case, is whether there was a parting of the title on the part of the prosecuting witness. To state the rule again: If the possession of the money or goods said to have been stolen has been parted with, but the owner did not intend to part with the property in them, so that that part of the transaction is incomplete, and the parting with the possession has been obtained by fraud, that is larceny. Gentlemen of the jury: I again inform you that you are the exclusive judges of the facts, of what has been proven in the case, and of the credibility of the witnesses. It is for you to say—First, whether an offense has been committed; and, secondly, whether the defendant had any part in the commission of it." When thus taken together, and in connection with the other instructions given in the case, the law was properly interpreted by the court. The instruction of the court upon the question of a reasonable doubt and a moral certainty are not open to just criticism. Upon the whole record, the defendant appears to have been fairly tried and properly convicted, and the judgment and orders appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and orders appealed from are affirmed.

BUTLER v. ASHWORTH et al. (No. 15,984.)[1]

JUDGMENTS FOR SAME TORT—SATISFACTION—COSTS.

1. A landowner sued the city and the officers thereof, in separate actions, for damage to her land from a broken sewer, alleging, in the suit against the city, neglect to repair, and, in that against the officers, negligence in making the repair, but in both, as the efficient cause of damage, the same overflow of sewage from the broken sewer. Judgments for damages were had in both actions, that against the city being the greater. Held, that a satisfaction of the judgment against the city was a satisfaction of that against the officers, since they were for the same tort.

2. Where one has sued persons jointly liable for a tort in separate actions, and obtained judgments in both for damages and costs, one judgment being greater than the other, on satisfaction of the greater an order directing satisfaction of the lesser must include the amount awarded therein for costs; Code Civ. Proc. § 1023, providing that in such a case no costs can be allowed the plaintiff in more than one of the actions.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Charles W. Slack, Judge.

Action by Hannah Butler against Thomas Ashworth and others, city officers, for damage caused by the overflow of a sewer. There was a judgment for plaintiff for damages and costs, and defendants moved to have the judgment declared satisfied by payment of a judgment obtained against the city for the same injuries. From an order directing satisfaction as to damages, but not as to costs, all parties appeal. Reversed, with directions.

Geo. B. Merrill, for plaintiff. John H. Durst, Humphreys & Welch, John T. Humphreys, W. C. Burnett, and L. G. Burnett, for defendants.

VAN FLEET, J. Plaintiff brought an action against the city and county of San Francisco alone, to recover damages to her property caused by a broken sewer. The complaint was in two counts,—the first upon the breaking of the sewer, and the neglect to repair the same, and the second upon the negligent and improper manner in which the break was repaired; the proximate and efficient cause of damage assigned in each count being the inundation of plaintiff's premises by the overflow from the broken and choked-up sewer, and the damages alleged in each count being identical as to time, manner, and extent. In that action plaintiff recovered a judgment for $1,190 and her costs of suit. Within two years after the bringing of that action, and before the satisfaction of the judgment therein, plaintiff brought the present action against the defendant Ashworth, as superintendent of streets of said city, and the other defendants, as his deputies, wherein, in a single count, exactly similar in all substantial respects to the second count in the first-named action, she sought damages accruing to her property through the breaking of said sewer, the immediate cause of damage assigned being the same overflow as that alleged in the previous action, and the damages alleged being as to time, manner of infliction, and in amount the same. In this action plaintiff also recovered a judgment for the sum of $800 damages, and $394 costs of action. Subsequent to the recovery of this last judgment, on the 1st day of August, 1893, the judgment in the said action against the city and county was fully paid, satisfied, and discharged. Thereafter the defendants in the present action moved the court below for an order restraining and enjoining the plaintiff therein from issuing or levying execution under the judgment therein, and that said judgment be ordered satisfied of record, upon the ground that plaintiff, by the payment and satisfaction of the judgment in her said action against the city and county of San Francisco, had been fully compensated for the identical injuries herein counted upon, and was entitled to no further relief in the premises; that both of said actions were brought for the same cause of action, and against several parties, who might have been joined as defendants in one action, and who were all openly within the state at the time of the commencement of the said first-named action. At the hearing of this motion, the facts substantially as above recited were made to appear, and the court made an order granting the motion as to the $800 damages recovered, but denied it as to the sum of $394 costs. Both parties excepted to the order of the court, and they both appeal,—the plaintiff from so much of the order as deprives her of the $800 damages, and the defendants from that part denying their right to satisfaction of the judgment as to the costs.

[1] For modification of opinion, see 43 Pac. 386.

It is a just and well-established doctrine that there shall be but one satisfaction accorded for the same wrong. If one be injured by a tortious act, he is entitled to compensation for the injury suffered; and, if several persons are guilty in common of the tort, the injured one has his right of action for damages against each and all of the joint tort feasors, and may, at his election, sue them individually or together. But, when the injury arises from a single act, he cannot, by suing each wrongdoer alone, convert a joint into a several trespass, and thereby secure more than one compensation for the same injury. If he sue one alone, and is paid damages for the wrong, his remedy is at an end, and he is barred from further recovery against the others. 1 Suth. Dam. p. 214; Stone v. Dickinson, 5 Allen, 29; Urton v. Price, 57 Cal. 270; Tompkins v. Railway Co., 66 Cal. 163, 4 Pac. 1165.

But the plaintiff, in support of her appeal, claims that this wholesome rule has no application to this case, for the reason, as she contends, that the cause of action stated in her suit against the city and that stated against these defendants are not the same, and that the defendants in the two actions are in no sense joint tort feasors. That the act relied upon as producing the injury in the action against the city was the delay in making repairs to the sewer,—a mere omission; while these defendants are charged with an act of commission,—the making of repairs in such a negligent manner as to directly conduce to the injury complained of. While the second cause of action stated in the complaint against the city was the same as that relied upon in this case, it is claimed that the record shows that no issue was joined thereon, and that it was solely upon the first count that plaintiff recovered in that action. Assuming this last fact to be true, which the record, however, fails to show, it is, nevertheless, perfectly apparent that plaintiff's contention is more specious than sound, and that there exists in fact no real difference between the causes of action stated in the two actions. Formal differences there may be, but in matters of substance there are none. In both actions the inducing, proximate cause of damage and injury alleged is the invasion of her premises by the overflowing sewage, caused by the broken and choked condition of the sewer. That is the essential fact alleged alike in both counts of her action against the city, and in the complaint in this case. That is the fact constituting the gist of the action in both cases, and, as we have seen, it was one and the same overflow; in other words, the same fact which produced the alleged damage in both cases. The mere fact that the sewer broke produced no injury to plaintiff, nor did the fact that it was negligently repaired. It was in causing the sewage to overflow plaintiff's premises, and that alone, which induced the injury and gave plaintiff her cause of action. This was the fault of the city and the defendants, her officers, alike. Whether it was caused by their joint or several acts is immaterial. It would be subordinating substance to mere form to say that these two actions do not, under the circumstances, rest upon one and the same cause. This being so, and it appearing that plaintiff had been once compensated for the injury suffered, the court below was right in denying her a second award of damages for the same act.

But it follows, from this conclusion and the language of our statute, that the order of the court did not go far enough. Section 1023 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "When several actions are brought * * * for the same cause of action against several parties who might have been joined as defendants in the same action, no costs can be allowed to the plaintiff in more than one of such actions, which may be at his election, if the parties proceeded against in the other actions were at the commencement of the previous action openly within this state, but the disbursements of the plaintiff must be allowed him in each action." The facts bring this case strictly within that provision, and made it the duty of the court below to include the costs in its order directing satisfaction of the judgment.

The order appealed from is reversed, and the court below is directed to modify its order so as to direct and require the satisfaction of the judgment in full, including both damages and costs.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; HARRISON, J.

PEOPLE v. KNIGHT. (Cr. 42.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1895.)

RAPE—WITNESS—CROSS-EXAMINATION—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. On a prosecution for rape, a physician who testified for the prosecution that penetration would produce the conditions of the parts discovered by his examination could be cross-examined as to whether all such conditions could not have been caused by other things, though he had stated that a certain instrument would cause certain of the conditions.

2. Where, on a prosecution for rape, prosecutrix testified that she was 7 years of age when she came to the state, and that at the time of trial she was 10 years of age, and on cross-examination stated that she did not know when she came to the state, she could be asked by defendant what she gave as her age to her school teacher after coming to the state.

3. Where, on a prosecution for rape of one who lived with defendant and his wife, prosecutrix testified that the reason she did not complain until several days after the offense was committed was because defendant had made her afraid of him by throwing things at her and scolding her, questions put to her by defendant to determine when this treatment commenced should have been allowed.

4. In such case she could be cross-examined as to whether defendant ever said anything to her about having intercourse with her.

5. In such a case, prosecutrix having testified that the wife went out and left her alone in the house with defendant, and that she was afraid of him, she could be asked on cross-examination why she did not go out with the wife.

6. On a trial for rape, under an indictment alleging several acts of intercourse with one who lived with defendant and his wife, after prosecutrix testified that she was compelled by threats of the wife to tell her of the offenses, and that the wife suspected it from finding her trembling, she could be cross-examined as to whether the wife saw her trembling after the first offense, or after the last, or how many times she saw her thus.

7. On a trial for rape of one who lived with defendant and his wife, where a physician who examined prosecutrix 12 days after the offense, testified that the hymen was entirely absorbed, and that, from indications, it might have disappeared long before, and prosecutrix testified that her only excuse for not making immediate complaint was her fear of defendant, prosecutrix could be cross-examined as to whether any person had intercourse with her before defendant,—especially where defendant claimed that the charge was concocted by his wife.

8. Where, on a prosecution for rape, defendant claims that the charge was concocted by his wife, it is error to exclude circumstantial evidence to support that claim.

9. On a prosecution for rape of a 10 year old child, an instruction asked by defendant on the question whether the child made any outcry at the time of the commission of the crime is properly refused.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Kern county; A. R. Conklin, Judge.

Jesus Knight was convicted of rape, and from the judgment and an order denying him a new trial he appeals. Reversed.

E. Rousseau and E. J. Emmons, for appellant. W. F. Fitzgerald, Atty. Gen., for the People.

HAYNES, C. Appellant was convicted of the crime of rape, and sentenced to imprisonment at Folsom for the term of 19 years; and he now appeals from said judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The offense is charged to have been committed upon Felis Aldama, a girl of 10 years of age, the granddaughter of appellant's wife. Appellant complains of numerous rulings of the court below upon questions of evidence, and of alleged errors in instructions given and refused, and also specifies as a ground of reversal that the evidence was not sufficient to justify the verdict.

Drs. Rogers and Taggart made a physical examination of the prosecuting witness some time after the last alleged outrage, but how long after is uncertain. The examination was made on September 7, 1894. Trinidad Grijalba, the officer who arrested defendant, and who appears to have made the complaint, first heard of it, as he "guesses," on September 2d, but how long before that date the last of the four alleged acts of intercourse occurred is not precisely fixed. The girl testified upon the trial that she told her grandmother "about a week after the last time," but how long a time elapsed after she told her grandmother before it was communicated to Grijalba nowhere appears. Assuming that it was communicated to Grijalba at once, at least 12 days elapsed after the last of the four occurrences before the examination was made by the physicians. The physicians testified to certain conditions of the parts as they found them at the time of the examination, and both concluded that the producing cause must have occurred some time before the examination, but how long they could not tell. Dr. Rogers was asked by the district attorney whether penetration by a man would cause such bruises and inflammation as he found, and he answered, "Yes; on a child of that age." He was afterwards cross-examined by counsel for defendant, and that was followed by a redirect examination by the district attorney. Counsel for defendant, upon recross-examination, asked the following question: "All of the spots, and the disappearance of the hymen, and all the irritation you saw there, could have been made by various other things, could it not?" This question was objected to as being incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and not proper cross-examination. The Court: "I think that question has been answered once. Let the objection be sustained. Gentlemen, you cannot cross-fire on a witness this way." It is true, some questions had been put to the witness partly covering the points of the above interrogatory. One went only to the red spots testified to by the doctor, and another to the use of a particular instrument,—the finger; and, as to the latter, the doctor replied that it would not cause the injuries. The question here, however, covered all the injuries and appearances, and embraced every instrument or means of producing the injuries, aside from that which the prosecution sought to prove by the witness had caused it. The objection to the question should have been overruled.

Felis Aldama, the prosecuting witness, testified that she was born in Lower California, where her parents still reside; that she was 7 years old when she left there; that since she came to this state she had lived part of the time with an aunt, and the remainder of the time with her grandmother; and that she was 10 years old. None of these facts, except her age, and that she lived with her grandmother, were brought out on the examination in chief, which was exceedingly brief, and which gave no hint of the time when the occurrences to which she testified took place,—not even the year in which they occurred. Under these circumstances, counsel for the defendant asked when she first came to Sumner, but she was unable to tell. She was then asked as to whether she went to school, and to whom she went, and, having named a teacher, was asked the following question: "What age did you give her as your age when you went to school,—when she took your age down?" An objection to this question was improperly sustained by the court.

The witness gave as a reason for not telling her grandmother what had occurred that she was afraid; that she was afraid of him before these occurrences; that "he was always scaring me and my grandma, and making us afraid"; "he was always scolding us and throwing things at us." She was then asked, "When did he first commence throwing things at you?" and to this question an objection was sustained. Several other questions, of a similar character, put for the purpose of ascertaining when the defendant's bad treatment commenced, were also excluded. "Q. Did he ever talk to you about having anything to do with you?" An objection to this question was also sustained. Again, the witness testified that her grandmother went out, and left her in the house with the defendant, and that she was afraid to stay with him, and was then asked, "Why did not you go out with your grandmother?" An objection to this question, and to others of similar import, were also sustained. She further testified, upon cross-examination, that she told nobody but her grandmother. "Q. Did she say anything to you that made you tell it? A. Yes, sir. Q. What did she say? A. She told me she mistrusted something, and why didn't I tell her, and she wanted me to tell her. Q. Did she threaten you? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did she take out a knife, and threaten to kill you with it? A. Yes, sir. Q. What did you do that made her think there was something wrong? A. Because she found me trembling in the kitchen. Q. Did she see you trembling that way after the first time?" To this question it was objected that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and calls for a conclusion. The Court: "It calls for a fact, but, whether the fact has any bearing on the case or not, let the objection be sustained. We must get through with this case sometime." Objections were also sustained to each of the following questions: "Did she ask you whether or not there was anything the matter with you after the first time? Did she discover there was anything the matter with you until after the fourth time? How many times did she say she found you trembling?" We think all these questions were proper, and that the rulings of the court were erroneous, and unreasonably restricted the cross-examination of the witness. An objection was also sustained to the following question to this witness upon cross-examination, "Had anybody else done so before?" It is true that, if the defendant had committed the act charged, the fact that some one else had done so before would be wholly immaterial. But Dr. Rogers had testified to certain conditions of her person, and, among other things, he was asked the following question: "In regard to no appearance of the hymen, would that indicate recent rupture, or a long time before? A. It was entirely absorbed, and that might have disappeared before. The indications are that it would have disappeared before. The margins of the rupture had entirely disappeared." So far as can be determined from the testimony of the girl, the alleged acts of intercourse with the defendant followed each other with intervals of only a few days; and, if viewed solely in the light of the evidence of the doctor, it is by no means clear that the question was either immaterial or irrelevant. Besides, she testified that she did not tell her grandmother because of her fear of the defendant; and if, in reply to the question, she had admitted that the defendant was not the first person who had intercourse with her, and she had not disclosed the fact, it would go far towards discrediting her statement of the reason for not informing her grandmother of defendant's conduct. Or if, on the other hand, she had disclosed such prior assault by another, and if the claim of defendant's counsel that this prosecution was incited by the grandmother of the child without cause, the condition of the child as found by the doctor, though produced by another, could readily be used to fasten the crime upon the defendant. In view of these facts which may have existed, and not because the prior crime of another absolved the defendant, if he were in fact guilty, the objection should have been overruled.

In regard to defendant's effort to introduce evidence that the charge against him was concocted by his wife, the grandmother of the child, the court and counsel seem to have misunderstood each other from the beginning to the end. Under some of the propositions of counsel, the evidence should have been admitted, and, under some of the statements of the court, it might have been admitted. The colloquy is too long to be stated here, but one or two paragraphs may be stated: At folio 142 counsel said: "We want to prove that the grandmother has concocted the story, and has trained this child to swear to it. We don't suppose we can prove all those things, but, from what we think we can prove, we want the jury to infer the rest." We suppose that counsel meant that he could prove certain circumstances, from which the main fact must or might be inferred. In other words, he confessed his inability to prove by direct evidence the ultimate fact, but that he expected to be able to prove it by circumstantial evidence. The fact itself being material and relevant, any evidence, whether direct or circumstantial, tending to prove the ultimate fact, was competent. In one of the statements of the court, reference was made to the question of a conspiracy between the grandmother and the child, but a subsequent statement shows that the court did not use the word "conspiracy" in the sense that the child aided in concocting the story. The court said: "If you state to the court that your intention is to connect this child with it, either as an active participant, or an instrument in the hands of the grandmother, I will permit that question. Mr. Rousseau: I will make this statement about it, that we cannot prove the actual training, but we can prove it from the circumstances only. The Court: Do you propose to show to this jury that the grandmother has educated the child up to this story? Mr. Rousseau: Yes; I cannot show the actual training. The Court: Then it is an inference you want the jury to draw? Mr. Rousseau: Yes; it is an inference. The Court: Let the objection be sustained." Other parts of the colloquy, which covers several pages of the transcript, show that, when counsel said he could not show the "actual training," he meant that he did not have direct or primary evidence of the fact. One step in the proposed evidence was the alleged jealousy of the grandmother, the wife of the defendant. What other facts counsel expected to show, tending to sustain the alleged training of the child, does not appear. His offer, however, embraced in his statements above quoted was proper, and he should have been allowed to introduce any competent evidence, whether direct or circumstantial, which tended to prove the ultimate facts stated.

In relation to the instruction requested by defendant touching the point whether the girl made any outcry, it need only be said that, being under the legal age of consent, her consent to the act could not change its character. If it were shown that she did cry out, it would, of course, tend to corroborate her story, while the failure to do so would not necessarily show that the defendant was not guilty, since her silence would, in the absence of other circumstances, only tend to show her consent. It may be said, however, that her condition, as testified to by the physicians, would render it highly improbable that these acts could have been perpetrated without producing such pain as to cause her to cry out, unless prevented by threats or other means; and, while such circumstances would furnish proper grounds for an argument to the jury, it is not perceived that any proposition of law is involved, making an instruction directly upon the point necessary, while all that could be properly said was covered by the more general instructions given.

Questions touching the affidavits presented in support of the motion for new trial need not be noticed, in view of the conclusion we have reached. The judgment and order appealed from should be reversed, and a new trial granted.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; SEARLES, C.

SEHORN v. WILLIAMS, County Auditor.

(No. 18,356.)

COUNTIES — CLAIMS — DUTY OF AUDITOR TO DRAW WARRANT.

1. County Government Act (St. 1891, p. 322), § 113, requires a county auditor to draw warrants for claims "legally examined, allowed and ordered paid by the board of supervisors," when he has received, as required by section 20, subd. 4, a properly certified list of the claims allowed. Section 45 requires warrants drawn by order of the county supervisors to specify the liabilities for which they were drawn, and when they accrued. Held, that it is the duty of a county auditor to draw his warrant for a claim on a certificate of supervisors giving the name of the claimant and amount of the claim, and stating that it has been duly allowed, though it does not state what the claim was for, nor when it accrued.

2. County Government Act (St. 1891, p. 311), § 41, requiring a claim against a county to be itemized, "giving names, dates and particular services rendered," before it can be allowed, is directed to the board of supervisors alone, and does not control the county auditor in drawing warrants for claims allowed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Glenn county; Seth Millington, Judge.

Application by W. A. Sehorn against one Williams, county auditor, for writ of mandamus to compel defendant to draw a warrant for a claim duly allowed against the county. From a judgment allowing the writ, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Charles L. Donohue, for appellant. Ben. F. Geis, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff presented to the board of supervisors of the county of Glenn a claim for $60, properly itemized and verified, for services rendered by him under a contract with the county for carrying meals to the county jail; and the same was allowed by the board at its session May 10, 1893, and ordered paid out of the common fund, and the auditor was directed to draw his warrant for said sum in favor of the plaintiff. Upon a demand by the plaintiff for said warrant, the defendant, who was the auditor of the county, refused to draw the same, and thereupon the plaintiff instituted this proceeding for a mandate compelling him to draw the warrant.

Section 113 of the county government act (St. 1891, p. 322) provides: "The auditor must draw warrants on the county treasurer in favor of all persons entitled thereto, in payment of all claims and demands chargeable against the county, which have been legally examined, allowed and ordered paid by the board of supervisors; provided, however, that the auditor must not draw a warrant on the county treasurer in favor of any person until said auditor shall have received from the clerk of the board of supervisors the certified list mentioned in subdivision 4, section 20, of this act." The "certified list" herein referred to, and which the clerk is required to deliver to the auditor, is a list "of all claims allowed and orders made for the payment of money, giving the name of the claimant or payee named in the claim or order, the amount and date of each claim or order, and the date of the allowance thereof." In the present case the clerk delivered to the auditor a list in which was given the name of the plaintiff and the amount allowed, in the following form:

Name of Claimant.	What for.	Amt. of Claim.	Amt. Allowed.
Sehorn, W. A.			$60.

Under the heading "What for" there had been written "Jailer," and under the heading "Amount of Claim" there had been written "$60." But before the list was delivered to the auditor these items had been erased, by drawing lines through the words.

It is contended on behalf of the auditor that he was not required to draw his warrant, for the reason that the list delivered to him by the clerk does not specify the liability for which the claim was allowed by the board of supervisors. The statute does not, however, require the clerk, in the list which he delivers to the auditor, to specify the liability for which the claim was allowed. The auditor is required by section 113 to draw his warrant in favor of every person whose claim "has been legally examined, allowed and ordered paid by the board of supervisors." If he has received from the clerk a properly certified list of the claims allowed, he must, upon demand, draw his warrant in favor of the claimant whose name is found therein. The provision in section 41 of the act, requiring the claim to be itemized, "giving names, dates and particular services rendered," before it can be allowed, is directed to the board of supervisors alone, and there is no provision in the county government act giving to the auditor a revisory control over their action. McFarland v. McCowen, 98 Cal. 329, 33 Pac. 113. The provisions of section 45 and section 114 do not justify the auditor in withholding the warrant merely because the clerk shall not have certified the items of the claim, or the liability for which it was allowed. These sections are as follows:

"Sec. 45. Warrants drawn by order of the supervisors on the county treasury for the current expenses during each year must specify the liability for which they are drawn, and when they accrued, and must be paid in the order of presentation to the treasurer."

"Sec. 114. All warrants must distinctly specify the liability for which they are drawn, and when it accrued."

The statute does not prescribe the mode in which the auditor shall ascertain the facts which will enable him to comply with the provisions of these sections relating to the form of the warrant; and, in the absence of any provision therefor, it is his duty to take such steps, or obtain such information, as will enable him to properly comply with the sections. In the present case he testified that after he had received the certified list, and before the plaintiff demanded his warrant,—being in doubt, by reason of the erasures in the list,—he ascertained by inquiry from the county clerk that the plaintiff's claim, as it appears on that list, had been allowed and ordered paid by the board of supervisors. Upon receiving this information, his duty to draw the warrant was clear. The judgment and order are affirmed.

Ex parte NICHOLS. (Cr. 81.)

REFORMATORY SCHOOL—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

1. Act March 11, 1889 (St. 1889, pp. 100–106), entitled "An act to establish a school of industry," and providing for the detention therein of minors guilty of criminal offenses until majority, which may be a longer period than the term of imprisonment in the county jail provided for such offenses, is not unconstitutional as providing unequal punishments for the same offense.

2. The fact that Act March 11, 1889 (St. 1889, pp. 100–106), creating the Preston school as a reformatory for minors guilty of criminal offenses, provides for the transfer thereto from any state prison of minors under 18 years of age on recommendation of the prison directors and the approval of the governor, and gives such minors, when discharged from the school, the "benefits and immunities" of its other inmates, does not make the school a state's prison.

In bank. Ex parte proceedings by William Nichols for discharge on writ of habeas corpus from a reformatory. Writ dismissed.

N. S. Wirt, for petitioner. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. The petitioner, William Nichols, asks, on a writ of habeas corpus, to be discharged from the custody of Carl Bank, superintendent of the Preston School of Industry, situated in Amador county. He was convicted in a justice's court of petit larceny, and, being under the age of 18 years, the justice adjudged that he was a fit subject for commitment to said school, suspended judgment, and committed him to said school until he should be 21 years old, unless sooner legally discharged. The commitment was approved by the superior judge of the county, as provided by section 16 of an act entitled "An act to establish a school of industry," approved March 11, 1889, under which act the proceedings here complained of were had. St. 1889, pp. 100–106. Petitioner assails the constitutionality of said statute mainly upon the grounds that it is unequal in its operation, because under it an adult can be punished for petit larceny by imprisonment in the county jail for only six months, while a minor may, for the same offense, be sent to said school for a much longer period; that a justice's court has no jurisdiction, in such a case, to impose imprisonment for more than six months; that the statute is a special law regulating jurisdiction of a justice's court, etc. These and similar objections to the statute are answered against petitioner's contention by the case of Ex parte Liddell, 93 Cal. 633, 29 Pac. 251. That case involved the validity of the act by which the Whittier Reform School was established (St. 1889, p. 111), and its provisions, so far as these questions are concerned, are similar to those of the statute here under review. In answer to similar objections there made, this court, in bank, through Patterson, J., said: "There can be no question as to the power of the legislature to provide for the detention and education of juvenile offenders, as it has done in this act; and the provisions of the act are not obnoxious to the criticism that it prescribes unjust or unequal penalties. It is true, the term of detention at the reform school may be made greater by the judgment of the court than the term of the imprisonment in the county jail or in the state prison for the same offense would be; but it cannot be said that the punishment inflicted is greater than could be put upon an adult for the same offense. The object of the act is not punishment, but reformation, discipline, and education. Pen. Code, § 12. While detained for a longer period, perhaps, than he would be if sent to state prison or the county jail, the conditions surrounding the child are vastly different. He is given the opportunity and instruction to learn a trade, and qualify himself for the duties of citizenship, so that at the end of his term he will go out prepared to take care of himself and those dependent upon him, without the odium which attaches to an ex-convict. There is no doubt of the power of the state to make and enforce provisions for the compulsory education of all children within the state; and it is equally clear that the state may arrest the downward tendency of those who have offended against its laws, and manifested a disposition to follow a criminal career, by placing them in an institution where they will receive the care, education, and discipline necessary to prepare them for honorable citizenship." It is contended that under a certain provision concerning the Preston school which is not contained in the act creating the Whittier school, sending the petitioner to the latter school was in fact sending him to a state prison, and thus making a felon of him, which the justice's court had no jurisdiction to do. But this contention cannot be maintained. The provision in question is that any boy under 18 years old who is serving a sentence in any state prison, and who shall be deemed a fit subject for training in said school, may, upon the recommendation of the board of prison directors, and the approval of the governor, be transferred to said school; and that said boy, "when honorably discharged from said school, as hereinbefore provided, shall be entitled to such benefits and immunities as are provided for the other inmates of the institution." Taking a boy out of the state prison and putting him in the school, with the "benefits and immunities" of its other inmates, is certainly not turning the reform school into a state prison. It is, in fact, a commutation by the governor; and the boys thus sent to the school, if honorably discharged, are "released from all penalties and disabilities resulting from the offenses or crimes for which they are committed." The petitioner is remanded, and the writ dismissed.

VISALIA & T. R. CO. v. HYDE. (Sac. 52.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1895.)

CORPORATE STOCK—ASSESSMENTS—TRANSFER—LIABILITY OF TRANSFERROR—ACTION ON ASSESSMENT—DEFENSES.

1. After a transfer of corporate stock has been duly made on the books of the company, the transferee becomes liable on assessments.

2. An assignment of corporate stock after the levy of an assessment on the same will not relieve the assignor from liability on the assessment, where no formal transfer was made on the books of the company.

3. Where a corporation is authorized to levy assessments to meet its outstanding obligations, a stockholder cannot defend an action on an assessment on the ground that the obligation was created before he became a stockholder.

4. It is no defense to an action against a stockholder by a corporation authorized to levy assessments to meet outstanding obligations, and whose directors were given discretion to require assessments or to resort to the corporate property in payment of such obligations, that the corporation had sufficient property to meet the obligations forming the basis of the assessment.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; Wheaton A. Gray, Judge.

Action by Visalia & Tulare Railroad Company against R. E. Hyde on an assessment of corporate stock. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Lamberson & Middlecoff, for appellant. Hannah & Miller, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff is a corporation under the laws of this state, for the purpose of constructing and operating a railroad between the city of Visalia and the town of Tulare, and was incorporated November 1, 1887, with a capital stock of $100,000, divided into 1,000 shares of $100 each, all of which was subscribed for, and upon each share of which stock there had been paid into the corporation the sum of $50. On March 28, 1894, the directors of the corporation levied an assessment of $10 upon each share of the capital stock, and, in the order levying the assessment, fixed a day on which the stock would be delinquent, and also a day for the sale of the delinquent stock. After the day specified for declaring the stock delinquent, and before the sale, the board of directors, by an order in that behalf, elected to waive and abandon further proceedings for the collection of the assessment by a sale of the stock, and to proceed by action to recover the amount that should be delinquent. November 29, 1890, the defendant became the owner of 100 shares of the capital stock, which had been originally subscribed for by Thomas Creighton, and on that day a certificate for said 100 shares of stock was issued to and received by him, and he was then registered on the books of the plaintiff as the owner thereof, and has since remained registered as such stockholder. The present action is brought to recover from him the amount of the assessment, by virtue of the provisions of section 349 of the Civil Code. The answer to the complaint does not question the regularity of the steps taken in levying the assessment, or in the election of the plaintiff to proceed by action to collect the same, or that the plaintiff was indebted in an amount greater than the amount of the assessment, but sets up as special defenses that, at the time the plaintiff incurred the liability for which he alleges the assessment was levied, he was not a stockholder; that, prior to the commencement of the action, he had sold, indorsed, and delivered the shares of stock to another person; and that, at the time of levying the assessment, the plaintiff had sufficient property with which to meet all of its obligations, without levying an assessment therefor. The plaintiff had judgment, and the defendant has appealed.

1. By purchasing the stock from Creighton, and causing a transfer thereof to himself to be entered upon the books of the plaintiff, the defendant was substituted for Creighton as a stockholder of the corporation, and thereafter held the shares on the same conditions and subject to the same obligations as did Creighton prior to the transfer. Mor. Corp. § 159; Cook, Stock & S. § 256; Hall v. Insurance Co., 5 Gill. 484; Railroad Co. v. Boorman, 12 Conn. 530; Upton v. Hansbrough, 3 Biss. 417, Fed. Cas. No. 16,801; Mining Co. v. Bagley, 14 Mich. 501. In the case last cited, the court say: "The very essence of a corporation consists in its corporate succession, which in stock companies is kept up by the substitution of one owner for another in the proprietorship of shares. If the original stockholders stand under different relations to the company from their assigns, the corporation itself loses some of its attributes by the substitution, or else becomes introduced into more complicated relations. It seems to be an unavoidable conclusion that every liability which attaches to a stockholder, as such, is inseparable from the ownership of the stock." And in Railroad Co. v. Boorman, supra, it is said: "The reasons for subjecting the original subscribers to personal liability apply with equal force to those who become stockholders by purchase. The relation of stockholder and company exists. A privity between them is created." The defendant did not divest himself of this liability by an assignment of the certificate to another subsequent to the levy of the assessment, especially as his assignee did not procure a transfer to himself upon the books of the corporation. For the purpose of ascertaining those who are liable to it for the amount of the assessment, the corporation can look only to the list of stockholders as their names are registered upon its books.

2. The liability of the defendant to the creditors of the corporation for his proportion of their claims against the corporation, and his liability to the corporation for the unpaid portion of his subscription, are entirely distinct, and rest upon different principles. The stockholder is liable to a creditor upon only such liabilities as were incurred during the time he has been a stockholder, but he is liable to the corporation for the unpaid portion of his subscription, whenever the corporation may choose to call it in; and while the creditor may enforce his claim against the corporation, and seek its entire satisfaction out of the corporate property, he can recover from the stockholder only his proportionate part of the claim. The corporation is authorized to levy an assessment for the express purpose of providing a fund with which to meet its outstanding obligations, and it is no defense to the assessment that the defendant was not a stockholder at the time the obligation was contracted or the liability incurred. Nor is it any defense that the corporation has sufficient property with which to meet its obligations. The liability of the defendant rests upon his contract of subscription, and the propriety or necessity of requiring him to pay it for the purpose of meeting the corporate liabilities, rather than to resort to property in the hands of the corporation with which to meet such liabilities, has been placed in the discretion of the board of directors. The judgment and order are affirmed.

BROWN v. CAMPBELL et al. (No. 15,937.)[1]

COURTS — CONFLICTING JUDGMENTS OF SUPERIOR COURT — PLEADING — RES JUDICATA — ANOTHER ACTION PENDING—PRACTICE—INTERPLEADER.

1. The rule that the judgment of the court first acquiring jurisdiction will prevail over that of another court subsequently acquiring jurisdiction does not apply to judgments rendered by different departments of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, as all departments of such court, combined, form but one court.

2. The defense of former adjudication, to be available, must be pleaded.

3. The defense of the pendency of another action, to be available, must be pleaded.

4. Where a judgment is ineffectual to support a plea of res judicata, because the time for appeal therefrom has not expired, one pleading such judgment in bar, instead of pleading the pendency of the action in abatement until the judgment should become final, so that it could be set up by supplemental answer in bar, cannot have the second judgment set aside, or its enforcement perpetually stayed.

5. A stakeholder in a suit by a person claiming the money, after withdrawing his plea of interpleader, and defending against the claim of another person, made a party at his request, cannot complain that the judgment against him in favor of such other person may subject him to double liability.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; William T. Wallace, Judge.

Action by A. M. Brown against H. C. Campbell and others. One Priest was made a party on motion of defendants. From an order refusing to set aside a judgment for Priest, or to grant a perpetual stay of execution thereon, plaintiff and the other defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Jas. A. Waymire, H. C. Campbell, and W. T. Baggett (R. Percy Wright, of counsel), for appellants. T. Z. Blakeman, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The case of Priest v. Brown et al., in which Joseph Brown and A. M. Brown were two of the defendants, was commenced in the superior court for the city and county of San Francisco April 13, 1887, and was tried in department 1 of that court, before the honorable T. K. Wilson, and judgment was rendered by him in favor of the defendants, and was entered November 24, 1888. The action was brought for the purpose of subjecting to sale, under the direction of the court, certain real property alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed by Joseph Brown to A. M. Brown, and the application of a portion of the proceeds thereof to the payment of a claim of the plaintiff against Joseph Brown. While that action was pending, Henry C. Campbell and Thaddeus B. Kent, two of the appellants herein, who held the legal title to the property, sold the same, and A. M. Brown commenced the present action, in the same court, to recover from them $2,549.50, the amount of certain surplus moneys in their hands, arising from the sale of said property. This cause was assigned to department 6 of that court. In their answer to the complaint, Campbell and Kent alleged that Priest claimed the money, and asked that he be made a party defendant, and that thereupon they be permitted to pay the money into court, and be discharged of all liability therefor. Priest was thereupon made a party defendant to the action, and filed an answer to the complaint of the plaintiff, and also a cross complaint, in each of which he alleged substantially the same facts as were alleged in the complaint in the action of Priest v. Brown. Thereafter the plaintiff united with the defendants Campbell and Kent in a motion to strike out this answer. This motion was granted May 9, 1889, and the case was afterwards tried before the honorable W. T. Wallace, who rendered judgment in favor of Priest, which was entered February 25, 1892. An appeal to this court was taken from each of these judgments, and the two appeals were heard together, and each of the judgments was affirmed December 30, 1893. Priest v. Brown, 100 Cal. 626, 35 Pac. 323; Brown v. Campbell, 100 Cal. 635, 35 Pac. 433. Upon filing the remittitur in the superior court in the present case, the appellants moved that court for an order setting aside the judgment, or granting a perpetual stay of execution thereon. In support of the motion they presented to the court the records and papers on file in the two actions, and urged as the grounds of the motion that inasmuch as in the case of Priest v. Brown judgment had been rendered in favor of A. M. Brown, the plaintiff herein, upon the same cause of action that is presented in this suit, and had been affirmed by the court, that judgment had become the final determination of the rights of the parties, and was not impaired by the subsequent judgment rendered in this action. The motion was denied, and the present appeal is from that order.

The rule invoked by the appellants, that the judgment of that court which first acquires jurisdiction of the subject-matter of a cause of action and of the parties thereto will prevail over the judgment of another court whose jurisdiction was subsequently acquired, has no application to the present case. That rule rests upon comity and the necessity of avoiding a conflict in the execution of judgments rendered by independent courts, either of distinct or concurrent jurisdiction. But the rule itself, as well as the reason for its exercise, has no existence in a case where the actions are brought in the same court, and the judgments are rendered by the same tribunal. There is but one superior court in the city and county of San Francisco, and all of the actions brought in that court are within the same jurisdiction. White v. Superior Court (Cal.; S. F. 118) 42 Pac. 480. The assignment of causes to different departments does not take place until after the court has acquired jurisdiction of the cause, and is made in order to expedite the business of the court, by apportioning them to the several judges for trial and judgment. The jurisdiction over a cause, after it has been assigned by the presiding judge to one of the other judges for trial, remains in the same court, and neither the judge to whom it has been assigned, nor the department over which he presides, has any jurisdiction over the cause distinct from that of the court in which the action is pending. The entire procedure, from the commencement of the action to the execution of the judgment, is in one court; and there is no opportunity for conflict of jurisdiction, either in pronouncing a judgment or in its execution after it has been rendered. When, therefore, a suit is commenced in that court upon a cause of action which is then pending before it in another suit, or which has already been carried into judgment, the procedure to be observed is the same as if the two actions were in a court with but a single judge, before whom all causes therein were to be tried. If the defense of a pending suit, or the estoppel of a former judgment, is not pleaded when such defense is available to the defendant, he cannot, after an adverse judgment, avail himself of this defense, which he neglected to plead when he had an opportunity to do so, any more than he could avail himself of any other defense which he had omitted to plead.

When the present action was commenced, the action of Priest v. Brown was pending in the same court, and had not been tried. The main issue in that action was whether Priest had the right to subject the lands described in the complaint to the payment of his claim against Joseph Brown. After Priest had been made a defendant in the present action, at the instance of the appellants Campbell and Kent, he filed an answer, in which he pleaded the pendency of the former action, and the identity of the issues and parties thereto with those in the present action. There was thus presented to the court for determination the precise question involved in this motion; and if this issue had been tried, and found against the plaintiff, the judgment of the court would have been that the action should abate, and the rights of the parties would have been determined by the judgment in the former action. Instead of taking this course, the appellants asked the court, and the court at their instance struck this defense from the answer of Priest, and the cause was tried upon the same issues as were presented in the former action, without any objection to a re-examination of them by the court. It is too clear for argument that the appellants cannot, after an adverse judgment upon issues of their own selection and framing, interpose a defense to the enforcement of that judgment which they had an opportunity to present for the purpose of defeating the respondent's claim, but which they industriously sought not to have presented to the court for its judgment thereon.

When this cause was here upon the former appeal, the appellants urged the reversal of the judgment because of the prior judgment in the case of Priest v. Brown, which they had pleaded as a bar to any further litigation of the issue then determined. In holding that this plea of a former judgment was unavailing, for the reason that the judgment had not become final, the court said: "But while the judgment in Priest v. Brown was not, for the reason stated, a bar to the cause of action alleged in the cross complaint, still the pendency of that action would have been a good ground for the continuance of this until the final determination of the former action, or would have been a sufficient basis for an order dismissing the present action upon motion of the plaintiff, notwithstanding the affirmative relief demanded by the defendant Priest in his cross complaint, and the refusal of the court to have granted either of such motions, would perhaps have been erroneous; but no such motion was made by the plaintiff, and the trial proceeded without objection, the plaintiff still insisting upon the judgment in Priest v. Brown as an estoppel, and as ground for a judgment in his favor." In Harris v. Barnhart, 97 Cal. 546, 32 Pac. 589, it was said: "Where a judgment is ineffectual as evidence in a plea of former adjudication until the time for an appeal therefrom has expired, the true course of a defendant in such a case would be to plead the pendency of the former action in abatement, until the judgment therein became final, when a supplemental answer averring the proper facts in bar of the action would be in order."

The appellants Campbell and Kent urge that, as they are mere stakeholders, they are liable to suffer by reason of the different judgments in the two causes. If, however, they had retained their position as stakeholders, and had complied with the offer made in their original answer to the complaint of the plaintiff by paying the money into court, they would then have been entitled to a judgment discharging them from further liability therefor; but, after Priest had been brought into the action at their instance, they abandoned their position as stakeholders, and defended against his right to receive any of the money. Having thus assumed a position antagonistic to Priest, they cannot claim any of the consideration due to a stakeholder, but are in the position of any other litigant who has failed to sustain his defense. The order is affirmed.

KEENER v. EAGLE LAKE LAND & IRRIGATION CO. (Sac. 13.)[1]

SUMMONS—SERVICE ON CORPORATION—AFFIDAVIT—MECHANIC'S LIEN—COMPLAINT.

1. An affidavit of service of summons reciting that the summons was served "personally" on the managing agent of the "above-named defendant" corporation, instead of on the corporation, sufficiently shows service on the corporation, the agent not being a party defendant.

2. Act March 31, 1891 (St. 1891, p. 195), requires corporations to pay laborers and mechanics wages due weekly or monthly, on such day in each week or month as shall be selected by the corporation; and section 2 gives mechanics and laborers a lien for wages so due and not paid. Held, that a complaint in an action to establish a lien under section 2 must show that the wages for which the lien is sought to be enforced were payable weekly or monthly.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Lassen county; W. T. Masten, Judge.

Action by one Keener against the Eagle Lake Land & Irrigation Company on a claim for services, and to have the same declared a lien. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed in part, and in part reversed.

Goodwin & Goodwin, for appellant. Shinn & Shinn and F. A. Kelley, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff, under an employment by the defendant, performed labor upon certain reservoirs, dams, and ditches belonging to the defendant at different times between May 27, 1892, and June 23, 1893, amounting in the aggregate, according to the agreed rate of compensation, to the sum of $868.75, of which he was paid the sum of $378.82. He brings this action to recover from the defendant the balance thereof, viz. $488.93, and to have that sum adjudged to be a lien upon the property of the defendant. Judgment by default was rendered in his favor, and the defendant has appealed.

1. The appellant urges that the judgment is void by reason of there being no proof of service of the summons upon the defendant. The service was made by a private individual, and in his affidavit he states that "he personally served the same upon J. H. Elledge, the managing agent of the above-named defendant, Eagle Lake Land and Irrigation Company, a corporation, on the 13th day of January, 1894, by delivering to said J. H. Elledge, the said managing agent of said defendant [corporation], personally, in the county of Lassen, state of California, a copy of said summons, attached to a true copy of the complaint, * * * and that he knows the person so served to be the person acting as managing agent for said defendant [corporation] named in said action." It is objected that this affidavit merely shows that the service was made upon Elledge, and does not show that it was made upon the corporation. It would be sacrificing substance to form to hold that this service was not made upon the defendant. It sufficiently appears from the complaint that the defendant is a corporation, and the corporation is the only defendant in the action. The affidavit of service upon one who is named the managing agent of the corporation is prima facie proof that he was such officer, and the statute authorizes the service to be made upon him for the corporation. Rowe v. Water Co., 10 Cal. 442; Golden Gate Min. Co. v. Superior Court, 65 Cal. 187. If Elledge had been a codefendant with the corporation, and the return of service had shown that only one copy of the summons had been delivered to him, there would be some reason for holding that it was a personal service upon him alone; but, as the corporation is the sole defendant, that reason does not exist.

2. The appellant does not contest the amount for which judgment was given, but contends that the judgment was erroneous in declaring that the plaintiff is entitled to a lien therefor upon its property. The plaintiff relies in support of the judgment upon the act passed March 31, 1891 (St. 1891, p. 195). That act is as follows:

"Section 1. Every corporation doing business in this state shall pay the mechanics and laborers employed by it the wages earned by and due them weekly or monthly, on such day in each week or month as shall be selected by such corporation.

"Sec. 2. A violation of the provisions of section 1 of this act shall entitle each of the said mechanics and laborers to a lien on all the property of said corporation, for the amount of their wages, which lien shall take preference over all other liens, except duly recorded mortgages or deeds of trust."

By the terms of the first section of this act, it does not apply to all corporations, but only to those who, while doing business in this state, employ laborers and mechanics by the week or month, whose wages, under the terms of their employment, are payable weekly or monthly. It does not purport to impose upon those corporations any duty or liability towards all the mechanics or laborers whom it may employ, or to create a right in favor of those of its employés whose wages are not earned or payable by the week or by the month. As the remedy sought to be enforced herein exists only by virtue of the statute, it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to bring himself within the terms of the statute, and to show that the wages earned by him were "due weekly or monthly." His complaint is, however, defective in this respect, and contains no allegation concerning the times at which the wages were payable, or that he was employed at weekly or monthly wages; and, from the allegations in reference thereto, it would seem that there was no agreement upon this point,—the greater part of his labor being computed by the day, and at different rates per day for different periods during the year. The plaintiff did not acquire any right to enforce a lien by reason of the notice of mechanic's lien filed by him. As he was employed by the corporation, if he would rely upon the lien given by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, his notice of lien should have been filed within 30 days after the completion of the work or improvement on which he had expended his labor. As it appears from the notice of lien attached to his complaint that the works were incomplete at the time it was filed, his notice was premature, and failed to confer a right of lien. Davis v. McDonough (Cal.) 42 Pac. 450. It is conceded by the plaintiff that this notice of lien was insufficient, within the requirements of the mechanic's lien law, but he contends that his lien exists by virtue of the act of 1891. That act, however, makes no provision for filing a claim of lien, but purports to create the lien upon the violation by the corporation of section 1. As the plaintiff is not entitled to avail himself of the provisions of the act of 1891, that provision of the judgment allowing him counsel fees was unauthorized. The judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $488.93 and costs of suit is affirmed. That portion of the judgment awarding counsel fees, and declaring that the plaintiff is entitled to a lien upon the property of the defendant, and directing a sale of such property, is reversed.

PEOPLE v. STERNBERG. (Cr. 65.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 13, 1896.)

"PURITY OF ELECTIONS LAW"—PROCURING FALSE REGISTRATION—EVIDENCE—ACCOMPLICES—CORROBORATION—CHARGING ON FACTS.

1. On a prosecution for procuring a certain person to falsely register as a voter in a precinct, others may testify that defendant also procured them to falsely register.

2. Persons who falsely registered as voters in a precinct at defendant's procurement are not for that reason accomplices of his in the procurement of another to so register.

3. Testimony of one that defendant procured him to falsely register as a voter in a precinct is corroborated by evidence that defendant was present when such person made his false affidavit, afterwards stated that he anticipated trouble because of his connection with such registration, and tried to suppress such person's testimony, paying him money to go away.

[1] Rehearing granted.

4. The "Purity of Elections Law" (St. 1893, p. 24), making "every person who willfully causes, procures, or allows" false registration punishable, applies as well to a private citizen as an officer; and therefore the charge that defendant, "as deputy register," committed the offense, is surplusage, and need not be proved.

5. That in a civil case, under Pol. Code, § 1109, against the clerk, to procure cancellation of votes alleged to have been illegally placed on the voting register, one testified that he was deputy register, without testifying as to any offense, does not protect him from prosecution for procuring, "as deputy register," one to falsely register as a voter, in violation of "Purity of Elections Law" (St. 1893, p. 24, § 22), under section 32, declaring that one testifying against a person offending against section 22 shall not himself be prosecuted for the offense with reference to which his testimony was given.

6. Defendant cannot complain that an instruction declaring that a certain person was an accomplice, and that, therefore, there could not be a conviction on his uncorroborated testimony, was error, as charging on facts; it not only having been invited by him, but also being harmless.

7. Though a judge may not instruct on a matter of fact, he may declare to a jury that certain persons were not accomplices where there is no evidence that they were.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; William T. Wallace, Judge.

Louis Sternberg appeals from a conviction. Affirmed.

C. W. Cross, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

HENSHAW, J. By information, defendant was charged with procuring and allowing A. Gutman to be registered as a voter in the precinct register of a precinct in which he was not entitled to be registered. The prosecution was had under and by virtue of the provisions of the "Purity of Elections Act" (St. 1893, p. 24). The offense charged comes within the purview of section 22 thereof. Gutman, called by the prosecution, testified that defendant requested him to register from the Baldwin Hotel, so that he could vote for Mahoney. At the time of the request he resided and was registered in another precinct, and these facts were known to defendant. Witness acceded to defendant's request, and together they went to the New City Hall. The witness there told a registrar clerk in attendance that he desired to change his residence to the Baldwin Hotel. Asked by the clerk what floor his room was on, he answered the fourth, when the defendant, standing by, corrected him, and said the fifth. The clerk then asked the number of his room, and, as the witness did not know, defendant again answered for him. Henry Burton was the registrar clerk. He identified the affidavit of registration as being in his handwriting; remembered the circumstances of defendant's presence with Gutman at the time it was made; did not remember defendant making answer to any of the questions propounded to Gutman; but would not accept the answers of any one except the affiant under such circumstances. It was shown that Gutman did not reside at the hotel, and that he did reside at 172 Clara street, in San Francisco, and was registered in the precinct to which that number belonged. Gutman further testified that after the election he met defendant in a saloon, and defendant urged him, Samuel Lust, and David Newman, who were present, to leave town, and save him and themselves from getting into trouble. He offered the three of them $20 for this purpose. Lust and Newman, after demurring to the amount, accepted the money, and witness was then given $5, with which he was to come to Oakland, where he was to remain for a few days. The "trouble" which defendant anticipated was punishment for procuring the false registration of voters at the Baldwin Hotel. Lust and Newman were allowed to testify, over objection, that they too had falsely registered from the hotel at the instance and procurement of defendant. Defendant also informed these witnesses that warrants were issued for their arrest. The evidence was properly admitted.

1. Against the judgment it is first urged that the witness Gutman was defendant's accomplice in the alleged offense, and that as there is no corroborative evidence in the case which, independent of Gutman's testimony, tends to connect defendant with the commission of the offense, a new trial must be granted. This position is not tenable. There is first the fact testified to by Burton that defendant was present at the making of the false affidavit. While this fact isolated and considered alone is of small moment, since an innocent man might have occupied the same position, yet, when viewed in the light of later occurrences, it becomes a circumstance of serious significance. Those are the admissions of anticipated trouble by defendant because of his connection with the registration of Gutman, testified to by Lust and Newman, his effort to suppress or eloign Gutman's evidence, and his payment of money for that purpose. One of the commonest forms of inculpatory evidence is testimoney of just such acts by a defendant. It is always admissible, and affords distinct and independent corroboration of the accomplice's statements. People v. Hong Tong, 85 Cal. 173, 24 Pac. 726; People v. Clough, 73 Cal. 352, 15 Pac. 5; People v. Grundell, 75 Cal. 310, 17 Pac. 214; People v. McLean, 84 Cal. 482, 24 Pac. 32; People v. Dixon, 94 Cal. 258, 29 Pac. 504. Nor is this evidence open to the objection that Lust and Newman were themselves accomplices. It is true that a conviction may not be had upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice; and a sufficient and independent corroboration is required, whether the principal evidence be that of one accomplice or of many. Three or thirty accomplices may not convict a man by their unsupported evidence more readily than may one; but the fact that, by the evidence of Newman and Lust, it appeared that each was an accomplice of defendant in a similar crime against the registration laws, did not make them accomplices in the particular offense under investigation. In other words, conceding that the evidence showed that Newman had falsely registered from the Baldwin Hotel at the procurement of defendant, and that Lust had done the same, not the slightest evidence was offered to show that these acts were other than separate and distinct crimes, in no way connected with the false registration of Gutman. Neither Lust nor Newman is shown to have participated in, or even to have had foreknowledge of, the Gutman affair; and under such circumstances, while each was an accomplice with defendant in the crime attending his own false registration, neither was an accomplice with defendant and Gutman in the particular offense for which the former was under trial.

2. The information charged that defendant was a deputy registrar of voters, "and as such deputy registrar of voters, as aforesaid, did willfully, feloniously, and unlawfully procure and allow one A. Gutman to be registered," etc. Defendant offered in evidence the record in the case of Stilwell v. Evans, then still pending and partly tried in the superior court of San Francisco, to show thereby that in a civil action defendant was called as a witness, and without objection answered to questions put him that he was a deputy registrar of voters. Stilwell v. Evans was a civil action to procure the cancellation of several thousand names alleged to have been illegally and improperly placed upon the voting register. Pol. Code, § 1109. The contention here is that defendant is charged with having committed the offense in his official capacity, viz. as deputy registrar; that in the action of Stilwell v. Evans he had been called, and testified that he was, in fact, a deputy registrar; that, by section 32 of the purity of elections act (St. 1893, p. 26), proof of these facts constitutes a bar to this prosecution. It is as follows:

"Sec. 32. A person offending against any provision of sections nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, thirty and thirty-one of this act is a competent witness against another person so offending, and may be compelled to attend and testify upon any trial, hearing, proceeding or lawful investigation or judicial proceeding in the same manner as any other person. But the testimony so given shall not be used in any prosecution or proceeding, civil or criminal, against the person so testifying. A person so testifying shall not thereafter be liable to indictment or presentment by information, nor to prosecution or punishment, for the offense with reference to which his testimony was given, and may plead or prove the giving of testimony accordingly, in bar of such indictment, information or prosecution."

This section was subjected to elaborate analysis, and a full exposition of its meaning was made, in Ex parte Cohen, 104 Cal. 524, 38 Pac. 364. It affords to one testifying immunity from prosecution or punishment for the offense with reference to which his testimony was given. In Stilwell v. Evans, Sternberg does not appear to have been testifying concerning any offense, much less the one with which he is here charged; and the statement by him that he was a deputy registrar had no more significance than would his answer that his true name was Louis Sternberg. Moreover, the charge in the information that, "as deputy registrar," defendant committed the offense, is the merest surplusage. It was meaningless in averment, and unnecessary in proof. The statute is not directed against official misconduct, nor limited in its application to public officers. "Every person who willfully causes, procures or allows" false registration is punishable under it. Every act embraced within its terms may be done by a private citizen as well as by a public officer, and the official character of the offender under this law is of no possible importance.

3. In instructing the jury, the judge said: "I instruct you, gentlemen, that Gutman, the man whom it is charged here Sternberg procured to falsely register, is an accomplice in this case." Elsewhere he said: "Now, you are instructed further, as I have already stated, that Gutman is, according to his own testimony, an accomplice in the crime here charged against Sternberg." This language, it is claimed, is violative of defendant's constitutional right that the judge shall not charge the jury with respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law. Const. art. 6, § 17. In People v. Sansome, 98 Cal. 235, 33 Pac. 202, this court said, discussing an instruction, that "to have gone further, and have told them that Kelly was an accomplice, would have been clearly a charge with respect to matters of fact, which is not allowed." In the case at bar the language quoted is part of instructions given by the court declaring the law to the jury upon the propositions that the testimony of an accomplice is to be viewed by them with distrust, and that a conviction cannot be had upon such evidence alone. The instructions are full upon the question, and the language criticised, so far from being injurious to defendant, is more favorable than he was entitled to; for, if Gutman was not an accomplice, the jury could have convicted without corroborating evidence, and were not required to view his evidence with distrust. By stamping him as an accomplice, the court, to the advantage of defendant, put his evidence under all the disabilities which attach to testimony of that character. It is clear, then, that no injury could have resulted to defendant. We need not, however, uphold the language for this reason alone. So much has been said to show that injury could not have resulted from the error claimed, but, in addition, the error was expressly invited by defendant himself. This was natural, since the declaration was entirely favorable to him. He asked the court to instruct, and at his request the court did instruct, the jury, that they could not find defendant guilty "unless there was evidence, other than the evidence of Gutman, which in itself, and without the aid of the testimony of said Gutman, tended to connect Sternberg with the commission of the offense charged." This is itself a declaration to the jury that Gutman was an accomplice; and, for error thus invited, defendant has no just ground of complaint. Nor does the imputation that a crime has been committed, contained in the use of the word "accomplice," afford, under the circumstances, a legal grievance.

4. The court further instructed the jury as follows: "I repeat to you, gentlemen, that neither Lust nor Newman is an accomplice; neither one of them is an accomplice; and their testimony is not subject to the rule which I have mentioned as applicable to the testimony of accomplices." This language is excepted to upon the same ground, that it is an invasion of the jury's exclusive province of determining facts. Were there evidence, even slight evidence, tending to show that Newman or Lust was in fact an accomplice, this objection would be well founded, and the error and injury would be manifest. That Newman and Lust were not accomplices has already been said, but, nevertheless, there is no evidence in the record which tends in any way to establish their complicity in the Gutman crime. Had the court been asked to give instructions upon the law of accomplices as affecting the testimony of Lust and Newman, it would have been its duty to refuse them. In saying to the jury that these men were not accomplices, it did no more than to declare that there was no evidence before them tending to show that they were accomplices. While a judge may not instruct upon a matter of fact, he is not forbidden, if the record justifies the assertion, in declaring to a jury that there is a total absence of evidence upon a given proposition. Such are the circumstances of this case.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 13, 1896.)

CRIMINAL LAW—ORAL ADMISSIONS—ACCOMPLICE TESTIMONY—CORROBORATIVE EVIDENCE —INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 4, declaring that evidence of the oral admissions of a party is to be viewed with "caution," it is not error to refuse an instruction that it be viewed with "distrust."

2. A requested instruction that the evidence of an accomplice is to be viewed with "caution and distrust" is not bad, though Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 4, declares only that it should be viewed with "distrust."

3. A requested instruction that "by corroborative evidence is meant additional evidence of a different character to the same point," following with precision the definition of "corroborative evidence" (Code Civ. Proc. § 1839), cannot be refused as being abstract.

4. A defendant is entitled to have a definition of corroborative evidence given the jury, though they are instructed in the language of Pen. Code, § 1111, that evidence of an accomplice is not sufficient to convict, unless he is corroborated by other evidence, which in itself, and without his testimony, tends to convict defendant of the commission of the crime.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; William T. Wallace, Judge.

Louis Sternberg appeals from a conviction. Reversed.

C. W. Cross, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

HENSHAW, J. This case, while possessing many features in common with the case of People v. Sternberg (Cr. No. 65; this day decided) 43 Pac. 198, differs from it in certain essentials which demand consideration.

Sternberg is here prosecuted for procuring the false registration of David Newman. Newman testified to the circumstances of his false registration at the solicitation of defendant. Lust bore like testimony, he having been present at the time Sternberg induced Newman to commit the crime. Sternberg, when the three were together, asked them both to register from the Baldwin Hotel. They went to the registrar's office for that purpose, Sternberg accompanying them, and there did his bidding. They recounted the later occurrences and conversation at the saloon, when $20 was given them by defendant with which to get out of town, and in this they are corroborated by Gutman.

The court instructed the jury that Newman and Lust were accomplices with Sternberg. This declaration was asked by defendant in an instruction proposed by him, and was a more favorable instruction than he was entitled to. For the reasons given in People v. Sternberg, the defendant cannot complain of it.

The court likewise instructed the jury that Gutman was not an accomplice. Not the slightest evidence in the case indicated that he was. This contention has also been passed upon in the other case.

Certain instructions proposed by defendant were refused by the court; but the substance of them was fairly embraced and expressed in those given, and no injury could have resulted to defendant.

The following instructions proposed by defendant were refused by the court: "(1) The jury is instructed that it is their duty to view with distrust evidence of the oral admissions of defendant. (2) The jury is instructed that the evidence of an accomplice is to be viewed by a jury with caution and distrust. (3) By corroborative evidence is meant additional evidence of a different character to the same point." The principles of law which these instructions undertake to express are all found in the Code. The first is at variance with the Code provision which declares that evidence of the oral admissions of a party is to be viewed with caution. Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 4. The distinction between caution and distrust is broad enough to justify the court's refusal. The second tells the jury that the evidence of an accomplice is to be viewed with caution and distrust. The Code provision is that such evidence is to be viewed with distrust. Id. The proposed instruction is not vitiated by the use of the additional word. If the evidence is to be viewed with distrust, it is certainly to be received and viewed with caution, while the converse might not be equally true. To view with distrust, caution must or should be exercised; while to view with caution does not necessarily demand distrust. The third instruction, refused as being abstract, follows with precision the Code definition of "corroborative evidence." Id. § 1839. The language is necessarily in the abstract, since it defines a term of abstract meaning with the brevity and generality necessary to legal phraseology. The maxims, rules, and definitions of law in this sense are all abstract, but are none the less proper to be given to a jury for this reason. Members of a jury might be in excusable ignorance of the legal definition of "corroborative evidence," and yet possess (or, at least, they should) intelligence enough to comprehend what was meant when they were told that it was additional evidence of a different character to the same point. The second and third proposed instructions are correct in law. They were not covered by any that were given, and should have been declared, if applicable to the case. That they were applicable no doubt can be entertained. The evidence of accomplices was before the jury. It was defendant's right that his triors should know that it was a duty imposed upon them by law to receive this evidence with distrust. The question of the support of such testimony by corroborative evidence was a vital one for their determination. They were instructed in the language of the Code (Pen. Code, § 1111) that they could not convict unless there was corroborative evidence. Defendant was plainly within his right in asking that they be told what corroborative evidence is. That the jury was instructed, in the language of section 1111 of the Penal Code, that the evidence of an accomplice is not sufficient to convict unless he is corroborated by other evidence which in itself, and without the aid of the testimony of the accomplice, tends to convict defendant with the commission of the crime, informed them of the amount and kind of corroborative evidence required; but they were still left without enlightenment as to what in law constituted this character of evidence. The direct injury worked by the refusal to give the second proposed instruction is shown from the following: The court, in its instructions, said: "When you become satisfied that it is so corroborated, then you take up the testimony of the accomplices, and judge it as you do the testimony of all others; that is, remembering still who they are,—remembering who each of the witnesses is, because you will not forget, of course, that they are accomplices,—you will not forget that in weighing their testimony, even though you be satisfied that there is sufficient corroboration to enable you to look at it." Had the court informed the jury that the evidence of accomplices must be viewed by them with distrust, the direction that they were to judge it as they did the testimony of all others, taken with what follows, could have been construed as a declaration that it was to be viewed as the testimony of all others, subject to the lack of full credibility which attached to it, and subject to their duty of viewing it with distrust. Not having been so instructed, the foregoing is tantamount to informing them that, when they shall believe that the testimony of the accomplices has been corroborated, such testimony stands upon the same plane with that given by witnesses to whose statements full credibility attaches. It is therefore not easy to see why the instructions were refused, and it is made more difficult by the fact that they were given at defendant's request in the former case.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

D. Parson, for $650 and interest, payable to the order of plaintiff nine months after date, and also to secure the further sum of $3,064, payable to plaintiff according to the terms of a written agreement of same date, attached to and made a part of the mortgage, of which the following is a copy: "The Parke & Lacy Company of San Francisco, Cal., lessors, hereby lease unto the White River Lumber Company and Warren D. Parson, of Tulare county, Cal., lessees, the following property for the period of nine (9) months, from the 15th day of June, 1889, to wit: One (1) 54-inch x 16-feet horizontal stationary tubular boiler, No. 3,155, with fittings (T. M. Nagle's make). One (1) 16-inch x 20-inch Phœnix engine, No. 674, with a Gardner governor. One (1) 11-foot x 16½-inch pulley, made in halves of suitable weight. One (1) No. 3 Valley bucket pump, and merchandise described in the list attached hereto. Said property is to be used only at Arbor Vitæ, Tulare county, state of California, and said lessees are to pay to said lessors, at San Francisco, for the use of said property, the sum of three thousand and sixty-four ($3,064) dollars, payable as follows: All on the 15th day of March, A. D. 1890. Said lessees agree that they will pay the rent at the times and in the manner aforesaid; that they will not permit said property, nor any part thereof, to be affixed to real estate, nor removal from where it is to be used aforesaid, nor deliver the same to any one, nor suffer it to be taken away by any one except lessors, nor in any manner transfer or attempt to transfer this lease, or any interest therein or in said property, without the written consent of lessors; that they will keep said property in good condition and repair, and pay all expenses relating to said property hereafter incurred, including transportation and insurance thereof, in the name of lessors, and all damages to said property suffered by lessors. It is further agreed that time is of the essence of this agreement, and that upon the failure of the lessee strictly to keep and perform any of the covenants or provisions hereof, by them agreed to be performed, then and thereupon, without any notice, this instrument shall be deemed to be canceled and of no further effect as against lessors, and all right and interest of lessee in or to said property shall cease, and all rent by lessee theretofore paid shall belong to lessors as full payment for the prior use of said property, and lessors shall be entitled to take into their possession all said property. Said lessors further agree that upon strict performance by lessee with all the foregoing covenants and provisions by them to be kept and performed, they shall then (but not otherwise) have the right to purchase said property by the prompt payment to the lessors of the sum of three thousand and sixty-four ($3,064) dollars. Witness the hands and seals of the parties hereto, this 12th day of June, 1889. [Signed] Parke & Lacy Company. B. T. Lacy, Pres. [Seal.] White River Lumber Company, by W. D. Parson, Pres. [Seal.] W. D. Parson. Witness: Osgood Hilton, W. F. Aldrich." The conditions of the mortgage are that if default be made in the payment of said sums of money, or any part thereof, as provided in said note or agreement, the mortgagee may sell the mortgaged property and apply the proceeds, etc. The mortgagor, Hilton, was not interested in the transactions between plaintiff and the other defendants, but executed the mortgage merely for the accommodation of the White River Lumber Company and Parson, to whom he or his mortgaged property stands in the relation of mere surety, of which the mortgagee had notice at the time the mortgage was executed, and it is not disputed that he is entitled to all the rights and favor accorded by law to a surety; that is to say, "when property of any kind is mortgaged or pledged by the owner to answer for the default or miscarriage of another person, such property occupies the position of a surety or guarantor, and anything which would discharge an individual surety or guarantor who was personally liable will, under similar circumstances, discharge such property." Brandt, Sur. § 34 et seq.

This action was commenced February 7, 1891, to recover from the White River Lumber Company and W. D. Parson the sum of $650 and interest, alleged to be due on said promissory note, and the further sum of $3,064 and interest, alleged to be due on said written agreement, and also to foreclose the Hilton mortgage. The defendants White River Lumber Company and W. D. Parson, having failed to answer the complaint, a personal money judgment was rendered against them by default for the full amount demanded. The material substance of the very verbose separate answer of the defendant Hilton is that, without his consent, said written agreement was altered materially, after the execution of the mortgage, by a verbal agreement between plaintiff and the other defendants, at the instance and request of plaintiff, and that the agreement as written was never substantially performed on his part by the plaintiff. The alleged alterations of the contract consisted in substituting for the "Gardner governor" and the "11-foot x 16½-inch pulley, made in halves of suitable weight" an inferior, defective, unsafe governor known as a "Waters Governor," and an inferior, defective pulley, smaller in size than that described in the written contract, and of insufficient weight. Besides the above, Hilton's answer contained a denial of the alleged indebtedness of the White River Lumber Company and Parson to the plaintiff. The court below found in favor of the defendant Hilton on all the issues of fact, and, as conclusions of law, found that the defendant Hilton and the mortgaged property had been exonerated and discharged from all liability on the mortgage, and that the mortgage should be canceled of record; and thereupon judgment was rendered accordingly. From this judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, the plaintiff has appealed.

The identical written contract herein above set out was construed by this court in the case of Parke & Lacy Co. v. White River Lumber Co., 101 Cal. 37, 35 Pac. 442, and held not to be a lease, but a sale, either absolute or conditional. Although that decision is not the law in this case, the law announced therein is applicable to the construction of the contract, unless the construction may be aided and changed in this case by circumstances different from those appearing in that; but I perceive no difference affecting the construction of the contract. But the construction given in that case can be applied in this case only to the extent that the contract is not a lease, since that decision goes only to that extent. By whatever name the contract may be properly designated, or however classified, it was wholly executory by both parties thereto, the promise of each party being the only consideration for the promise of the other; and the first act to be performed, the delivery of the property described to the White River Lumber Company and Parson (miscalled lessees), was to be performed by the plaintiff. The defendant Hilton mortgaged his property to secure performance, on the part of the White River Lumber Company and Parson, of this contract, and not to secure their performance of any other or materially different contract. If, therefore, the contract was altered by the parties thereto in any material particular after the execution of Hilton's mortgage, without his consent, the mortgaged property was thereby exonerated from all liability as security. Civ. Code, §§ 2844, 2819; Brandt, Sur. §§ 397, 399, and cases there cited, especially Bragg v. Shain, 49 Cal. 131, Truckee Lodge v. Wood, 14 Nev. 293, and U. S. v. Corwine, 1 Bond, 339, Fed. Cas. No. 14,871. The court below found that the contract was materially altered, as alleged in Hilton's answer, and without his consent; and this finding is justified by the evidence. The only conflict of the evidence applicable to this finding is found in that part of it relating to the question whether Hilton consented to the alteration; and, as to this, the conflict is substantial to a degree which precludes this court from disturbing the finding on the ground that it is not justified by the evidence, even though it should seem from the transcript of the evidence that a preponderance thereof is against the finding.

It is contended by appellant, however, that respondent is estopped from denying the recital in the mortgage that the lumber company and Parson "are justly indebted" to appellant in the sum of $3,064 as rent on machinery. But such is not the recital. It is recited in the mortgage that the White River Lumber Company and Parson are justly indebted to the Parke & Lacy Company in the sum of $650 on a certain promissory note (setting out a copy of the note) "and in the further sum of $3,064, agreed to be paid as rent by said White River Lumber Company and Warren D. Parson to said Parke & Lacy Company for the boiler, engine, and other machinery, in accordance with the lease this day executed, of which a copy is attached hereto and made a part hereof." The whole lease, as well as the note, must be read as a part of the recitals, and when so read will not estop Hilton from alleging that the lease was altered by the parties thereto without his consent, after the execution of the mortgage, and that the covenants therein on the part of the plaintiff were never performed, and, consequently, that no indebtedness of the lumber company and Parson to plaintiff ever accrued "in accordance with the lease." The lease, being the principal part of the recitals, shows that the indebtedness referred to did not exist at the date of the recital, and could be only such as might thereafter accrue in accordance with its terms. Therefore, the averments that the lease was afterwards altered, and that no indebtedness ever accrued in accordance with its original terms, are nowise inconsistent with the recitals in the mortgage.

I conclude that, as to the alleged indebtedness of $3,064, founded upon the written agreement called a "lease," a foreclosure of the Hilton mortgage was properly denied by the trial court; but I think the court erred in denying a foreclosure of the mortgage as a valid security for the payment of the promissory note for the sum of $650 and the conventional interest thereon. That note is entirely distinct from the so-called lease, and there is no pretense that it has been altered in any respect. It appears that the consideration for it was a loan by plaintiff of $650, and that no part of the principal or interest had been paid when judgment was rendered against the other defendants. "Where a surety is bound by one bond for the performance by the principal of two distinct things, and the contract is varied as to one of the things to be performed, the surety is discharged as to the matter concerning which the contract has been changed, but is not discharged from that as to which it has not been changed." Brandt, Sur. § 398, and cases there cited. I think the cause should be remanded, with instructions to modify the judgment according to this opinion.

We concur: BRITT, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion, the cause is remanded, and the court below is instructed to modify the judgment in accordance with said opinion.

KIEFER v. LAVENTHAL et al. (L. A. 89.)

DEPOSIT—ACTION TO RECOVER—COMPLAINT.

Plaintiff's assignor sold all the goods in his saloon for $60 in hand paid, the purchaser further agreeing to deposit with defendant $300, to be paid the seller on the procurement of the right to carry on the business in such saloon. Held, that plaintiff's complaint, in action for the $300, should allege that the purchaser had procured the right to carry on the business, or that he could carry it on without the procurement of a right, or that, by his own neglect or default, he had failed to secure the privilege.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Action by O. H. Kiefer against E. Laventhal and others. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

King & Harmon, for appellant. Graff & Latham and J. W. Mitchell, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Appeal from the judgment entered after demurrer sustained to plaintiff's second amended complaint, plaintiff refusing further to amend. The facts pleaded are that Brown and Beaslin entered into an agreement (set forth in full in the complaint) by which Brown sold to Beaslin, for the sum of $60, to him paid, certain personal property. This property consisted of "all of the goods in, and owned by me in, my place of business in the town of Azuza," a retail liquor saloon. "As a further and separate agreement between the parties," Beaslin agreed to deposit with the firm of Laventhal & Sons (defendants herein) $300, "to be paid to the party of the first part upon the procurement of the right to sell and carry on the business at the place above named; that is, the retail or liquor business within the same." Beaslin deposited the money with Laventhal & Sons, who hold it. Brown assigned his interest and rights "as per agreement" to Kiefer. Kiefer, after demand upon Laventhal & Sons, commenced this action to obtain the $300, making Tappeiner, who claimed by assignment from Beaslin, one of the defendants. The complaint nowhere avers that Beaslin procured the right to carry on the business of retail liquor dealer, or that he could carry on the business without procurement of a right (presumably a license), or that by his own neglect or default he had failed to secure the privilege. These averments lay at the foundation of plaintiff's right of action, and should have been alleged in one or another of the modes indicated. From the agreement alone, it may reasonably be inferred that Beaslin paid Brown $60 for such personal property as Brown owned in the saloon, agreeing to pay him $300 more when and if he obtained a license to conduct the business. If he succeeded, his liability to pay was complete. If he failed, then he owned the property for which he had paid $60, and the transaction was at an end. Judgment affirmed.

PIERCE et al. v. BIRKHOLM et al. (No. 15,464.)[1]

GRANT OF NEW TRIAL—APPEAL—EFFECT ON JUDGMENT.

1. Pending appeal from an order granting a new trial, an appeal will lie from the judgment.

2. An order granting a new trial does not vacate the judgment, until the order becomes final by failure to appeal, or its being sustained on appeal.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; William T. Wallace, Judge.

Action by one Pierce and others against one Birkholm and others. There was a judgment for defendants, and from an order granting a new trial they appeal, pending which plaintiffs appeal from the judgment. On motion to dismiss plaintiffs' appeal. Denied.

Morrison & Foerster, Constantine E. Foerster, Parker & Eells, and William H. Jordan, for appellants. W. S. Goodfellow, for respondents.

VAN FLEET, J. Judgment was entered in the action in the court below in favor of defendants on August 15, 1892, but subsequently, on August 26, 1892, the court, on motion of plaintiffs, made an order granting a new trial. From the order granting a new trial defendants, on October 24, 1892, appealed to this court. After the taking of the appeal from said order, the plaintiffs, on May 10, 1893, took an appeal from the judgment.

We are asked by the defendants to dismiss the appeal from the judgment, upon the ground, as contended, that the effect of the order granting defendants a new trial was to vacate and set aside the judgment, and that, consequently, when the appeal from the latter was taken, it had ceased to have any existence, and there was no judgment to appeal from. This view cannot, in our judgment, be sustained, for obvious reasons. The operation of an order granting a new trial is, unquestionably, expressing it in general terms, to ultimately vacate the judgment; that is, it sets aside the findings upon which the judgment rests, and the latter necessarily falls. But this implies a valid and subsisting order, remaining in full force and effect. Here the order had been appealed from, and that appeal was pending and undisposed of at the date of the appeal from the judgment. The effect of the appeal from such order was to suspend the operation of the latter, and render it ineffectual until the determination of such appeal, either by a dismissal thereof, or by an affirmation of the order. Pending such appeal, the judgment remained subsisting, and, for the purposes of an appeal therefrom, stood as if no order for a new trial had ever been made. The position of defendants, in effect, is that an order granting a new trial becomes effectual immediately upon its entry, and that the judgment is thereby and at once absolutely wiped out of existence; that the effect of an appeal from such order is not to resurrect or restore the judgment for any purpose, whatever deterrent effect it may exert upon the operation of the order in other respects. Manifestly, this position cannot be maintained. If such was the effect intended for the order, it was idle for the legislature to provide an appeal therefrom, since, whatever the result of such appeal, the judgment would be gone, and there would be no method of reviving it except as a result of another trial. Being absolutely dead, it could not be otherwise restored to existence. Furthermore, if such were its effect, it would logically follow that the trial court could proceed, notwithstanding the pendency of an appeal therefrom, and try the case anew: but this, it has been held from a very early day in this state, cannot be done. Ford v. Thompson, 19 Cal. 120. But such is not the effect of the order. While its ultimate effect, if unappealed from, or if sustained upon the appeal, where one is taken, is to vacate the judgment, and require another trial of the action, such result does not follow until the finality of the order is determined in one or the other modes suggested. In this respect it is not distinguishable from any other order or judgment from which an appeal is given. Pending an appeal therefrom, it is suspended, and set at large, and the rights of the parties stand unaffected thereby, excepting in so far as their prosecution may be stayed by virtue of the provisions of the statute. That the effect of the order is not to destroy the judgment, ipso facto, upon its entry, is made clear when we regard the effect of a reversal of the order on appeal. In such case the law does not provide for entering a new judgment in the court below upon the going down of the remittitur as would be required had the judgment wholly ceased to exist, but the judgment as originally entered in that court stands as the judgment in the action, and has effect from the date of such original entry. "The reversal of an order denying a new trial reverses the judgment, but the reversal of an order granting a new trial leaves the verdict and judgment standing." Hayne, New Trials & App. § 299. And see, also, Brooks v. Railway Co. (Cal.) 42 Pac. 570.

In support of the view contended for by them, defendants cite us to the following cases from this court: Walden v. Murdock, 23 Cal. 549; Thompson v. Smith, 28 Cal. 528, 530; Kower v. Gluck, 33 Cal. 401; Wittenbrock v. Bellmer, 62 Cal. 558; Wheeler v. Kassabaum, 76 Cal. 90, 18 Pac. 119. And it is claimed that those cases settle the law in accordance with the position now taken by them. An examination of those cases, however, shows that they fall very far short of sustaining any such view. They do sustain the general proposition, not questioned, that the effect of an order granting a new trial is to set aside the judgment; and that is the only question, so far as anything affecting a consideration of this case is concerned, that is involved in the determination of any of those cases. That proposition is found stated in a general way in various forms, and in one or two instances in language somewhat too broad and loose, and such as, perhaps, to lend some color to the position now taken by defendants. But, when the cases are read with reference to the questions before the court, they will be found, in each instance, we think, not inconsistent with the views we have expressed. In all those cases the court would seem to have used the expressions there found with reference to the effect of such an order, treated as a finality, and a consideration of the question as to when the order becomes final does not appear in any of them to have been involved. In none of them was the question here involved—the effect upon the order granting a new trial of an appeal therefrom, and, consequently, the status of the judgment pending such appeal—under consideration. It is true that, in the case of Kower v. Gluck, supra, most strongly relied upon by defendants, there was, as here, an order granting a new trial, from which an appeal had been taken, and subsequently an appeal from the judgment. The two appeals were considered together, and the court, determining that the appeal from the order must be affirmed, holds that the effect of the order granting a new trial being to set the judgment aside, the appeal from the judgment became inconsequential, and should be dismissed. This is all that is determined by the case, and to that extent it is obviously correct. If the language, which does not seem to have been carefully chosen to express the meaning of the court, implies anything further, it is not authoritative, because unnecessary to the determination of the question involved. The other cases cited need not be specially reviewed, as we regard them as sufficiently disposed of by what is generally said above. None of them, when properly considered, go to the length contended for by defendants, or necessary to sustain this motion. To sustain the doctrine urged by defendants would, not only in this, but in most instances of the kind, deprive the party of an opportunity to take advantage of the right of appeal clearly afforded by the statute, and that upon grounds which to us seem wholly unsupported by either reason or authority. The motion is denied.

ELECTRIC STREET RAILWAYS—LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

1. It is contributory negligence per se to ride on a bicycle between the tracks of an electric street railway without watching for the approach of cars from behind.

2. Decedent was riding on a bicycle between the tracks of the defendant electric railroad company, at the rate of six miles an hour, without watching for the approach of cars from behind. As the car by which decedent was killed approached from behind, at the rate of ten miles an hour, the motorman sounded the gong when 20 to 40 feet from him, and cried out for him to get off the track, to which decedent paid no attention. Thereupon the motorman, when 10 or 20 feet from decedent, reversed the current, and attempted to stop the car, but was unable to do so in time. There was no evidence that the rails of the track were not on a level with the ground between the tracks, and decedent was seen when about a block and a half ahead of the car to pass from the north track, on which he had been riding, to the south track, to escape a north-bound car. Held, that a nonsuit should have been granted.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; J. W. McKinley, Judge.

John D. Pope, for appellant. W. J. Hunsaker, for respondents.

VAN FLEET, J. Verdict and judgment were for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals from the judgment and an order denying its motion for a new trial.

The action was by the widow and minor child of one Charles E. Everett, deceased, to recover damages for the death of the latter, caused by his being run over by an electric car operated by the defendant on its street railroad in the city of Los Angeles, and alleged to have been through defendant's negligence. At the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence in chief, defendant moved the court for a nonsuit, on the grounds, substantially, that the evidence wholly failed to show negligence on the part of the defendant, but did establish affirmatively that deceased came to his death through his own negligence, contributing directly and proximately thereto. The court denied the motion, to which ruling defendant excepted, and this exception constitutes the only material question in the case.

The evidence in behalf of plaintiffs tended to show that the deceased, at the time of the accident resulting in his death, which was on October 17, 1894, was 40 years of age, in good health, and in full possession of his faculties, having good eyesight and unimpaired hearing.

He was an experienced rider of the bicycle, had owned one of those vehicles three or four years, and used it every day. On the date in question, about 1 o'clock in the afternoon, or a little thereafter, deceased was on his bicycle, riding along McClintock avenue, in a suburb of Los Angeles, known as "University," on a portion of the street where ran a double line of defendant's railway, one line used for south-bound and the other for north-bound cars. He was going south at the time, and traveling at the rate of about six miles an hour. Following him, and going in the same direction on the south-bound track, was a train of defendant's cars, consisting of an electric motor car and a trailer, heavily loaded with passengers going out to the race track. This train was running at its ordinary rate of about ten miles an hour. When deceased was first observed by those on the train, he was between a block and a half and two blocks ahead of the train, and was riding between the rails of the north-bound track.

He continued on this track for some distance, when he crossed over to the south-bound track, apparently to avoid an approaching car going north, and continued on his course, riding between the rails of the latter track. At this time he was something over half a block in advance of the south-bound train, but the latter was rapidly overtaking him; and when the north-bound car passed him, which was at a point a short distance south of where the south-bound train then was, passengers on the former, evidently noting the rapid approach of the train, called out a warning to deceased to apprise him of danger; and at about the same time, when the train was within from 20 to 40 feet from him (the estimates of the witnesses varying on this point), the motorman on the latter rang his gong, and, together with several of the passengers, cried out to deceased to "get off the track," "look out," and other words of like import. These warnings, although distinctly heard by a witness standing on the street some four or five times as far from the train as deceased then was, were either unheard by him, or totally unheeded, as he was not observed to look back or turn his head, or attempt to turn or increase the speed of his bicycle. Thereupon the motorman, when within about 10 to 20 feet of deceased, reversed the current, and applied the brakes, and endeavored to stop the train, but did not succeed in time to avoid running deceased down; and he was struck by the motor, and killed. At no time from the time he was first seen riding ahead of the train was deceased observed to turn his head or look back, until just as the train was upon him, when he partly turned his head, and turned his wheel a little to the right, but not sufficient to get out of the way. University is a settled suburb of Los Angeles, laid out in blocks, crossed and intersected by public streets, and the point where deceased was killed was at the intersection of McClintock avenue with Thirty-Seventh street. Deceased was not a resident of Los Angeles, but had been there for about a week, more or less, before the accident, stopping at the house of a relative on Thirty-Ninth street, off McClintock avenue, south of Thirty-Seventh street and the point where he was killed. During his sojourn he had been in the habit of riding back and forth to and from the city on his bicycle, and, when on McClintock avenue, would ride on the railroad tracks, as it was smoother for travel between the rails than on the outside, where the space was narrow and rough and a poor road for the bicycle, by reason of the condition of the street. At points on McClintock avenue the soil was sandy, and had receded somewhat from the rails, so as to leave the latter in places standing a little above the surface of the street; but what the condition was in this respect at or in the immediate vicinity of the accident was not made to appear. At the date in question, races were in progress at the race track, situated south of the scene of the deceased's death; and, owing to the increased travel, extra cars were being run by defendant, and at shorter intervals than at other times; but whether the train which killed deceased was an extra or running on regular time was not shown. The motorman in charge of the train had been in the employment of defendant about two weeks. For the first ten or twelve days he was under instruction from an experienced motorman, and was then put in charge of a motor, and had been so employed some four or five days at the time of the accident. The statements of the witnesses vary considerably as to how far the train was from deceased when the motorman commenced ringing his alarm gong. A number of them show no recollection on the subject, but, taken as a whole, the evidence tends strongly to indicate that the gong was being sounded before the motorman and passengers commenced to call out to deceased to get out of the way. There is a like difference as to just when the brakes were applied, and whether the speed of the train was slackened any before the deceased was struck. The head end of the motor passed the point where deceased was struck between 20 and 30 feet before the train came to a full stop, and the evidence tended to show that it could have been stopped in a shorter distance. There was also some evidence tending to show that the wind was coming from the southeast; at what velocity does not appear, but that it was calculated to deaden to some extent any sound in deceased's rear.

This is substantially the case made by the evidence in behalf of plaintiffs upon the points material for our consideration. It can scarcely be made a question in the case—indeed, we do not understand it to be seriously controverted—but that the conduct of the deceased under the circumstances narrated constituted negligence on his part in the highest degree, and such as, standing alone, would necessarily preclude a recovery for his death. In walking or riding along a line of railway where cars or trains are passing, or likely to pass, at short intervals, one, while in a position to be endangered by such vehicles must pay attention to his surroundings, and employ his natural faculties, and exert due diligence to avoid such danger. He must listen and look to ascertain whether danger is threatened by his situation, and a failure so to do constitutes negligence per se. This principle is settled by a practically unbroken line of decisions in this and other states. One or two of the latest expressions upon the subject by this court, in cases where the rule is fully discussed and authorities cited, may be given as aptly stating and applying the doctrine. In Kenna v. Railroad Co., 101 Cal. 26, 35 Pac. 332, it is said: "It is a fixed rule that it is the duty of any one when attempting to cross a railroad track upon a highway to be vigilant, to look and to listen before attempting to cross, and a failure to do so is regarded as such negligence on his part as to preclude a recovery. Glascock v. Railroad Co., 73 Cal. 137, 14 Pac. 518. With greater reason does the principle of this rule apply to one who is traveling laterally along the route of a railroad, and knows that engines will soon follow. 'It is negligence for a person to walk upon the track of a railroad, whether laid in the street or upon the open field; and he who deliberately does so will be presumed to assume the risk of the perils he may encounter,' "—citing a large number of cases. In Holmes v. Railway Co., 97 Cal. 161, 31 Pac. 834, where the person for whose death it was sought to recover was killed while walking along the railroad track near a station, while waiting for the train which ran him down, and when it appeared that deceased did not look out for the approach of the train, which he could have seen in time to get out of the way, the court say: "A railroad track upon which trains are constantly run is itself a warning to any person who has reached years of discretion, and who is possessed of ordinary intelligence, that it is not safe to walk upon it, or near enough to it to be struck by a passing train, without the exercise of constant vigilance, in order to be made aware of the approach of a locomotive, and thus be enabled to avoid receiving injury; and the failure of such a person so situated, with reference to the railroad track, to exercise such care and watchfulness, and to make use of all his senses, in order to avoid the danger incident to such situation, is negligence per se. The following are a few of many cases which might be cited to sustain this proposition: Harlan v. Railway Co., 64 Mo. 480; Id., on rehearing, 65 Mo. 22; Railroad Co. v. Depew, 40 Ohio St. 121; Kelley v. Railroad Co., 75 Mo. 138; Glascock v. Railroad Co., 73 Cal. 137, 14 Pac. 518." Nor is there any distinction, in the application of this doctrine, between an electric or cable line operated upon the public streets of a city, and that of an ordinary steam railway operated upon the right of way of the corporation. While the deceased had the undoubted right to a reasonable use of the public street, notwithstanding its occupancy by defendant's tracks, he could not ignore or disregard the rights of the latter in the premises, nor neglect to take reasonable precautions for his own safety. If he chose to make use of the part of the street occupied by the tracks, it was his duty to look out for and endeavor to avoid the dangers incident to such use. In Haight v. Railroad Co., 7 Lans. 11, speaking of this rule, the court say: "It is said by counsel for plaintiff that, while this may be the rule in regard to steam railways, it cannot be applied to street railways." In Carson v. Railway Co., 147 Pa. St. 219, 23 Atl. 369, it was held that failure to look for approaching cars on the part of one about to drive across the tracks of an electric street railway company is such contributory negligence as will prevent his recovery for injuries received by colliding with a car. The court said: "If, by looking, the plaintiff could have seen and so avoided an approaching train, and this appears from his own evidence, he may be properly nonsuited." In Ward v. Railway Co. (Sup.) 17 N. Y. Supp. 427, it appeared that plaintiff's intestate was fatally injured while attempting to drive across a street-railway track. There was evidence that, at any time before reaching the track, deceased, by a glance, could have informed himself of the approach of the car, but that he drove onto the track without looking in either direction. It was held that he was guilty of contributory negligence. In Creamer v. Railway Co., 156 Mass. 320, 31 N. E. 391, the supreme court of that state held that where a person stepped from a horse car at the junction of two streets, and immediately started to cross the track of an electric road, without looking or listening, and was run over by the electric car running at the rate of 15 miles an hour, there could be no recovery, because the deceased was not exercising due care. We see no more reason for applying the rule that one must look and listen before crossing the tracks of a steam railway than that one must look and listen before crossing a street-car track upon which the motive power is electricity or the cable. See, also, Bailey v. Railway Co. (No. 16,004; decided by this court December 10, 1895) 42 Pac. 914. When the evidence discloses a failure to take such reasonable precautions for one's own safety, it constitutes negligence in law, and is not a question to be submitted to the jury.

This brings us to the only other consideration arising: Does the evidence tend to show such negligence on the part of defendant, contributing to the death of deceased, as would in law authorize a recovery, notwithstanding the negligence of the deceased? We find nothing in the evidence to sustain this view. The case is not like one where the injured party is discovered in time lying or standing upon a railroad track, under such circumstances as to make it doubtful whether he can or will get out of the way; or where one is seen attempting, either on foot or otherwise, to make a crossing, or passing along or on its track over a bridge or narrow causeway, or in a deep cut or tunnel, where to turn aside would be either dangerous or impossible; or under other circumstances of similar character. In such instances it may be conceded that the driver of the engine or motor would not be justified in law in proceeding without effort to stop his vehicle up to the point of collision. Persons cannot be recklessly or wantonly run down on a railroad track, however negligent themselves, where the circumstances are such as to convey to the mind of a reasonable man a question as to whether they will be able to get out of the way. But the evidence has no tendency to make such a case. Here the deceased was in full and open view of the approaching train for several blocks, and had perfect opportunity and ability to apprise himself of its coming. He was upon a swift and noiseless vehicle, which, as a matter of common knowledge, can be made with very little effort, under a rider of ordinary strength and experience, to attain a much higher rate of speed than that with which the cars were progressing, and which, furthermore, is susceptible, by a mere pressure of the hand, to turn aside instantly,—in much less time, indeed, than a pedestrian could step aside,—so as to completely avoid an object no wider than a street car. He was upon level ground, and, assuming that the surface was too rough or the space too narrow outside the railroad tracks for him to safely turn that way, there was nothing, so far as appears, to prevent his return to the other track or to the space between the tracks. In fact, he had but a few moments before crossed from one track to the other, to avoid a like danger, and had been seen to do so by the motorman on the train. Under these circumstances, we think it perfectly clear that the latter was justified, reasoning in the line we have suggested, in keeping on his course, and assuming that the deceased, obeying the most ordinary dictates of prudence, had made himself aware of the approach of the train, and would either increase his speed or turn aside in time to avoid the danger which threatened him. In Holmes v. Railway Co., supra, it is said: "As the deceased was a man of mature years, and nothing to indicate that he was not able to take care of himself,—as he was in fact,—the engineer might reasonably believe that he knew of its approach, and would, in obedience to the ordinary instinct of self-preservation, move away from the track before being overtaken by the engine. Railroad Co. v. Miller, 25 Mich. 279." See, also, Campbell v. Railroad Co. (Kan.) 40 Pac. 997. The motorman was not required to assume that the deceased would continue his negligent conduct to a point which would endanger his life or limb, and it was not negligence in the driver, under the circumstances, to indulge the presumption that the deceased would get out of the way, up to the last moment. There is nothing in the circumstances to indicate any wantonness or recklessness on the part of the engineer, or that he did not take all the precautions to warn the deceased and to stop his train that would have been suggested to one more experienced, or to any other reasonable mind.

But, were it to be conceded that the evidence disclosed a case tending to show negligence on the part of defendant's servants, the plaintiffs could not recover under the circumstances of this case. The rule which renders a defendant liable for injuries, notwithstanding some negligence on the part of the plaintiff or the person injured, can only apply "in those cases where such negligence was the remote, and not the proximate, cause of the injury, that is, where the negligent acts of the parties are independent of each other, the act of the person injured preceding that of the defendant." Holmes v. Railway Co., supra. In that case, quoting from O'Brien v. McGlinchy, 68 Me. 552, it is said: "But in cases falling within the foregoing description, where the negligent acts of the parties are distinct and independent of each other, the act of the plaintiff preceding that of the defendant, it is considered that the plaintiff's conduct does not contribute to produce the injury, if, notwithstanding his negligence, the injury could have avoided by the use of ordinary care at the time by the defendant. This rule applies usually in cases where the plaintiff or his principal is in some position of danger from a threatened contact with some agent under the control of the defendant, when the plaintiff cannot and the defendant can prevent the injury. * * * But this principle cannot govern where both parties are contemporaneously and actively in fault, and, by their mutual carelessness, an injury ensues to one or both of them." See, also, Hager v. Southern Pac. Co., 98 Cal. 309, 33 Pac. 119; Esrey v. Southern Pac. Co., 103 Cal. 541, 37 Pac. 500. The rule can never apply to a case where, as here, the negligence of the party injured continued up to the very moment of the injury, and was a contributing and efficient cause thereof; for it is apparent that, by the slightest care and effort on the part of the deceased, he could have put himself out of danger up to the last moment before he was struck.

Our conclusion is that the plaintiffs did not make out a case entitling them to recover, and that the refusal of the trial court to grant the motion for nonsuit was error. It may be added that an examination of the evidence on the part of the defendant serves only to strengthen the case as to the negligence of the deceased, and the absence of negligence on the part of the defendant, and makes it clear that the court should have granted defendant's request to instruct the jury to find for the latter. It follows that the judgment and order must be reversed, and it is so ordered.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; J. W. McKinley, Judge.

Action by Amanda P. Everett and others against the Los Angeles Consolidated Electric Railway Company. There was a judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Heard on motion to strike out portions of respondents' brief. Denied.

John D. Pope, for appellant. W. J. Hunsaker, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Motion to strike out a portion of respondents' brief, because not pertinent to anything contained in the record, and therefore improper. In view of the conclusion reached on the merits of the appeal, whereby the judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed (see opinion this day filed, 43 Pac. 207), the purpose of the motion becomes inconsequential; and for that reason the motion is denied.

BUTLER v. ASHWORTH et al. (No. 15,984.)

TORT—INDEPENDENT ACTS—SEPARATE ACTIONS—COSTS.

1. Where neglect of a city to repair a sewer, and of its officers to properly repair it, combine to cause sewage to overflow land, though the landowner can have but one satisfaction in damages, since she must sue each separately, she is not within Code Civ. Proc. § 1023, prohibiting recovery of costs in more than one action where defendants, sued separately, "might have been joined as defendants in the same action."

2. Where a single injury is caused by independent acts of different parties, though the injured party is entitled to but one satisfaction, he must sue each party separately.

For former opinion, see 43 Pac. 4.

PER CURIAM. The opinion and judgment heretofore rendered herein are modified by striking therefrom the two last paragraphs thereof, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

It does not result from this, however, that the plaintiff is not entitled to her costs in the present action. While one may have a cause of action against two or more persons for the same act, it does not follow, necessarily, that he can sue them jointly. "There must be something more than the existence of two separate causes of action for the same act or default, to enable him to join the two parties liable in the single action." The injury suffered must be in some sense the result of their joint work. Pom. Rem. § 308. Here, while the injury was from one common cause, it cannot, we think, be said to have been produced by the same fault or act of the city and Ashworth. The act of the former which conduced to the cause of injury was the neglect to repair the broken sewer; while the act of the latter was the negligent repair and stopping up thereof. These two acts produced the cause from which plaintiff suffered, but they were not joint in a sense which would make the city and Ashworth joint tort feasors, and liable to be sued in a common action. While plaintiff had a right of action therefor, against each separately, she could not sue them jointly; and, while she can have but one satisfaction in damages, the case is not within section 1023 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which prevents the recovery of costs in more than one action, where the defendants, sued separately, "might have been joined as defendants in the same action."

We think the order of the court below was right in both respects appealed from, and it follows that it should be affirmed, each appellant to pay his own costs on appeal. It is so ordered.

BROKER v. TAYLOR. (No. 19,429.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 24, 1896.)

APPEAL—JUDGMENT ROLL.

Where an appeal from an order denying a new trial is dismissed for want of an undertaking, only such questions can be considered as arise upon the judgment roll.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; John L. Campbell, Judge.

Action by Henry Broker against John Taylor, administrator, etc. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Paris & Allison, for appellant. Bledsoe & Hutchins and Rolfe & Rolfe, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Defendant appealed from the judgment and an order denying a new trial. The appeal from the order was, on motion of respondent, dismissed, for want of an undertaking to support it. The questions subject to our review, therefore, are such only as arise upon the judgment roll. No such questions are presented in appellant's briefs, the points there discussed being such alone as would arise on an appeal from the order denying a new trial. We have examined the record, and are satisfied that the complaint states a cause of action, and that the findings are sufficient to support the judgment in favor of plaintiff. The suggestion made at the oral argument that the judgment should not have been against Papenhausen, as executor, is, we think, without substantial merit. The court found that he had the fund in his hands as executor; and the judgment was, in effect, that it be paid over to plaintiff in due course of administration. Technically, perhaps, the theory upon which the plaintiff recovered was that the property did not belong to the estate; but, being in defendant's hands, we cannot see wherein his rights are in any way prejudiced by the form of the judgment, and the objection may therefore be disregarded. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

HENRY v. MERGUIRE. (Sac. 51.)[1]

APPEAL—TIME OF TAKING.

The running of the year from entry of judgment, within which Code Civ. Proc. § 939, provides appeal from the judgment must be taken, is not suspended by an order granting a new trial, and appeal therefrom resulting in reversal of the order.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county; John Caldwell, Judge.

Action by Henry against Merguire. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Dismissed.

J. M. Walling and W. H. Chickering, for appellant. Thos. S. Ford, for respondent.

VAN FLEET, J. Motion by respondent to dismiss appeal from the judgment. One of the grounds of the motion is that the appeal was not taken within one year from the entry of judgment, and is therefore too late. The judgment was entered November 2, 1893, and the appeal was taken April 27, 1895. Section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that an appeal from the judgment must be taken within one year from the entry of the judgment; and it has been uniformly held that an appeal taken after that time is ineffectual, and must be dismissed. To avoid the effect of the limitation in this case it is claimed by appellant that the time within which he was otherwise required by the statute to take his appeal was suspended by the fact that the lower court, on February 19, 1894, made an order granting a new trial, which order was appealed from, and such appeal not determined until February 25, 1895, when the order was reversed. The contention of appellant is that the effect of the order granting a new trial was to vacate the judgment, and that until the reversal of the order there was no judgment in existence from which to appeal; that by reason of that fact the time intervening the making of said order and the reversal thereof should be excluded in computing the year given by the statute in which to appeal from the judgment. This position is untenable. In the first place, the period fixed by the statute is an express and peremptory limitation within which the right given must be exercised, and is not a flexible rule to be varied by extrinsic circumstances. Bornheimer v. Baldwin, 42 Cal. 31. In the second place, it is held by this court in Pierce v. Birkholm (No. 15,464, this day decided) 43 Pac. 205, that, while the ultimate effect of the order granting a new trial is to vacate and set aside the judgment, an appeal from such order operates to suspend its functions, and leave the judgment subsisting, for the purposes of an appeal therefrom, pending the appeal from the order. There was, therefore, nothing to prevent appellant from taking his appeal from the judgment within the year given for the purpose. The motion is granted, and the appeal dismissed.

POTTER v. AHRENS et ux. (L. A. 92.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 11, 1896.)

SALE OF BUSINESS—COVENANT AGAINST ENGAGING IN BUSINESS—EVIDENCE OF OWNERSHIP—LIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

1. Evidence that a woman was assisting her husband to carry on a business, that they were apparently conducting it together, that the property had all been acquired after their marriage and with community funds, and that she joined her husband in executing a contract of sale thereof, is sufficient to sustain a finding, in an action on their covenants not to re-engage in such business, that she had an interest in the property and business.

2. A sum which a contract of sale of a business and good will provides the sellers shall pay "as liquidated damages," in case they re-engage in the business, cannot be held a penalty.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Action by Anson H. Potter against Fred Ahrens and wife. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Henry Bleecker and Anderson & Anderson, for appellants. Leon F. Moss, for respondent.

VAN FLEET, J. The court found, substantially as alleged in the complaint, that on the 2d day of May, 1893, the defendants were engaged in the business of preparing, dealing in, and vending all kinds of foreign and domestic delicacies for the table, such as prepared meats, breads, cakes, pies, canned goods, and other household supplies of the kind, and were on said date the owners of a stock of such goods, together with furniture, ranges, etc., used by them in said business, at their place of business in the city of Los Angeles. That on said date defendants sold to plaintiff and one Andrew Wood their said stock of goods, furniture, etc., and the good will of the business, for the consideration of $3,000. That upon the payment of said sum, and in consideration thereof, the defendants executed and delivered to said purchasers their certain contract in writing, wherein it was provided that "the said F. Ahrens and Cresence Ahrens covenant and agree with the said Anson H. Potter and Andrew Wood that neither of us will engage in or carry on a like business in the city of Los Angeles, nor work for or assist anyone to engage in or carry on a business of the same kind or like nature; and in case of a dissolution of the partnership of the said Potter & Wood, this covenant shall inure to the benefit of the remaining partner, with like effect as though there had been no dissolution of partnership; and this covenant shall, in case of a sale of the business by said Potter & Wood, inure to the benefit of their assigns, with the same like force and effect as it would be to the said Potter & Wood had no sale been made; and, in case of a violation of this covenant, the said F. Ahrens and Cresence Ahrens agree to pay to the said Potter & Wood, or to their assigns, the sum of three thousand dollars ($3,000) as liquidated damages. This covenant shall be binding for the space of six years from the date of the consummation of the said sale." That plaintiff and said Wood carried on said business for a time, but thereafter, on June 10, 1893, they dissolved partnership, and Wood sold and delivered to plaintiff his interest in said stock, business, and good will, and the latter has since continued said business at the same place. That on November 28, 1894, the defendant Fred Ahrens, disregarding his said agreement, opened a store in said city, near plaintiff's place of business, and began conducting a like business to that referred to in said contract. That by reason of the premises plaintiff had suffered damages in the sum of $3,000. The court further found against defendants upon a special defense, made by them, that said Cresence Ahrens had no interest, at the date of said sale, in said business, stock of goods, or good will, and that her signature to said agreement had been procured by fraud. Judgment was entered on the findings in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $3,000, and defendants appeal therefrom, and from an order denying them a new trial.

1. It is contended that there is no evidence to support the findings, in so far as they are to the effect that the defendant Cresence Ahrens was interested in the sale of the business or good will; and that since a contract in restraint of trade can only be competently made by one who sells the good will of a business (Civ. Code, §§ 1673, 1674) the contract in question must be held void as to her. Independently of the question as to whether this defendant is estopped to deny her interest or title, by the written contract of sale executed by her, which we think she clearly is (2 Whart. Ev. § 1147), there is sufficient evidence in the record to sustain the findings of the court in this respect. It appeared that she was the wife of her codefendant, and assisted him in carrying on the business, that they were apparently conducting it together, and that the property in question had all been acquired during the married life of the defendants, and with community funds. Furthermore, the execution by Mrs. Ahrens with her husband of the contract of sale was in itself evidence of ownership in her. The testimony of the defendants, therefore, that she was not interested in the property or the sale, simply tended to raise a conflict upon the point, which it was the province of the trial court to determine.

2. It is further contended that plaintiff was not entitled to the amount of damages found by the court. No evidence was put in by plaintiff to establish any actual damages suffered, but, relying upon the stipulation on that subject contained in the contract of sale, plaintiff contented himself with showing a breach of the latter, and rested.

As we have seen, the contract provided that for a violation of their covenant to refrain from engaging in a like business the defendants agreed to pay to the purchasers, or to their assigns, "the sum of $3,000 as liquidated damages." Defendants contend that this provision was in the nature of a penalty, notwithstanding the amount therein designated is termed "liquidated damages," and that plaintiff was required to prove the actual damage suffered by him, and be confined in his recovery to the amount so shown. This contention is clearly untenable. While the definition of the parties in contracts of this character is not the invariable and controlling guide for construction, the subject-matter of the contract in this case was such as, in its very nature, in case of a breach, to render the proof of damages extremely difficult, if not impossible, and to manifestly make a case for liquidated damages. Norman v. Wells, 17 Wend. 136; 1 Suth. Dam. p. 507. Indeed, the difficulty arising in fixing the actual damages in instances of this kind has been generally recognized in the law, and is so recognized by our Code, which makes provision by which parties may in such cases obviate the difficulty. By section 1671 of the Civil Code it is provided that "the parties to a contract may agree therein upon the amount which shall be presumed to be the amount of damages sustained by a breach thereof, when from the nature of the case it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage." It is perfectly obvious, from the terms of the agreement here, that the parties, in making the stipulation in question, had in view the very obstacle above provided against, and intended to avoid it by fixing the amount of damages the purchasers should be deemed to have suffered in the event of a breach. This purpose is clear and unmistakable, and, the purpose being competent, the intention must be held effectual. Streeter v. Rush, 25 Cal. 68. In 1 Suth. Dam. p. 507, the author says: "The damages for breach of contract for the purchase of the good will of an established trade or business are so absolutely uncertain that courts have recognized the fullest liberty of parties to fix beforehand the amount of damages in that class of cases. In the decision of such cases the strongest expressions are to be found to the effect that the intention of the parties must govern, and that courts have no power to defeat that intention on the pretext of relieving from a bad bargain." In view of the subject-matter and terms of the contract under consideration, we would not be at liberty to put a construction upon the contract so absolutely at variance with the manifest intention of the parties thereto as to hold that the stipulation here was a mere penalty. None of the authorities relied upon by the defendants tend to support such a view. The plaintiff was therefore entitled to stand strictly upon the terms of the covenant, and, having shown a breach, he was properly awarded the amount fixed by the parties as his just redress.

3. There is nothing in the point that plaintiff is not the proper party entitled, under the covenant, to recover the damages therein fixed for its breach. The only construction that provision of the contract will bear is that the damages are to be paid, in the event of breach, to the purchasers, or to either one remaining in the business in case of dissolution of their partnership, or to their assigns in the event they shall sell to third parties. The clause cannot be limited, as contended by defendants, to a stipulation to pay Potter & Wood, jointly, or the "assigns" of both of them. It inures by its terms to the remaining partner in case of dissolution of the firm, and plaintiff is clearly the "remaining partner" within the terms of the instrument.

4. The other points made are even less plausible of merit than the foregoing, and we deem it unnecessary to consider them separately or at length. It is sufficient to say that we have not overlooked them, and that they involve no error. The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

ANDERSON v. HINSHAW. (No. 16,020.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 11, 1896.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

1. Where plaintiff sues for injuries received because of negligence of defendant in changing a guy rope to a derrick while plaintiff was on the mast, and there was evidence that he did undertake so to do, a verdict finding him guilty of negligence will not be disturbed.

2. Instructions not excepted to cannot be considered.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; A. A. Sanderson, Judge.

Action by Hans Anderson against H. H. Hinshaw. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. L. Weller, for appellant. Shadburne & Herrin, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This action was brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained through the negligence of the defendant. A jury trial was had, and a verdict returned for the plaintiff, assessing his damages at $1,000. Appellant contends for a reversal principally upon the ground that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict.

The plaintiff was employed by the defendant as a farm hand, and while so employed he ascended a derrick mast, used in hoisting hay, for the purpose of adjusting a block and tackle. While so engaged, the mast fell, as plaintiff alleges and contends, through the careless and improper interference by the defendant and his foreman with the guy ropes by which the mast was kept in position; the fall resulting in breaking defendant's leg above the knee. The evidence is far from satisfactory as to the immediate cause of the fall of the mast. At the time the plaintiff ascended the mast it was supported by two guy ropes, a third rope hanging loose from the top of the mast. Mr. Albert, the defendant's foreman, directed the plaintiff to fasten the third guy rope to a stake before ascending; but defendant said it was not necessary, as the mast was supported by the other two ropes, and he wished to use the hanging rope to climb the mast. The plaintiff was a sailor, and had followed that occupation for six years, and found no difficulty in reaching the top of the mast. After doing some work at the top, he descended a few feet, and seated himself on the cross-arm, and sat there while Mr. Albert went to a building a hundred yards or more away, to obtain a small rope. The defendant was not present when he went up the mast, but returned with Mr. Albert. The plaintiff testified that the defendant and his foreman pulled over the derrick mast, causing it to fall; that Mr. Hinshaw went over to the loose rope that he had used in climbing the mast, and took it over to where one of the guy ropes was fastened to a post; that Hinshaw and the foreman both took hold of the loose rope, and pulled the mast right down; that both were pulling on the rope when the mast fell, but for what purpose they pulled the rope he did not know; and that Mr. Albert was trying to untie the knot from the stick that was down in the ground. The defendant and his foreman denied having pulled upon the rope, or that they did anything to cause the mast to fall; that Mr. Albert did not touch the taut part of the guy rope at any time; that he was engaged in untying a small rope from the end of the guy rope, and not interfering with the knot by which it was secured to the post. The defendant testified that he knelt down and held the guy rope that was fastened to a fence post, but did not pull it or work with it, and that he did not at any time take hold of the loose guy rope, or walk with it to the fastened guy near which he and his foreman were standing when it fell. They further testified that the mast fell away from the point where they were standing, and insist that, if the mast had fallen in consequence of their pulling upon the rope, it would have fallen towards them, instead of away from them. The evidence is by no means satisfactory as it appears in the record. It is not stated that either of the two guy ropes that sustained the mast when the plaintiff went up were either broken or untied. And it would appear that, if the mast was sufficiently supported to enable the plaintiff to climb to the top, work there for some time, and then sit on the mast-arm for 10 or 20 minutes, that there must have been some cause operating at the time the mast fell to cause its fall, other than the plaintiff's position upon the mast. C. W. Jones, a witness for the plaintiff, but who was not present at the time of the accident, testified that he had a conversation with the defendant after the accident, and asked him how it happened; that the defendant said: "They concluded [meaning himself and foreman] to move a certain guy rope that was in the corral, and I asked him whether Joe, the plaintiff, objected to moving the rope, and he said that he did not know that Joe should talk to him and Horace about the rope, as they were supposed to know more about it than Joe did, as he was up there and they were down below; but said that they had concluded to move the rope that was in the corral. They were afraid that the mules would run against it. He did not say that they had moved the rope at all." The mast supported by the two guy ropes must have leaned in a direction opposite to the points at which the guy ropes were fastened. If these ropes remained fastened, and the fall of the mast was caused by pulling upon the loose rope in the direction of one of the guy ropes, the mast must have fallen across the line drawn between the points where the guy ropes were fastened. The fall of the mast in the opposite direction shows conclusively that the fall was not caused by pulling upon the loose rope in the direction that the plaintiff asserted; and it is equally clear that the mast could not have fallen in the opposite direction without one or both of the guy ropes breaking or being untied. The testimony of Jones tends strongly to show that the defendant and his foreman undertook to change one of the guy ropes, and that in doing so the mast fell.

The question, then, arises whether the defendant was negligent in attempting to change one of the two guy ropes by which the mast was sustained, and we think the jury were clearly justified in coming to the conclusion—if they found that the defendant did undertake to move one of the guy ropes in order to change its position, while the plaintiff was upon the mast, leaving it secured by but one rope, which could not hold it in position—that it was negligence. It is therefore the not unfrequent case of a conflict of testimony, which will not permit a verdict to be disturbed upon appeal. At the conclusion of the evidence defendant's counsel moved for a nonsuit, which was denied, and an exception taken. There was sufficient testimony to justify the court in overruling the motion and submitting the facts to the jury.

Appellant, in his brief, contends that certain instructions given by the court to the jury were erroneous. These instructions, however, were not excepted to, and cannot, therefore, be considered.

Another point made by appellant is that the jury disregarded and violated the instructions given by the court upon the question of negligence. The instruction is long, and need not be stated. It was certainly favorable to the defendant, but at the same time fairly left the question for the jury to determine the cause of the fall of the mast, and whether the defendant and his foreman had negligently caused its fall. Under these instructions, if the jury believed the testimony of the plaintiff, they could properly render a verdict in his favor.

It is also argued by appellant that the evidence of the plaintiff was so contradictory and unsatisfactory that the court below erred in denying the defendant's motion for a new trial. It does not appear to us from the record that the court abused its discretion in denying said motion, though, if the motion had been granted, we could not have disapproved the order. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 13, 1896.)

Payment — Receipts — Prior Assignment of Claim—Copy of Account—Delivery to Adversary—Bill of Particulars—Motion to Exclude.

1. Where an account for goods sold to defendant was assigned to plaintiff with defendant's knowledge, and afterwards the assignor, in a settlement with defendant, gave a receipt in full for other accounts which, by mistake, included the one previously assigned, such settlement did not relieve defendant from its liability to plaintiff.

2. Where a copy of an account sued on was delivered 6 days after demand, but 40 days before the trial, such delivery complied with Code Civ. Proc. § 454, requiring a party to deliver to his adversary such a copy within 5 days after demand, or be excluded from giving evidence thereof.

3. When a bill of particulars is objectionable, and defendant intends to object to the introduction of evidence, he must, before the trial, move for an order to exclude it.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. L. Pierce, Judge.

Action by D. O. McCarthy against the Mt. Tecarte Land & Water Company to recover on an account for goods sold and delivered. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jas. E. Wadham and F. W. Stearns, for appellant. McDonald & McDonald and Gibson & Titus, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Appeals from the judgment and from the order denying a new trial. Plaintiff averred that between the 21st day of August and the 24th day of November, 1891, the firm of J. Harvey McCarthy & Co. had, at the request of defendant, sold and delivered to it goods, wares, merchandise, and moneys of the value of $2,500; that the interest of the firm in and to said claim and account had been assigned to plaintiff upon November 24, 1891; that thereafter defendant paid to plaintiff on said account the sum of $250, and no more. Judgment was asked for the unpaid amount, with interest. Defendant answered, denying that it ever ordered or received the merchandise or moneys, or any part thereof. It also denied that it had paid $250, or any other sum. The court found in accordance with the complaint that goods, etc., of the value of $2,500 had been delivered to defendant, and this finding is not attacked. It found the payment by defendant to plaintiff of $250, and no more. This finding is attacked. The basis of attack is evidence of a settlement had between defendant and J. Harvey McCarthy, a partner of the firm, which settlement, it is claimed, included all of the items, matters, and things here in controversy. It appears that J. Harvey McCarthy had an action pending against this defendant for goods and merchandise sold, in which he demanded judgment for $1,200. A settlement was had between him and the company, and upon a bundle of accounts (some of which embrace the items here in litigation) he signed this receipt: "Payment and full satisfaction of balance due on within accounts, and also of all other demands included in the complaint in the action entitled 'J. Harvey McCarthy vs. Mt. Tecarte Land and Water Company, No. 6,811.'" But McCarthy testified that he did not examine the bills; that he thought the settlement embraced only the items in litigation in the action; and that he so expressed himself to the defendant's attorney, saying at the same time that he had previously assigned to his father (this plaintiff) a claim for $2,500. The language of the receipt is not at variance with this evidence. Moreover, this settlement was had in 1892. The assignment to plaintiff was executed in 1891, and the directors of the defendant corporation were informed of it at one of their regular meetings shortly after it was made. Under these circumstances a settlement with J. Harvey McCarthy would not relieve defendant from its liability for the debt previously transferred to plaintiff. Gilman v. Curtis, 66 Cal. 116, 4 Pac. 1094; Works v. Merritt, 105 Cal. 467, 38 Pac. 1109. There is thus sufficient evidence to sustain the finding of the court.

On the 15th day of December, 1894, defendant made demand on plaintiff for a bill of particulars. Six days thereafter, on December 21st, the bill was served. More than 40 days thereafter trial was commenced. Upon the trial, defendant, without objection then or previously made to the sufficiency of the account as furnished, opposed the reception of any evidence upon the ground that it had not been delivered within five days after demand. Section 454 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a party must deliver to his adversary within five days after demand a copy of an account sued upon, or be precluded from giving evidence thereof. It is for a rigid construction of this section that appellant contends, insisting that its provisions are mandatory, and leave the court no discretion in the matter. But this view finds no support in the reason which called the section into existence. In the simplification of pleadings it is designed to protect the adverse party from embarrassment upon the trial, by enabling him to demand and obtain in advance a detailed statement of the items charged against him. If the demand is not complied with then, for the refusal or gross neglect the prescribed penalty may be exacted. If the demandant receives the copy long enough before the trial to enable him to examine it and prepare his defense, so far as he is concerned the statute has fulfilled its usefulness. It would be to the last degree oppressive to hold that a plaintiff must lose his cause of action because, though he had furnished the copy of his account more than 40 days before the trial, he had served it upon the sixth, instead of the fifth, day after demand. The circumstances of this case will serve to illustrate the injustice and oppression which would follow so drastic a rule. The plaintiff delivered the copy of his account to defendant more than 40 days before the trial. No objection was made to its sufficiency. Defendant's secretary compared the account with plaintiff's books. At the trial no item of the account was attacked, no word of evidence offered in dispute of its correctness. The court found that $2,250 was justly due to plaintiff, and yet defendant would seek to avoid payment because the copy was served, not so late as to embarrass his defense, but a day later than the statute contemplates. A court would be reluctant to adopt a construction which would lead to such results, and we are not compelled to do so. We are referred to no authority construing the provisions of such a statute as mandatory; but, upon the other hand, it is uniformly held that the language serves but to name a penalty, vesting the discretionary power of exacting it or not in the sound discretion of the trial judge. Robbins v. Butler, 13 Colo. 496, 22 Pac. 803. In Graham v. Harmon, 84 Cal. 185, 23 Pac. 1097, it is said that the penalty only applies where the party refuses to furnish the copy; and in Conner v. Hutchinson, 17 Cal. 279, it is held that, if the bill of particulars is for any reason objectionable, and the adverse party proposes to object to the introduction of evidence, he may not wait until the trial, but previous to the trial must move for and obtain an order excluding the evidence. Such is also the rule laid down in Kellogg v. Paine, 8 How. Prac. 329, and in Isham v. Parker, 3 Wash. St. 774, 29 Pac. 835. This defendant failed to do, and for that additional reason his objection was properly overruled.

[1] Rehearing denied.

Objection was also made to the admission in evidence of certain original books of entry of the firm of J. Harvey McCarthy & Co. To set forth the evidence given as the foundation for their admission would be profitless. Suffice it to say that it was sufficient to warrant the court's ruling. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

MERCED COUNTY v. FLEMING. (Sac. 73.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 21, 1896.)

ORDINANCE—VALIDITY—BURDEN OF PROOF—PROHIBITORY TAX—QUESTION OF LAW.

1. The introduction of the ordinance book, containing a certain ordinance, and showing its passage by the board, with the vote thereon, and the proper authentication thereof, together with evidence, as to its due publication, is prima facie proof of its validity, though the regularity of the proceedings was denied.

2. Whether an ordinance imposing a license tax on liquors is in fact prohibitory is a question for the court, to be determined from the ordinance itself; and evidence that it was prohibitive is not admissible.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Merced county.

Action by Merced county against C. E. Fleming to recover a liquor license tax. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. Baker and C. Michener, for appellant. F. G. Ostrander, for respondent.

VAN FLEET, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, in an action to recover a liquor license imposed by an ordinance of the board of supervisors of the plaintiff county.

1. It is claimed that the court below erred in admitting in evidence the ordinance under which the action is prosecuted, and holding that it was regularly adopted, because it was not shown that it was adopted at a regular session of the board. The regular ordinance book of the board was produced from the custody of the clerk,—the official in whose keeping it belonged,—and duly identified, and the ordinance in question was found therein regularly and properly recorded. It contained the recital, at the end thereof: "The foregoing ordinance was passed and adopted by the board of supervisors of said Merced county, at a regular session of said board, this, the eleventh day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-five, by the following vote: Ayes: Supervisors C. C. Nelson, G. P. Kensey, J. H. Edwards. Noes: J. W. Haley, R. Shaffer." This was followed by a proper authentication by the signature of the chairman of the board and attestation of the clerk. Evidence was also introduced showing the due publication of the ordinance. This was sufficient to establish a prima facie case of regularity in the adoption of the ordinance, and entitle it to be admitted in evidence. That the ordinance was passed at a regular session was one of the presumptions afforded by the prima facie showing made, and, if defendant desired to overcome that presumption by showing that in fact it was not so passed, the burden was upon him. San Diego Co. v. Seifert, 97 Cal. 599, 32 Pac. 644; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1963, subd. 15; Id. § 1918, subd. 5; Id. § 1920; Dill. Mun. Corp. (3d Ed.) § 422. "Proof of the existence and identity of the ordinance offered should by rights be all that is required of the prosecution in any case, until some showing has been made that there was irregularity in the enactment of the ordinance, in which case it becomes necessary to prove that it was properly enacted, in order to sustain a conviction or judgment. If no such question is raised, the presumption that the ordinance was properly passed becomes conclusive." Horr & B. Mun. Ord. 161. No attempt was made to rebut or overcome the prima facie showing by plaintiff in this case. The regularity of the proceedings for the adoption of the ordinance was denied in the answer, but this did not shift the burden of proof in relation thereto, and no evidence was offered to establish any irregularity. The validity of the ordinance was therefore sufficiently shown. There is nothing in the case of People v. Dunn, 89 Cal. 228, 26 Pac. 761, contravening this doctrine. The foregoing suggestions and authorities answer alike the kindred objection that it was not made to appear that in passing the ordinance the ayes and noes were entered in the minutes of the board.

2. It is further objected that the court erred in excluding the evidence offered by defendant to show that the effect of the ordinance in question, if enforced, is virtually to prohibit the retail traffic in liquors in the county of Merced. It is perfectly true that the power to regulate for the purposes of revenue is not the power to prohibit, and that an attempt to accomplish the latter object under a pretense of regulation cannot be upheld. In other words, the right to prohibit the sale or traffic in intoxicating liquors is entirely separate and distinct from the power to regulate and impose a license tax thereon for revenue purposes; and an ordinance which in terms proceeds under the latter power, but in its effect amounts to an exercise of the former, will not stand. Merced Co. v. Helm, 102 Cal. 159, 36 Pac. 399; Black, Intox. Liq. § 227. But the question here is, how is such effect to be determined? It cannot be that this question can be made to depend upon the effect of the regulation on the business of the defendant, as was the purport of the evidence offered in this case. That could afford no proper or reasonable test as to the general effect of the regulation. We think the answer is well stated in the opinion of the learned judge of the court below, wherein it is said: "There are many objections to the admission of such evidence. The discretion is committed to the board of supervisors, and they are presumed to act with good motive; and it is not to be supposed that, while pretending to fix the tax for revenue, they will make it so large as to prohibit the business. So soon as the courts hear evidence to decide whether a license tax be so high as to be prohibitory, they take upon themselves the exercise of a discretion which the laws have confided to the legislative body. If evidence is to be heard, the court might find the facts to be prohibitive to some dealers in the county by reason of the small amount of business done by them, and not prohibitive to their better patronized competitors. I find a practical unanimity of opinion that whether an ordinance be reasonable or not is a question for the court, and it seems that the same rule should apply to an ordinance claimed to be prohibitory." Such an objection is, like any other, directed to the reasonable character of the regulation,—a question to be determined from the face of the ordinance; and the provision must be upheld unless, as matter of law, the court can say that it is so unreasonable in character as to transcend the proper exercise of the right by the lawmaking power. It is not a question of fact, to be determined upon the varying circumstances of each particular case. In re Guerrero, 69 Cal. 88, 10 Pac. 261. "Whether an ordinance be reasonable and consistent with the law, or not, is a question for the court, and not the jury, and evidence to the latter on the subject is inadmissible." Dill. Mun. Corp., § 327. See, also, Ex parte Frank, 52 Cal. 610. We think the evidence was properly excluded. The judgment and order are affirmed.

KAUFMAN v. SHAIN et al. (No. 16,006.) [1]

RECORD MINUTES—AMENDMENT AFTER JUDGMENT—DISCRETION OF COURT—VACATION OF JUDGMENT—EVIDENCE TO WARRANT.

1. It is within the discretion of the trial court, on satisfactory evidence, outside the record, that the record minutes incorrectly set forth its orders, to direct an amendment thereof at any time after judgment.

2. Where judgment is entered in conformity to record minutes incorrectly directing it, on amendment of the minutes to conform to the actual order of the court, the judgment must be set aside.

[1] Rehearing denied.

3. The record minutes, on hearing, in October, 1890, of one demurrer to a complaint, pending another, directed that the demurrer be sustained and the action dismissed, and judgment was accordingly entered March 14, 1894. On motion by the other demurrant, May 4, 1894, to amend the minutes, it appeared the neither his own nor plaintiff's counsel were present at the hearing on the demurrer, and, by the affidavit of the shorthand reporter, that the court, after sustaining the demurrer, on counsel requesting judgment, said: "The demurrer is sustained. I haven't allowed any amendment. If you desire it, let judgment be entered dismissing the action. I say that must follow as matter of course; but I simply sustain the demurrer here." In the calendar notes of the judge, following the title of the cause, appeared: "Demurrer sustained. Action dismissed, if counsel are present." The only evidence contravening this was the record itself. Held, that an amendment of the minutes, by elimination of the order directing judgment of dismissal, and setting aside the judgment, was proper.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by one Kaufman against Shain and others. In accordance with the record minutes, judgment dismissing the complaint on demurrer of defendants Herrlich and Hanlon, pending a demurrer of defendant Davis, was entered; and from an order sustaining a motion of defendant Davis to set aside this judgment, and to amend the minutes to conform to the order actually made by the court, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Garber, Boalt & Bishop, for appellant. Frank Shay, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. An amended complaint was filed in this action May 16, 1890, to which a demurrer was filed by the defendants Herrlich and Hanlon May 23d, and by the defendant Davis June 4th. October 10, 1890, the demurrer of Herrlich and Hanlon came on for argument, and was sustained by the court; and thereupon the clerk made the following entry in his minutes, under the title of the cause: "In this case the demurrer of the defendants Julie Herrlich and John F. Hanlon to the second amended complaint coming on regularly this day to be heard, it is by the court ordered, on motion of counsel for said defendants, that said demurrer be, and the same is hereby, sustained. It is further ordered by the court that this cause be, and the same is hereby, dismissed." Thereafter, on the 14th of March, 1894, a judgment was entered by the clerk in accordance with said entry, dismissing the action, and in favor of the defendants for their costs. May 4, 1894, the defendant Davis, in accordance with a previous notice to the plaintiff therefor, moved the court for an order amending the above minute entry, by striking therefrom the clause, "It is further ordered by the court that this cause be, and the same is hereby, dismissed," upon the ground that said entry upon the minutes was not the order made by the court, and was not authorized or directed to be entered by the court, and also that the judgment be amended by limiting its effect to the defendants Herrlich and Hanlon; and in support of his motions presented the affidavit of the shorthand reporter of the court, setting forth what had transpired in court on the day the order sustaining the demurrer was made. After hearing the motions and the evidence offered in support thereof, the court made an order, August 20, 1894, directing that the minutes be amended by striking out the words, "It is further ordered by the court that this cause be, and the same is hereby, dismissed," and that the judgment entered on the 14th of March be set aside. From this order the plaintiff has appealed.

Every court of record has the inherent right and power to cause its acts and proceedings to be correctly set forth in its records. The clerk is but an instrument and assistant of the court, whose duty it is to make a correct memorial of its orders and directions; and whenever it is properly brought to the knowledge of the court that the record made by the clerk does not correctly show the order or direction which was in fact made by the court at the time it was given, the authority of the court to cause its records to be corrected in accordance with the facts is undoubted. In re Wight, 134 U. S. 136, 10 Sup. Ct. 487; Balch v. Shaw, 7 Cush. 282; Fay v. Wenzell, 8 Cush. 315; Frink v. Frink, 43 N. H. 508; Crim v. Kessing, 89 Cal. 486, 26 Pac. 1074. In the exercise of this power the court is not, however, authorized to do more than to make its records correspond to the actual facts, and cannot, under the form of an amendment of its records, correct a judicial error, or make of record an order or judgment that was never in fact given. Egan v. Egan, 90 Cal. 15, 27 Pac. 22. The power to change its judgment, as well as the time within which such change may be made, depend upon different principles; and it was held in this state, until a different rule was prescribed by statute, that this power could not be exercised after the adjournment of the term in which the judgment had been entered. Baldwin v. Kramer, 2 Cal. 582; Morrison v. Dapman, 3 Cal. 255; Carpentier v. Hart, 5 Cal. 406; Lattimer v. Ryan, 20 Cal. 628; Willson v. McEvoy, 25 Cal. 169; Casement v. Ringgold, 28 Cal. 335. The history and development of the procedure in this state upon this subject is set forth in Brackett v. Banegas, 99 Cal. 623, 34 Pac. 344. In Branger v. Chevalier, 9 Cal. 172, the same rule was applied to an order revoking the settlement of a statement, on the ground that, by being filed, the statement had become a part of the record. In De Castro v. Richardson, 25 Cal. 49, the rule was applied to an order amending a previous order granting time within which to prepare a statement on motion for a new trial. But in Spanagel v. Dellinger, 34 Cal. 476, the court held that it had erred in making such application; that, notwithstanding the adjournment of the term after judgment had been entered, the court had jurisdiction to correct or amend orders made in proceedings for a new trial, for the reason that such orders did not form a part of the "record" which had become final by the adjournment. And in Willson v. Cleaveland, 30 Cal. 192, it was held that the adjournment for the term did not affect the jurisdiction of the court over its orders made during that term, unless final judgment in the case had been entered. The same question was argued by counsel in Hegeler v. Henckell, 27 Cal. 491, but, as it did not appear from the record that any order amending the minutes had been made, the point was not passed upon by the court.

Whether the clerk has correctly recorded an order made by the court, or whether an amendment of the entry shall be made, so that the minutes shall correctly express what was done or directed, is to be determined by the court in which the motion is made; and the evidence that may be offered in support of the motion must be satisfactory to the judge of that court. The motion to correct a minute entry is eminently addressed to the court in which the entry is made, and its determination upon any conflict of evidence concerning the order that it had made is not open to review. "The amount and kind of evidence requisite to satisfy that court as to what was the real order of the court, and what was the proper entry on the docket or extended record, must rest with that court." Fay v. Wenzell, supra. In acting upon the motion, the judge is in the exercise of one of the functions of his judicial office, and will not direct the amendment unless the evidence is such as will clearly satisfy him that the entry does not correctly express the order which was made. If the motion is made upon the day succeeding the entry, his own memory of what he had directed might be sufficient; whereas, if there had been a great lapse of time between the making of the entry and the motion for its amendment, he would naturally require more explicit evidence that the entry was incorrect. See Porter v. Vaughan, 22 Vt. 269.

The court is not precluded from correcting the entry merely because the "record" does not show that it is itself incorrect. The rule at common law, that the record can be amended only when there is something in the record to amend by, was applied when it was sought to amend a judgment at a term of the court subsequent to that in which it had been signed and enrolled; but it has no application to the amendment of matters that do not form a part of the judgment roll or "record." Until the entry of the judgment the record was in the breast of the court. Afterwards, it was in the roll. It was only the "record" thus made up which imported absolute verity. "The making up of the judgment roll is the equivalent, under our practice, of the entry of record at common law." De Castro v. Richardson, 25 Cal. 49. So long as the matters remained "in paper,"—that is, before the record had been enrolled on parchment,—it was not a matter of record, but was subject to amendment upon mere suggestion. 1 Tidd. Prac. 697, 711. Mere entries in the minutes of the court are not, properly speaking, matters of record. Weed v. Weed, 25 Conn. 344. They become so only by being incorporated into bills of exception, and thus made a part of the judgment roll. In Spanagel v. Dellinger, supra, the original entry in the minutes of the court gave the appellant time within which to prepare a "statement on appeal," and after the adjournment of the term the court directed an amendment of the entry by causing it to read, "a statement on motion for new trial." There was no record or minute entry that such an order had been made, and the amendment was allowed upon a showing by the affidavit of the attorney that such was the order that had been made. In Crim v. Kessing, 89 Cal. 478, 26 Pac. 1074, an order, of which there was no entry in the minutes, was made and entered nunc pro tunc upon "proofs to the satisfaction of the court." In Rousset v. Boyle, 45 Cal. 64, after the judgment had been affirmed by the supreme court, it was amended in matter of substance, upon a showing, by matters outside of the record, that it did not conform to the judgment which had been in fact rendered. In Weed v. Weed, supra, it is said: "It is often the case that the court announces in open court the decision which it has made, without furnishing the clerk with any writing upon the subject. Were the latter to make a mistake in entering up the judgment, the injured party would be remediless, unless the mistake could be corrected upon the testimony of the judge who made the decision, and the counsel and others who were present and heard it announced." In Frink v. Frink, supra, the court said: "We think it clear, upon the authorities, that the court may make such amendments upon any competent, legal evidence, and that they are the proper judges as to the amount and kind of evidence requisite in each case to satisfy them what was the real order of the court, or actual proceeding before it,—what was the proper entry to be made upon the docket, and how the record should be extended." See, also, Gillett v. Booth, 95 Ill. 183; Bank v. Seymour, 14 Johns. 219; Hunt v. Wallis, 6 Paige, 375. This power of a court to amend its records so that they may correspond with the fact, and correctly express what was done by the court, may be exercised at any time. Crim v. Kessing, 89 Cal. 486, 26 Pac. 1074; Egan v. Egan, 90 Cal. 21, 27 Pac. 22; Frink v. Frink, 43 N. H. 508; Balch v. Shaw, 7 Cush. 282; Fay v. Wenzell, 8 Cush. 315; Hart v. Reynolds, 3 Cow. 42, note. "No lapse of time will divest the court of its power, or absolve it from its duty, to supply deficiencies in the records of its own proceedings, where justice and the truth of the case require it." Lewis v. Ross, 37 Me. 230. In Cradock v. Radford, 4 Mod. 371, the court ordered the roll to be brought in and amended 20 years after the judgment had been signed. In Frink v. Frink, supra, the amendment was allowed after a lapse of 12 years, and in Balch v. Shaw a still longer time had intervened between the entry and the amendment. In Crim v. Kessing, supra, the court, in January, ordered a nunc pro tunc order to be made as of the previous March, prior to the trial of the cause. In Rousset v. Boyle, supra, the court permitted the amendment several years after the entry of the judgment, and after it had been affirmed in the supreme court.

In view of the foregoing principles the order of the superior court must be affirmed. From the affidavit of the shorthand reporter it appeared that, when the demurrer was called for argument, there was no appearance on behalf of the plaintiff, and that the demurrer was sustained, on the motion of the attorney for the demurring party, without argument; and that when, upon the direction of the court that the demurrer be sustained, the attorney asked for judgment, the court replied: "The demurrer is sustained. I haven't allowed any amendment. If you desire it, let judgment be entered dismissing the action. I say that must follow as a matter of course; but I simply sustain the demurrer here." It may be conceded that the remarks of the court are not entirely free from ambiguity; but, for the purpose of resolving this ambiguity, and determining what order was then made, the court was justified in holding that the final statement, "I simply sustain the demurrer here," was to be taken as qualifying the prior announcement to the attorney that judgment would be entered dismissing the action, if he desired it, and as declaring to him that, before such order would be entered, some additional motion must be made by him. In addition to this affidavit, there was before the judge, at the hearing of the present motion, the calendar and notebook kept by him, upon which was the following entry written by him: "Kaufman vs. Shain et al. Demurrer of J. F. Hanlon and Julie Herrlich to second amended complaint. Demurrer sustained. Action dismissed, if counsel are present." Through the words "if counsel are present" a pencil mark had been drawn, but it did not appear when or by whom it was drawn. There was another demurrer to the complaint in behalf of other defendants pending before the court, and none of the counsel for either the plaintiff or any other party to the action was present. This showing on behalf of the respondent was sufficient to sustain a finding by the judge that there had been no order made by him directing a dismissal of the action, and to authorize the minutes to be corrected accordingly. The plaintiff presented no evidence contravening the above showing, and introduced only the minute entry itself, and the judgment roll containing the judgment subsequently entered thereon.

That portion of the order setting aside the judgment must also be affirmed. Such an order necessarily followed the order amending the minute entry. The objection upon the ground of lapse of time has no application, for the reason that the motion to amend, as well as the order amending the judgment, were made within less than six months after the judgment was entered. It was not necessary that the minute entry should have been actually amended in accordance with the order therefor, before it was available upon the motion to amend the judgment. The direction for its amendment was, for the purpose of that motion, equivalent to its actual amendment. Upon the amendment of the minute entry, the premises upon which the judgment rested, and which were recited therein, fell; and, as it appeared to the court that a judgment had been entered by the clerk without any direction therefor, the court was authorized to set it aside at any time within six months after its entry, even upon its own motion, and without any request therefor. Whether the judgment had been entered at the request of the respondent, or not, was immaterial. If the clerk had no authority to enter it, it could not be binding upon him, even though it purported to be a judgment in his favor; and he was not precluded from seeking to have it set aside, even if it had been entered at his request. The order is affirmed.

CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO v. BUCKMAN. (No. 15,897.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 14, 1896.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—RESOLUTIONS—PUBLICATION—OBSTRUCTION OF STREETS—NUISANCE—INJUNCTION BY CITY.

1. Under Worley's Consolidation Act, p. 16, § 68, requiring every resolution of the board of supervisors, granting any privilege, to be published in some newspaper five successive days before final action thereon, a resolution granting property holders the privilege of grading the street in front of their premises, which was never published, never became operative.

2. Digging into and tearing up a street, thereby obstructing free passage, without authority, is a nuisance, within Civ. Code, § 3479, providing that anything which unlawfully obstructs any public street is a nuisance.

3. A municipal corporation created by the state legislature has the same right as the people to pursue all ordinary civil remedies for enjoining a public nuisance in its streets.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by the city and county of San Francisco against A. E. Buckman to restrain him from digging into, tearing up, or in any way obstructing, the roadway of Market street, in said city. From an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. H. Chapman, for appellant. H. T. Creswell, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. This is an appeal from an order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial. The action was brought to obtain a decree restraining the defendant, his agents, servants, and employés, from digging into, tearing up, or in any way interfering with, the roadway, roadbed, sidewalks, or grade of Market street, between the points of its junction with Valencia street and Seventeenth street, in the city and county of San Francisco. The defendant, by his answer, admitted that he had commenced, with a large force of men, to grade a portion of Market street between the points named; and, to justify his right to do so, he set up an order (No. 2,318) passed by the board of supervisors of said city and county in December, 1890, "changing and establishing grades on Market street, southwesterly from Valencia street," and a resolution (No. 4,498, third series) passed by the said board in January, 1891, granting permission to certain property owners on Market street, between Valencia and Seventeenth streets, to grade said street in front of their property to the center line thereof. And he alleged that under a contract with the said property owners, and a permission duly obtained from the superintendent of streets, he was proceeding to grade the street to the official grade, for and on behalf of the property owners, and was lawfully performing said work, when restrained by the order of the court below. The case was tried, and the court found that, at all the times mentioned, Market street was, and still is, one of the public streets of the city and county of San Francisco; that at the time of the commencement of the action the defendant was engaged, with a large force of men in his employment and under his control, in digging, tearing up, removing, and otherwise destroying and obstructing, the roadway of said street, between Valencia and Seventeenth streets, in such a manner as to obstruct the free passage and use of the same, and to destroy the roadway thereof for the use and purposes of a street and thoroughfare, and threatened to continue said acts; that all of said acts of defendant were done without the consent or permission of plaintiff, or any of its officers or agents, and contrary to the express commands of plaintiff; and, as conclusions of law, that the said acts of defendant constitute a public nuisance, and plaintiff is entitled to a writ of injunction to restrain the further continuance thereof. A decree was accordingly entered granting the plaintiff the relief prayed for.

The principal question presented for decision is, were the findings of the court justified by the evidence? It was proved on behalf of the plaintiff that on July 26, 1887, an order (No. 1,924) was passed by the board of supervisors establishing the grade of Market street between Valencia and Seventeenth streets, and it was admitted by defendant that, prior to the passage of order No. 2,318, the said street had been graded to the official grade as so established. It was further proved that resolution No. 4,498 (third series) was never passed to print, but was introduced at a meeting of the board held on January 2, 1891, and was then and there, on a vote taken by the board, declared to be adopted, and no other or further action thereon was ever taken, and also that on February 2, 1891, a resolution (No. 4,672, third series) expressly repealing resolution No. 4,498 was adopted by the board. It was also proved that on January 19, 1891, an order (No. 2,388) expressly repealing order No. 2,318 was passed by the board. The general street law of 1885, as amended in 1889 (St. 1889, p. 157), contains very full and complete provisions for work upon public streets. The general rule is that the work is to be done by contract, and to be paid for by assessments of the expense upon the adjoining property owners, in the proportions fixed by the statute. The only exception to this rule is found in subdivision 10 of section 7 of the act, whereby it is provided that "it shall be lawful for the owner or owners of lots or lands fronting upon any street, the width and grade of which have been established by the city council, to perform at his or their own expense (after obtaining from the council permission so to do, but before said council has passed its resolution of intention to order grading inclusive of this) any grading upon said street to its full width, or the center line thereof, and to its grade as then established," etc. And in section 68 of the consolidation act it is provided that "every ordinance or resolution of the board of supervisors, providing for any specific improvement, the granting of any privilege * * * shall, after its introduction in the board, be published, with the ayes and nays, in some city daily newspaper at least five successive days before final action by the board upon the same," etc. Worley's Consolidation Act, p. 16. From the foregoing provisions of the statutes, it is evident that the owners of lots fronting on Market street had no right to proceed to grade the street, or to contract with any one else to grade it, until after they had obtained permission from the board of supervisors to do so, and that such permission was a privilege, which could only be granted in the mode prescribed, namely, after publication for at least five days. It must follow, therefore, as resolution No. 4,498 was never published, that it never became operative, or authorized the lot owners to grade, or in any way to disturb, the street, in front of their premises, and that their contract with appellant to do work which they had no right to do was void and of no effect.

But, if this be so, it still is claimed for appellant that the "proof shows, at best, only a naked trespass, and against such a trespass equity will not grant an injunction." This proposition cannot be maintained. The proofs show that appellant was committing more than a mere trespass. He was unlawfully obstructing the free passage or use, in the customary manner, of a public street of the city, and this, under the provisions of the Code, constituted a public nuisance. Civ. Code, §§ 3479, 3480. And the Code of Civil Procedure expressly provides that a nuisance may be enjoined or abated, and damages therefor recovered, in the same action. Section 731. In People v. Holladay, 93 Cal. 248, 29 Pac. 54, it is said: "The city and county of San Francisco is a municipal corporation created by the legislature of the state, and has conferred upon it by the state full power and jurisdiction over the public squares within its territorial limits, with the right to sue and be sued; and this necessarily includes the authority to maintain and defend all actions relating to its right to subject to the public use such squares or land claimed by it to have been dedicated for such purposes. * * * A municipal corporation is, for many purposes, but a department of the state organized for the more convenient administration of certain powers belonging to the state [citing authorities]; and such corporations, in their management and control over streets and squares within their limits, and in actions for the vindication and preservation of the public rights therein, exercise a part of the sovereignty of the state. Accordingly, it has been held that a city has the same right to maintain an action to prevent the unlawful obstruction of a street as would the people of the state. [Citing authorities.]" It will be observed that the law seems to be settled that a city, as the representative of the state, has the right to pursue all the ordinary civil remedies for enjoining or abating a public nuisance upon its streets or squares; and the only question in this case is, does it appear that the defendant was justified in his action? We are satisfied that no sufficient justification was shown, and therefore advise that the order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

LEWIS v. TERRY et al. (No. 15,934.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 21, 1896.)

SALE OF DEFECTIVE ARTICLES—LIABILITY TO PERSON INJURED.

One who, knowing an article to be defectively constructed, represents it to be safe, and sells it to a person who has no knowledge of the defect, is liable in damages to one who, without fault on his part, was injured while lawfully using the same.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Grace E. Lewis against Joseph T. Terry and others for damages. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

H. M. Clement, for appellant. Geo. E. Lawrence, for respondents.

BRITT, C. It is alleged in the complaint in this case, among other things, that defendants were engaged as copartners in the business of selling household furniture, and that among the wares dealt in by them were certain folding beds, which were represented and warranted by defendants to their customers and the public to be safe for use; that defendants, in the course of said business, sold and delivered one of said beds to a Mr. Apperson and his wife, and expressly represented and warranted to them that such bed was so constructed that it would stand upright against the wall during the daytime, inclosing necessary bed furniture, and at night its front could, with little effort, be lowered to a horizontal position, by means of hinges at the bottom; that a solid piece of iron inclosed in framework at the back of the bed acted as a balance to the front part while being lowered, and rendered it easy to raise or lower the same with perfect safety; that, as soon as the front part was lowered, the legs of the same would automatically descend, and securely lock themselves, so that the outer end of the bed would be firmly supported in its horizontal position upon its said legs. It is further alleged that there was an inherent and latent defect in said bed, so that the said legs would sometimes fail to adjust and secure themselves, with the result that, if any weight should be placed on the bed, the heavy upright frame would be precipitated with such force upon the lowered portion of the bed as to crush, wound, and even kill anyone reclining thereon, and that such defect rendered the bed dangerous to all who might use it; that defendants, with full knowledge of such defect and of such danger, sold the bed to the Appersons, without warning them thereof, and assured them that it was perfectly safe; that plaintiff rented a room from the Appersons, and, on the day the bed was purchased from defendants by them, it was placed in such room for plaintiff to sleep on; that a few days later the plaintiff, being about to retire for the night, opened and let down the bed, and, the legs thereof being apparently secure, she, in the course of her preparations for retiring, leaned with her left arm upon the side of the bed; and, while she was in this attitude, the heavy upright framework of the bed fell forward and downward, upon the horizontal part, and upon the plaintiff, breaking her arm, and otherwise injuring her, to her damage, etc. A demurrer to this complaint, on the ground that it fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, was sustained, and judgment passed for defendants.

[1] Rehearing denied.

The complaint is faulty in not stating directly that the fall of the bed was caused by the latent defect described, but, as the argument of the parties has proceeded on the theory that such was the fact, we may join in that assumption. Schubert v. J. R. Clark Co., 49 Minn. 335, 51 N. W. 1103. We agree that the action cannot be sustained on the ground of any privity of contract between plaintiff and defendants, for there was none. If a tradesman sells or furnishes for use an article actually unsound and dangerous, but which he believes to be safe, and warrants accordingly, he is not liable for injuries resulting from its defective or unsafe condition to a person who was neither a party to the contract with him, nor one for whose benefit the contract was made. Coughtry v. Woolen Co., 56 N. Y. 127; Heizer v. Manufacturing Co., 110 Mo. 605, 19 S. W. 630; Winterbottom v. Wright, 10 Mees. & W. 109 (the leading case); Shear & R. Neg. § 116; 1 Bevan, Neg. p. 60 et seq. But when the seller, as in the case made by the complaint before us, represents the article to be safe for the uses it was designed to serve, when he knows it to be dangerous, because of concealed defects, he commits a wrong independent of his contract, and brings himself within the operation of a principle of the law of torts. "It is well settled that a man who delivers an article, which he knows to be dangerous or noxious, to another person, without notice of its nature and qualities, is liable for any injury which may reasonably be contemplated as likely to result, and which does in fact result, therefrom, to that person or any other who is not himself in fault." Wellington v. Oil Co., 104 Mass. 64, per Gray, J.; Schubert v. J. R. Clark Co., 49 Minn. 331, 51 N. W. 1103; Elkins v. McKean, 79 Pa. St. 493; Shear. & R. Neg. § 117. See Civ. Code, §§ 43, 1708. The liability of the willful wrongdoer in like instances is recognized in several cases cited in support of the judgment. Longmeid v. Holliday, 6 Exch. 765; Heizer v. Manufacturing Co., 110 Mo. 605, 19 S. W. 630.

The fact insisted upon by respondents that a bed is not ordinarily a dangerous instrumentality is of no moment in this case. If mere nonfeasance or perhaps misfeasance were the extent of the wrong charged against defendants, that consideration would be important (Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397); but the fact that such articles are in general not dangerous would seem to enhance the wrong of representing one to be safe for use when known to be really unsafe, for the danger is thus rendered more insidious.

Nor is the further point that the chain of causation implicating defendants in the injury was broken by the intervention of the Appersons, as the persons who furnished the bed immediately to plaintiff, available to defendants on this appeal. To have that effect, it must appear that the Appersons knew of the defect in the structure of the bed, and so were a culpable intervening cause, and this does not appear on the face of the complaint. Pastene v. Adams, 49 Cal. 87; 1 Bevan, Neg. 76. The judgment should be reversed, with instructions to the court below to overrule the demurrer.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, with instructions to the court below to overrule the demurrer.

SHANKLIN v. GRAY et al. (No. 15,971.)

MINING CORPORATIONS—DIRECTORS' LIABILITY—FAILURE TO HAVE REPORTS VERIFIED.

1. Act April 23, 1880 ("An act for the better protection of stockholders of corporations formed for * * * conducting the business of mining"), section 1, declares it the duty of the mine superintendent to file weekly and monthly accounts and reports, verified under oath, showing receipts, disbursements, number of employés, and wages paid, reports to be kept in the office of the company, open to inspection of stockholders. Section 3 declares that, in case of the failure of the directors to have the reports and accounts made and posted as provided in section 1, they shall be liable to an action by any stockholder, who, on proof of the failure, shall recover judgment for $1,000 liquidated damages. Held that, the statute being remedial, and there being no ambiguity in it, recovery could be had of the directors for failure to have the accounts and reports of the superintendent verified by him, though they were full, true, and correct, and there was no one within many miles of the mine who could administer oaths, and the directors acted in good faith, and had been advised by counsel that it was not necessary to have them verified.

2. Under such statute, it is not necessary to prove damages. They will be implied from its violation.

3. Pendency of an action for violation of such statute will not prevent action for a violation thereof occurring after commencement of the first action, nor will recovery in the first action bar recovery in the second.

Action by Edwin S. Shanklin against H. W. Gray and others. From an order granting plaintiff a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

C. W. Cross and Jas. A. Hall, for appellants. Gear & Gear, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This action was brought to recover the sum of $1,000, liquidated damages, and costs of suit, under the provisions of an act of the legislature of this state, approved April 23, 1880 (St. 1880, p. 134; Deering's Civ. Code, pp. 148, 149), requiring the directors of mining corporations formed under the laws of this state to make, and cause to be made and posted in the office of the company, certain statements and reports. The defendants were directors of the Gray Eagle Mining Company, a corporation, at the time the alleged cause of action arose, and the plaintiff was and is a stockholder in said corporation. The complaint alleges a failure of the directors to make and post in the office of the corporation, on the 1st Monday of November, 1892, a balance sheet, or itemized account, of the receipts and disbursements for the month of October, with other matters required by the statute, and also charging that they had failed and neglected to have or require the superintendent of the company to file with the secretary thereof an itemized account, verified under oath, showing all the receipts and disbursements made by him for the previous month, and that the superintendent had not made any such account verified under oath. The action was tried by the court without a jury, findings were filed, and judgment thereon entered for the defendants. Upon plaintiff's motion an order was made granting a new trial, and from that order defendants appeal.

The court found that the directors made the itemized account or balance sheet, required by the first section of said act, for the month of October; that it was duly verified; and that it was made at the time, and posted in the office, as required by said act. As to the account and reports of the superintendent, the court found they were made, and filed in the company's office, and were kept in a conspicuous place, as required by law, but that they were not verified by the superintendent, nor by any one; that they were full, true, and correct; that the company's mine was in a remote part of the country, many miles from any officer competent to administer an oath; that the duties of the superintendent require his presence at the mine, and for those reasons said reports were not verified; that the defendants acted in good faith; that the plaintiff and all stockholders had access to all the itemized accounts and reports, and the books and papers of the corporation, and had the means of knowledge of every fact pertaining to its receipts and disbursements, and its indebtedness and liabilities, as fully as could be known from any data in the possession or control of the corporation; and that neither the plaintiff nor any stockholder had been injured in any respect.

It was contended by the plaintiff that the account, made, verified, and posted by the president and secretary, was, on its face, a balance sheet for the period of 40 days, namely, from September 21 to October 31, 1892, and therefore did not comply with the law, and especially, as he contended, that it was impossible to tell therefrom what balance was on hand on October 1st, or what disbursements were made in either of those months. The good faith of the defendants in making this report was not impugned, and, as it appears upon its face to have been intended as a compliance with the requirements of the statute in that regard, the defect, if it be such, would not justify the visitation of the statutory penalty upon them. The special grounds of objection to it, therefore, need not be further considered.

It was admitted in the answer that the statement of receipts and disbursements by the superintendent, and other reports made by him, were not sworn to by that officer; and the facts found by the court, as hereinbefore stated, were alleged in justification of his failure to make the required verification. If these facts were not sufficient to excuse the failure to verify said statements and reports, the findings were not sufficient to sustain the judgment in favor of the defendants, and the order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial was right. The act in question is entitled "An act for the better protection of stockholders in corporations formed under the laws of the state of California for the purpose of carrying on and conducting the business of mining." Section 1, so far as it relates to the superintendent's reports in question here, is as follows: "It shall be the duty of the superintendent, on the first Monday of each month, to file with the secretary an itemized account, verified under oath, showing all receipts and disbursements made by him for the previous month, and for what said disbursements were made. It shall also be the duty of the superintendent to file with the secretary a weekly statement, under oath, showing the number of men employed under him and for what purpose, and the rate of wages paid to each one. * * * All accounts, reports and correspondence from the superintendent shall be kept in some conspicuous place in the office of said company, and be open to the inspection of all stockholders." Reports of the discovery of ore were required to be made as they occurred. Section 3 of said act, among other things, provides: "In case of the failure of the directors to have the reports and accounts current made and posted as in the first section of this act provided, they shall be liable, either severally or jointly, to an action by any stockholder, in any court of competent jurisdiction, complaining thereof, and on proof of such refusal or failure such complaining stockholder shall recover judgment for one thousand dollars, liquidated damages, with costs of suit."

The only question is whether the facts alleged (and found to be true) were sufficient to excuse the failure of the superintendent to verify his reports; it appearing that the directors had informally instructed him that it was not essential, or, at least, they had not required him to make his reports under oath, and had received his previous reports without such verification, and without objection. It is doubtless true, and I assume that it is so, that the directors failed to make the positive requirement that the superintendent should verify all his reports, and had accepted them without such verification, without any evil purpose, and because of the inconvenience it would impose upon the superintendent of going "many miles" to an officer competent to administer oaths, and because such absence interfered with the discharge of his duties at the mines. It was also shown, upon the trial, that the reports in question were in fact true, and hence furnished all the information as to the several matters contained in them required by the statute. It is contended, in effect, that, as the statute is penal, it must be strictly construed, and, inasmuch as the reports were made, and were in fact true, the penalty should not be inflicted upon the defendants. The statute, however, is remedial as well as penal (Eyre v. Harmon, 92 Cal. 580, 28 Pac. 779), and "where the intent is plain it will be carried into effect. It will not be evaded or defeated on the principle of strict construction. The principle will be adhered to that the case must be brought within the letter and spirit of the enactment; but the intent of a criminal statute may be ascertained from a consideration of all its provisions, and that intent will be carried into effect. Such statutes will not be construed so strictly as to defeat the obvious intention." Suth. St. Const. § 356, and cases cited in note 1, p. 439. In Eyre v. Harmon, 92 Cal. 589, 28 Pac. 779, in discussing the construction of this statute, it was said: "But it is a general rule, applicable to the construction of penal as well as other statutes, that no word is to be eliminated from a section by the court if a sensible meaning can be given to it, unless by giving such word its meaning the real object of the statute would be defeated. With much greater reason is the court required to give effect to each word in a sentence when not to do so is to deprive the law of the vitality necessary to secure respect for its commands."

Appellants' contention would eliminate from the statute the word "verified," as used in defining or qualifying the reports required to be made by the superintendent, unless the circumstances under which these reports were made were sufficient to justify the omission. If the legislature had no beneficial or remedial purpose in requiring them to be verified little would be required to excuse the omission, and courts would be slow to visit a severe penalty upon an omission to comply with an unessential requirement. At the time of the enactment of this statute it was matter of common report, if not of common knowledge, that concealments and false reports were resorted to to affect the value of mining stocks upon the market, and it was also not unfrequently charged that superintendents, for the purposes of private gain, made false reports of their receipts and expenditures, carried "dummies" on their pay rolls, obtained rebates or commissions upon supplies purchased for the corporation, and in other ways misappropriated the funds of the corporation; and it was for the purpose of compelling such reports to be made as would inform the stockholders of the financial condition of the corporation and its management, the development of its property, the discoveries made in its mines, and, generally, of all matters which would enable them to estimate the value of their stock, and to prevent false reports, and give assurance of reliability, these reports were all required to be verified by the oath of the superintendent; and, if this requirement may be voluntarily omitted, it is obvious that the whole purpose of the act might be defeated at the will of the directors.

But it is urged that the directors acted in good faith, and did not willfully or intentionally violate the law. If by this is meant that the omission to require the superintendent to verify his reports was not because they intended in any manner to withhold information from the stockholders, or injure them in any way, it is doubtless true. An evil intention is not essential to such violation of the statute as requires a visitation of the penalty. The statute imposes upon the directors the duty of requiring the superintendent to make his reports under oath, and an omission of that duty is necessarily willful and intentional, at least where it is shown that they considered the matter and concluded that it was not necessary. The mere inconvenience imposed upon the superintendent of going five miles to verify his report is not a sufficient excuse to justify the omission, and his ordinary duties at the mine could not excuse the performance of the duty imposed by the statute. His absence could be provided for by the temporary supervision of a foreman, or other person designated by himself or by the board. It is also urged that the advice of counsel that verification of these reports was not necessary should relieve the defendants. The advice so given was by a member of the board, and it may be doubted whether the opinion so expressed was not the opinion of a director merely, instead of the opinion of an attorney who had no personal interest, and whose duty and obligation was to carefully examine the question submitted to him, and advise according to his unbiased judgment. It is not necessary, however, to decide that question. If the statute were ambiguous, and its construction doubtful, the defendants would be entitled to the benefit of the doubt, without the plea that they acted upon the construction given it by counsel. In Chase v. Railroad Co., 26 N. Y. 523, 525, a statute imposing a penalty for charging more than a certain rate per mile for carrying passengers was considered. The court said: "The great leading rule for the construction of statutes is to ascertain fairly the intention of the legislature in enacting the statute. In statutes giving a penalty, if there be a reasonable doubt of the case, made upon the trial or in the pleadings, coming within the statute, the party of whom the penalty is claimed is to have the benefit of such doubt." Or, as said by Sutherland, in his work on Statutory Construction (page 444): "If there is such ambiguity in a penal statute as to leave reasonable doubts of its meaning, it is the duty of the court not to inflict the penalty." None of the cases we have found go further. The intention of the legislature is to be collected from the words they employ, and where there is no ambiguity in the words there is no room for construction. Here there is no ambiguity, —no room to doubt that the statute requires these reports to be verified; and in such case an opinion of counsel to the contrary cannot relieve from the penalty. If the motives of the defendants in not requiring these reports to be verified were a material issue in the case, the advice of counsel might tend to show the absence of an evil intention; but such advice cannot raise a doubt as to the construction of the statute here involved. It is also urged that the recovery is not as a fine, or penalty, or forfeiture, but as liquidated damages, and that, therefore, some detriment or damage should be shown. As this statute is intended for the benefit of stockholders, its violation necessarily implies an injury.

Prior to the time when this cause of action accrued, the plaintiff commenced an action, under the statute here in question, against W. E. Lamb, A. Searles, and Martin Devereux, who were directors of said corporation prior to September 21, 1892, at which last-named date they ceased to be directors, and were succeeded by the defendants in this case. That action was commenced October 27, 1892, alleging the failure of the defendants to make and file similar reports for the months of May, June, July, and August, 1892. This action was commenced on November 11, 1892, for the failure to make the reports on the first Monday of November for the preceding month of October; and the defendants herein pleaded the pendency of the former action in bar. That plea is not good. It is true that but one recovery of $1,000 can be had for any number of delinquencies occurring before the suit is brought; but neither the pendency of such action, nor a recovery therein, is a bar to an action for a delinquency occurring after the former action was commenced. This cause of action did not accrue until the first Monday in November, and therefore did not exist when the former action was commenced. That there can be but a single penalty for past delinquencies, see Loveland v. Garner, 71 Cal. 541, 12 Pac. 616; but that a recovery for past delinquencies is not a bar to an action for a delinquency occurring afterwards, see Schofield v. Doray, 89 Cal. 55, 26 Pac. 606. The fact that judgment in the former action had not been rendered does not operate to relieve them from delinquencies occurring during its pendency, as, otherwise, they would be relieved from any observance of the statute by the mere pendency of the action. Besides, the action is not against the corporation, but against the individual; and these defendants, who became directors after the delinquencies charged in the former suit, could not be made liable therefor, nor could persons who ceased to be directors in September be held liable for the delinquencies of their successors. The order granting a new trial should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; BRITT, C.

PHILBROOK v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (S. F. 267.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 16, 1896.)

DISBARRED ATTORNEY—RIGHT TO PROSECUTE ACTION.

Where, after an action had been commenced, the plaintiff therein assigned his claim in good faith to one who had been disbarred from practicing as an attorney at law, and an order was made continuing said action in the name of said plaintiff for the benefit of the assignee, the assignee may personally prosecute the claim.

In bank. Petition for mandamus by Horace W. Philbrook to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. Writ issued.

Horace W. Philbrook, in pro. per. S. O. Houghton, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Samuel W. Latz commenced an action in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco against Louisa A. Greenhood, executrix, appearing therein in person, and not by attorney. After this action was at issue and ready for trial, Horace W. Philbrook, petitioner herein, presented to the judge of the court a written transfer and assignment by Latz to himself of Latz's interest and cause of action in said suit, and applied to the court for an order substituting himself in place of Latz as plaintiff therein. In response to this application, an order was made, as permitted by the Code, continuing said action in the name of Latz for the benefit of Philbrook. Code Civ. Proc. § 385. Thereafter, the cause coming on for trial, petitioner herein appeared in person, asserting the right in his own interest and on his own behalf to conduct the case of the plaintiff in the action so being prosecuted for his benefit. The court, upon objection made by defendant's attorney, refused to allow him to do so; and, the case coming thus to a standstill, it was continued to await a determination of the question. It is under these circumstances that application is made to this court for a writ of mandate. The refusal of the trial judge, as fully appears by the transcript of the proceedings had in his court, and here made a part of his answer, was based solely upon what he deemed to be his duty in the premises under the judgment of this court suspending said Philbrook from his office of attorney at law. In re Philbrook, 105 Cal. 471, 38 Pac.

511, 884. In making that refusal the judge said: "A few days ago you came here with a written assignment from Mr. Latz to yourself, from which it appears that you are the assignee and owner of the claim,—a claim for services on behalf of Mr. Latz originally. I accept that assignment as made to you, as I have stated before, in perfect good faith that you are the owner of that claim, and, in conformity with the Code of this state, upon your motion, I made an order that this action should be prosecuted under the name of Mr. Latz, but for your benefit as the assignee. Now, you attempt here to present this case on your own behalf, as you say; and the suggestion is made by Mr. Houghton, as an attorney of this court, * * * that you cannot present this matter as an attorney. I think he is right about it. I think I should be in contempt of the supreme court myself if I allowed such an evasion of their judgment. If the action was in your own behalf, as I suggested a moment ago, if you had met with personal injury to yourself, say, a year ago, and you were suing the railroad company, for instance, you would have a right, and the disbarment proceedings would not affect you. If money was due you,—owing to you,—you would have a right to present the case. But I don't think that you have a right to buy claims that are in process of litigation, and come in here, and present before the court and jury a cause of action in that form. If that were so, it would enable you to do indirectly what the supreme court says you cannot do directly. In other words, you are evading the decision of the supreme court against you; and therefore I do not think that I should permit you to appear." It thus appears that the order of refusal was not based upon any finding in fact, or, in effect, that the assignment was not made in good faith, or that, as between the parties, it was a simulated transfer, not meant to carry title. Upon the contrary, it was made after declared recognition and acceptance by the court of the good faith and sufficiency of the assignment.

Under the facts thus presented, the court mistook the scope of the judgment of suspension. That judgment did not, and did not attempt to, limit petitioner in the exercise of any rights formerly enjoyed by him, saving those pertaining to the office of attorney at law. One acts as an attorney at law only when he represents another, not when he appears for himself. Petitioner, having the undoubted right lawfully to acquire any form of property, has equally the right to its perfect enjoyment, and, as a necessary incident to that right, the full power accorded to all of appearing in person to prosecute or defend all actions for its protection or preservation. And this power is not, as the court held, limited to the prosecution or defense in person of property rights owned by this petitioner at the time of the commencement of any action affecting them. His right to acquire a chose in action, and to protect in person his property in it when acquired, is not cut off by the fact that it may, at the time of acquirement, be already the subject of litigation.

What has been said presupposes a bona fide transfer of the chose in action, such a transfer as the court assumed or found to exist. It by no means follows, however, that petitioner's right to appear in person would be determined, as he argues, by the fact that the transfer is such as to leave to defendant no valid ground of objection to the substitution. A defendant's right is to have a cause of action prosecuted against him by the real party in interest. But, as has been elsewhere pointed out, his concern ends when a judgment for or against the nominal plaintiff would protect him from any action upon the same demand by another, or when, as against the nominal plaintiff, he may assert all defenses and counterclaims available to him were the claim prosecuted by the real owner. Giselman v. Starr, 106 Cal. 651, 40 Pac. 8. It matters not to the defendant whether, in truth, the transfer be genuine or simulated, so long as in law it is sufficient to protect him. But the concern of the trial court, under the circumstances, is quite different. It is bound to give due effect to the judgment of this tribunal. Its duty, therefore, is not alone to determine whether or not the transfer is such as will protect the defendant, but equally to determine whether the transfer be genuine or simulated to evade the judgment of this court. To a genuine transfer, as has been said, the judgment of this court has no application. But a simulated transfer would carry no interest, and, under such circumstances, a party would be asking a substitution that he might prosecute or defend in person rights which in fact belonged not to him, but to another. In such a case, therefore, the trial court should satisfy itself—First, that the rights of the adverse party would be protected under the substitution asked; and, second, that the transfer is not simulated and in evasion of the judgment of this court; and only when so satisfied should it make its order permitting the substitution.

A writ of mandate should issue directing the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, and the judge of department 7 thereof, to permit plaintiff herein to conduct personally, in his own interest and behalf, and on the part of the nominal plaintiff, Samuel W. Latz, the action in question.

PEOPLE v. HAWLEY. (Cr. 20.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 21, 1896.)

BURGLARY—TRIAL—SEPARATION OF JURY—VERDICT—EVIDENCE—REVERSAL—VIEW—PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION—DEPOSITION—ADMISSIBLE ON TRIAL.

1. On a trial for burglary, the jury, after several hours' deliberation, were brought in, towards night, and announced that an agreement could not be had without a view of the premises. The court, after consulting with counsel apart from the jury, over the objection of the prosecution, decided to allow the view, on defendant's request, and, with his consent, to dismiss the jury for the night, as no view could be had till morning. The next morning defendant's counsel privately told the court that he would move to dismiss because of the separation of the jury, at which the court became greatly indignant, and, when the counsel moved for the dismissal, denied the motion, and, in an indignant tone, told the jury that they had been dismissed the night before on the motion and with the consent of defendant and his counsel, but "defendant now prefers to move that all proceedings in this case be dismissed." The jury then retired, and, without a view, in five minutes, returned a verdict of guilty. Held, that the verdict must be set aside.

2. A motion to discharge defendant in a criminal case for separation of the jury, had on his motion and with his consent, is properly denied.

3. It is within the discretion of the court, on a trial for burglary, when informed by the jury that they cannot agree on a verdict without a view of the premises, to allow such view, with consent of defendant.

4. Pen. Code, § 1128, requires the jury, after retiring to deliberate, to be kept together. Held, that the requirement is mandatory, and a separation, though by order of court, with consent of the defendant, is a violation of the requirement, and vitiates a conviction.

5. In a criminal trial a deposition of the defendant, taken on his preliminary examination, is admissible to impeach his testimony as to the same facts, his attention having been first called to it, notwithstanding Pen. Code, § 686, provides that depositions or preliminary examinations can only be read on the trial where the witness is dead, or insane, or absent from the state.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; W. R. Daingerfield, Judge.

E. G. Hawley was convicted of burglary, and from the judgment and an order denying a new trial he appeals. Reversed.

H. A. Massey and August Tilden, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

HAYNES, C. Upon the trial of this case the defendant was found guilty of burglary in the second degree, and was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison at Folsom for the term of three years; and from that judgment, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, he appeals.

Before the evidence was concluded, the defendant moved the court for an order permitting the jury to view the premises alleged to have been entered. This motion was denied, after an expression from the jury as to their wishes; nine of the jury responding that they did not wish to view the premises, two expressing a desire to view them, and the twelfth juror remaining silent. Afterwards, the evidence having been concluded, the jury were instructed by the court, and retired, in charge of an officer, to consider their verdict. After several hours' deliberation, at the request of a juror, the court directed that the jury be brought in; and, having reported that they had not agreed upon a verdict, the following proceedings were had: "The Court: Gentlemen, I received a message from one of the jury with regard to viewing the premises. Do I understand that any of your number desires to view the premises before rendering a verdict. A Juror: Yes, sir. The Court: The message that reached me was that an agreement could not be arrived at without viewing the premises. A Juror: That is it. That is the way it stands now. The Court: I sent down to the premises, and was informed that the lady in possession had gone to Sausalito, and will not be back until to-morrow morning, and the premises are locked up. A Juror: It would be impossible to agree, without seeing the premises, the way it stands now." At this point a consultation was had between Mr. Massey, one of the attorneys for the defendant, and Messrs Hosmer & Dunn, for the prosecution, and the court, not in the hearing of the jury, which is essential to a clear understanding of the subsequent proceedings. The following condensed statement of said consultation will be sufficient for that purpose: The court expressed a desire to grant a view of the premises, and Mr. Massey asked the court to do so. Mr. Hosmer protested that to do so, or to allow new evidence or a separation of the jury, would be equivalent to an acquittal, whatever the verdict might be. The court suggested that if the defendant's attorney, and the defendant personally, would consent, a view might be had. It was then late in the evening, and the question arose whether the jury should be locked up all night, as a view could not be had until morning. The court was reluctant to lock them up, under the circumstances, and Mr. Massey stated that he would consent to the separation, and that the defendant would also. The court said that, with that understanding, he would allow the jury to go home for the night and reassemble for a view next morning; and it was arranged that Mr. Massey should make a motion to that effect, the court being of the opinion that defendant's consent would cure the irregularity. The conference being ended, Mr. Massey moved that the jury be allowed to separate, and meet again in the morning, and then visit the premises. Mr. Hosmer objected that it would operate as a dismissal of the charge, as it involved a constitutional right of the defendant. The defendant, being asked, personally joined in the request made by his attorney; and the court granted the motion, and gave the jury the usual admonition, and dismissed them until the next morning.

No objection or exception was then taken by the defendant. When court opened next morning the jury appeared, and answered to their names. Mr. Massey then stated to the court, privately, that he disliked to do so, but his duty to his client compelled him to ask for a dismissal because of the separation of the jury. At this point Mr. Tilden, also counsel for defendant, entered the court room, and, being asked privately by the court, said he had advised the course stated by Mr. Massey. Thereupon the court grew indignant, and suggested that counsel were precluded from so contending; that the course proposed was self-stultifying and contemptuous; and, after a reply thereto by Mr. Tilden, the court turned angrily and abruptly from counsel, who thereupon took their seats. The next proceeding took place within the hearing of the jury, as follows: "Mr. Massey: If the court please, in this case I understand there was a virtual dismissal of it yesterday, and I ask that the defendant be discharged. The Court: Motion denied. Mr. Massey: Exception. The defendant objects to all further proceedings. The Court: Gentlemen of the jury: In your presence, last evening, the defendant and his counsel moved the court that you be sent to view the premises where the alleged burglary took place, and with that understanding, on his motion, you were excused until this morning. The defendant now prefers to move that all proceedings in this case be dismissed. The motion has been denied by the court, and you will now retire, in charge of the bailiff, to deliberate upon your verdict. (The above was said in a tone of great indignation.) Mr. Massey: I would like to say the defendant is perfectly willing they should go to view the premises. The Court: I cannot listen to you any further, unless you have motions to make." Further colloquies occurred between the court and counsel while the jury were leaving the court room, and after they had retired. After five minutes' absence the jury returned, with a verdict of guilty, and were then discharged. Thereupon counsel for defendant moved that all the proceedings be set aside, as irregular, and the defendant be discharged. This motion was denied, and defendant excepted.

It is clear that the judgment in this case must be reversed. The fact that, after several hours' deliberation, the jury were unable to agree without having a view of the premises, and that, without such view, they returned a verdict the next morning after a deliberation of only five minutes, justifies the conclusion that they were affected by something aside from the evidence, all of which had been heard before their retirement the day before. Not only may they have been influenced by the manner of the court, but the statement that the defendant, the evening before, moved the court that they be sent to view the premises, but that "now he prefers to move for a dismissal of the case," together with the fact that they were not sent to view the premises, may be reasonably supposed to have led to the almost instantaneous agreement that the defendant was in fact guilty. They had not heard the colloquy between the court and counsel, and doubtless inferred from the language of the court that the defendant had not at any time really desired to have them view the premises, and that such view would have added to the evidence of his guilt.

The defendant's motion for a discharge, based upon the proceedings had after the jury had retired to consider of their verdict, resulting in their separation for the night, was properly denied.

No question is made by appellant based upon that part of the order of the court permitting a view of the premises after the case was submitted to the jury. Though such proceeding is an irregularity, I think it was within the discretion of the court to grant it, upon the request of the defendant. He had asked for such order at the proper time, before the close of the evidence, and it was then denied, and was afterwards asked for because of a statement by a juror that they were unable to agree without it. It was therefore presumably for the benefit of the defendant, and would have been nothing more than the exhibition of that which would elucidate the testimony of the witnesses already heard, and which the court in the exercise of its discretion, had excluded. It was within the spirit of section 1138, Pen. Code, which permits the jury, after they have retired for deliberation, if there be any disagreement between them as to the testimony, to be brought into court; and in such cases the practice is to have the reporter read such parts of the testimony as are involved in the disagreement. It was little, if anything, more than would have been the exhibition of a map which had been referred to in the evidence, but which had not been exhibited to the jury. The separation of the jury, however, was unnecessary. Section 1136, Pen. Code, provides, "While the jury are kept together, either during the progress of the trial or after retirement for deliberation, they must be provided by the sheriff at the expense of the county with suitable and sufficient food and lodgings." The separation of the jury after they are sworn, even during the trial, was never permitted, at common law, in cases of felony, and in many states is not now permitted in capital cases. Our statute permits such separation in all cases before the submission of the case, in the discretion of the court, but expressly provides that, after retiring to deliberate upon their verdict, they must be kept together. Pen. Code, § 1128. The court, therefore, had no authority, either under the statute or at common law, to permit the separation; nor could the consent of the defendant or his counsel operate to empower or excuse the violation of an express provision of the statute. In the state of Ohio the statute provided that "in the trial of felonies the jury shall not be permitted to separate after being sworn, until discharged by the court." In Cantwell v. State, 18 Ohio St. 477, 481, after the jury were sworn, they were permitted to separate from Saturday until Monday, with the defendant's consent, and it was contended that he could not complain of the action of the court. The supreme court said: "It is to be observed that the language of the statute is imperative, and that no provision is made for exceptional cases, nor for any discretionary action in the matter by the court, either with or without the consent of the parties. The statutory prohibition was not left to be so easily annulled. It may be considered an established principle in this state that the defendant cannot be prejudiced by his waiver of any statutory requisition in the prosecution of criminal offenses." Without entering upon or deciding any question other than the one before us, we may briefly say that we approve what was said by that court, above quoted, when applied to the facts of this case.

The motion made by counsel for defendant for his discharge, based upon the separation of the jury, was, however, properly denied. We are not referred to any case, nor do we find any, where such separation has been held to operate as an acquittal of the defendant, though it is, of itself, and without any showing of improper conduct on the part of the jury, or of any of them, during their separation, a sufficient ground for granting a new trial. The separation by leave of the court was not misconduct on the part of the jury, but a violation of an important and invariable rule existing at common law from the very inception of the jury system, as well as under the statute, and which has ever been regarded as important in securing the due administration of justice, and as a necessary safeguard against improper extraneous influences. In Parker v. State, 18 Ohio St. 88, the jury were permitted by the court, with the consent of defendant's counsel, to separate twice during their deliberations. The court said, "The plaintiff in error should not be prejudiced even by a personal consent given under circumstances when it could not be withheld except at the risk of exciting unkind feelings in the breasts of jurors who held his fate in their hands;" citing Bish. Cr. Proc. § 827. And it was held, on this ground alone, that a new trial should have been granted, and the judgment was reversed and a new trial ordered. In State v. Populus, 12 La. Ann. 710, it was held that in all criminal cases the separation of the jury, though by leave of the court, and with the consent of the accused and his counsel, will vitiate the verdict, if such separation takes place after the evidence has been closed and the charge given. In Woods v. State, 43 Miss. 364, it was held that the separation and dispersion of a jury in a capital case, though by the consent or even at the request of the prisoner on trial, vitiates a conviction; that, where the jury were so exposed to intercourse with others that they "might have been subjected to corrupting or improper influences, that fact alone will nullify their verdict." To the same effect is Wiley v. State, 1 Swan, 256, and Wesley v. State, 11 Humph. 502, in both of which new trials were ordered. In Peiffer v. Com., 15 Pa. St. 468, the jury, after being impaneled and sworn, were permitted to separate, with the consent of the prisoner. Gibson, C. J., said: "Even the forms and usages of the law conduce to justice; but the common law, which forbids the separation of a jury in a capital case before they have been discharged of the prisoner, touches not matter of form, but matter of substance. It is not too much to say that, if it were abolished, few influential culprits would be convicted, and that few friendless ones, pursued by powerful prosecutors, would escape conviction. Jurors are open to persuasion, as other men. and neither convenience nor economy ought to be consulted in order to guard them against it."

The court did not err in receiving in evidence the portion of the deposition of the defendant taken upon his preliminary examination to impeach his testimony given upon the trial relating to the same facts, his attention having been first called to it. The provision of the Penal Code (section 686) permitting such depositions to be read upon the trial only where the witness is dead, or insane, or absent from the state, does not apply to its use to impeach a witness who is present, the deposition being properly certified by the shorthand reporter as required by the Code. No other questions need be noticed. The judgment and order appealed from should be reversed, and a new trial granted.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; BRITT, C.

BARFIELD v. SOUTH SIDE IRRIGATION CO. (Sac. 38.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 23, 1896.)

APPEAL—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—EQUITY—RESCISSION—EVIDENCE.

1. No errors of law need be specified in the bill of exceptions to enable the appellate court to consider the same.

2. In a suit to cancel a grant of a right of way for an irrigation ditch, on the ground of breach of a representation that the ditch would be so located that the grantor could irrigate his land to the best advantage, evidence, merely, that if the ditch had been placed in one corner of the land it would have been upon higher land, does not entitle plaintiff to a rescission.

3. In a suit to cancel a grant of a right of way for an irrigation ditch, it having been the grantor's object, in granting the right of way, to secure water for irrigating his land, parol evidence of false representation by the agent of the grantee as to the amount of water the grantee would be able to control is admissible.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Kings county; Justin Jacobs, Judge.

Action by Margaret Barfield against the South Side Irrigation Company, a corporation. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Rowen Irwin and Frank H. Farrar, for appellant. Lamberson & Middlecoff, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. Plaintiff brought an action to cancel a deed given by her to defendant for a right of way for a water ditch, upon the ground of false representations and failure of consideration; and the answer specifically denied all the allegations of the complaint. At the trial it was stipulated, in open court, that the parties intended the deed to transfer a mere right of way for ditch purposes, although the deed, in form, was a grant. At the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence a nonsuit was granted as to the relief asked in setting aside and canceling the deed, and a decree was also entered that the deed be reformed in accordance with the aforesaid stipulation. That portion of the judgment as to the matters covered by the nonsuit is appealed from, upon a bill of exceptions.

It is insisted, upon the part of respondent, that the bill of exceptions cannot be considered, because no specifications of errors of law are embodied therein. Miller v. Wade, 87 Cal. 410, 25 Pac. 487, is relied upon to support this position. But the doctrine there declared failed to receive the sanction of a majority of the court, and therefore is not authority. Upon an examination of the authorities there cited to support the principle announced in that case, it will be found that they fail to meet the test; and Shadburne v. Daly, 76 Cal. 355, 18 Pac. 403, declares, to the contrary, that no errors of law need be specified in the bill of exceptions.

The motion for a nonsuit was made generally, and also specially, upon the ground that defendant made no representations to plaintiff as to the ownership by it of the waters of Lower Kings River Ditch Company sufficient to irrigate about 7,040 acres of land, or that it owned or controlled any amount of water sufficient to irrigate any portion of said land. The motion for a nonsuit was also based upon the further ground "that the plaintiff has not shown that the defendant agreed to construct a ditch, through the land in question, in such a manner, and upon such routes, and in such localities as to enable the plaintiff, in the easiest and most practicable manner, or to the best advantage, to irrigate all of said sections of land from the waters flowing in and through said ditch." Among other things, the complaint alleged that defendant represented itself to be the owner of certain waters of Lower Kings River Ditch Company, upon which representations plaintiff relied, and which were false; and the complaint further alleged that defendant represented that, if plaintiff would execute a deed of right of way across her land, for ditch purposes, it (defendant) would locate a water ditch over and upon such right of way, which would enable her to the best advantage to irrigate her land, amounting to 1,240 acres. It is further alleged that defendant represented to plaintiff that it had so located the ditch, and that such representations were false, and that the ditch, as located, would not enable plaintiff to irrigate her said lands. There is no evidence whatever in the record that the ditch, as located, was not so placed but that water could be taken from it to and over any part of plaintiff's land, or that its location was not a good one, and advantageous for the irrigation of all of her said lands. Hence, it would seem unnecessary to enter into a consideration of the question as to whether or not the agreement in this respect was as alleged by the complaint. Conceding such to be the fact, still, if there was no evidence introduced at the trial of its violation, plaintiff failed to make out a cause of action in this regard. There was evidence to the effect that at a certain corner of her land the ditch could have been placed upon higher ground, but this evidence, of itself, only tended to establish the fact inferentially, and, we think, was too weak, remote, and unsatisfactory upon which to declare a noncompliance with the agreement. This evidence may all have been true, and still substantially the entire tract have been susceptible of irrigation from the ditch as located. Plaintiff should have made a stronger case upon this issue.

We think there can be no question but that there was a substantial showing that defendant represented itself to be the owner of the waters of the Lower Kings River Ditch Company. The preliminary written agreement, entered into by these parties some days prior to the execution of the deed, fairly indicates that fact. That agreement recites that it (defendant) was organized "for the purpose of constructing a ditch and irrigating a tract of land containing about 7,040 acres" (plaintiff's land being part of this tract); that it was to secure its water supply from the said Lower Kings River Ditch Company. It agreed to sell plaintiff water upon certain terms and conditions, and agreed that plaintiff should have her pro rata of all the water "now owned and proposed to be distributed on said 7,040 acres of land." Indeed, by the agreement, it assumes to own certain waters of the Lower Kings River Ditch Company, and contracts to dispose of them to plaintiff in certain amounts and under certain conditions, in consideration of her giving this deed of right of way. In addition to the recitals in the agreement, parol evidence was offered, showing that one Heinlein, who was the agent of defendant, and engaged in securing this deed from plaintiff, represented to her agent that defendant was the owner of sufficient water to irrigate the entire tract of 7,040 acres. We think this parol evidence clearly admissible, and, taking all the evidence together upon this point, we are satisfied the court was not justified in holding that these representations as to the ownership of this water were not made to plaintiff, if the court so held. There is also evidence in the record to the effect that, at the time these representations were made, and at the time the deed was executed, defendant was not the owner of any of these waters, and that thereafter, and up to the date of the trial of this cause, never did own but six shares of the stock of the Lower Kings River Ditch Company, which interest was wholly insufficient to give plaintiff the proportion of the water to which she was entitled under the agreement. That the deed to defendant was given by reason of the representations made to plaintiff by it as to the ownership of water that could be used for the irrigation of her tract of land is plain. Indeed, her object in giving the deed was to secure from defendant water for the purpose of irrigating her land. Without pursuing the subject further, it is sufficient to say we think plaintiff, by her evidence, made a prima facie cause of action upon this branch of the case.

There is nothing in the point that the action was not begun in time. We think the judgment appealed from should be reversed, and the cause remanded. It is so ordered.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; VAN FLEET, J.

ZILLMER v. GERICHTEN et al. (No. 15,920.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 21, 1896.)

PROBATE COURT—JURISDICTION—ADMINISTRATOR'S DEED—COLLATERAL ATTACK—NONSUIT —EVIDENCE.

1. An order of sale in administration proceedings, reciting the due publication of an order to show cause why the sale should not be made, is sufficient proof of such publication to admit the administrator's deed as evidence of plaintiff's title, in ejectment, nothing appearing in the transcript to show that said order was not published.

2. Where it appears that a probate court, in ordering the sale of decedent's land, acquired jurisdiction of the subject-matter and all interested persons, the administrator's deed cannot be collaterally impeached for want of regularity in the subsequent proceedings.

3. Evidence of plaintiff's actual possession prior to that of defendants, who were in possession at the time of the commencement of the action, is sufficient proof of title as against a motion for nonsuit in an action of ejectment.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county; J. H. Logan, Judge.

Action by John G. Zillmer against Louis Gerichten and another to recover a tract of land. A motion for a nonsuit was sustained, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Wm. T. Jeter and Chas. B. Younger, for appellant. W. D. Storey, for respondents.

VANCLIEF, C. Action to recover from the defendants the possession of a small piece of land, containing 2½ acres, to which the plaintiff claims ownership and the right of possession. The defendants deny the alleged ownership and right of possession, and allege that they own the demanded premises, and are rightfully in possession thereof. At the close of the evidence on the part of plaintiff, the defendants moved for judgment of nonsuit, and their motion was granted. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, and contends that the court erred in granting the nonsuit, and also in rejecting evidence offered by the plaintiff. No brief has been filed in this court on behalf of respondents, and although I have endeavored to supply that deficiency, so far, at least, as the labor of counsel may be properly imposed upon the court, the result is, possibly, not so favorable to respondents as it might have been if such labor had been performed by their counsel.

Plaintiff put in evidence a United States patent, dated May 20, 1872, granting to F. E. Bailey lots Nos. 1, 2, and 3, section 31, township 10 S., range 1 W., M. D. M., and parol testimony tending to prove that the demanded premises were wholly within said lot No. 3; then introduced, without objection, a deed, dated December 8, 1882, from Henry C. Wheeler granting to plaintiff said lot No. 3. Plaintiff next offered a deed, dated July 8, 1873, from F. E. Bailey, as administrator of the estate of William Watson, deceased, to Henry C. Wheeler, for said lot No. 3, together with the record of proceedings in the probate court in the matter of the estate of Watson, by which it was claimed said administrator was authorized to sell said lot No. 3. Defendants objected to said administrator's deed to Wheeler on the alleged grounds—First, that it did not appear that the order to show cause why the sale should not be made was published as required by law; second, that the notice of sale was not published for the time required by law and the order of the court; third, that "no notice of hearing the report of said sale was given, and no order of court made fixing the date of said hearing." The court sustained the objection, and excluded the administrator's deed to Wheeler. Plaintiff also introduced evidence tending to prove that Wheeler was in possession of the demanded premises at the time he conveyed the same to plaintiff, and that plaintiff was in actual possession thereof, by having inclosed the same with his adjoining land, during the winter of 1892–93, prior to the commencement of this action; and there was no evidence tending to prove prior possession by the defendants, or that they had any kind of title to the demanded premises. On the evidence as above stated the plaintiff rested, and it does not appear in what respect it was claimed by defendants to be deficient when they moved for the nonsuit.

1. I think the court erred in sustaining defendants' objection to the administrator's deed to Wheeler. The petition of the administrator for the order of sale is in due form, stating all jurisdictional facts, and no objection to it is made. The order of sale, also, complies strictly with the requirements of the statute, and recites, among other things, that upon the filing of the petition on August 17, 1872, "an order was thereupon made directing all persons interested in said estate to appear before this court, at the court room thereof, on Saturday, the 28th day of September, A. D. 1872, at 10 o'clock a. m., to show cause why an order should not be granted to said administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the deceased as should be necessary, and ordering that a copy of said order to show cause be published at least four successive weeks in the Santa Cruz Sentinel, a newspaper printed and published in the city and county of Santa Cruz." Then, after reciting who were heirs of the deceased, that the minor heirs had no general guardian, the appointment of an attorney ad litem for them, and the appearance of said attorney for the minor heirs and the attorney for the administrator on the day appointed for the hearing (September 28, 1872), proceeds to recite that, "upon satisfactory proof by the affidavit of B. P. Kooser, a competent witness, of the publication of a copy of said order to show cause, in said newspaper, at least four successive weeks, and as often during said period of four weeks as said paper was regularly issued, this court proceeded to the hearing of said petition, and heard and examined the allegations and proofs of the petitioner; no person interested in said estate or otherwise appearing to oppose said application." It then recites that the court found all the allegations of the petition to be true, and "that all the proceedings upon this application have been in all respects strictly conducted in accordance with and as provided in the statute regulating the sales of real estate belonging to the estates of deceased persons." It does not appear in what respect the publication of the order to show cause was claimed to be defective, the affidavit of Kooser not appearing in the transcript; but it is not denied that the order was published as above recited, nor is there anything in the transcript indicating that it was not so published. It therefore appears that the probate court acquired jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the petition, and of all persons interested in the estate of Watson; and it is not denied, but impliedly admitted, that the court confirmed the sale. Furthermore, the transcript contains no evidence that the probate court did not fix a time for hearing the report of the sale, and give proper notice thereof, nor that the notice of sale was not published as required by law and the order of the court. Conceding, however, that the proceeding for confirmation of the sale was irregular, as claimed, and that notice of the sale was not published for the time required by the order of court, yet these irregularities or errors in the exercise of unquestionable jurisdiction would not invalidate the sale nor the administrator's deed to the extent of making them vulnerable to the collateral attack, made upon them in the court below. Dennis v. Winter, 63 Cal. 16; Smith v. Biscailuz, 83 Cal. 359, 21 Pac. 15, and 23 Pac. 314; Richardson v. Butler, 82 Cal. 174, 23 Pac. 9; Phelan v. Smith, 100 Cal. 171, 34 Pac. 667. "Jurisdiction existing, any order or judgment is conclusive, in respect to its own validity, in a dispute concerning any right or title derived through it, or anything done by virtue of its authority." Van Fleet, Coll. Attack, p. 29, § 17. The deed was not objected to on the ground of irrelevancy, nor was it irrelevant; for, even if plaintiff had failed to connect it with the patent to Bailey, as he presumably intended, still he was entitled to connect his possession with that of Wheeler.

2. As above stated, the evidence for plaintiff tended to prove prior actual possession of the demanded premises by the plaintiff. As against the defendants, who were alleged to be wrongfully in possession when the action was commenced,—March 1, 1893,—the prior possession of plaintiff was prima facie evidence of his title. Morton v. Folger, 15 Cal. 175; Leonard v. Flynn, 89 Cal. 543, 26 Pac. 1099; McGovern v. Mowry, 91 Cal. 383, 27 Pac. 746. A nonsuit should be denied when there is any evidence tending to sustain plaintiff's case, without passing upon the question as to the sufficiency of such evidence. Felton v. Millard, 81 Cal. 540, 21 Pac. 533, and 22 Pac. 750. And for this reason, also, I think the nonsuit should have been denied. I conclude that the order and judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order and judgment are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

MOUNTAIN TUNNEL GRAVEL MIN. CO. v. BRYAN et al. (No. 18,406.)

APPEAL — DECISION — REVERSAL — NEW TRIAL—ORDER—FORM.

1. Where, on appeal on the ground that the findings are not supported by the evidence, respondent fails to appear, and point out, by either oral or written arguments, where the evidence in support of the findings may be found, the record being voluminous, a new trial will be ordered.

2. An order granting a new trial does not, until such order is affirmed on appeal, or the time for appeal therefrom has expired, vacate the judgment, so as to prevent an appeal from being taken from the judgment. Pierce v. Birkholm (Cal.) 43 Pac. 205, followed.

3. Where a new trial is granted as to certain issues only, the order should state, in terms, the issues to be retried, instead of referring to such issues as those covered by certain findings of fact.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; W. H. Grant, Judge.

Action by the Mountain Tunnel Gravel Mining Company, a corporation, against Hamblin S. Bryan and others. There was a judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Andrew Thorne, for appellant. Tuttle & Tuttle, John M. Fulweiler, and Hamilton & Hamilton, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action of ejectment brought against various defendants, each defendant being in possession, and claiming separate portions of the tract of land described in the complaint. Defendants answered separately, denying plaintiff's claims, and, as an affirmative defense and by way of cross complaint, set out equitable titles, and asked for a specific performance. The trial court found against the claims of plaintiff, and decreed specific performance. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment, and also moved for a new trial upon various grounds, which motion was granted by the court in part and denied in part. The court, after declaring that, in its opinion, certain findings of fact, enumerating them seriatim, were not supported by the evidence, made the following order: "It is ordered that a new trial be, and the same is hereby, granted as to the issue of fact involved in the said proceedings, the evidence at said new trial to be directed solely to the issues of fact therein involved;" and thereupon denied the new trial upon all other grounds. This appeal is by plaintiff from the order, upon the ground that a new trial should have been granted as to the entire action.

Appellant insists that findings numbered 33, 35, and 36 are not supported by the evidence. The facts covered by those findings relate solely to the rights and claims of defendant and respondent Bryan; and as he has not deemed the matter of sufficient importance to appear before this court, either by oral or written argument, and point out, in a somewhat voluminous record, where the evidence may be found which supports these findings of fact, we will assume there is no such evidence; and for that reason will order a new trial of the entire case as to respondent Bryan. Kelly v. Bradbury, 104 Cal. 237, 37 Pac. 872, and cases there cited.

It is insisted that the findings do not support the judgment; and respondents Scherer and Clark urge as a bar to the consideration of that question that the judgment cannot now be attacked, for the reason that it was set aside by the order granting the new trial as to certain portions of the case; but this contention cannot be sustained. As to what effect an order granting a new trial by the trial court has upon the judgment, we refer to the very recent case of Pierce v. Birkholm (decided Jan. 10, 1896) 43 Pac. 205, where the question was directly involved, and carefully considered. The court there concluded that an order made by the trial court granting a motion for a new trial, until affirmed by this court, or until the time to appeal therefrom had expired, did not set aside and vacate the judgment; that during this time the judgment had such life that an appeal could be taken from it; and that, in effect, it was not dead but sleeping. Inasmuch as we think the case must be sent back for a new trial as to all the defendants, and in view of the fact that the respondents who have appeared in this court have not argued those matters upon their merits, relying solely upon the position that the order for a new trial set aside the judgment, we will not enter into a consideration of the points made by appellant that the cross complaints do not state causes of action, and that the judgment is not supported by the findings. Before another trial is had, we suggest that respondents look well to the sufficiency of their cross complaints, and amend them, if such course be deemed advisable.

In granting the new trial in this case, the court had in view the practice recognized and approved in Land & Town Co. v. Neale, 78 Cal. 63, 20 Pac. 372, Duff v. Duff, 101 Cal. 1, 35 Pac. 437, and Fallbrook Irr. Dist. v. Abila, 106 Cal. 365, 39 Pac. 793; but, in granting a new trial as to certain particular issues only, the trial court should with great certainty recite the issues in terms upon which the new trial is to be had. This should be done in order that both counsel and the trial court, and this court upon appeal, may know exactly the questions involved within the scope of the order. The order in this case uses the word "proceedings" where probably the word "findings" was intended, and also the word "issue" where "issues" was contemplated. If these are not clerical errors,—and we have no way of determining the fact,—then the order is so indefinite that it should be held to be general in its terms; but, even conceding these things to be purely clerical mistakes, still, as a rule which we think should be invariably followed, an order granting a new trial pro tanto should not, as in this case, grant the order as to the issues covered by certain numbered findings of fact; for such an order leaves the matter open as to what issues are really included within its scope, and often makes it difficult, if not impossible, for the trial court, or for this court, to say what issues the court had in mind when the order was made. As a striking illustration of the soundness of our position, we refer to finding of fact No. 29, found in this record. A new trial was ordered by the trial court as to the issue or issues involved therein; but, upon examination of that finding, we are entirely unable to ascertain the particular tract of land to which reference is there had. In the present case, by our construction of the order, it grants a new trial as to so many important questions raised by the pleadings that we deem it the better course that the whole case shall again be retried. We are especially firm in this conclusion when we take into consideration the defects appearing upon the face of the order, and the doubts which would probably arise in the minds of both court and counsel as to the exact issues which were required to be retried under the directions therein contained.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: VAN FLEET, J.; HARRISON, J.

BEER v. CLIFTON et al. (No. 15,958.)

ESTOPPEL IN PAIS.

In an action by the payee of a note against the makers, it appeared that plaintiff had indorsed to two of the makers other notes, but was not liable thereon, on account of their failure to make due demand, which, after maturity, were turned over to the other maker to secure him from liability on the note in suit, which, at his dictation, was executed in a nonnegotiable form; he having refused to sign it in its original, negotiable form, under the belief that thereby he would be able to set off the other notes against liability on it. Held, that plaintiff was not estopped, as against the latter maker, to deny her liability on the notes indorsed by her and turned over to him, so as to enable him to set them off against her claim.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; R. McGarvey, Judge.

Action by Jennie Beer against E. Clifton and others. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. H. Seawell and J. W. Oates, for appellants. T. L. Carothers and Crittenden Thornton, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This is an action brought upon a promissory note dated at Covelo, Cal., March 29, 1890, made by the defendants to the plaintiff, for the sum of $3,500, with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum from March 16, 1889. The case was tried before the court without a jury, and findings were filed and judgment entered for the plaintiff for the full amount of said note, with interest and costs,—in all, $5,335.41; and this appeal is from the judgment and an order denying the defendants' motion for a new trial.

Upon a first trial of this case, the plaintiff had judgment for an amount much less than she claimed, and her motion for a new trial was granted, and the defendants appealed from the order granting said motion. The case upon the former appeal is reported in 98 Cal. 323, 33 Pac. 204, where will be found a general statement of the facts in the case. The question involved upon that appeal was as to the liability of the plaintiff upon her indorsement of 11 promissory notes, then overdue, and which were part of the assets sold by her to Clifton and Weill, and which she indorsed in blank. It was there sought to hold her liable upon these notes, upon said indorsement; but this court held that, inasmuch as the defendants had not made due demand on the makers for payment, and notified her of nonpayment, within a reasonable time, she was not liable as an indorser. Upon this trial the defendants sought to fix her liability upon another ground. It was alleged in the answer that these 11 notes were each and all of them indorsed by plaintiff to Clifton and Weill, "with a distinct agreement and understanding that the plaintiff would make them, and each of them, good, and would pay the same, and was and would remain bound to see the same paid and pay the same," and that Clifton and Weill accepted said notes with that understanding. At the time the $3,500 note here in suit was made, said 11 notes were turned over to White by Clifton and Weill as collateral security against his liability upon said note, and, at his dictation, the words "or order," as it was first drawn, were stricken out, so as to make it a nonnegotiable note; and this circumstance, with others, is relied upon to sustain the defense that said 11 notes were taken under an agreement with the plaintiff that she would see the same paid. The court, however, found that said 11 notes were indorsed by the plaintiff for no other purpose than merely to transfer the title to said notes, and that it was not agreed between the plaintiff and the defendants, or either of them, that she was liable thereon for the payment of the same, and that defendant White knew at the time of the transaction the terms of said indorsement, and the reasons and considerations therefor. The principal question on this appeal is based upon appellants' contention that the evidence is insufficient to justify said findings.

So far as the original transaction between the plaintiff and Clifton and Weill is concerned, the evidence fully sustains the finding that the plaintiff did not "agree or undertake" to become liable upon or for these notes; but it was agreed that as to such part of these notes as Clifton and Weill should fail to collect, after due diligence to collect the same, they be credited upon their seven notes of $500 each, with the amount so uncollected. It was found, however, upon ample testimony, that due diligence had not been used to collect the same, and that the condition of plaintiff's liability was therefore not performed. At the time the note in suit was made and given to the plaintiff in exchange for the seven notes, of $500 each, made by Clifton and Weill, there was no direct personal interview between the plaintiff and the defendants, or either of them. This note was prepared in San Francisco, and sent to Covelo through Wells, Fargo & Co., and was presented to the defendants for execution by Mr. Brown, who was then and there the agent of Wells, Fargo & Co. As above stated, when this note was presented for execution it was negotiable in form, and Mr. White refused to sign it unless the words "or order" were stricken out, for the reason that he held a certain obligation against the plaintiff, and also because said 11 notes were to be delivered to him as collateral security; his purpose being to prevent the plaintiff from transferring said $3,500 note to an innocent holder, thus enabling him, as he supposed, to set off her liability upon the said 11 notes against his liability upon the new note. Mr. Brown communicated with the plaintiff, and obtained her direction to have the note executed with the words "or order" stricken out. It is now claimed that Mr. Brown was the agent of the plaintiff in the transaction, ostensibly at least; that the whole matter was talked over before him by the defendants; and, because the note was accepted in its present form, that the plaintiff is estopped from asserting that she did not thereby agree to become liable for the payment of said 11 notes. Mr. Brown was not examined as a witness, nor is there any evidence tending to show that the reasons given by Mr. White for having the $3,500 note made nonnegotiable were communicated to the plaintiff in any form whatever. The note was sent to Covelo by Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express, and Mr. Brown, as the agent of the express company, presented the note for execution, but it does not appear that he was in any sense, or for any purpose, other than the presentation of the note for that purpose, the agent of the plaintiff; and being a special agent for a particular and definite purpose, which did not, upon the face of the transaction, imply any authority or discretion in him as agent, the burden was upon defendants to show that he communicated to the plaintiff all the facts stated by Mr. White, and that he was authorized to assent, and did assent, thereto. It cannot be assumed, in the absence of evidence, that the plaintiff was informed of any condition imposed or attempted to be imposed by Mr. White as a condition to his joining in the execution of the note; nor did the plaintiff's consent to the change in the form of the note necessarily imply that the plaintiff had been so informed, or had assented to any of the reasons which led Mr. White to have the change made. Not only so, but the defendants all supposed at the time the $3,500 note was given that the plaintiff was already liable upon said 11 notes, because of her indorsement, and it was because of that supposed liability that Mr. White insisted upon having the new note made nonnegotiable, and all that he said to Mr. Brown was based upon such supposed pre-existing liability; and, no question having been made as to such liability, we fail to see how all that was said by defendant White to Mr. Brown, if it had been communicated to the plaintiff, could in any manner have affected or increased her liability. The effect of her consent to the change in the form of the note was merely saying, "When this note becomes due, and I seek to enforce it, you shall have an opportunity to set off any legal demand you may then have against me." The findings are justified by the evidence, and the judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

OSTERMAN v. DISTRICT GRAND LODGE NO. 4, I. O. B. B.

(No. 15,974.)

ENDOWMENT BENEFIT — PLEADING — BURDEN OF PROOF—FORFEITURE—PAYMENT—EVIDENCE—PARTIES.

1. A mutual endowment society, by alleging in its answer to an action to recover an endowment that the conditions of the contract, made by its law conditions precedent to recovery, have been fulfilled by the assured, "except as hereinafter set forth," assumes the burden of alleging and proving nonperformance of such conditions by the assured.

2. Where the laws of a mutual endowment association make suspension for nonpayment of dues a forfeiture of membership benefits, and provide a formal method for suspension in such case, nonpayment of dues will not, ipso facto, work a forfeiture, though the assured was secretary of the society, and formal proceedings for suspension have not been had because he failed, as required, to report his own delinquency.

3. In an action by a wife against a grand lodge—whose laws made membership in a subordinate lodge, and an election as member of the endowment fund, conditions precedent to a right to participate therein—to recover an endowment on her husband's membership, it appeared that, on report of the husband's death to the grand by the subordinate lodge, the grand lodge sent the amount due to the subordinate lodge, to be paid, "through the trustees," to plaintiff; that the trustees, prior to its receipt, obtained from her an order to deduct from the amount due sufficient to make good defalcations of her husband, which, as one of them testified they told her, would amount to at least $1,000. The wife testified that they said it would be about $500. The trustees subsequently obtained her receipt for the whole amount, on representations that it was necessary to procure the money from the defendant. Plaintiff, failing to receive the money, demanded it from defendant, and defendant, then first learning that plaintiff's husband was not in good standing at his death, directed the trustees of the subordinate lodge to return the amount sent to it. There was no evidence what became of this money, except that it was deposited in the bank by the trustees to whom it was delivered. Held, that a finding against defendant's plea of payment was warranted.

4. Under the above facts, the grand lodge, and not the subordinate lodge, was the proper party to be sued.

5. In an action for an endowment benefit, where defendant alleges in defense that plaintiff consented that the money due should be applied in paying a sum embezzled by the assured, and that it was so applied, an instruction placing the burden of proving such issue on defendant is proper.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Sarah Osterman against District Grand Lodge No. 4, Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, to recover an endowment benefit. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Marcus Rosenthal, for appellant. Joseph Rothschild, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. Action to recover an endowment benefit of $2,000 alleged to be due the plaintiff from the defendant. The cause was tried by a jury, whose verdict was in favor of plaintiff for the sum demanded, and the judgment of the court was in accordance with the verdict. The defendant appealed from the judgment, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. The pleadings and evidence justified the jury in finding the following facts: The defendant is a fraternal and beneficial society incorporated under the laws of this state, is governed by a written constitution, and, for certain general purposes, has jurisdiction over subordinate lodges within its district. Subject to the constitution of the defendant, each subordinate lodge adopts its own by-laws governing its own finances and local affairs. The defendant corporation maintains a special fund, called the "Widows' and Orphans' Beneficiary Fund," supported by assessments of all members of subordinate lodges who elect to become participants of the benefits of that fund, each of whom is required, by the law relating to that fund, to pay a monthly assessment of $2.50, to be collected by the subordinate lodges, and transmitted to the District Grand Lodge; and, after so transmitted, the subordinate lodge has no power of control over it. Funds for the support and use of the subordinate lodges are supplied by fines and quarter-yearly dues required to be paid by their members, over which funds the Grand Lodge has no control. Only those members of subordinate lodges who elect to become participants in the widows' and orphans' beneficiary fund are assessed for contributions to that fund; and, after so electing, they are called "Members of the Widows' and Orphans' Fund." The laws of the District Grand Lodge governing the disposition of the widows' and orphans' fund, among other things, provide (section 15): "The sum of two thousand dollars shall be paid on the death of a member in good standing in the widow and orphan beneficiary fund of this district, to his widow; if there be no widow, then to his children; and, if there be no widow or children, then to any person, persons, or institutions which the deceased member may designate in the manner prescribed in the following sections." No endowment policy or certificate is issued to a member during his life. The benefit is to be paid upon due notice to the District Grand Lodge of the death of a member of the widows' and orphans' beneficiary fund. Upon such notice the Grand Lodge, by its secretary, ordinarily transmits the money, or a check for it, to the trustees of the subordinate lodge of which the deceased was a member, directing them to pay it to the beneficiary. Ophir Lodge, No. 21, is, and has been since 1880, a subordinate lodge of defendant Grand Lodge. In October, 1881, Monroe Osterman, the husband of the plaintiff, became a member of Ophir Lodge, and of the widows' and orphans' fund, and continue to be such until his death, on the 29th day of May, 1891, and, during the last three years of his life, was the secretary of said Ophir Lodge, As a member of said Ophir Lodge and of the widows' and orphans' branch of said District Grand Lodge, he was in good standing up to the time of his death, unless, for alleged reasons, to be hereinafter considered, he had lost his good standing, and had not been reinstated at the time of his death. Immediately after the death of Monroe Osterman, Ophir Lodge duly notified the Grand Lodge of the fact. Thereafter, on June 30, 1891, the treasurer of the Grand Lodge drew a check on the Bank of California for $2,000, payable to the order of the trustees of Ophir Lodge, which was sent to them by the grand secretary, inclosed in the following letter, dated July 1, 1891: "To the Secretary of Ophir Lodge, No. 21, I. O. B. B.: Worthy Sirs and Brothers: We herewith transmit check for the sum $2,000 in payment of the amount due the late brother, Monroe Osterman. This amount is to be paid to the widow, through the trustees. This is accompanied by an original and duplicate receipt. Fraternally, yours, Louis Blank, Grand Secretary." The trustees received the check, and on July 8, 1891, deposited it with the California Safe-Deposit & Trust Company. On August 12, 1891, the plaintiff, claiming that her benefit had not been paid, made a written demand of the Grand Lodge for payment thereof, to which demand that lodge answered, in substance, that she was not entitled to any benefit, for the reason that her husband was not at the time of his death a member in good standing of either the Ophir Lodge or of the widows' and orphans' fund, because of his failure to pay certain dues to the Ophir Lodge, and certain assessments for the widows' and orphans' fund, and thereafter, on September 4, 1891, directed the Ophir Lodge, by the following letter, to return the money: "September 4, 1891. Ophir Lodge, No. 21: Brothers: Information has reached the general committee of the Grand Lodge No. 4 that Brother Monroe Osterman, of Ophir Lodge, died May 27, 1891; was in arrears to the widows' fund at the time of his death, and therefore not entitled to the benefits of the widows' fund. As the Grand Lodge transmitted to you a check for the sum of $2,000, to be paid to the widow of said Brother Osterman, and as, under our laws, the said widow would not be entitled to the benefits of the widows' fund, and said money was transmitted to your lodge while we were ignorant of the fact of his delinquency, and therefore the money was improperly paid, we now herewith direct your lodge to at once return to the grand secretary, Louis Blank, $2,000. Yours, fraternally, Louis Blank, Grand Secretary." Such additional facts as may be considered pertinent will be stated in considering the points to which they relate. The defendant lodge pleaded two distinct defenses—First, that by reason of nonpayment of dues to the Ophir Lodge, and assessments for the widows' and orphans' fund, Monroe Osterman was not in good standing, as a member of the Ophir Lodge, at the time he died; and, second, that the defendant, nevertheless, paid the full amount of her benefit to the plaintiff.

1. It was admitted by defendant, at the trial, that Monroe Osterman was ostensibly in good standing, as a member and the secretary of the Ophir Lodge, up to the time of his death, and that there was not even a suspicion that he was delinquent in payment of his dues or assessments until after the Grand Lodge had transmitted to Ophir Lodge $2,000 to pay his widow's benefit, and also that he was never expelled nor suspended from membership in Ophir Lodge or the widows' and orphans' beneficiary fund by any action of the Ophir or Grand Lodge. But counsel for appellant contends that his delinquencies, ipso facto, deprived him of his good standing as a member of the widows' and orphans' fund, without any formal act of suspension or expulsion by either lodge, and consequently deprived the plaintiff of the right to any benefit from that fund. As above remarked, there was no certificate or policy issued to Monroe Osterman, or to his wife, evidencing her right to benefits from the widows' and orphans' fund. The conditions upon which the right to benefits from that fund depend are fully expressed in the constitution or laws of the District Grand Lodge; and, whenever such right accrues, it is the direct effect of self-executing provisions of such constitution or laws. Of course, the first condition is that, being a member of a subordinate lodge, he must have elected to become a member of the widows' and orphans' beneficial fund; and it is alleged in the complaint, and not denied, that Monroe Osterman became a member of Ophir Lodge, and a participant in the widows' and orphans' beneficiary fund, on October 19, 1881, and the answer of defendant affirmatively alleges "that, at the time said Osterman became a member of said Ophir Lodge, he also became a beneficiary or participating member of said widows' and orphans' beneficiary fund, and remained such member, except as hereinafter set forth, down to the time of his death." The only other condition is that expressed in section 15, above set out, namely, that he must have been at the time of his death "in good standing in the widow and orphan beneficiary fund." Therefore, if Monroe Osterman was a member in good standing of Ophir Lodge and of the widows' and orphans' fund at the time of his death, the plaintiff was entitled to the benefit of $2,000. The express admission in defendant's answer that Osterman "remained such member down to the time of his death, except as hereinafter set forth," is sufficient prima facie evidence that he remained in good standing down to the time of his death, and cast upon the defendant the burden of pleading and proving that Osterman was not in good standing at the time of his death. Siebert v. Chosen Friends, 23 Mo. App. 268; Stewart v. Supreme Council, 36 Mo. App. 319; Supreme Lodge v. Johnson, 78 Ind. 110; Mills v. Rebstock, 29 Minn. 380, 13 N. W. 162; Elmer v. Association (Sup.) 19 N. Y. Supp. 289; Black, Ben. & Ins. Soc. § 454. This burden the defendant properly assumed, both in pleading and proof, and the only question for consideration is whether the evidence was sufficient to justify the jury in finding that Monroe Osterman was in good standing at the time of his death. The evidence introduced by defendant on this issue tended to prove only that Osterman was delinquent in payment of dues to Ophir Lodge amounting to $11.50, and in payment of assessments for the endowment fund amounting to $12.50, which were not even suspected until long after his death, and long after Ophir Lodge had certified to the Grand Lodge that he died in good standing, and nearly a month after the Grand Lodge had remitted to the trustees of Ophir Lodge the $2,000, with direction to pay it to plaintiff. It appeared that Osterman's salary as secretary of Ophir Lodge was $200 a year, and that a portion of it more than equal to the delinquent dues and assessments was unpaid at the time of his death; but it is claimed by appellant that the unpaid salary should have been applied to certain defalcations of the secretary, which were not discovered until after his death, and after Ophir Lodge had certified to his good standing at the time of his death, and which will be considered in connection with the plea of payment.

That the failure of a member of the widows' and orphans' beneficiary fund to pay an assessment within the time required by the laws of the society does not, ipso facto, operate to suspend him, or to affect his good standing, is apparent from the following extracts from those laws: Article 9 of the bylaws of Ophir Lodge provides: "Whenever an assessment is levied by District Grand Lodge No. 4, to pay an endowment, such assessment shall be paid by the members as provided by the general laws of this district." Section 25 of the general laws of the district provides: "A beneficiary member who fails to pay his assessments to the lodge within thirty days after the same has been levied by the secretary shall be suspended, without notice, from the benefits of the widow and orphan beneficiary fund, of which suspension the grand secretary must at once be notified. After the member becomes delinquent in two consecutive assessments, the amounts accruing therefrom, and from every subsequent assessment, shall be charged to his account as lodge dues." This implies that a member may be suspended from the widows' and orphans' fund, and still remain a member of the subordinate lodge. A by-law of Ophir Lodge requires each member thereof to pay, as dues to that lodge, quarter-yearly, $3.50; and section 1, art. 8, of the general laws of the district, applicable to subordinate lodges, provides: "It shall be the duty of the secretary to report to the lodge at the first meeting of each month the names of all those brothers who owe for dues, fines, and assessment an amount equal to the amount of dues for one year. After the secretary has reported delinquents, he shall give legal notice to those in arrears to appear, at the latest, in the second regular meeting thereafter, and show cause why they should not be suspended. If they fail to do so, the president shall put the question: 'Does any brother know a reason why Bro. —— shall not be suspended?' If no satisfactory reason be presented to the lodge, then the president shall declare the brother suspended." This covers the whole subject of suspensions for nonpayments of assessments for the endowment fund and dues to the subordinate lodges, and shows that suspension for these delinquencies requires action by the lodge, and prescribes the mode of such action. The statement on motion for new trial contains the following admission by defendant's attorney: "Mr. Rosenthal: We admit that there never was a formal suspension of Monroe Osterman, either from membership, or from the benefits of the widows' and orphans' fund; that he never was formally suspended. No record of Ophir Lodge shows the suspension of said Osterman for nonpayment of dues or assessments, and no notice was ever issued by or from Ophir Lodge to the defendant showing nonpayment of his dues or of his suspension." It is well-settled law that, in cases of the character of this, the only competent evidence of suspension or expulsion of a member, or that a member lacked good standing in the lodge, is some authorized resolution or act of the lodge, by which such member was expelled, suspended, or degraded. Order of Foresters v. Zak (Ill. Sup.) 26 N. E. 593; Surgical Soc. v. Weatherly, 75 Ala. 248; Hawkshaw v. Supreme Lodge, 29 Fed. 773.

The learned counsel for appellant concedes that "ordinarily, under such laws as those of the defendant, which do not make the nonpayment of assessments or dues, ipso facto, operate as a suspension from benefits or membership, there must be a formal suspension before the right to benefits is forfeited." But he contends that this case is extraordinary, in that it was the duty of Osterman, as secretary of Ophir Lodge, to report all members who were delinquent in payment of dues or assessments, and that he failed to report to the lodge his own delinquency, for which he might have been suspended. In answer to this, it is enough to say that plaintiff's right to recover is not conditioned upon the performance by her husband of his duties as an officer of the lodge, nor upon his payment of dues or assessments within the periods of time limited by the laws of the lodge, for the nonpayment of which he might have been, but was not, suspended, or otherwise deprived of his good standing. In this respect this case is materially different from that of Hogins v. Supreme Council, 76 Cal. 109, 18 Pac. 125, cited by appellant. In that case the defendant was a fraternity organized to promote temperance, and issued policies or certificates of insurance on the lives of its members, according to the mutual benefit system, upon their applications therefor. The rules of the order required total abstinence of its members from the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage. In his application for insurance, Hogins agreed "that a compliance with all the laws, regulations, and requirements * * * enacted by our said order is the express condition upon which I am to be entitled to participate in the mutual benefit life system." The certificate issued to him on such application declared, "This certificate is issued upon the express condition that said Daniel Hogins shall, in every particular, while a member of our said order, comply with all the laws, rules, and requirements thereof." The court found that Hogins had violated the agreement expressed in his application, and the laws of the order, by drinking whisky, brandy, and other alcoholic stimulants, as a beverage, and that his death was hastened thereby, but had never been suspended from the order, as he might have been, and gave judgment in favor of defendant. This court affirmed the judgment on the ground that the abstention of the insured from the use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage was made by the contract a condition precedent to defendant's liability to pay. But in the case at bar I think the contract will not bear the construction that payment of dues or assessments by Monroe Osterman, as required by the laws of the Grand Lodge or of Ophir Lodge, was a condition precedent to the liability of the Grand Lodge to pay plaintiff the benefit of $2,000. Such a construction of numerous similar contracts has been refused, as in cases above cited, and has been given in no case more nearly similar to this than that of Hogins v. Supreme Council, supra. It is claimed that to permit plaintiff to recover in this action would violate the maxim that "no one can take advantage of his own wrong." But it is not perceived that plaintiff is seeking any advantage from her own wrong. If this maxim is applicable to her case, why would it not be equally so, even if Monroe Osterman had not been secretary of Ophir Lodge, and had merely refused to pay his dues and assessments? The subtraction of his official delinquency would only reduce the degree of the wrong. Yet this maxim has never been applied to this class of cases. Besides, it cannot be assumed that Osterman would have been suspended, or otherwise degraded from his good standing, even if he had promptly reported to the lodge his alleged delinquencies; and whether he ought to have been suspended depended upon the determination of the lodge, based upon a state of facts which may have been materially different from that proved on the trial of this case. The most that should be assumed is that he might have been suspended. No effective retroactive sentence of suspension or expulsion could have been pronounced against the deceased, Osterman, in this action. Nor does the maxim that "equity regards as done that which ought to be done" apply to this case, as counsel contends. Surely, counsel would not be understood to mean that the dues and assessments of Osterman should be regarded as paid when they ought to have been paid, but only that Osterman should be regarded as having been suspended before he died, thus assuming that he ought to have been suspended; yet, as above shown, it can be assumed only that he might have been suspended in case he had not successfully defended or excused himself, and the lodge had so determined; and such a case is not within the maxim. Pom. Eq. Jur. § 365, and notes. Besides, this maxim does not authorize a court to assume, without evidence, that a penalty for any kind of delinquency or wrong has been inflicted by any tribunal.

2. The contention that defendant paid the benefit of $2,000 to plaintiff is founded on the following facts and evidence: Twenty days after the death of Osterman, viz. on June 18, 1891, two members of Ophir Lodge—Messrs. Saalburg and D'Ancona (Mr. Saalburg then being a trustee of Ophir Lodge)—called on the plaintiff, at her home, and informed her that, since the death of her husband, they had discovered that, as secretary of the lodge, he had in his hands at the time of his death a considerable sum of money, which he had received from members for dues, etc., the exact amount of which they did not then know. Mr. D'Ancona testified that he told her that the amount was $1,000, at least. Plaintiff testified that she understood them to say it would amount to only about $500. Omitting the further conflicting evidence as to the representations they made to her on that occasion, it appears that Mr. D'Ancona then drew, and plaintiff signed, the following instrument in writing:

"Mr. William Saalburg, Trustee Ophir Lodge, No. 21: You are hereby authorized to pay to Ophir Lodge, No. 21, all moneys in the hands of my late husband, Monroe Osterman, belonging to said lodge, and to deduct the same from the endowment of $2,000 which you hold for me under the laws of District Grand Lodge No. 4. Mrs Monroe Osterman, 1527 Geary street. Witness: A. D'Ancona."

At the time this instrument was executed, there was no money in the hands of Mr. Saalburg, nor in the hands of the trustees of Ophir Lodge, applicable to payment of plaintiff's endowment, though application for it had been made before that time; and about three weeks thereafter it was remitted by the Grand Lodge to the trustees of Ophir Lodge, as above stated. Without regard to the conflicting evidence as to whether the facts were truly represented to plaintiff before she signed the order, and whether she understood its purport, it is sufficient to say that it is properly admitted that the order was revocable at any time before the money was paid by Saalburg to the Ophir Lodge; plaintiff being under no obligation to make good her husband's defalcations, and there being therefore no consideration for the order to pay them. Yet the evidence was sufficient to justify the jury in finding that she did not understand the contents or purport of the order when she signed it. A few days after the receipt of the check of defendant, and the deposit thereof in bank, by Mr. Saalburg, as hereinbefore stated, to wit, July 13, 1891, Mr. Saalburg, with Mr. Marcus Levy, then secretary of Ophir Lodge, again called upon plaintiff, at San Rafael, where she then resided, and procured from her the following receipt:

"San Francisco, July 13, 1891. Received from District Grand Lodge No. 4, Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, and of Ophir Lodge, No. 21, Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, the sum of two thousand dollars ($2,000), in United States gold coin, in full payment of my claim against said District Grand Lodge No. 4, and said Lodge, No. 21, as the widow of the late Monroe Osterman, a member of said Ophir Lodge, No. 21, of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith.

“——— Sarah Osterman, “——— Trustees. Beneficiary.
“——— Wm. Saalburg,
“Attest: Chas. Grosslicht, “Marcus Levy, L. Levy.
“[Seal] Secretary.”

As to the means used to procure this receipt, and plaintiff's understanding of the transaction, the evidence is conflicting, yet sufficient to justify the jury in finding: That Messrs. Saalburg and Levy did not inform plaintiff that the Grand Lodge had transmitted the money to the trustees of Ophir Lodge, with which to pay her benefit, but represented to her that, in order to procure that money from the Grand Lodge, it was necessary that she should sign that receipt; that, to save her trouble, they would attend to the matter for her,—and that she thereupon signed the receipt without reading it, believing that they would get the money and deliver it to her. That, receiving no further communication from them, and failing to receive the money, she demanded it of the Grand Lodge. That after this demand the Grand Lodge, for the first time, professed to have discovered that Monroe Osterman was not in good standing, as a member of the widows' and orphans' department, at the time of his death, and for that reason refused payment, and ordered the trustees of Ophir Lodge to return the money which it had transmitted to them as above stated. There is no evidence that Mr. Saalburg or the trustees of Ophir Lodge ever paid any part of the money to Ophir Lodge. On the contrary, Mr. Saalburg testified that, on the expiration of his term of office as trustee, the money was still in bank, where he first deposited it; that he delivered the evidence of the deposit to his successor in office, and, for aught he knew, the deposit had not been withdrawn or changed at the time of the trial. Nor is there any evidence as to whether Ophir Lodge returned the money to the Grand Lodge in obedience to the order of the latter lodge, nor any evidence that Ophir Lodge ever claimed the money, or denied the right of defendant to demand a return thereof. If the money has not been returned, it is in the hands of defendant's agents, and therefore legally in its possession. The check for the money was sent to the secretary of Ophir Lodge, with instruction that it be paid to plaintiff “through the trustees” of that lodge. Surely this constituted those trustees agents of defendant for that special service. It follows that the jury was fully justified in finding for the plaintiff, against the plea of payment, notwithstanding her receipt.

3. It is contended for appellant that “the court erred in charging the jury that the burden of proving the charge that the plaintiff consented that the money due upon the endowment should be applied toward the payment of the sum embezzled by Osterman was upon the defendant.” This charge that plaintiff consented, etc., is a material part of affirmative new matter pleaded by defendant as a defense. The other part of the plea is that, pursuant to such consent, the money was actually applied to the payment of the sum embezzled. Of the issues thus tendered, the defendant undoubtedly held the affirmative, and, as to them, would have been defeated if no evidence had been given on either side. Therefore, as to each of those issues, the burden of proof was on the defendant (Code Civ. Proc. § 1981), and the court did not err in so instructing the jury.

4. The court charged the jury, in substance, that, unless they found that Osterman had been suspended by some act of the lodge, his indebtedness to the lodge for dues, assessments, or money received by him, and not accounted for, constitutes no defense to the action. That this instruction was not erroneous is apparent from the foregoing considerations and authorities cited.

5. There is nothing worthy of serious additional consideration in the point that “the action has not been brought against the proper party,” but that it should have been brought against Saalburg, or Ophir Lodge, if at all. To answer this point requires only a repetition of foregoing discussion as to the liability of the defendant, it being there shown that there is no evidence that Ophir Lodge ever received, or even claimed, the money; but it is proved that the trustees of Ophir Lodge received the money as mere agents of defendant, with direction to pay it to plaintiff, and that defendant afterwards ordered them to return to it, etc. It is stated and reiterated by counsel for appellant that the District Grand Lodge alone is responsible for the payment of endowments, and that subordinate lodges have no control over the endowment department of the Grand Lodge. The action of Saalburg in his endeavor to divert the money from the plaintiff to Ophir Lodge was wholly unauthorized by either the Grand Lodge or Ophir Lodge; and it effected nothing which could make him responsible to plaintiff for the payment of the money. I think the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

McGOWAN v. McDONALD et al. (No. 16,034.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 21, 1896.)

CORPORATIONS—LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—IMPAIRMENT OF CONTRACTS—LEGISLATIVE POWERS—WITNESS—COMPETENT EVIDENCE—INTEREST—PLEADING—ADMISSIONS.

1. Laws 1862, § 27, providing that corporations organized thereunder, and their members, shall not be subject to the conditions and liabilities contained in, and shall be exempt from, the corporation act, Laws 1850, p. 347, is unconstitutional so far as it was intended to declare that the stockholders of a corporation formed under its provisions should not be individually and personally liable for any portion of its debts, within Const. 1849, art. 4, § 36, which was given practical effect by Laws 1850, § 32, and Laws 1853, § 16, each providing substantially that each stockholder of a corporation shall be individually liable for its indebtedness in an amount proportioned to his shares of stock.

2. Laws 1862, § 27, is an independent provision, which did not enter into the general object and purpose of the act; and therefore, while in itself unconstitutional, it did not vitiate the other provisions of the act, nor affect the validity of corporations formed under them.

3. Civ. Code, § 288, provided that no corporation formed or existing before the Code took effect should be affected by its provisions unless such corporation should elect to continue its existence thereunder. Held, that the provisions which did not affect such corporation without its election were such only as related to the formation and existence of corporations.

4. Const. 1849, art. 4, § 31, provided that "corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special act except for municipal purposes. All general laws and special acts passed pursuant to this section may be altered from time to time or repealed." Held, that thereunder liability of stockholders may be so changed as to impose obligations for which they were not liable when they became stockholders.

5. The constitutions of 1849 and 1879, making stockholders individually liable for corporate debts, applied to all corporations; and the legislature has no power to exempt savings banks from their provisions.

6. Code Civ. Proc. § 2047, providing that a witness "may refresh his memory of a fact by anything written by himself or under his direction at the time when the fact occurred," authorizes the use of a bank book in which entries of deposit were made in witness' presence.

7. The liability of a stockholder for corporate debts is primary, and evidence competent and sufficient to show the liability of the corporation is competent against the stockholder.

8. When a pass book is balanced, and the bank then suspends business, and refuses to pay its depositors, it detains moneys received to their use, within Civ. Code, § 1917, providing that interest is payable on moneys received to the use of another and detained from him.

9. Where an allegation that defendant is the owner of certain shares of stock of a corporation is undenied by him, it is admitted that he is a stockholder.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Matthew McGowan against R. H. McDonald and others, as stockholders of the Pacific Bank, to recover from them their respective proportions of certain debts and liabilities of said bank. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Sawyer & Burnett, Rosenbaum & Sheeline, and Dunn & McPike, for appellants. Roger Johnson, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. This action was brought to recover from the defendants, as stockholders of the Pacific Bank, their respective proportions of certain debts and liabilities of the bank, alleged to have been due and owing to depositors therein, and to have been assigned to the plaintiff. The court below gave judgment for the plaintiff as prayed for, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, the defendants appeal.

It appears from the record that the Pacific Bank was incorporated in February, 1863, by the name of the "Pacific Accumulation Loan Company," and with a capital stock of $5,000,000, divided into 50,000 shares, of the par value of $100 each, under the provision of an act of the legislature of this state entitled "An act to provide for the formation of corporations for the accumulation and investment of funds and savings," passed April 11, 1862 (St. 1862, p. 199). By this act, corporations organized under it were authorized "to loan and invest the funds of the corporation, to receive deposits of money, and to loan and invest the same." In March, 1866, an act was passed by the legislature entitled "An act to authorize the Pacific Accumulation Loan Company to change its name" (St. 1865-66, p. 620); and thereafter, in April of that year, and in accordance with the provisions of the said act, the corporation changed its name to that of Pacific Bank. In February, 1872, an act was passed by the legislature amending the act of April 11, 1862 (St. 1871-72, p. 132); and, under and in pursuance of its provisions, such proceedings were taken by the stockholders of the said corporation that the capital stock thereof was reduced to the sum of $1,000,000, and its shares to the number of 10,000, which said capital stock had theretofore been subscribed and paid up, and thereafter remained as the capital stock of the said corporation. The Pacific Bank never elected to continue its existence under the provisions of the Civil Code, which took effect January 1, 1873, but continued to do business as a bank under the act of April 11, 1862, and subsequent acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, until June 23, 1893, when, being insolvent, it closed its doors, and suspended all business.

1. At common law no individual liability was imposed upon the members of a corporation, but article 4 of the constitution of 1849 contained the following provisions:

"Sec. 32. Dues from corporations shall be secured by such individual liability of the corporators and other means as may be prescribed by law."

"Sec. 36. Each stockholder of a corporation or joint stock association shall be individually and personally liable for his proportion of all its debts and liabilities."

On the 22d of April, 1850, "An act concerning corporations" was passed by the legislature, which provided, in section 32: "Each stockholder of any corporation shall be individually and personally liable for a portion of all its debts and liabilities, proportioned to the amount of stock owned by him." St. 1850, p. 347. In 1853 an act "to provide for the formation of corporations for certain purposes" was passed, which provided, in section 16: "Each stockholder shall be individually and personally liable for his proportion of all the debts and liabilities of the company contracted or incurred during the time that he was a stockholder, for the recovery of which joint or several actions may be instituted and prosecuted." In French v. Teschemacher, 24 Cal. 518, it was held that section 36 of the constitution, above quoted, was not self-executing, and that legislation was necessary to give it effect. It was also held that neither of the statutory provisions above quoted was sufficient of itself to impose a liability; "yet, although neither by itself affords a perfect rule, the two combined contain what is omitted in the thirty-sixth section of the constitution, and is needed to give it a practical operation." Section 322 of the Civil Code contains very full and complete provisions as to the liability of the stockholders of all corporations formed or doing business in this state for debts incurred while they were such stockholders, and as to the method of enforcing such liability. And section 3 of article 12 of the constitution of 1879 provides: "Each stockholder of a corporation, or joint stock association, shall be individually and personally liable for such proportion of all its debts and liabilities contracted or incurred during the time he was a stockholder, as the amount of stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock, or shares of the corporation or association."

Appellants contend that they are not liable to the plaintiff in this case for any portion of the debts of the corporation, for the reason (1) that, by terms of the statute under which the Pacific Accumulation Loan Company was organized, the stockholders of the corporation were expressly exempted from such liability; and (2) that, as the Pacific Bank never elected to continue its existence under the provisions of the Civil Code, the corporation was not affected by the provisions of the Code in regard to corporations, and hence no liability was thereby imposed upon appellants.

The provision of the act of April 11, 1862, relied upon in support of the first point, is as follows: "Sec. 27. Corporations formed under this act, and the members and stockholders thereof, shall not be subject to the conditions and liabilities contained in, and shall be exempt from, the operation of an act concerning corporations, passed April twenty-second, A. D. eighteen hundred and fifty." But if, by this section, it was intended to declare that the stockholders of a corporation formed under the provisions of the act should not be individually and personally liable for any portion of its debts and liabilities, then the section was in plain conflict with section 36 of article 4 of the Constitution of 1849, and must be held to have had no validity or effect; for, as said in French v. Teschemacher, supra: "The individual liability of the stockholder is a constituent element in the artificial life of a corporation, made so by the author of its creation, and that life can no more exist under the constitution without the element than a natural person can exist when deprived of an element made indispensable to his existence by the laws of nature. Hence an act of the legislature authorizing the formation of corporations without attaching to the corporators an individual liability would be as obnoxious to the constitution as would be the creation of a corporation by special act."

If, however, this be so, it is claimed that the whole act was rendered unconstitutional, and hence that the bank never had any corporate existence. But this does not follow. In People v. Hill, 7 Cal. 103, it was said that, "if some of the provisions of the bill are unconstitutional, this will not vitiate the whole act, unless they enter so entirely into the scope and design of the law that it would be impossible to maintain it without such obnoxious provisions." And in Robinson v. Bidwell, 22 Cal. 379, it was held that, where a provision of a statute is of such a nature and has such a connection with the other parts as to be essential to the law, its unconstitutionality vitiates the whole enactment. But if an independent provision, not in its nature and connections essential to the law, be unconstitutional, it may be treated as a nullity, leaving the rest of the enactment to stand as valid. See, also, French v. Teschemacher, supra, and Ex parte Frazer, 54 Cal. 94, where the same doctrine is announced. It is quite evident that the section of the act in question was an independent provision, which did not enter into the general object and purpose of the act, and which might be stricken out without prejudice to the other portion thereof. It therefore did not vitiate the other portions of the act or affect the validity of corporations formed under its provisions.

The provision of the Civil Code relied upon in support of the second point is as follows: "Sec. 288. No corporation formed or existing before twelve o'clock noon of the day upon which this Code takes effect is affected by the provisions of part iv. of division first of this Code, unless, such corporation elects to continue its existence under it as provided in section 287; but the laws under which such corporations were formed and exist are applicable to all such corporations, and are repealed subject to the provisions of this section." By the constitution of 1849 each stockholder of a corporation was made personally liable for his proportion of all its debts and liabilities, but, to enforce such liability, legislation was necessary. It was not, however, necessary that every act providing for the formation of corporations should also provide for the liability of their stockholders. A general law making such provisions would have subserved all the purposes required. And while the liability of the stockholder was a constituent element in the life of the corporation, and necessary to its existence, it was still only a burden imposed on the stockholder, and had otherwise nothing to do with the formation or existence of the corporation. In Railway Co. v. Hellman (Cal.) 42 Pac. 225, it was held that the provisions of the Civil Code relating to corporations which did not affect and were not applicable to such corporations as were formed before the Code took effect, and had not elected to continue their existence under it, were such only as related to the formation and existence of the corporations. Under this rule, we think it must be held that section 322 of that Code applies to the stockholders of corporations formed or doing business in this state before or after the adoption of the Codes. Besides, our present constitution imposes the same liability; for, as said in Bidwell v. Babcock, 87 Cal. 32, 25 Pac. 752, section 322 of the Civil Code and section 3 of article 12 of the constitution have "substantially the same meaning and effect."

It is objected, however, that, if the provisions of the Code and constitution are applicable, they impose obligations upon appellants for which they were not liable when they became stockholders, and are in conflict with that provision of the constitution of the United States which inhibits the states from passing laws impairing the obligation of contracts, and are therefore as to them unconstitutional and of no effect. The answer to this objection is that the constitution of 1849 provided: "Corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special act, except for municipal purposes. All general laws and special acts passed pursuant to this section may be altered from time to time, or repealed." Article 4, § 31. Under the authority thus conferred, both the legislature and the people had power to change the law in regard to the liability of stockholders, without violating any provision of the constitution of the United States. In Re Empire City Bank, 18 N. Y. 199, a similar question arose. That was a proceeding to enforce a personal liability of stockholders for the debts of the bank under an act passed after the bank was incorporated. The court, by Denio, J., said: "The statute under which the proceedings were had was challenged as being a violation of the constitution of the United States and of this state. By the federal constitution, no state can rightfully enact a law impairing the obligation of contracts. It is argued that, by the general banking law, the associations which it authorizes are alone responsible for its contracts, the shareholders being wholly exempt from liability; and it is insisted that this is in the nature of a contract between the state and the shareholders, and that the constitutional guaranty of the integrity of contracts, in the national constitution, would be illusory if a state could, by changing its constitution, subvert all existing engagements, and hence that the guaranty applies as well to state constitutions as to other state laws. Without denying or affirming the soundness of these positions, it is enough to say that the general banking law expressly reserves to the legislature the power to alter or repeal it, so that any changes which it or the people think proper to make are fully authorized by the provisions of the supposed contract itself." See, also, the following cases, which are to the same effect: In re Oliver Lee & Co.'s Bank, 21 N. Y. 9; In re Reciprocity Bank, 22 N. Y. 9; Sleeper v. Goodwin, 67 Wis. 577, 31 N. W. 335; Tomlinson v. Jessup, 15 Wall. 454; Dam Co. v. Gray, 30 Me. 551.

It is also objected that the Pacific Bank was originally organized for the purpose of doing business as a savings bank, and that the stockholders of such a bank cannot be held liable for its debts. But the provisions of the constitution of 1849 applied to the stockholders of all corporations, without regard to the character of the business to be transacted; and the same is true of the constitution of 1879. It is not therefore within the power of the legislature or the courts to declare any such exemption as that here claimed. And see Mitchell v. Beckman, 64 Cal. 117, 28 Pac. 110, and Kennedy v. Bank, 101 Cal. 495, 35 Pac. 1039, where liability for deposits in savings banks was enforced. If, however, the law were as it is interpreted by appellants, the objection could not be sustained, for the reason that it is alleged in the complaint, and not denied by the answer, that, at all the times mentioned therein (within two years prior to the commencement of the action), "said bank was receiving deposits and doing a general banking business." And it was proved that since 1886 the bank had been advertising itself as a commercial bank by a printed statement, on the front page of its by-laws, that it is "the oldest chartered commercial bank in California."

2. Appellants contend that the court committed several errors of law in its rulings upon the admission of evidence offered to establish the indebtedness of the Pacific Bank to the assignors of the plaintiff. There were three such assignors, and each had a bank book. The left-hand page of these books showed the date and amount of each deposit, and the right-hand page showed the amount of each check paid by the bank, the number of checks returned, and the balance remaining due and unpaid to the depositor on each occasion when the balances were struck. The last balances were entered on the 22d day of June, 1893, and the amounts shown thereby to be then due to the depositors were the same as those alleged in the complaint.

It was proved that all the entries on the left-hand page were made by the teller of the bank when the moneys were deposited, and in the presence of the depositor, and were correct, and that all the entries on the right-hand page were made by a clerk of the bank when the books were handed in by the depositors from time to time to be balanced. It was also proved by each of the three depositors that, when he received back his book, he verified the entries made by comparing them with his own accounts, and in every instance found them correct; and each one therefore testified that he knew of his own knowledge that the balance shown by the book was the correct amount due him. Neither of the witnesses could, however, state the amounts of his deposits or of his drafts, or the balance due, without refreshing his memory by looking at his bank book; and this, against the objection of defendants, he was permitted to do. The books were also offered, and, against the objection of defendants, admitted in evidence to prove the same facts. Section 2047 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "A witness is allowed to refresh his memory respecting a fact by anything written by himself or under his direction at the time when the fact occurred, or immediately thereafter, or at any other time when the fact was fresh in his memory and he knew that the same was correctly stated in the writing." It is claimed that this section did not authorize the witnesses to refresh their memories by looking at the books, but we think it did. The entries of his deposits were admittedly made in the presence of the witness, and under his direction, and he knew at the time that they were correct. There can be no question, therefore, that as to them he could refresh his memory from the book. And the entries of the amounts drawn out were clearly made under the direction of the witness, for he handed in his book to have such entries made and the balance struck; and, when the book was returned to him, he checked it up from his own books, and knew that the balance stated was correct. This was at a time when the matter was fresh in his memory, and when he knew that the same was correctly stated. In our opinion, therefore, the case comes fairly within the rule declared by the Code, and there was no error in the ruling complained of.

It is also claimed that the pass books were not admissible in evidence against the defendants, and, in support of this position, Neilson v. Crawford, 52 Cal. 248, is cited. It is well settled by numerous decisions of this court that, by the constitution and statutes of this state, the stockholders of a corporation organized therein are made personally liable for their respective proportions of all its debts and liabilities contracted while they are such stockholders. Such liability arises when the debt is incurred, and is primary, and not secondary. In a suit against a stockholder to enforce his liability, the first fact to be established is the indebtedness of the corporation; and, when that is established, the liability of the stockholder results as a necessary sequence. It would seem, therefore, that any evidence which is competent and sufficient to show the liability of the corporation must be competent and sufficient to show the liability of the stockholder. In Borland v. Haven, 37 Fed. 394, a case decided by the United States circuit court for California (Sawyer, J.), the question arose as to the admissibility and effect of evidence in a case like this, and on page 414 it was said "that any evidence that is competent to establish the liability, as against the corporation, must be competent to establish the liability of the stockholders; for, the liability of the corporation being established, the liability of the stockholder for his share follows as an inevitable legal consequence, by the express terms of the constitution and statute." The case of Neilson v. Crawford, supra, relied on by appellants, was an action to enforce the liability of the defendants for their portion of the indebtedness of a corporation of which they were stockholders. At the trial, to prove such indebtedness, the plaintiff offered in evidence the books of the corporation,—its ledger, journal, book of resolutions and transfers. It was held on appeal that while in an action against the corporation for the recovery of a debt its books of account, showing the existence of the indebtedness alleged, would be admissible, because they are the admissions of the corporation entered by its servants, still they were inadmissible in an action against the stockholders. And the court said: "If an admission of indebtedness, made by a corporation, be evidence of indebtedness in an action against a stockholder, it is not perceived why a similar admission made by a stockholder should not be evidence in an action brought against the corporation, nor why an estoppel against the corporation—for instance, a judgment rendered—should not equally estop a stockholder to deny the fact of indebtedness in an action brought against him to enforce his proportionate liability." That case is not in point here, for the reason that in this case the books of the bank were not offered, and the objection urged is only to the admissibility of the pass books of depositors. But the pass books were the books of the depositors, and not of the bank. They showed the indebtedness of the bank as certificates of deposit would have shown it. Now, suppose the assignors of plaintiff had held certificates of deposit, instead of pass books; can there be any doubt that they would have been admissible? We think not. Besides, in Kennedy v. Bank, 97 Cal. 93, 31 Pac. 846, it was held that the legal effect of the condition prescribed by section 3 of article 12 of the constitution of this state, regulating the individual liability of stockholders for debts contracted and liabilities incurred by the corporation, is that a corporation, when created, becomes the agent of its stockholders to make such contracts and incur such liabilities as are authorized by law and its articles of incorporation, and the contracts which it thus makes bind the stockholders to the extent named. If this be so, then the rule that the admissions of an agent which are made while in the performance of his duty, and are a part of the res gestæ, may be proved against the principal, must be applicable here. And see Mitchell v. Beckman, 64 Cal. 117, 28 Pac. 110, where it was held that there was no error in admitting in evidence a judgment against the corporation for the purpose of establishing its indebtedness and the liability therefor of its stockholders. We conclude, therefore, that the court below did not err in admitting the pass books in evidence.

3. Some of the appellants object to the allowance of interest against them from the time of the suspension of the bank. But, as before stated, the pass books were balanced and the accounts stated on the day before the suspension. Section 1917 of the Civil Code provides that interest is payable on all moneys "due on any settlement of accounts, from the day on which the balance is ascertained, and on moneys received to the use of another and detained from him." Ordinarily, of course, interest is not payable on the amount found due when a pass book is balanced; but when a bank suspends business, and refuses to pay its depositors, it thereafter clearly detains moneys which it received to their use, and, under the provisions of the Code, must be held liable for interest thereon.

4. The point is made that the evidence does not show that appellant Wood was a stockholder when the deposits were made. But the complaint alleges that Wood was the owner of 212 shares of stock of the bank at all the times mentioned therein, and this allegation is not denied in his answer. His ownership of the stock was therefore admitted, and no evidence as to it was required.

The other points discussed by counsel do not require special notice. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; HAYNES, C.

DENMAN v. BRODERICK, Auditor. (S. F. 237.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 22, 1896.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

After the legislature, in pursuance of Const. art. 11, § 6, providing that it shall classify municipal corporations in proportion to population, had made a classification, the first class of which comprised those containing 100,000 inhabitants or over, Act March 28, 1895, providing for the appointment of a board of election commissioners in municipalities having a population of over 150,000 inhabitants, was passed. Held, that the act was unconstitutional, as special legislation.

In bank.

Petition by James Denman against William Broderick, auditor of the city and county of San Francisco, for writ of mandamus. Denied.

Delmas & Shortridge, Philip G. Galpin, Frank J. Sullivan, and David I. Mahoney, for petitioner. Garret W. McEnerney, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. The petitioner claims to be a member of the board of election commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco, under a certain act of the legislature approved March 28, 1895. St. 1895, p. 341. He presented his demand for a month's salary as such commissioner to the respondent, auditor of said city and county, and requested him to draw his warrant for the amount of such salary upon the treasurer of said city and county. The respondent refused to draw such warrant, on the ground that said act is unconstitutional, whereupon the petitioner presented his petition to this court for a writ of mandamus to compel said respondent to draw such warrant.

The act in question is entitled "An act to add a new article, to be designated as article 4, to chapter 1 of title 2 of part 3 of the Political Code, and also to add six new sections, relative to county, city, and city and county boards of election commissioners." The part of the act necessary to be considered is a new section designated as section 1075, and is as follows: "Sec. 1075. The board of supervisors of each county is ex officio the board of election commissioners in and for the county, and the common council, or other governing body of a city, is ex officio the board of election commissioners in and for such city: provided, that in cities and cities and counties of this state having one hundred and fifty thousand or more inhabitants the board of election commissioners shall consist of four persons, citizens and electors of such city, or city and county, each of whom must be a freeholder, and have been an actual resident of said city and county at least five years preceding his appointment, who shall be appointed by the mayor: provided, that the respective executive committees of the state committees of either of the political parties who may be entitled under the provisions of this act to have members of their party appointed as members of said board of election commissioners shall have the right, within ten days after such appointment, to file with the mayor a written protest against the appointment of a member of said board of election commissioners, as having been appointed as one of affiliation with said party, on the grounds that said appointee is not a person of well-known affiliation and standing with said party from which he has been appointed; and the mayor thereupon shall make another appointment in the place of the party against whom the protest has been filed. The members of said commission shall be ineligible to any other office of public employment, elective or appointive, during the term for which they have been appointed and for one year thereafter. Two of the persons so appointed shall be selected from the body of citizens and electors of such city, or city and county, of known affiliation with and belonging to the political party or organization which at the last presidential election held in such city, or city and county, polled within said city, or city and county, the highest number of votes cast for the candidates of the political party for presidential electors at such election; and the two remaining members of said board shall be selected from the body of electors of such city, or city and county, of known affiliation with and belonging to the political party which, at the last presidential election held at such city, or city and county, polled within such city, or city and county, the next highest number of votes cast for the candidates for presidential electors of a political party. The members of said commission shall, every two years, choose one of their number as chairman; in the event of their failure to select a chairman in five ballots, the oldest of said members in point of years shall be chairman. The persons first appointed as such board of election commissioners shall be appointed on the first Monday of July, eighteen hundred and ninety-five, and shall each hold their office for the term of four years from and after the date of their appointment, except that, of those first appointed, two (one belonging to each political party or organization, as aforesaid), to be designated by the mayor, shall retire at the end of two years, when their successors shall be appointed by the mayor. Whenever any vacancy shall occur in the said board, such vacancy shall be filled by appointment as herein prescribed, and the person so appointed to fill such vacancy shall be selected in the same manner and from the same political party or organization with which his predecessor in office affiliated and belonged at the time of his appointment thereto, and shall hold office for the balance of the unexpired term for which he was appointed. The salary of each member of the board of election commissioners in and for said city, or city and county, having one hundred thousand or more inhabitants, shall be seven hundred and fifty dollars per annum, payable in equal monthly installments out of the treasury of such city, or city and county, in the same manner as the salaries of other officers of such city, or city and county, are paid."

The constitutionality of this section is attacked upon several grounds, and it is apparent that at many points it at least closely approaches the line which limits legislative power. Under our views of the case, however, there are many standpoints from which respondent assails the law which it is not necessary for us to explore. While it may be true, as counsel for petitioner says, that the law was intended for an excellent and worthy purpose, it was evidently drafted in ignorance of the constitution of the state, or with reckless disregard of its provisions. It is matter of history that when the present constitution was adopted there was a great appreciation of the supposed evils which had arisen out of special and local legislation, and there was a strong purpose to prevent such evils in the future. Perhaps some other inconveniences and evils which arise from too great limitation of the legislative power in this respect were not fully anticipated or considered. At all events, the constitution is exceedingly prohibitory of the power to pass local and special laws; and this feature of the constitution should be kept in view by legislators, for a law passed in plain contravention of it—whether good or bad—cannot be upheld by the judiciary. Section 25 of article 4 of the constitution expressly provides that "the legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say"; and then follow 32 enumerated cases, which include nearly all subjects of legislation that can be suggested. In addition, there is a thirty-third clause, which reads: "In all other cases where a general law can be made applicable." Among these enumerated cases are the following: "Ninth. Regulating county and township business, or the election of county and township officers. * * * Eleventh. Providing for conducting elections, or designating the places of voting, except on the organization of new counties. * * * Twenty-eighth. Creating offices, or prescribing the powers and duties of officers in counties, cities and counties, townships, election or school districts." As the statute here under review deals with subjects enumerated in said section 25, it follows that it is unconstitutional if it be local or special. But, as it relates only to a part of the territory and people of the state, it is clearly local and special (Earle v. Board, 55 Cal. 489), unless there are some other provisions of the constitution and some principle of law applicable thereto which take it out of that category.
